Mine-Mill Locals Swing To CIO

"THE RICHEST HILL ON EARTH"—Here is a typical copper mine head and tipple at Butte, Mont., on "the richest hill on earth" where the hard-rock miners are leading a drive to return to CIO. Three big locals with 7000 members in the Butte-Anaconda area have quit the Communist-run Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and moved to rejoin CIO by affiliating with the Steelworkers. CIO Pres. Walter Reuther backed the USA-CIO drive in the non-ferrous industry and welcomed its workers back into the main stream of the labor movement. (See Page 3.)

'A Better Future'—

Reuther Predicts Gains For Labor In 1954

AMERICA and the world in 1954 can count on the CIO "as a front-rank fighter for a better future for all the people," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared in a New Year greeting to the people of the United States.

"We are confident that in 1954," he said, "the forces of evil will be beaten back on every front. We are confident that as the New Year unfolds, we can, as we must, move toward world peace, toward world prosperity, toward world democracy."

The program of the CIO during the coming year, he explained, will be devoted "to placing the benefits of our great technology at the disposal of all the people so that all may share in the abundance that America can produce."

"To accomplish this, we shall fight to maintain and expand the high wage levels which have been the glory of the American people for decades," he added.

High Wage Goals

"Through high wages, and only through high wages, can the American people buy the tremendous output of our factories, mines and mills—and only through high purchasing power can American industry and agriculture find the great domestic market they need to achieve a constantly raising level of high production.

"The unions of the CIO will strive to obtain a guaranteed annual wage as aid and assistance to a functioning economy in order to provide incentives for keeping men at work rather than incentives for laying them off. We shall fight for strengthened civil liberties and for a civil rights program that will move against discrimination based on race, creed or color wherever it raises its ugly head.

"In Washington and state capitals, we shall lend our support to every worthwhile effort to produce better social welfare legislation so that the millions of less fortunate American families may obtain protection and help from their government.

"And we shall carry on our endeavor to organize the unorganized in order to bring to all eligible workers the real and tangible benefits that spring from democratic unions, sound collective bargaining and good citizenship."

Threat From Soviet

While the people of America and the world face 1954 with a common hope for peace, prosperity, freedom and brotherhood, Reuther said, "they also are plagued by great uncertainty as to whether 1954 will be a year of human advancement or retrogression."

The threats of Soviet aggression—continuing because the cease-fire in Korea has not been developed into a lasting peace—and of atomic and hydrogen warfare still hover over the world, he recalled.

"Here in the United States," the CIO chieftain continued, "there is uncertainty as to whether America may continue to enjoy the multiple blessings of full employment. Men of little vision, who would have us believe that depression is normal and prosperity is merely good luck, talk of the inevitability of recession or depression.

"Millions of working men and women are plagued by the fear that their jobs and their income—their shares in America's prosperity and abundance—may be snatched away by a depression as unnecessary as it will be cruel.

"We who treasure our civil liberties and the concept of equal rights for every American, regardless of race, creed or color, are disturbed by the growing recklessness of attacks on our priceless American heritage.

"At a time when we should be preeminent among the forces of freedom throughout the world, free peoples in other countries are confused and bewildered about the future of American policy.

"Our leadership of the forces of freedom, leadership based on human resources and spirit and upon industrial might, is open to challenge among other peoples because of the lack of faith in America by those Americans who fear civil liberties and civil rights, full employment and full prosperity."

To achieve the strength we must have in basic spiritual and moral values, he declared, "we need to give greater consideration . . . to putting our own house in order."

Freedom And Peace

He reiterated the long-standing position of the CIO that it will not act as a narrow economic pressure group.

"But while we try to develop common denominators of joint action," he added, "we will raise our voice and we will mobilize our power to fight against discrimination and to fight against every ugly manifestation in our national life, because we believe, and we believe this sincerely, that we can win in the world and that freedom and peace can be made secure only if we first make them secure in America for all the people in America.

"That is our task."

The Moral Balance Of Power

"Communism is able to translate social injustice into political power," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told 200 members of the Detroit Pastors Union.

Reuther said America must develop moral and human values if it hopes to maintain world leadership, because "Russia can meet our material power. The balance of power must be in the moral and spiritual fields."

"If you have social injustice in a wealthy country," Reuther told the ministers at Solidarity House, CIO Auto Workers' headquarters, "Communism can build power out of poverty. In countries rich or poor, where there is a strong, free labor movement which recognizes its social responsibility, Communism is unimportant and has no influence." (LPA)

Ike Urges More U.S. Contracts For Job Layoff Crisis Areas

PRES. EISENHOWER last week took the first major action of his Administration to aid "areas where there has been a large amount of unemployment"—but the moves paralleled policies begun by the Truman Administration some three years ago.

The President, while holidaying at Augusta, Ga., issued these orders:

1. That defense agencies allocate more military contracts to areas with heavy unemployment. Labor Dept. figures show that there are 42 communities with high layoff levels.

2. That special "rapid tax write-off" benefits be given to firms locating new defense plants in job crisis areas.

The Eisenhower annoucement, as press reports pointed out, came after "the government over a period of months has tried to relieve unemployment by channeling defense contracts into these areas. What made the White House announcement important was the fact that Mr. Eisenhower identified himself personally with the Administration attack on jobless conditions in a number of cities."

The President referred specifically to a recent order by Arthur S. Flemming, director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, to speed up tax write-off benefits.

THAT ORDER was issued after strong representations by CIO officials in Washington and after several delegations of CIO Textile and Electrical Workers came from New England to Washington.

CIO spokesmen at that time said that it was a step in the right direction but that it did not go far enough. The CIO, while opposed to hopped-up tax amortization generally, approved it as a means of stimulating job opportunities in chronic unemployment areas.

It maintained that the benefits should be allowed all industry, not just defense ventures.

Flemming himself admitted that defense plant expansion was about completed.

Press Sec. James Hagerty listed a number of typical cities where unemployment is high. These included Terre Haute, Ind.; Lowell and Lawrence, Mass.; Winston-Salem, Durham and Asheville, N. C.; Altoona, Johnston, Scranton, Wilkes-Barre and Hazelton, Pa.; and Providence, R. I.

The Labor Dept. said that it had "certified" to ODM 42 cities where more than 6% of the total work force was unemployed, and that the cities named by Hagerty were among the group.

The President's orders were welcomed by Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) but opposed by two southern Democrats, Sens. Maybank (D. S. C.) and George (D. Ga.).

2 Stations Add Vandercook

Two new stations will be added Jan. 4 to the more than 150 carrying the CIO-sponsored John W. Vandercook broadcasts nightly over ABC Radio. The two are WIRL, Peoria, Ill., 1290 on the dial, at 6:00 p.m., and WTOR, Torrington, Conn., 1490 on the dial, at 7:00 p.m.

CIO, AFL Unions Link Insurance Bargaining

CIO INSURANCE Workers and the AFL Insurance Agents have begun a joint program for collective bargaining with the industry, presidents of the two unions announced last week.

The first in a series of meetings to plan such action took place in Washington shortly after the CIO and AFL signed the "no raiding" pact.

A joint statement by IWA Pres. Kenneth O'Dell and IAIU Pres. George L. Russ pointed out that "for many years the insurance companies have benefitted by the fact that there are several unions representing insurance agents, and thus an opportunity has been afforded companies to play one union against another, particularly at the time of negotiations."

"This divide - and - conquer strategy by the companies," the statement said, "will now be met with united labor action."

The statement said that specific matters agreed on at the first meeting were:

1. "Mutual support and assistance during collective bargaining negotiations with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., the Prudential Insurance Co. and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., as well as all other companies with which the two unions have contracts.

2. "United action to secure passage of an amendment to that section of the New York State Insurance Law establishing the amount of money insurance companies may spend to acquire and service business. This law has long been used by insurance companies as an alibi for not granting wage increases which agents deserve and are entitled to.

3. "No overlapping of organizational efforts on the part of these two unions, who recognize that their common effort should be directed toward bettering the lot of insurance agents, rather than opposing one another."

Present at the first meeting for the IWA, in addition to O'Dell, were First Vice Pres. Simon Helfgott, Sec.-Treas. James E. Brisbane and Gen. Counsel Irving Abramson. Representing the IAIU, besides Russ, were Vice Pres. Charles G. Heisel, Sec.-Treas. Max Shine and Gen. Counsel Isaac N. Groner.

Future meetings of the two unions will be held shortly in New York City.

Jobless Action Urged By Ohio CIO

THE OHIO CIO Council, alarmed at growing unemployment, has urged Gov. Frank Lausche to take the initiative in an anti-depression program.

In a pre-Christmas visit to the Governor, a CIO delegation urged he include liberalization of the state unemployment insurance law in his official call for a special session of the Legislature, set for Jan. 11. CIO also urged the State develop a stand-by works' program to alleviate unemployment.

State CIO Pres. James P. Griffin, who led the delegation, warned the Governor of "hidden unemployment," not reflected in official statistics. These figures report 81,000 receiving unemployment compensation—three times the level of last August.

But, said Griffin, who is also Steelworkers district director in Youngstown, these figures "reflect only those who filed for unemployment compensation. The actual unemployed in the State are at least double this amount." In addition, he said, there is widespread cut in working hours, which is curtailing workers' income.

The CIO reminded Lausche of the "anemic" action of the last legislative session which granted workers $2 a week more in benefits, but which cut employer premiums by $40 million a year.

"This $40 million bonanza to employers would buy a better standard of living for the unemployed and help business too," Griffin said. He warned the Governor that "it is unfair to the individuals affected and dangerous to our economy to permit the pittance now given to unemployed workers to remain unchallenged or unchanged."

Pointing out that unemployment benefits now amount to only a third of average wages, Griffin said "this inevitably means that neither the worker can adequately sustain dignified life, nor is the economy stimulated by the creation of necessary purchasing power."

3 Big Mine-Mill Locals Return To CIO

THREE BIG anti-Communist local unions of the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, which was expelled from the CIO in 1950, have taken steps to leave Mine-Mill and re-affiliate with CIO through the Steelworkers, the CIO announced last week.

The three locals involved are located at Butte and Anaconda, Mont., and have more than 7000 members. They have a long tradition of militant democratic unionism and opposition to communism.

Here's a sweeping view of Butte and "the richest hill on earth."

Others Invited

In making the announcement, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther appealed to other locals of the "disintegrating" Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers to take similar steps to rejoin the CIO through the Steelworkers, headed by Pres. David J. McDonald.

He pledged that non-ferrous metal workers, as part of the Steelworkers, "will more than regain the organizational strength they have lost . . ." during the past few years, "will find great economic, social and legislative benefits . . . (and) will re-establish their great traditions of unionism."

In calling for Mine-Mill locals to sever ties with the "destructive . . . rule or ruin" group in control of their international organization, Reuther said:

"The record shows that about half of the membership of Mine-Mill in 1950 has left it, mostly to come into the CIO.

"As a result, more non-ferrous metal workers are in the CIO today than in the discredited Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

Tempo Increasing

"The tempo of this swing to the CIO is increasing. Strong democratic local unions of Mine-Mill, seeking to restore the union's great tradition, had tried to reform it from the inside. But the interference of the Communist leadership of the international in local affairs, their undemocratic practices, their steam-roller tactics—have convinced an ever-growing number of workers that there is no future for democratic unionism in Mine-Mill."

Reuther pointed out that the CIO has always recognized that most individual members of Mine-Mill are not Communists or favorable to communism. He added:

"The CIO . . . sympathizes with the aspirations of non-ferrous metal workers for a democratic, militant, effective union. The CIO extends the hand of friendship to the rank and file of mine, mill and smelter workers.

"The CIO will help them in every way possible to preserve the strength of their local unions in order to win the best possible conditions for their members through collective bargaining and legislation.

"The CIO hereby appeals to all members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union to bring their local unions into the CIO, and extends to them all possible help and support, moral and financial."

Advantages Cited

Reuther added that "the CIO feels strongly" that workers in the copper, zinc, lead, gold and silver mining and smelting industries will find "tremendous advantages" in affiliating with the Steelworkers.

In 1950, he recalled, the CIO found that the Mine-Mill international officers were "Communist-controlled and interested in their own power rather than the welfare of the membership." Time has confirmed the correctness of that analysis, he declared.

Reuther: We Extend Hand Of Welcome To Mine-Mill Workers

Here is the text of a statement by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther concerning the Mine-Mill situation:

SINCE 1950 the members of the Intl. Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers have been isolated from the bona fide democratic trade union movement of the United States and Canada. This isolation was caused by the irresponsible and Communist-dominated leadership of the international union, whose adherence to the Communist Party line brought about the expulsion of Mine-Mill from the CIO early in 1950.

At that time the CIO, in its report expelling Mine-Mill, stated that its findings "carry no implication that the individual members of the union are Communists or favorable to communism.

The CIO recognized then as it does now that the overwhelming majority of members of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers want a democratic union controlled only by the members, and that they are devoted and loyal to the principles of American democracy.

A Proven Record

In the four-year period since the expulsion of Mine-Mill from the CIO, the Communist-dominated leadership of the international union of Mine-Mill has proven a hundred times their 100% devotion to Communist ideas.

These four years have proven what the CIO found in its 1950 report—that the Communist leaders of the international union have used all sorts of devices and maneuvers to keep themselves in power, "concealing all the while the fact that the union's policies and activities were not the real informed decision of the members but determined in accordance with the line of the Communist Party." These international leaders are carrying on a rule-or-ruin policy—which has practically ruined Mine-Mill.

There has been a growing realization among Mine-Mill members of the destructive leadership provided by the Communist rule-or-ruin group in the international. Revolts against this leadership have been frequent and the record shows that about half of the membership of Mine-Mill in 1950 has left it, mostly to come into the CIO.

As a result, more non-ferrous metal workers are in the CIO today than in the discredited Mine-Mill & Smelter Workers international union.

Act To Rejoin CIO

The tempo of this swing to the CIO is increasing. Strong democratic local unions of Mine-Mill, seeking to restore the union's great tradition, had tried to reform it from the inside. But the interference of the Communist leadership of the international in local affairs, their undemocratic practices, their steam-roller tactics—have convinced an ever-growing number of workers that there is no future for democratic unionism in Mine-Mill.

Recently, a number of strong anti-Communist local leaders in Mine-Mill—spearheaded by those in the Butte and Anaconda locals—have taken steps to leave Mine-Mill and rejoin the CIO. The Butte and Anaconda locals are three of the oldest, strongest and most influential locals in Mine-Mill. Through all these years they have conducted their own affairs democratically, efficiently, successfully and wholeheartedly in the interests of their members.

These big locals have seen for themselves that the national officers of Mine-Mill have bankrupted the union financially and spiritually. They have separated Mine-Mill members from the rest of the labor movement.

The international officers have been ineffective in holding the union together, ineffective in organizing the unorganized, ineffective in the collective bargaining process, ineffective in securing better legislation for the non-ferrous miners and smelter workers, ineffective in democratic political action.

The CIO, as it always has, sympathizes with the aspirations of non-ferrous metal workers for a democratic, militant, effective union. The CIO extends the hand of friendship to the rank and file of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The CIO will help them in every way possible to preserve the strength of their local unions in order to win the best possible conditions for their members through collective bargaining and legislation.

The CIO hereby appeals to all members of the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union to bring their local unions into the CIO, and extends to them all possible help and support, moral and financial.

A Strong Union

To carry out this process, the CIO in 1950 conferred non-ferrous jurisdiction upon the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, one of the largest unions in the nation. That union has scores of thousands of non-ferrous metal workers in its ranks.

The CIO feels strongly that the workers of the copper, zinc, lead, gold and silver mining and smelting industries will find tremendous advantages in affiliating with the United Steelworkers. This great union—with its solid tradition of winning economic benefits, health and welfare programs and pension plans, and with its democratic, responsible leadership — has brought great benefits to its members—steel workers, aluminum workers and workers in other non-ferrous metals.

The CIO's analysis in 1950—that the Mine-Mill international officers were Communist-controlled and interested in their own power rather than the welfare of the membership—has been clearly borne out during the past four years. We believe that our analysis today will equally be borne out by future events:

(1) The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers Union is disintegrating.

(2) It can no longer offer leadership and protection to the workers of the non-ferrous industries.

(3) These workers are anxious to return to the mainstream of American industrial trade unions—the family of CIO unions.

We welcome the thousands of Mine-Mill workers who have already joined our ranks. We hail the decision of the Butte and Anaconda local leaders to leave the discredited Mine-Mill international union in order to rejoin the ranks of the CIO.

Regain Their Strength

We extend the hand of welcome and support to the thousands of rank-and-file mine, mill and smelter workers who recognize that the Communists in control of the international have departed from the great tradition of that union.

We pledge that the non-ferrous metal workers, as a part of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO, will more than regain the organizational strength they have lost. In the United Steelworkers, CIO, they will find great economic, social and legislative benefits. In the United Steelworkers, CIO, they will re-establish their great traditions of unionism.

We are confident that all mine, mill and smelter workers in this basic industry will respond to this call, and will come united into the ranks of the CIO in order to build a better future for themselves, for their children and their country.

Labor's Cleanup Of Commies Praised

UNIONS HAVE "sharply reduced" Communist influence in the U. S. labor movement with "virtually no aid" from employers, a Brown Univ. professor told the Industrial Relations Research Association at a meeting in Washington last week.

Prof. Philip Taft also charged that there is "some belief that some firms have gone beyond neutrality and show favoritism to Communist unions."

"This is undoubtedly based upon a belief that such a policy offers some short-run advantages in that it keeps workers split among several unions and thereby prevents unified action," he explained.

Taft predicted that "by and large the Communist influence in the labor movement will continue to decline," and said "it is the non-Communist trade unionist who has cleaned house."

Thomas E. Harris, CIO assistant counsel, told a panel that Communist influence in labor is on the wane, and predicted it would be practically eliminated in the next few years.

Harris cautioned against giving government agencies the right to decide what unions should be allowed to function. Noting that some legislative proposals would authorize decisions based on secret FBI material from unrevealed sources, Harris warned that great injustices could be done by such a government agency.

'Orthodox' Recessions

We don't like "recessions," "depressions," "downward adjustments in the economy," "establishment of more realistic normals"—or any of the other fancy words that business economists are using these days.

We don't think that recessions or depressions are inevitable or necessary. We think they can be prevented by wise economic policies on the part of business and/or government.

We don't believe that workers out of work are any happier or any less hungry because a corporation economist with a string of degrees has decided that his unemployment is inevitable.

We don't think that acceptance of the psychology that recessions or depressions must be lived with, or cannot be changed, is sound for America or for the free world.

We do think that it's time that the economists, in the corporations and in the government, devoted more time to developing policies to bring back full employment and full prosperity, than to finding new phases to make recessions or depressions sound more attractive.

Prosperity can be achieved; attractive synonyms for "depression" never can be found.

Welcome To CIO

The action of three big Mine-Mill locals in Montana in coming back to the CIO will be welcomed by trade union members throughout the land.

For years, the rule-or-ruin international Communist officers of the Mine-Mill union have pursued policies that have isolated the non-ferrous metal workers from the democratic labor movement—and weakened the union as an instrument both for collective bargaining and for legislative and political action.

The overwhelming majority of the members of Mine-Mill are democratic-minded Americans and Canadians, who had hoped they could reform Mine-Mill from inside.

That has proven impossible—and it can be anticipated that in the months ahead, a substantial number of Mine-Mill locals will join the CIO through the Steelworkers Union. Already, there are more non-ferrous metal workers in CIO than in the disintegrating Mine-Mill organization. That number of CIO metal workers will certainly increase in '54.

Social Security's Future

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce—working with furious energy—has been trying for the last year to wreck the nation's social security system.

The Chamber has important allies in Congress, as the bill made public by Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.) has already shown.

Using as sugar-coating the fact that it would bring social security coverage to just about everybody, the Curtis and Chamber of Commerce proposals would wreck the delicate mechanism of the social security system. Instead of having something like insurance, with definite returns on the premiums paid in, the country's senior citizens would find their benefits lowered—and their benefit payments subject to the whim of each Congress.

It's not impossible to believe that Congress or the Administration will accept these proposals, bad as they are. One way to stop this drive to wreck social security is to write to Senators and Congressmen demanding defeat of the Curtis bill and asking passage of the Lehman Bill, which would truly improve social security for all.

Hi, Ho—Oh, Hum! It's Back To Work We Go

In Other Words—

'The Conditions Of Peace'

The following article on "The Conditions of Peace" is condensed from the Free Labour World, monthly publication of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

WE CANNOT repeat often enough the reasons why the working classes have always been the most eager defenders of peace. It is only in the calm of peace that the foundations can be laid for the structure of universal social justice, such as defined at the constituent congress of the ICFTU in London in 1949, and which is their real aim.

Bread, peace and liberty—for all men and all mankind!

So cherished is peace by all peoples that there is no government and there is no organization, religious, political or trade union, which can omit it from its program—and there is no demagogue so hardy as to exclude it from his claptrap.

"World peace" is a phrase issuing only too easily from the mouths of those whose real intentions are to justify another war. And who is to say that the wolf in sheep's clothing is always consciously a wolf?

Horse Of Another Color

It is another thing to define peace. Not all conceptions of peace are identical, quite apart from the fact that "everyone who talks about Heaven ain't a-going there." It is not everyone who desires the foundation of peace to be firmly laid.

Our own conception of peace is based upon our conception of liberty. Our view is that a lasting peace cannot be established except upon a foundation of respect for elementary human rights. How can the internal peace of a country be guaranteed when the government itself of that country depends upon force?

What authority have governments, whose people are under military or police constraint to remain silent and obedient, to discuss "peace?"

Hitler was among those who spoke of peace. He dreamed of a peace conditioned by the supremacy of his own will. He dreamed of a world obedient to his handful of Nazi seigneurs, Teutonic into the bargain, with himself as the Feuhrer, infallible and supreme. Stalin's conception of peace was not so different. Instead of Nazi seigneurs, he proposed a small caucus of Communists, with himself in Hitler's place as head of the hierarchy.

The peace of which one hears so constantly from the Communists and their organizations, including the quasi-Communists, is of a Stalinite or Hitlerite brand. The free world, and in particular its workers organized internationally, have quite different ideas about the conditioning of a peace to be real and lasting.

Its struggle for peace is closely bound up with its fight against all kinds of repression, individual or of peoples, and against all kinds of imperialism. It supposes that all men and each man—and in particular the man who thinks or works—has the right and the duty to voice his opinion on the kind of social and political organization he prefers. It is also his right, by universal suffrage, to participate in legislation and in the choice of men and bodies whose duty it is to supervise the application of the law.

An Improving Democracy

It is also his right, through trade unionism, to take part in the drawing up of economic plans, in decisions concerning the distribution of the essentials of life and the application of programs to raise general standards of living, in the establishment of full employment, and in the practical guaranteeing of the livelihood of workers and their families through social security.

Such are the foundations of peace as we want it. Its foundations are none other than those of pure democracy. No other formula, no other kind of social order, can offer either peace or order in the true practical sense, for their impurities themselves are the germ of revolt, which is to say of war.

The events which have marred the years following World War II have left the free trade union movement no room for illusions that world peace and harmony are round the corner.

The world free trade union movement will not be discouraged. It will continue along the same road, insisting that a peace is inconceivable without conditions, and that its conditions must be created first.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER'S belated invitation to Democratic leaders to discuss his State of the Union message, just before Congress was to reconvene, was no substitute for an absolute decision by the President about McCarthyism, Brownellism, and Deweyism.

Mr. Eisenhower has persistently stated that "communism in government" would not be an issue in the 1954 congressional elections. He categorically declared it was inconceivable that former Pres. Truman would have "knowingly" promoted a "Communist spy" to high office.

But McCarthy, Brownell and Dewey seem to disagree with him.

The frustrated but still ambitious Governor of New York had the gall to make a McCarthy-like attack on Mr. Truman and the Democrats, that in effect called Democrats traitors and bloody-handed blunderers.

Figures

Undersec. of the Treasury W. Randolph Burgess says the question of whether a 15% decline in the country's economy constitutes a "recession" or a "readjustment" is a "matter of taste."

If it's under 15% you might taste a steak once a year. If it's over you'll go a long time before you taste anything.

PAC Pipeline

Brownell's performance in the Harry Dexter White case is well remembered. It must be noted that Mr. Eisenhower's Attorney General, many weeks later, still had not had nerve enough to schedule a press conference at which he could be cross-examined over the inconsistencies in his statements about White and Mr. Truman.

Mr. Eisenhower once suggested that reporters here were too impatient with Brownell—that a news conference would no doubt be held soon—but the President was wrong. No pressure of journalistic "impatience" has been sufficient to tempt the Attorney General into the cockpit. He definitely prefers not to be cross-examined.

A Gesture From The President

So comes Mr. Eisenhower with a gesture for Democrats. Their official House and Senate leaders were summoned to the White House to get a 48-hour advance tip on what the President proposed to say in his State of the Union message.

Practically speaking, the majority party has no obligation to "consult" intimately with the minoriy party in America, if issues are clearly drawn between the two groups and if the majority is stable.

The President's desire to draw the Democrats in on his program arise from his knowledge that his own Republican party does not have really a safe majority in Congress, and that he will need Democratic help to put through any part of his program that could accurately be labeled as "dynamic and forward-looking."

The point is that Mr. Eisenhower can't have it both ways. He cannot request Democratic cooperation while letting his party subordinates call Democrats coddlers of Communists and a set of malignant blunders.

Comrade Brownell will never live down, although he may not yet know it, the effect of his scandalous attack upon Mr. Truman. Gov. Dewey will never live down his speech assailing Truman's brave actions regarding Korea. McCarthy will never live down anything.

If the President has a progressive program and wants to get Democrats to support it, he must assert himself effectively to call off Republican dogs of war. Politics in America, as Adlai Stevenson remarked last year, is not a battle to exterminate an enemy but a discussion between free men and friends, "and the rules are different." The party that tolerates tactics of extermination even by subordinates is likely to find that the other party will fight back.

Background On The POWs

A couple of newspapers have made a thorough study of the backgrounds of the 22 American war prisoners in Korea who chose to stay with the reds. Here are some of the unnoticed facts.

Not one of the 22 is a college graduate or an intellectual—a so-called egghead. All of them are primarily products of little schooling. The majority are farm boys or small-town boys rather than boys from the cities.

There is no substantial trade union background. There is no history of purely juvenile or adolescent "revolt" against the American status quo. There is, instead, a history of some broken homes and a lack of interest in politics.

Take a relatively unschooled rural-area or small-town boy, or a boy who feels he has little opportunity either through his education or his trade skills, and turn him over for Communist brainwashing in a far-away land after he has been drafted into an enterprise he does not understand—and maybe he will become one of the 22. That's what the evidence shows.

John Vandercook Says—

Judicial Commission Urged For 'Fresh Start' On Commie Checkup

Investigation of Communists in and out of government by a judicial group rather than by competing congressional committees was the approach suggested by John W. Vandercook, whose nightly newscast on ABC is sponsored by CIO. A part of his broadcast follows:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

THE EXCUSE is not lacking for the kind of work the congressional investigating committees were set up to do.

Why, then, are so many Americans openly dissatisfied with these committees? Chiefly, I think, because they have, by and large, done their job so badly.

The process by which chairmen of congressional investigating committees have been chosen has always been somewhat mysterious. But few will deny that the choice of these chairmen has always been unfortunate. The post seems to have attracted men who have consistently—from Martin Dies and Jailbird Thomas down to Velde, Jenner and McCarthy—shown little regard for the traditional legal rights of the witnesses who have been brought before them.

With no conspicuous exception, the chairmen have, on the record, shown little capacity in cross-examination—and astonishingly less to contrive watertight cases and get convictions.

Mountains Of Publicity

One realizes that when one remembers that not one of the important Communist leaders or spies, now in prison—with the exception of Alger Hiss—was put out of circulation as the direct result of a congressional investigation.

Meanwhile, the investigators have had mountains of publicity. They have, all too often, done great public damage to one of the most sacred of American traditions—our tradition of exact and carefully guarded justice. And their achievements have been very close to zero.

Is there not some other way? Of course there is.

If the search for active Communists, spies and traitors is important, then it is too important to be mixed up—as certainly it has been—with personal and party politics. If the intention is to safeguard the American way of life, then that intention is defeated if the keystone of the American way of life—our system of justice—is done public harm.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"No Leash For This One?"

In cooperation with the White House, the legislature can, if it wishes, disband the warring, shadow-boxing and strikingly incapable investigating committees which now exist, and substitute something which is, as a matter of fact, far closer to the American tradition.

Congress and the President can appoint not a bipartisan, but an entirely nonpartisan commission of inquiry. Such a commission should be headed by judges—by men who have been trained, as this random collection of senators and congressmen has not been, in arriving at the truth by due process of law. And, to that commission, should be appointed representatives of both houses of Congress, of each party.

Men to head such a commission would not be hard to find. The American judicial and legal profession has no lack of able, just and honest men who could accomplish two things, neither of which is being accomplished today—the conviction of the guilty and the clearing of the innocent.

Reuther Replies—

CIO Stands For Civil Liberties

CIO STANDS for the protection of civil liberties while safeguarding against Communist espionage, Pres. Walter P. Reuther has made plain.

In replying to an editorial in the Memphis, Tenn., Commercial Appeal, Reuther said that CIO yields "to no one in our desire to protect the national security against spies and saboteurs."

The Scripps-Howard chain newspaper editorially criticized the recent CIO convention resolution on civil liberties and internal security. The editorial implied that present federal loyalty programs are necessary to root out Communists in government.

Citing the long anti-Communist record of the CIO, Reuther pointed out that "many of those who shout the loudest about communism at home do the least to defeat Communist imperialism abroad."

The CIO program for fighting communism, Reuther wrote, calls for:

- A sufficiently strong military force to deter Russian aggression.
- Economic and technical aid to the peoples of the free world in their struggle against communism.
- Free speech for all, even for those whose views, like the views of the Communists, we detest.
- Professional spy-catching, not harassment of government workers.

No apologies were necessary, said Reuther, for CIO's "distinguished record in the struggle against communism. We put our own house in order many years ago by expelling those unions which, after a full and fair trial, were found to follow the Communist Party line."

Reuther noted that the CIO supported by word and deed aid to Greece and Turkey, the Marshall Plan, Point IV and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

"Your editorial misstates, or at the very least misinterprets, the resolution of the CIO," Reuther told the newspaper. "It is our position, as stated in the resolution, that the loyalty and security programs aimed at federal employes have been carried out without regard to the rights of those employes, have wasted the time of thousands of FBI agents and have failed to disclose 'a single instance of espionage or of improper use of documents.'

What About Hiss Case?

"You ask editorially 'What of the Hiss case?' Alger Hiss was out of the government before these programs began. You ask 'What of Judith Coplon?' She was caught by counter-espionage methods—not by the loyalty or security programs. You ask 'What of the Rosenbergs and of Harry Dexter White?'

"All of them were out of the government before the loyalty and security programs began. We repeat: The federal loyalty and security programs have failed to disclose a single instance of espionage or the improper use of documents."

Reuther said it was the desire of the CIO to protect the nation against spies and saboteurs. "But," he continued, "it does not serve our national security or catch spies and saboteurs to harass loyal government workers with interrogations about contributions made to organizations 15 years ago, and about people they might have met in college long ago.

"Reckless attacks on government workers may be good politics, but they are bad national defense. Spy-catching is a professional business which is not helped by the amateurs running the federal loyalty and security program."

Ike Hopes For Accomplishments - - But Congress Has Other Ideas

"...Whether or not the Congress enacts a progressive, dynamic program enhancing the welfare of the people of our country will determine the future political complexion of the Congress and the future of the Administration...

"Unless the Republican party can develop and enact such a program for the American people, it does not deserve to remain in power."

—Pres. Eisenhower, Dec. 2, 1953

By MILTON PLUMB

AGAINST a background of fast-approaching elections, the 83rd Congress returns to Washington this week—and to a pile of unfinished business which towers as a high as the Washington Monument a few blocks from the Capitol.

Taxes and government spending, a full employment economy, defense and aid to our allies abroad, sound labor legislation, a better housing program, aid to farmers, social security, civil rights, the development of atomic energy—all of these and a host of other complex and important issues confront the returning lawmakers.

They were shoved aside last spring and summer, during the era of "government by postponement" in the first months in office of the new Republican Administration.

The expiration of present laws, mounting demands for action to meet pressing social needs, and other factors make it imperative that Republican leaders face up to these issues in the coming session.

Answers Demanded

They're all right where Congress and the Eisenhower Administration left them—demanding answers before the spring primaries and the November general elections in which all members of the House and a little over a third of the Senate will be up for re-election.

From Pres. Eisenhower down, Republicans have begun to recognize that there's plenty of electoral dynamite in the legislative logjam confronting the second session of the 83rd Congress.

This was indicated by the President, when he met with GOP House and Senate leaders for three days over the holidays and said:

"The people of this country are looking to the Republican Party to continue to enact a forward-looking, progressive program that will serve the welfare of 160 million people, and I know we shall succeed."

The American people are hoping the President's confidence is not misplaced.

But Eisenhower's optimism over the chances for even a watered-down legislative program is not shared by many veteran Washington observers, who recall the dismal record run up in the "do-nothing" 80th Congress by largely the same House and Senate leadership in power today.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Disptach

"We're Conferring Now On A Program."

A Different Color

The Administration program may easily collide this session—as it did last year—with the emphatic wishes and desires of the McCarthys, Knowlands, Jenners, Brickers, Reeds and Tabers of the 83rd Congress and end up an elephant of a different color.

It would seem from the nature of the White House conferences that the President is now aware that the chief threat to any "progressive, dynamic" Administration program during the coming session lies within Republican ranks.

There are now 48 Democrats, 1 Independent and only 47 Republicans in the Senate, and Democratic support will be essential before any law can be passed. Yet Eisenhower confined the recent meetings to members of his own party, obviously seeking to iron out as many differences as possible among his own "supporters." Subsequently, he invited Democratic leaders to a White House session this week.

CIO's position on major legislative issues; see Page 12.

By and large, Democratic leaders did not appear to resent the exclusion. Most, while reserving the right to object to specific proposals, were still promising to support the President as they had last session on those measures which they believe will serve the general welfare of the nation.

Although no details of the GOP 1954 program have been forthcoming, the President said that it "will be based, in principle and in philosophy, on the 1952 Republican platform." He emphasized, however, that the 29 hours of discussion were "not all-inclusive of the recommendations that I shall submit to the Congress."

A Crowded Session

Eisenhower will reveal his program for the first time in three messages to Congress—the State-of-the-Union address on Jan. 7, his economic report about a week later, and a final message on the budget.

If the Republicans attempt to live up to all the unfulfilled pledges of their election platform, the coming session bids fair to be one of the busiest in history. It will be a busy one, in any case, for there is enough basic disagreement within GOP ranks to insure fights on almost every major issue that reaches the floor.

And despite the President's reference to the GOP platform, it is almost certain that no civil rights legislation will be enacted. Since this is the case, many Democratic backers of such measures predict that the Republicans won't let civil rights bill reach the floor because of the likelihood that the GOP might lose some Dixiecrat votes they need and otherwise would get on other issues.

This same reasoning is also being applied to the chances of new legislation backing up GOP campaign pledges to make Taft-Hartley "fair to labor," broaden social security, give home rule to the District of Columbia and statehood to Hawaii, etc.

Warmed-Over Spy

Since none of these developments would help Republican chances in next year's elections, those predicting them say that the politically-wise committee chairmen to which such bills are assigned will probably keep them bottled up throughout the session.

To cover up such reneging on promises, Republicans are thought by some to be getting ready to follow Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell along the paths of McCarthyism by "serving up warmed-over spy" as the main course of action for the session. Even Senate Majority Leader Knowland has publicly differed with the President over the importance of "reds in government" as a campaign issue.

A rash of new "investigations" aimed more at pre-election headlines than at getting at the facts, can be predicted with certainty for the present Congress in an election year. Many are likely to pose new threats to civil liberties. They will certainly cost taxpayers a fortune.

Up To The President

There will also be strong pressure from the Administration and within Congress for the enactment of a law to legalize wiretapping. Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), whose questioning in recent weeks appears to have been in large part based on illegal wiretaps, has advocated such a measure. It also has been recommended by the Attorney General.

Whether or not the 83rd Congress will be predominantly legislative or investigative appears to depend largely therefore upon the kind of fight Eisenhower makes on behalf of his program.

There is still doubt, however, that the President intends to make the all-out drive to rally support behind his program that will be necessary to secure its enactment. To do so, he will have to risk an open fight with the more reactionary leaders of his own party—something he has been unwilling thus far to do.

Key Laws Expiring

According to a survey by Congressional Quarterly, no less than 38 laws of considerable importance will expire during the coming year. In most cases, Congress will almost certainly have to extend them in some form. It will also have to devote considerable time to routine "housekeeping" operations and appropriations.

Weighed against the time demands of spring and summer primaries and the November elections, the outlook for carefully thought out laws on all of these matters is extremely dim. The odds—based on the record of past performance—all point to the likelihood of more postponement of final decisions.

This means that, despite the President's warning about the need for constructive action, GOP congressional leaders are likely to try to keep new legislation to a minimum and simply extend existing laws where necessary for another year.

This course would have the political advantage of not actually revealing to the voters real Republican plans for changes in basic New Deal-Fair Deal programs until after the elections are over. The disadvantage, of course, is that enough intimations about those plans have leaked out to require a clear-cut reversal and repudiation of the grounds for fears now held by the electorate.

The existing farm price support program, for example, has been strongly opposed by Sec. of Agriculture Benson. Farmers, greatly concerned by his public pronouncements and promises of a "new farm policy," are not likely to be satisfied if Congress merely extends the present law for another year while the same official continues to shape Administration agricultural programs.

Similar fears about threatened Republican give-aways also are not going to be allayed if Congress merely postpones its final decision on pending proposals to turn over Niagara Falls, public forests, grazing lands, and even the TVA to private interests.

Moreover, hovering over the session will be two major problems on which the American people will insist Congress give unequivocal answers. These are the big questions of national security in the sense both of military defense and of economic and social welfare.

Meaning Of Security

Each of these problems is many-sided, and will require many separate measures for a complete answer. Few, if any, Americans today fail to realize, for example, that military security also involves, besides the budget for the armed forces, such other factors as foreign trade policies, immigration barriers, and the treatment of minority groups within our own borders.

The people also know that before they can be secure in the economic sense, Congress and the Administration must take steps not only to check rising unemployment but also to provide decent housing, fair labor standards, and social security and other protection.

Failure to act, as the President has himself warned his party's leaders, will be just as much an answer that the people will clearly understand as the enactment of a reactionary program.

Either could spell disaster for GOP election chances in 1954.

From Taxes To Atoms, The Big Issues In Summary

By Public Affairs Institute

WHEN THE SECOND session of the 83rd Congress convenes this week, it will find that the need for legislative action "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" is pressing in many fields.

Here are some of the major problems Congress will face:

National Defense and International Relations: How big an armed force should we have? Which should come first, national defense or economy? Should foreign aid, both military and economic, and Point Four be further reduced? Should the proposed Bricker Amendment to the Constitution, restricting the power of the President in international relations, be adopted? Should tariffs be increased on lead, zinc and wool? Should residual fuel oil imports be limited?

Taxes: $8 billion in taxes are scheduled to expire between now and Apr. 1, 1954—10% of income tax, excess profits taxes, certain corporation and excise taxes. For the year ending June 30, 1955, it is estimated that the Treasury will be in the red anywhere from $4 billion to $13 billion.

Here are three alternatives for Congress and the Administration: (1) Vast new cuts in government expenditures. The Eisenhower Administration estimates that 75% to 80% of such cuts would have to be in the defense program. (2) Increased taxes. (3) Deficit spending and increased debt.

The $275 billion public debt ceiling is now being reached and must be lifted. The Senate refused to take such action during the first session of the 83rd Congress.

Agriculture: A farm recession is so deep that workers are being laid off by industries making farm supplies.

Congress must decide whether to extend the 90% of parity supports in face of surpluses of cotton, corn and wheat, or to let the support level decline to discourage production, thereby further aggravating the economic situation in agriculture. It will be confronted by demands from both dairy producers and some livestock groups to add their commodities to the list getting mandatory 90% supports.

Labor-Management Relations: Many changes are being suggested in the Taft-Hartley Act: injunctions, non-Communist affidavits, rights of strikers in economic strikes, secondary boycotts on struck work, industry wide work stoppages and closed shop. Proposals are also being made to raise the minimum wage from 75 cents an hour to $1.

Social Security: Changes are being proposed in the national Social Security system in which nearly 47 million Americans have invested. One would extend the coverage to some 6-10 million people not now eligible. The administration would freeze the 1.5% of the tax rate and cancel a scheduled increase to 2%.

Natural Resources and Power: Amendments to the Atomic Energy Act will be proposed by the Atomic Energy Commission calling for interim legislation to permit private ownership of fissionable materials and liberalize atomic patent law restrictions.

Ike, GOP Slip In Latest Gallup Polls

ON THE EVE of the Congressional session in which Pres. Eisenhower is to present his much vaunted "program," the General's popularity, and that of his party is slipping badly.

Those facts are brought out in a series of recent Gallup polls, the most important of which shows the President's personal popularity has slipped to a new low of 60% as compared with 75% as recently as September.

The biggest loss in popularity for Pres. Eisenhower, the poll confirms, is with the nation's farmers and white collar families.

Heralding this loss of personal prestige was a Gallup poll a few days earlier showing that "nearly one out of every 10 voters (9%) who voted for Eisenhower last year say their attitude toward the GOP today is less favorable than it was a year ago."

The biggest defection, the pollsters find, "lies in the fact that 17% of the independent voters say their attitude toward the party has changed, and the change is on the unfavorable side by a ratio of almost 5-to-1."

The voters' opinions of the Republican Party itself, and what it stands for, show the same trend in still a third sampling by Dr. Gallup's researchers.

One out of every four voters with an opinion, says Gallup, believes the Republican Party stands for "the rich, privileged few; big business." And that's half again as many as thought so in 1951.

In the same sampling, four times as many voters (4%) think the Republicans stand for "corruption and graft" as did in 1951.

Taft—Hartley--It's Still No. 1 For Labor

By AL ZACK

WILL THE Taft-Hartley Act wear a "new look" when Congress adjourns this year? If so, will that "new look" be more favorable to labor or to management?

Those were the two big questions on labor legislation as the 83rd Congress comes back to Washington.

There were plenty of opinions floating around Washington about these questions—but no answers.

Part of the answer, or at least a hint as to what it may be, is known to a few men at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. They are the presidential advisers, reportedly busy writing the Eisenhower views on this controversial legislation.

But the general public—and the Congress—doesn't as yet know what position Pres. Eisenhower intends to take on Taft-Hartley.

Presumably, that position will be made known Thursday when the President makes his State-of-the-Union speech to the Congress. But he might deal in generalities in that speech and save his specific recommendations, if he intends to make any, for a later special message.

No Sugar-Coating

CIO, last winter and spring, told Congress what it thought those Presidential recommendations should be. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that CIO stood for ultimate repeal of Taft-Hartley, but would cooperate with and support all attempts to make the law "fair and just" through amendments.

But, said Reuther and the other CIO witnesses, these amendments would have to be substantial and realistic. They must go to the heart of the problem.

"Sugar-coating," said the CIO, "won't do."

Thus the President, if he intends to keep his campaign commitments to make Taft-Hartley "fair and just" to labor, management and the public, would have to recommend the law be substantially amended.

This would necessitate recommendations going far beyond the 19-point abortive message which led to the resignation of Martin Durkin, the first Eisenhower Secretary of Labor.

Durkin quit when, he said, the President broke his commitment to send this message to Capitol Hill. Newspapers reported the Administration backed away from the message under pressure from big business that it was "too pro-labor."

Fundamental Problems

But the CIO pointed out that far from being "too pro-labor," the 19-point message did not deal with a number of major problems fundamental to revising the law to make it fair and just.

Those major issues not covered in the 19 points included:

- The one-sided injunction in so-called national emergency disputes, which puts the weight of the government and the power of the courts on the side of the employer, no matter what the merits of the union's case.
- Other injunction sections of Taft-Hartley, which negate the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction law, which the President had hailed as ideal when he was a candidate.
- Intimidation of workers which exists under the misnamed "free speech" section of Taft-Hartley.
- The rights of economic strikers to vote, which the President had flatly upheld during the campaign, were not protected. The 19-point message merely postponed the date of an election in the event of an economic strike.
- Changes in the boycott provisions of the law, as suggested in the message, were designed to benefit only the building trades unions. The other restrictive sections would have stood.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"Any Time You Guys Are Ready for the Second Half!"

Lost Opportunity

- Unions would not be protected from harassing suits which are designed to weaken responsible unions, despite the President's contention that strong, responsible unions are necessary for maintaining good labor-management relations.

But the President never officially sent these weak recommendations to Capitol Hill and business publications were freely predicting that this year's message (if there is one) would be "less pro-labor."

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, who told the last CIO Convention that the Eisenhower Administration had mishandled Taft-Hartley, does not believe the President could "lead the Congress into a constructive program for a really fair labor law."

The President, he says, had that opportunity last January "in the flush of his victory when he had a new Congress."

"He has lost that opportunity," Goldberg now believes. "The timid way in which the Administration has faced the Taft-Hartley question means that constructive amendments, in line with the President's campaign commitments, will not stand any chance of enactment now. The Administration has lost the initiative."

The conservative Wall Street Journal, summing up Taft-Hartley prospects, candidly says, "the result could easily be that Congress will side-step the touchy labor law issue entirely next year."

That may become the official GOP position on Capitol Hill but there were still many indications that reactionaries, both in the Republican and Dixiecrat ranks, were anxious to "make Taft-Hartley tougher."

The mid-December ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court, in the Pennsylvania picketing case, has been a new spur to these state's rights forces to narrow the federal jurisdiction and give anti-labor states more opportunity to cripple unions.

As the 83rd Congress meets, the labor legislation picture is clouded at best. The only point on which Capitol Hill observers were agreed was that this year the fighting would be tough and the results unpredictable.

CIO's Stand

This is the CIO position on Taft-Hartley, as spelled out by the Cleveland convention:

CIO is pledged to fight for the ultimate repeal of Taft-Hartley.

It believes that Pres. Eisenhower has not kept his solemn pledge to amend the law to make it just, fair and decent.

CIO will continue to seek a fair, just labor relations act based on the principles of the Wagner Act.

In This Day And Age—

Child Labor Is Still Shaming The Nation

CHILD LABOR, the blot on our society most Americans thought had been erased years ago, is still with us.

Grave abuses remain, many of them developing along with agricultural improvements.

Preparing to celebrate its 50th anniversary within a few months, the National Child Labor Committee's autumn bulletin reveals the battle to prevent exploitation of youngsters must be waged even today.

The inhuman system that put children into mills, mines and canneries at a tender age has gone forever. States seeking new industries no longer feature ads boasting "No child labor laws." But the farm, the neighborhood bowling alleys and the corner newsboy are still targets where the committee seeks to end abuses.

SURE HE'S CUTE—too cute to have to grub for a living in a stony cotton field before he's old enough to start school. Despite child labor laws, there are a lot like him.

SHE MIGHT BE your daughter, working in a Texas shrimp packing shed at the age of 11 when she ought to be romping in the fresh air or studying her lessons.

Evil Still Lives

The committee makes these points:

The children of farm migrants, America's most neglected youngsters, are working under conditions reminiscent of those in the early 1900's.

Farm machines may have revolutionized agricultural production—but they are taking a ghastly toll among the children who often operate them.

Bowling alleys hire young schoolboys for late night work as pin-setters.

Half the children who enter high school do not remain to graduate.

Most startling, perhaps, is the news that every year brings new attempts to break down hard-won state and federal child labor laws.

In New York, for example, the campaign of the committee and other groups this year defeated two bills that would have permitted children of any age to work on commercial farms for any number of hours.

In Pennsylvania, an attempt to extend child labor laws to cover migrant children was defeated.

Toll On Farms

A survey by the committee turned up 253 serious farm accidents between May and August in which children working on tractors and other farm machinery were involved. Of these, 81 were under 12 years; 68 children were killed, including 19 children 12 years old or younger. The injured numbered 212. Sixty of those killed were working on tractors, most of them as drivers. The survey is admittedly far from complete.

The Iowa Farm and Home Register reported 87 tractor accidents in that State alone in May, June and July, of which 27 involved operators under 15 years.

An editorial in the Minneapolis Star pointed out that "the tractor is a deceptively simple machine. Children 7 and 8 can operate one. But the fact also is that in the hands of the unskilled and inexperienced operator the machine can be, and is, a killer."

Gertrude Folks Zimand, general secretary of the NCLC, reported that the basic aims of the group have not changed during half a century, but they are interpreted more broadly. The present concept of what is wanted for American children goes far beyond what the founders of the NCLC envisioned.

A Sore Spot

Bowling alleys are a persistent sore spot. Young schoolboys are employed late at night. Often their work is illegal. But if the law catches up, the proprietors make strenuous efforts to amend it and exempt bowling alleys from age and night work provisions.

"Up Your Alley," published this year by the NCLC, discusses the problem. The pamphlet was held responsible, with other factors, for the defeat of bills in seven states to break down standards for children under 16 employed in bowling alleys.

An Open Invitation To Chiselers

Labor Dept. budget cuts by the Eisenhower Administration are a wide open invitation for chiselers to break child labor laws.

A 22% slash in an already insufficient appropriation will hamstring efforts by investigators to punish violators. The cut hits directly at the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Div., which is charged with protecting 22 million workers against violations of the 75c minimum wage and child labor laws. It means closing of 26 regional and field offices and dropping 250 people, including more than 100 investigators. This will result in a cut of at least 25% in the investigations carried through.

Jersey PAC Has A Machine—Here's How It Works

ANY LINGERING doubt that the New Jersey CIO Council Political Action Committee has a "machine" that works in high gear is laid to rest in a new book, "The New Jersey CIO-PAC Plan," which bares all.

The machine, however, is not the kind usually associated with politics. It's a collection of automatic, mechanized equipment that saves time in large gulps and permits the PAC to speed information on issues and candidates to all or any of the 250,000 CIO members in the state and their families.

The book, published jointly by the CIO and Remington-Rand, Inc., explains how it operates (see photos below). Its basis is punched cards—the same system used by governments and large firms to handle large lists of names.

The operation involves punching the name, address, ward, district, local union, international union and registration status of each CIO member on a Remington-Rand tabulating card.

These cards can be automatically sorted into registered and unregistered voters, or in any combination of these breakdowns — international or local union, county, city, or ward.

A tabulator machine automatically prints each name and address as it appears on the card, along with code designations for local and international union, ward and district, at the rate of 1000 lines per minute.

Two lists can be printed simultaneously from the same punched cards on a roll which the tabulator separates into two rolls. If additional copies are required, carbon paper is used.

The tabulated roll is then placed in a hand-operated mailing machine which cuts and pastes the labels on envelopes as fast as it can be manipulated.

To top off everything, an automatic inserting and mailing machine "stuffs" up to four different pieces of literature into the addressed envelopes, then seals and stamps them for mailing.

EFFICIENCY of automatic office machinery is employed by New Jersey State CIO-PAC in state and federal election campaigns. At left, names, address and registration status of each CIO member in state is punched on tabulator machine cards. Next, cards are checked against official registration records. Then, punch cards are sorted by union, community or district, and, (finally), placed in printer for PAC mailings.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

SEN. MORSE (Ind. Ore.) will be the principal speaker at the third annual Michigan CIO legislative conference at Lansing, the State capital, on Jan. 22-23. Delegates will be assigned to panels which will discuss taxation, FEPC and civil rights, workmen's compensation and safety, unemployment compensation and welfare, reorganization and reapportionment of the State legislature, State labor mediation, and social welfare legislation.

The Upper Peninsula CIO leadership training institute, which was held at Weber's Resort near Marenisco under the Michigan CIO Council's auspices, was attended by some 60 students, the largest number in the school's four-year history.

The Greater Flint, Mich., CIO Council will soon move into a two-story building to replace its former quarters, destroyed by fire. There will be parking facilities for 50 cars. The Council has asked Gov. G. Mennen Williams to investigate further the manner in which some Genesee county justices of peace garnishee workers' wages.

Pres. Harry E. Mayfield of the Columbus, O., CIO Council has been named a member of the 16-man advisory committee of Mayor-Elect Maynard E. Sensenbrenner. The latter said committee members "have been selected on the basis of their ability to assist me in giving Columbus the best possible municipal government."

A decision by the California Public Utilities Commission upheld the stand taken by the California CIO Council against the proposal of the Los Angeles Transit Lines and the Pacific Electric Co. to stop issuing commutation tickets for school children. The commission also refused to abolish tokens but hiked their price from three for 40c to four for $1, which the Council opposed.

Gov. William G. Stratton of Illinois named John Alesia, Illinois PAC chairman and director, to the Workmen's Safety and Education Commission, which study safety and health programs in the State.

Dr. Robert Ray of the State Univ. of Iowa Public Affairs Institute spoke at an Iowa CIO Council political action meeting at Des Moines, designed to prepare for carrying on an effective campaign in 1954.

Here and There: For the fourth successive year the Oakland, Mich., CIO Council is sponsoring a bowling league open to men and women of all races . . . Joseph D. Three Birds —One Stone

The Pennsylvania CIO Council has found a way to promote labor unity, help members of affiliated locals save money and raise money for local PAC funds.

Council Pres. Harry Boyer urged locals to buy AFL union label hosiery, which in some cases can be bought for as much as 40% under retail prices. In a letter to the affiliates explaining the plan, Boyer pointed out that the locals could sell the hosiery to their members at "substantially below the retail price, and use such revenue for political education purposes."

He told the locals to write directly to Union Label Dept., American Federation of Hosiery Workers, AFL; 2319 N. Broad St., Philadelphia 32, Pa.

High-Level Hells Canyon Dam Gets Nod Of Army Engineers

A MEMORABLE legal battle looms to decide the future of Hells Canyon dam, the proposal for a multi-purpose power project on the Snake River.

"A Look Into Hell's Canyon," a study of the battle being waged to provide essential low-cost in the Northwest, has been published by the Public Affairs Institute.

Leland Olds, former Federal Power Commission chairman, and Benton J. Stong wrote the study for the Washington group. They trace the project's history from its proposed development as a public measure to the recent Administration decision to turn its site over to the Idaho Power Co. Instead of a high dam, a series of smaller dams would be built by the utilities firm.

"Whatever the FPC decides in the license matter, a court case appears certain," the authors said.

"Hells Canyon may be well on the way to becoming as historic as Muscle Shoals, the center of a 20-year struggle that ended with the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority," they concluded.

The study recommended that Hells Canyon, the continent's deepest canyon, be developed into a "single, giant, federal multipurpose dam which will take its place with Hoover, Shasta and Grand Coulee dams."

The issue, said the authors, "involves not just the power resources of a 100-mile stretch of the Snake River, not just the resources of . . . the Columbia River basin with its 34 million kilowatts of potential hydroelectric power. Beyond these, it involves the principles of river basin development which will insure the people of the entire country the best use of the resources of all their rivers."

The multipurpose project, the authors maintained, "would provide as much new energy as used by the entire city of Detroit in 1952."

SUPERIORITY of the original proposal for a single high dam at Hells Canyon is borne out by an Army Engineers' report recently made public.

The Army report, almost two years old, was made at the request of a Senate committee. It concluded that the two best plans for development of mid-Snake and Salmon Rivers water resources required construction of the multi-purpose dam at Hells Canyon.

Part of the report was devoted to comparison of the Hells Canyon dam with a high dam at Mountain Sheep, storing five million acre feet of water, which would flood out the Hells Canyon site and back water up to the proposed Oxbow site of the Idaho Power Co.

The private utility has Interior Dept. blessing to erect a series of smaller dams on the Snake, reversing previous policy to make power available through a single high dam.

The Army Engineers estimated that costs at Mountain Sheep would be higher and the benefit-to-cost ratio would be lower than use of the Hells Canyon site. Their study contrasted several plans involving erection of dams at different sites and sustained the case of Hells Canyon.

Job Aid Seen

If the Eisenhower Administration is worried about unemployment, it can undertake a "bold program" of new construction of Columbia River basin power projects.

That's the suggestion of Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), who said continuation of industrial expansion in the far West can "go far to avert economic distress."

Morse protested to Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge citing a "report" that the Administration's new budget will delay scheduled power generation at The Dalles dam from November 1957 until November 1958.

"Such a delay would be a serious setback to the economy of Oregon and the power requirements of the Pacific Northwest," Morse said.

AND THE NEWS

N. Y. City Labor Dept. Formed By Mayor Wagner

MAYOR-ELECT Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of New York City last week announced—shortly before he took office—that he will set up a city Labor Dept., to provide expanded services to labor and management.

He said he will appoint as head of the new department Joseph E. O'Grady, former director of the city's Div. of Labor Relations.

Wagner was making good a campaign pledge by creating the new department, whose function will be to help promote amicable labor-management relations.

It is expected the department will operate through two divisions, one board, and two advisory committees. There will be a mediation division, whose functions are now performed by the present Div. of Labor Relations, and a division of statistics—a "little" Bureau of Labor Statistics.

When Wagner announced his plans, those present included Michael J. Quill and Morris Iushewitz, president and secretary-treasurer respectively of New York City CIO Council. Quill also is president of the CIO Transport Workers.

'Citizen CIO' Is Making Gains With CSC Work, Beirne Says On Radio

CIO MEMBERS are good citizens in their communities, Chairman Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Community Services Committee emphasized on a recent nationwide radio broadcast over NBC.

Beirne, who is also president of the CIO Communications Workers, discussed the role of unions in integrating themselves into community life. CIO-CSC, he said, stresses that people get from their communities what they put into them.

"We organize at the local level in the community for aiding and operating fund drives, for enrolling members in all sorts of volunteer work at the community level, for work of all sorts in aiding the community," Beirne said.

He estimated the number of CIO people involved in this field at several hundred thousand.

THE CHANGED attitude of unions and social agencies in recent years, Beirne continued, was typified by the story told by a social worker who sought entrance to a union meeting "in the old days." The social worker waited and then was given a few minutes to talk before being ushered from the hall.

"Nowadays," Beirne went on, his experience has been that "because of programs like CSC, unions and locals and members constantly seek out social workers, try to get them into their meetings and are constantly searching for ways they can be of help in their community."

Beirne traced the development of CSC since its establishment in 1941 as the CIO's war relief arm.

"We also started the slow uphill grind of making our health and welfare agencies more responsive to the needs of the people, more democratic in their policy-making boards," he said. " At the same time we helped our members utilize their community agencies and to find their proper places on boards and committees of the agencies. That job is far from finished today."

CIO HAS a full-time community services staff and 47 full-time people integrated with community chests and the national agencies, Beirne reported, and five CIO international unions have CSC departments.

Beirne described community services work as "practicing Christianity" and added: "We want our members to be good citizens—we think most of them are . . . A union member is more than a union member. We want them to realize that what is good for a community is good for them."

Good Example

A practical example of how CIO members help in community activities was demonstrated when CIO Communications Workers in Dallas, Tex., donated several thousand dollars in a drive to aid victims of cerebral palsy.

In addition, more than 400 members donated from two to eight hours of their own time to handling phone calls during a fund-raising telethon program. Over a 16-hour period the CWA members handled over 100,000 incoming calls which netted more than $250,000.

Labor's Aid In '53 Praised By 2 Civil Rights Groups

TWO civil rights organizations have credited unions with aiding the fight for fair play for all Americans in 1953.

They were the National Labor Service of the American Jewish Congress and the National Urban League.

NLS said unions and the American people were "continuing to take the lead" in the civil rights battle last year.

"Ever since the challenging report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights was laid before the public six years ago, there has been an unprecedented forward march toward full and equal opportunity for Americans of all races, creeds and ancestries," NLS said.

"Citizens in every walk of life have joined a nationwide drive to eliminate discrimination and segregation."

Advances reported by NLS included the decision of the AFL Teachers to void charters of any local practicing segregation and admission of Negro members by the railroad trainmen and carmen.

NLS also reported Clairton, Pa., and Duluth, Minn., enacted fair employment ordinances. Connecticut, Massachusetts, Oregon and Washington State strengthened their laws against discrimination.

Lester B. Granger, NUL's national executive director, said, "Housing is the most critical problem today in race relations so far as the well-being of the Negro population is concerned."

NUL locals found jobs for 10,625 Negro citizens in 47 cities in 1953, including 274 new job openings with employers who had not previously hired Negroes.

Beef Prices Drop A Little But Packers Are Rolling In Gravy

THE DROP in beef prices that put occasional steaks on workers' tables over the last few months yielded a lot of gravy—and the packers got their share of it, too.

The high profits they chalked up by selling beef at lower prices are mainly responsible for boosting over-all profits far over 1952 levels, according to the National Farmers Union.

The NFU claim was borne out by the annual reports for Swift & Co. and Cudahy & Co. for fiscal years ending Oct. 31.

Swift's sales increased by less than one-tenth of 1% and its taxes went up 69%, but its profits soared over the 1952 fiscal year, the report shows. The net, which was $21.6 million in 1952, leaped to $33.9 million, or on a per share basis, from $3.66 to $5.72.

Cudahy managed to lose $7.2 million in 1952. Its sales sagged 17.3% in 1953, but instead of going deeper than ever into the red, it showed a profit of $543,000.

ANOTHER of the Big Four packers, Armour & Co., is expected to show a profit jump from $7.1 million in 1952 to $10 million for 1953, the Wall Street Journal predicted. Wilson & Co., according to the NFU, also is due to report a sharp rise in its net.

North American Aviation, Inc., which recently staged a bitter fight against paying realistic wages to its workers and forced 32,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers to strike, reported a net income of $12.7 million, or $3.72 a share, for the year ending Sept. 30.

This compared right well with $7.8 million, or $2.28 per share, for the previous year. And the recent strike, Board Chairman J. H. Kindelberger told stockholders, "will not materially reduce" sales and earnings for the 1954 fiscal year.

J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., family firm of Sec. of the Army Robert T. B. Stevens (he reluctantly sold his share on taking his post), reported net income of $9.3 million for the year ended Oct. 31 compared to $8.9 million the prior year, or $2.35 a share compared to $2.27.

Net income of the Detroit Edison Co. showed a nice jump—from $16.5 million in the 12 months ending Nov. 30, 1952, to $21.3 million this year.

Benson's Boys Swing Brush And Whitewash Beef Prices

THE DEPT. of Agriculture got out its king-size whitewash brush last week and vigorously applied it to the country's beef retailers.

Except in scattered cases, it solemnly avowed, retail beef prices "have generally reflected" the declining prices ranchers have received for their cattle last year and this. The cases of "extremely wide" spread between the farm and the table, the department maintained, generally involved lower grades of beef and smaller market operators. The big chain stores it found clean.

The only thing wrong with the 33-page report was a lack of direct comparison of farm and retail prices of all grades of beef. The department did nothing to explain the omission, although it included 25 assorted tables and charts on less significant phases of the problem.

The report was based on a survey started several months ago after congressional complaints that somebody between the rancher and the housewife was getting too much of the price spread. The middleman, congressmen suggested, might be making exorbitant profits.

The packing industry, toward which a great deal of suspicion was directed, was not covered by the survey. That did not prevent the American Meat Institute from declaring itself "gratified with the results."

U. S. Checks Health Plans

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission is conducting a nationwide investigation of ad claims for mushrooming hospitalization and medical plans.

There are now 800 companies in the field, compared with only 50 in 1925. In 1952 they collected $1.883 billion in net premiums, an increase of 206% over 1946.

FTC said "certain practices may be prevalent . . . by insurers using the United States mails . . . resulting in buyers of such insurance being deceived by false and misleading representations as to the actual benefits payable thereunder."

The commission said it would bring the attention of the states to any violations of their laws.

GOP Axes Rent Lids In Defense Areas

THE EISENHOWER Administration has quietly and without fanfare all but ended federal rent controls four months ahead of time, it appeared last week.

Within the past few months, ceilings have been lifted on all but two of the 25 defense areas classified as "critical" last summer by Sec. of Defense Wilson under the stringent rules enacted by the GOP-dominated Congress at its last session.

The end of controls in atomic energy plant areas, where housing has been critically short, came last week when Dir. Glenwood J. Sherrard of the Defense Rental Area Div. of the Office of Defense Mobilization, ordered them lifted as of midnight Dec. 31 at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

The order was promulgated so quietly that residents of Oak Ridge first learned of it when they read the Knoxville, Tenn., newspapers.

It brought a quick protest from Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.). He wired a request to Defense Mobilization Dir. Arthur Flemming to reconsider his decision, pointing out that Congress authorized continuance of controls to Apr. 30.

"Such action on your part is precipitous," the telegram said, "in that it effectively prevents opportunity for protests by Oak Ridge Town Council and representatives of interested citizens' groups, should they desire; and comes prior to imminent action by Congress, when it reconvenes, on disposition of the town."

The CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, with many members in the area, also prepared to protest. The Atomic Energy Commission, which owns the town, has been aiming at a 28% general rent increase. It boosted prices by that much when controls were lifted at Los Alamos, N. M., and Hanford, Wash., where there were no strong unions to protest. In Pike county, O., and neighboring Scioto county, controls were ended about a month ago and rents have soared fantastically.

The situation around military installations, already critical, has been made worse by orders ending rent controls which were issued so quietly as to be almost secret.

Zooming

When the Republicans scuttled federal rent controls in Pike and Scioto counties, O., a month ago—five months prematurely—they laid Atomic Energy Commission employes and other workers open to incredible boosts.

One woman in Portsmouth, in Scioto county, reported a jump from $26 a month to $26 a week. Another tenant suffered a 470% increase, from $17.50 to $100 a month. Other samples: $31.50 to $65; $14 to $45; $49 to $75; $28.50 to $42.50, and $30 to $55.

CIO-CSC Sets Up Staff Meetings

The CIO Community Services Committee will hold two informal staff conferences early in the new year, National Dir. Leo Perlis announced last week.

An eastern conference will be held beginning 10 a.m. on Jan. 11 in the Carnegie Building, 345 E. 46th St., New York. A session for the midwest has been scheduled for the Hotel Jefferson, St. Louis, beginning at 9:30 a.m. on Jan. 26.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

MODERATE-INCOME families can expect another year of high living costs for 1954, with a little relief possible if you plan and buy wisely.

Some goods you must buy for your family will be a little cheaper this year, but some of the most important necessities are still going up and will offset the declines. Food prices, particularly, are sneaking up again, although they dropped very little in 1953 compared to the sharp decline in farm prices. Higher costs of food, housing and services will offset prospective lower prices for clothing, furniture and auto costs.

Price Prospects For '54

If you already own a home, you can expect your total living costs to be about the same in '54 as last year. But if you rent or are planning to buy, you will be pressured by increased costs in the new year.

Here are trends and tips in various departments of living to help you plan your buying and budget in the struggle against 1954's high living costs:

FOOD: Despite a drop of 4.7% in farm prices of food in 1953, average retail food prices went down only 1.6% and now are beginning to climb.

Particularly stay away from pork and pork products this year. The supply is low and pork prices will shoot up even more between now and August. Beef, lamb and veal will remain comparatively modest in cost this year, with lower grades of beef especially the most reasonable meat. But even the prices of these more abundant meats will be firmed up by pork's high cost, and it will be advisable to substitute cheese, eggs and fish for meat as much as possible. Cheese particularly will be reasonable this year, and eggs will cost less.

CLOTHING: You can expect slightly lower prices this year, especially on rayon garments which will mean a break in the costs of women's clothing, and a small reduction on some cotton clothing, which will be of benefit to the men and children in the family. For home sewers, rayon piece goods too will be cheaper this year. Small reductions on denim work clothes will show up soon as the result of recent wholesale reductions.

HOUSING: Shelter cost will be the big problem this year for many families. Rents went up 6.5% in '53 alone as the result of the removal of controls and will be forced up further this year. House-seekers will have to pay the new higher interest rate on mortgages effected by the Administration in '53. Utility bills are also steadily moving up. Fuel oil prices will remain at about present levels; the Autumn price raise has now been rescinded by most suppliers.

Home furnishings may cost you a little less as the result of retail price-cutting of furniture and appliances, now also forcing down manufacturers' price ideas. However, manufacturers will attempt to avoid price reductions by introduction of new and in some cases improved models.

CAR COSTS: It will cost you less to run your car this year, if you use regular-grade gas. The oil companies have brought out new premium gases at a higher price, of possible benefit to owners of some late-model cars with high-compression ratios. But prices are being trimmed on regular grade in many areas. The spread between regular and premium has now widened to 3c on many brands. Unless your car needs very high octane, you'll save even more on regular this year.

The cost of buying a car will be a little less for a workingman this year too. Dealers are under pressure to cut the list prices, and the spread between used and new cars is widening to more normal levels. Prices of repairs, however, are going up.

Anti-Trust Case Pushed

AN ANTI-TRUST case against Pillsbury Mills, Inc., which had been dismissed by a Federal Trade Commission examiner, was ordered resumed by unanimous vote of the FTC.

The examiner, Everett F. Haycraft, dismissed the complaint against the nation's second largest flour miller immediately after hearing the prosecution's case. His grounds were that it did not spell out a violation of the anti-merger section of the Clayton Act.

The FTC ruling said evidence so far presented establishes a "prima facie" case that the effect of the purchase of Ballard and Ballard Co. and Duff's Baking Mix Div. of the American Home Products Corp. by the Minneapolis firm "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly." Pillsbury's defense has yet to be heard.

Good News From A Textile Town

THE OWNER of a Plymouth, Mass., textile mill gave the city's holiday spirit a boost when he paid $24,000 in retirement and vacation pay obligations of the once-closed plant.

He is Bernard Goldfine, the new owner of the George Mabbett & Sons Co. mill. Goldfine presented the checks to more than 100 employes, members of the CIO Textile Workers.

He acquired the mill last September after it was forced to close. The mill will be opened shortly for capacity production after being modernized.

For more than a half-century the mill has produced worsted fabrics. When it closed, accumulated retirement and vacation pay totaling $24,000 was lost to its employes.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THERE'S NO KIND WAY of telling a man he's laid off. You can use words like "recession," "soft spot," "temporary cutbacks," to describe the conditions that produce layoffs, but the fact to the man who gets the pink slip is always the same: he's plain out of work.

Some of the men in government, now, seem to like to play around with phrases like "temporary readjustments," and they speak of shaking down our economy. But whether the adjustment is temporary or prolonged, once again the facts are plain: that thousands of our fellow Americans are not going to be able to keep their families in decent food, clothing, and shelter.

Temporary starvation is no easier than long term starvation, and as the toll of laid off workers mounts day by day, we Americans have the right and duty to demand more than lip service from the men of government.

Our economists do not yet see any genuine trend in the layoffs, not one that can be pinned down so that we have a clear picture of where we are going—though the tracks seem to be greased downhill for a way ahead. Hardest hit are the farm implement workers. The farmers, already in a state of recession, or depression, can't buy that new tractor, or plow. Industrial workers suffer, accordingly, as I have pointed out before.

CERTAINLY, this situation, even though it is still limited, is a grave test of the Administration. If they can't handle the relatively mild industrial setbacks we are now going through, there are many millions of Americans who are going to ask if such an Administration could possibly handle a genuine economic disaster, or whether they have the willingness to face up to the genuine needs of the people.

No sane man would doubt the good intentions of the President of the United States, but the men around him are dedicated to a program that is narrow in its viewpoint, and limited in its approach to the general welfare. They would take us back to the days of Mark Hanna, who lived by the idea that if the corportions were strong the people would eventually prosper. It is that "eventually" that is the source of trouble, right now.

The Adminstration, for a year, has been studying and studying and studying, and appointing commissions and councils and investigating committees—and the bottom has dropped out of the farm market, the farm implement market, the used car market, and there is trouble in the new car market—all these things taking place while the situation was being "studied."

People don't eat "eventually." People don't pay their rent on "studies." Most of all, people are not little figures on business charts. They're flesh and blood and they get hungry and angry.

We are fortunate in many ways. We have some of the legacy of the past administrations. We have unemployment compensation to cushion the layoff shock, although it is still inadequate. We still have some farm controls that could pull the market together. But even these measures are under attack. They are called "socialistic."

THE NEWSPAPERS TELL US we are at the end of an era. They say the works of the New and Fair Deal are at an end. It may be so, but I doubt it. We learned some things in the troubles of the Thirties that we are not likely to forget. We learned that our government could bring a sick and tired nation back to its feet. We learned that democracy does work for all the people, so long as all the people are willing to stand behind it and do their share.

And we learned the mighty, fundamental lessons of the trade union movement. We learned to organize, organize, organize.

We had little thought in those days of the great union contracts that now protect our workers and keep the greedy from turning a depressed situation into a dog-eat-dog battle for jobs.

We fought some of our hardest battles just for a scrap of paper that said the company would recognize the union. We built a great economic future for millions of men and women out of those scraps of paper.

There is a song I heard many times at union meetings in the South: "We will overcome, we overcome someday . . . "

That "someday" seems with us now.

Fact-Finding Proposal Averts New York City Transit Strike

A FACT-FINDING proposal by Mayor-elect Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of New York City last week averted a possible New Year's Day strike of 44,000 employes of the city-owned transportation system, who are members of Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers.

When the adamant attitude of the Transit Authority caused the collapse of the negotiations, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill indicated the union would follow its "no contract, no work" policy. The present memorandum of understanding expired Dec. 31.

In naming a fact-finding board Wagner followed a proposal made by Quill, who pointed out that the present memorandum provides for such a body but that the the union would insist on retroactivity of economic benefits to Jan. 1.

TWU was first to accept the plan. Eight days later the authority accepted it conditionally.

Quill and Pres. Matthew Guinan of TWU Local 100 met last week with Wagner and Transit Authority representatives. Agreement was reached on the fact-finding formula.

A time limit of 30 days was set on the fact-finding procedure.

In a wire to the mayor-elect they said there were "serious questions of detail and procedure which undoubtedly the authority discussed with you, but which the union has not yet had the opportunity to discuss."

"IT IS TOO BAD," the wire said, "that little or no time is left for the intensive negotiations that you proposed but it is typical of these people that first they wait seven days in torturous indecision, consulting more and more lawyers, pondering law suits and injunctions and sending threatening letters to their employes."

TWU's 15-point bargaining proposals include a 25c across-the-board increase and three weeks' paid vacation after one year's service.

Hyman Blumberg (left) to officers of Consolidated Cutters & Shavers Union at a ceremony in Gloversville, N. Y. The presentation ended 18 years of independent existence for CCSU and spurred formation of an ACWA joint council in the glove and leather industry in the area. USA-CIO Cracks Solid Front In First Gold Strike Pact

THE FIRST break in the solid front of union-busting mine operators in the rich ore fields of Northern Ontario and Quebec came last week when the big Hollinger gold mine, Timmins, Ont., reached a strike settlement with the CIO Steelworkers.

The pact, ratified at a mass meeting of Hollinger workers, provided for an across the board wage increase of 5c an hour, full reinstatement without discrimination of all strikers, and an 18-month contract subject to reopening in case of a change in the price of gold or in the Canadian Gold Mine Assistance Act.

The first of the 1600 strikers went back to work a day after the ratification meeting. The agreement, it was expected, would constitute a pattern for settlements at other struck mines in the gold-laden Porcupine Camp employing about 3200 additional USA members.

THE NEW contract is substantially along the lines suggested by Minister of Labor Charles Daley, of Ontario, after both sides had conferred with him and with Prime Minister Leslie Frost.

The provincial government, for its part, agreed to set up a commission to study the economics of the industry and of the miners, and make recommendations to the parties if its study warrants.

The walkout continued, with negotiations deadlocked, in the still richer base metal mining area in Northwestern Quebec.

At the Noranda mine and smelter in Rouyn-Noranda, Que., the company made a unilateral offer of a 10c an hour pay boost and tried to stage a "vote" on it among its 1000 or so employes.

THE WORKERS boycotted the balloting, but in a vote held by the USA, turned down the offer by a margin of better than 10 to 1. About 600 additional USA members are on strike or locked out of other mines in the area, a source of lead, zinc and copper.

The union issued a statement pointing out to Noranda management the failure of its effort to impose a settlement on its workers, and invited it to renew negotiations looking toward a joint settlement.

Strikes in the two mining areas began last August. The lines of the workers have stood firm in spite of great economic and social pressures, and their fight won widespread financial and moral support from all parts of the U. S. and Canada. The Steelworkers estimate it has cost them nearly $1.5 million.

Fortune Sees 'Steady' Drop For Economy

A "STEADY, mild" decline in production, accompanied by an increase in unemployment, was forecast for 1954 by Fortune Magazine in its annual New Year economic prediction.

However, it said, the year probably will be second to 1953—biggest year on record for business. Gross national product will fall 3% and industrial output will drop 6%, it said, with production averaging about the same as in 1952.

The business magazine said defense spending will drop, demand for consumer durables, especially autos, will be less, and farm prices and the cost of living will hold "fairly steady." Public works spending, which sagged in 1953, is now going in the opposite direction, it said. It forecast that inventories will be cut $4 billion during 1954, that about 1.1 million homes will be built, and that credit will be "easy."

Ruttenberg Rejects FOA Post

AN APPOINTMENT to serve on the advisory board for Point Four operations overseas was declined last week by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education.

In a letter to Pres. Eisenhower, Ruttenberg noted that he had read about his appointment to the Intl. Development Advisory Board in the press and in a White House news release. He pointed out that he had not received official announcement of it. He also noted that there had been no previous discussion about the matter either with him or with any appropriate CIO officers.

Ruttenberg said he "assumed" he was being named to fill a vacancy created by the failure of the White House to reappoint Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee—who, Ruttenberg noted, had served more than two years "ably and conscientiously" on the board.

He could not accept the appointment "under those circumstances," he declared, and expressed doubt that "any labor person" would in view of the decimation of labor functions in the Foreign Operations Administration under the directorship of Harold Stassen.

Curran Says NMU To Ask Annual Wage In New Talks

GUARANTEED annual wages will be sought by the CIO Maritime Union in coming negotiations, Pres. Joseph Curran said last week.

Calling for "suggestions and ideas" to be presented to shipowners in 1954 negotiations, the NMU-CIO head stressed the members' need for "both high wages and security in employment."

"Remember, you can get all the wage increases that you want," Curran wrote in The Pilot, "but if you don't have a job on board ship, where wages are being paid, then wages don't amount to anything."

Curran recalled that "this industry is one that rises when wars exist, and goes down during peace time. Ships that a year ago were sailing are now being used for grain storage, principally because the present Administration has no interest in the merchant marine in peace time, and has arrived at no foreign policy and no foreign trade arrangements which are necessary for the flow of ocean trade."

CIO Legislative Program Is Summarized

By GERVASE N. LOVE

AS MEMBERS of the House and Senate returned to Washington this week for the second session of the 83d Congress, they had before them a well-rounded legislative program drawn up by the National CIO convention.

It is a program, according to the resolution setting forth the views of more than six million American workers, "based on the aspirations of our people for a better life for everyone, and . . . that it is a proper and major function of our government to promote and provide for the general welfare of all our citizens." Highlights follow.

Economic Planning

A positive program combining congressional and state legislation, plus administrative action by federal, state and local governments, was urged by the CIO to counter the economic dangers latent in the downturn of employment and to help increase purchasing power to meet the needs of the people and to create expanding markets and job opportunities.

At the national level, it called for tax legislation giving priority to lower income groups by increasing personal income tax exemptions, removing excise taxes which limit personal consumption, and rejecting a national sales tax in any form.

In addition, it urged giving the great mass of people greater purchasing power by raising the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, increasing social security coverage and benefits, enacting national health insurance and anti-discrimination legislation, a housing program geared to provide two million new units a year, the planning of a vast system of public works, a sound farm program and abandonment of the Eisenhower Administration's "sound" money policy.

Taft-Hartley Act

The CIO again urged Congress to repeal the "unfair and unjust" Taft-Hartley Act, and to enact "a fair and just labor relations act based on the principles of the Wagner Act." (See Pages 6-7.)

Housing

The National CIO convention demanded a housing program calling for construction of two million new dwelling units a year until the nationwide shortage is overcome. Included in the proposal is a national slum clearance-low rent housing program with at least 200,000 new units built annually.

The CIO also asked Congress to re-establish rent controls in areas in which rents rise appreciably due to defense activities which create housing shortages, to reduce interest rates on FHA and VA mortgages, to require the Housing and Home Finance Agency to compile new, comprehensive statistics on all phases of housing.

Social Security

The position of the CIO is that Senate Bill 2260, introduced by Sen. Lehman (D.N.Y.) and others, should be enacted by Congress.

The bill provides for substantial benefit improvements, broadened coverage, liberalized retirement tests, added federal programs of permanent and temporary disability insurance, and increased funds for rehabilitation of injured workers.

The CIO believes a sound program must continue to relate benefits to earnings and include an adequate reserve, and for this reason opposed the proposal of Pres. Eisenhower and others that the increase in the payroll tax from 1.5% to 2%, scheduled for Jan. 1, be repealed. The CIO also has warned Congress that suggested Chamber of Commerce amendments may lead to loss of benefits by those now insured, or require much higher contributions.

Taxes

In view of the economic turndown and to maintain and stimulate purchasing power, the CIO advocated a program permitting cuts in federal excise taxes, due Apr. 1, to go through; reduction and eventual removal of all other excise levies except those of a regulatory nature; increasing personal income tax exemptions (now $600) to $800 immediately and to $1000 if the need to stimulate purchasing power arises; enactment of a witholding tax for dividends and interest.

Also, taxation of income from state and local bonds, now exempt; removal of depletion allowances which permit oil, gas and mineral companies exorbitant deductions; increase in the capital gains tax from the present 26% to 50%; closing of "family partnership" loopholes; rewriting of estate and gift tax laws to yield substantially addi- mandatory joint returns for the split income provision, and closing of other loopholes.

In addition, the CIO vigorously opposed a federal sales tax, no matter what its name.

Minimum Wage

A three-point program was proposed which included increasing the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and extending its coverage to all workers in commerce or in industries affecting commerce; appropriation of sufficient funds to enforce the act, and repeal of the Fulbright Amendment to the Public Contracts Act.

Farm Program

The CIO stands behind farm programs "designed to keep prosperity on the farms and in the cities and to give farmers the security they need if they are to meet the growing demands that the future will make upon them."

Specifically, it called for a farm program "geared to a full economy, including reasonable price supports, farm credits, soil conservation, improvement of rural living standards, and protection of consumers."

Civil Rights

A program of civil rights legislation and increased protection for civil liberties includes passage of a fair employment practices law; legislation outlawing poll taxes and other undemocratic restrictions on the right to vote; an anti-lynching law; anti-segregation riders in federal appropriations for state aid; amendment of Senate Rule 22 so a majority vote can end a filibuster; reform of congressional committee procedures to insure fairness, and repeal or drastic amendment of the Subversive Activities Control Act to eliminate unworkable and repressive features.

Education

A nine-point program outlining the federal role in aid to education proposes a general aid to education law to raise teachers' salaries and improve school facilities; a companion act providing funds to aid school construction; enactment of the "oil for the lamps of learning" bill of Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) earmarking royalties from off-shore oil for improved education; federal scholarship grants; a school lunch program; creation of a labor extension service in the Dept. of Labor; federal grants to help states develop health services for children; a federal free library service demonstration program, and safeguards in all federal education legislation against racial segregation and discrimination.

Health

The medical goal of the American people, the CIO believes, "requires a national health program, based on national health insurance."

Recommended for such a program were expanded federal aid to schools of medicine, dentistry, nursing and medical technician training; assistance in building new hospital and health center buildings and facilities; student scholarships and aid to research, plus a well-rounded program of prepaid national health insurance.

Natural Resources

To maintain the nation's natural resources for all the people, not for just a privileged, powerful few, the CIO proposed to preserve TVA as a public enterprise and use the experience gained there to detail plans for the integrated regional development of other rivers; and to preserve the public lands, including national forests and national parks, and not to yield them to private lumber and grazing interests for private exploitation.

In addition, Congress was asked not to surrender to private interests the Hells Canyon and Niagara River power sites, to restore cuts in Rural Electrification Administration appropriations, and to join in construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and power project.

Immigration

Repeal of the McCarran-Walter Act was urged, and its replacement by Senate Bill 2585, introduced by Lehman and others. A good new law, the CIO believes, would not discriminate because of race, color or religion; give naturalized citizens the same rights and privileges as native-born citizens; bar deportation of aliens except for serious crimes, and let authorities administer the law in a humanitarian manner.

Miscellaneous

The CIO also believes Congress should—

Reject the Bricker Amendment and universal military training.

Provide the funds for an adequate national defense even at the expense of an unbalanced budget.

Strengthen the economies and social structures of our anti-Communist allies, as well as their military forces.

Grant statehood to Alaska and Hawaii, and home rule to the District of Columbia.

Abolish the electoral college and provide for direct election of the president and vice president.

Vote to develop and maintain an adequate merchant marine, with funds to construct, repair and modernize ships.

Enact a minimum wage for agricultural workers, a constructive recruiting program for migratory farm workers, and control of illegal entries through adequate funds for the Immigration & Naturalization Service.

CIO Raps Curtis Old Age Proposals As Peril To Social Security Benefits

THE LATEST social security proposals of Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.) were strongly condemned by CIO last week as "threatening" existing benefits for the nation's older citizens and for failing to provide sound improvements in the old age insurance program.

Curtis, chairman of a House Ways & Means subcommittee which recently conducted a lengthy and partisan investigation of social security, announced he would introduce a measure which in many factors parallels the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's "pay as you go" plans for wrecking social security.

A statement by Joseph Curran, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee and Maritime Union president, said:

"In contrast to the Lehman Bill, which would raise benefits, provide disability insurance and cover all gainfully employed on a sound basis, Curtis' proposal would threaten the benefits now available by raiding the trust fund and ending all federal grants to the states for the aged and for dependent children.

"The CIO believes that all persons now aged should be taken care of adequately in an appropriate manner, but out of general revenues, not at the expense of protection assured by other persons as earned rights."

Curtis' proposal would merge social security, to which workers and employers contribute, and separate federal-state old age benefits now going to aged needy not covered by social security. The latter program, including aid for dependent children, would be ended.

And Curtis' program would be financed out of the $18 billion social security trust fund—a key C. of C. program—until it was exhausted and thus open to annual changes by Congress.

The GOP lawmaker's proposed bill would up minimum benefits from $25 to $45 a month for all persons 65 or over, but would not increase the presently-inadequate top benefits.

Rep. Keen (R. N. J.), a House social security expert, called some of Curtis' proposal "demagoguery" while Democrats said the proposal "definitely would put the social security trust fund in jeopardy." (Editorial comment on Page 4.)

Ike Promises To Keep Prosperity

See Pages 2 & 3

ECONOMIC PREPAREDNESS to keep the economy strong and growing was pledged by Pres. Eisenhower in his State-of-the-Union message to Congress as it opened its session last week. The President, shown speaking with Cabinet members in front (right), was long on promises but short on specifics. These, he said, will come in a series of messages to be presented in the next few weeks. (Story and more pictures on Page 3.)

American Woolen Closing Down—

New England Mill Towns Swatted On Chin

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

NEW ENGLAND textile workers—long plagued by serious unemployment—were handed another jolt last week with the threat of the American Woolen Co. to sell 11 mills there and in New York State.

The jobs and security of several thousand mill operatives, most of them members of the CIO Textile Workers, hinge on decisions to be made at a stockholders' meeting Jan. 29. Sale of the plants and retirement of $19.5 million in preferred stock will be considered.

Of the 11 plants to be disposed of in the company's reorganization plan, two each are located in Lawrence, Mass., and Providence, R. I., and one each in Fitchburg, Mass.; Dover-Foxcroft and Pittsfield, Me.; Dover, N. H.; Winooski, Vt., and Utica and Fulton, N. Y.

Closing Under Fire

A substantial group of stockholders opposes the plan which was outlined in proxy statements and hints at future expansion in the South by American Woolen. This group seeks to retain the woolen and worsted industry in New England, its traditional home.

Most of the mills considered for sale have been closed for some time or running on drastically curtailed schedules.

In Lawrence, where two of the American Woolen's largest plants are located, the news of the proposed sale struck with the force of a major disaster. Beset by serious unemployment for more than two years, the Lawrence area now is threatened with the loss of its major industry.

The Wood mill, largest worsted mill in the world and at one time employing 7800 workers, now has a mere 300 at work and is among the company plants considered for sale. A third of a mile long under one roof and six stories tall, the mill was the area's largest employer.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"Did Anyone Bring A 'Chute, Just In Case?"

Across the street from the Wood mill a newer plant, the Ayer mill, which once employed almost 3000, has been idle for more than a year and is also to be put on sale if the company proposal carries.

Workers in both plants are members of Local 227, CIO Textile Workers. TWUA represents employes in 20 of the 26 American Woolen mills.

Textile workers and other residents of the area have become increasingly critical of Administration policies which resulted in lower employment, and American Woolen management for lack of foresight. Thousands heard Candidate Eisenhower in 1952 promise on the Lawrence Common to aid the city's stricken mills, a promise yet unkept.

The state's Republican Administration has also shared in the criticism. A GOP majority in the Legislature last year imposed new restrictions on unemployment compensation which hit the pocketbooks of thousands of jobless workers in the state.

It has also been an open secret that numerous officials of American Woolen have been at odds with Pres. Francis W. White of the firm. Many top executives have quit to join other concerns because of their inability to work with White, who at one time was resident manager of the Wood mill.

Mills In 'Mothballs'

White last week reported that the Defense Dept. might make a survey of the New England textile industry to determine whether some large mills should be kept in "mothballs" for use in the event of war.

"If the Defense Dept. rules that the mills are essential to national defense, at least two of the larger mills will be retained on a mothball basis," another company spokesman added.

This plan was expected to draw opposition from civic leaders in the area who see diversification of industry as the best hope for a return to a stabilized economy. Some smaller industries have moved into Lawrence to occupy space formerly used by textile mills now out of business.

Nearly 7600 were drawing unemployment checks in Lawrence last week, an increase of 2700 over the same period a year ago. The figure would be far higher, officials admit, except that many have exhausted their benefits due.

The TWUA, dominant union in the area, has come through two years of serious economic trouble with increased prestige in Lawrence.

Delegations have been sent to Washington to recruit aid for the city and Area Dir. Arthur W. Brown of TWUA serves on several local groups trying to restore economic balance. Rep. Lane (D. Mass.), who represents the district, and Mayor Buckley of Lawrence both paid tribute last week to Brown's efforts and leadership.

Brown and the Mayor conferred with Frederick C. Dumaine, Boston financier and American Woolen director, who is one of several opposing the firm's reorganization plan and reported encouragement towards retaining the plants in New England.

'That Recession Is Here'—Douglas

The nation is now "experiencing a recession" even as it hopes and prays we may not slide into a depression.

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), in a radio broadcast last week, made this point as he noted falling farm prices, reduced industrial employment, slumping mail order sales and lower freight car loadings.

"While the numbers of the unemployed are given by the Dept. of Commerce as only 1.4 millions for November or the same figure as last year, there are signs that this may be an understatement," Douglas said. Small errors in estimating the labor force, he said, could result in large errors in figuring the number of unemployed workers.

Ike's Job Aid Order Faces Bitter Attack

A BITTER fight over Pres. Eisenhower's announced policy of channeling defense contracts into areas of high unemployment loomed as Congress reconvened last week.

Sen. Knowland (Calif.), Republican Senate leader, told angry Southern Democrats he would work with them to correct "abuses" in the order, and predicted that Congress would act to limit its scope.

The Southerners renewed their opposition to the order, which was similar to one issued by the Truman Administration. Sens. Maybank (D. S. C.) and Russell (D. Ga.) introduced a bill to limit the government's authority for negotiating defense contracts.

The order provides that when a defense contract is to be let, 20 to 30% of it is to be set aside for the unemployment areas, provided they meet the lowest competitive bid submitted for the major portion of the order.

The CIO Textile Workers "welcomed" the order.

"WE HAVE long urged that steps be taken to provide jobs for the many thousands of workers whose security has been destroyed by the two-and-a-half year depression which has gripped the textile industry," said William Pollock, TWUA executive vice president.

In New Jersey, State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman called attention to the plight of the unemployed whose number there "jumped from 44,000 in October to 62,000 in November."

"In addition," he said, "'creeping' unemployment has hit thousands of other workers, whose overtime work has been cut and who are working on part-time schedules."

Holderman made a number of specific suggestions to Gov.-elect Robert B. Meyner and the State Legislature, to Congress and to employers for "bolstering purchasing power and preventing these layoffs from snowballing into a major depression."

Despite optimistic figures on unemployment issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, an Associated Press survey showed that 52,000 workers have been laid off throughout the country in recent weeks or face layoffs soon.

The wire service found that railroads and related industries had been hardest hit by recent layoffs.

No Help Wanted

The Studebaker Corp. closed down its night shift this week and was laying off between 3000 and 3500 members of Local 5, CIO Auto Workers. The layoff was the second in a few months, 5000 workers having been furloughed in September because of declining sales. It cut employment to about 12,000 workers.

Jobless Total Climbs By 422,000—And That Isn't The Whole Story

THE REPORT of the Commerce Dept. that 422,000 more workers were looking for jobs in December than in November is "bad enough," but it "doesn't begin to tell the full story," CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve declared last week.

Rieve, speaking as chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, said the department's measure of unemployment "just isn't adequate to catch what really has been happening" to jobs in the last six months.

The true picture, he added, is disclosed by comparing employment with a year ago—61.9 million at work in December 1952 against 60,764 million last month. The Commerce report showed 1.85 million jobless in December, compared to 1.425 million a year before.

"Simple arithmetic shows that while unemployment had increased only 425,000 in this period," he explained, "employment was over 1.1 million less than in December 1952. In other words, in addition to the official figure on unemployment, 700,000 jobs disappeared.

"If our economy had been maintaining a full employment gait, there would have been around 700,000 more people employed than in December 1952. That is the net addition to the work force each year . . .

"The explanations for the failure to record as unemployed these hundreds of thousands of workers are that most prefer not to find new jobs or are 'marginal workers.' This is tommyrot."

Rieve said that in preceding years, when the economy was expanding, the jobs were there and people stayed in the labor force.

IN THE early stages of a recession, he said, the Labor Dept. report on the unemployment compensation case load is a more sensitive index. This shows 1.382 million workers claiming benefits in the last week of December compared to 760,000 in December 1952—an increase of more than 80% as against a jump of less than 30% in the Commerce unemployment figures.

"We urge responsible political leaders not to hoodwink the American people by telling them that 1954 may be nearly as good as 1952, even if it isn't up to 1953," said Rieve, who also is president of the CIO Textile Workers. "Nostalgia for past records won't pay current grocery bills.

"The Administration and Congress should move promptly on the tax, social security, unemployment compensation, farm, public works, housing and minimum wage fronts to head off the spreading recession."

URW Asks Better Planning By Industry To Halt Layoffs

CIO RUBBER Workers last week called on the rubber industry for better scheduling of production in 1954 to prevent a repetition of last year's layoffs.

URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said employment in the industry dropped by almost 20,000 workers last year. In addition, he pointed out, those still employed have suffered wage cuts because of shorter work weeks.

He said an intelligent appraisal of expected demand for rubber products in 1954 should lead to production schedules which "will plan for the entire year ahead instead of just for the seasonal peaks and valleys."

"Overproduction in the first part of the year followed by a sharp decline in the later months has caused and if it is repeated will again cause great hardships on the thousand of workers who must be cut from the rolls," Buckmaster said.

Buckmaster said that a sales drop may not mean reduced profits, because the excess profits tax has ended, but "can have serious consequences for workers who must bear the brunt of any cutbacks through extended layoffs and shorter work weeks."

Ike Pledges U. S. Action To Keep Prosperity

By WILLIAM MILLIS

VIGOROUS but unspecific promises "to maintain strong, growing economy" were voiced by Pres. Eisenhower last week as the 83rd Congress returned to Washington.

First, in a broadcast address to the nation, the President pledged that his Administration will use "every legitimate means" of governmental action to maintain "basic prosperity."

"This Administration believes," he said, "that we must not and need not tolerate a boom-and-bust America."

Then, in his State-of-the-Union message to Congress, Eisenhower promised measures of "economic preparedness" so as "to keep our economy strong and to keep it growing."

Specifics To Come

But the GOP Administration's specific legislative proposals for maintaining a full employment economy were missing from the President's 7000-word message which formally opened Congress in an election year.

So, too, were any detailed plans or recommendations in a broad field of governmental policies — ranging from Taft-Hartley amendments to the farm price crisis, from tax and budget policies to international affairs. The President said the details would be provided in a series of special messages, beginning with one due Jan. 11 on labor-management relations.

The Eisenhower failure to spell out his legislative program —in a year in which Presidential leadership was promised in place of "government by postponement"—was in contrast with the congressional messages of former Pres. Truman and the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

CIO's Comment

CIO interpreted the Eisenhower message as an "index" of things to come. A statement by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"Pres. Eisenhower's State-of-the-Union message is in many respects merely an index of legislative proposals to come at later dates. The CIO will comment, at the proper time, on these specific legislative plans.

"Most Americans can agree with the basic objectives set out by the President for a better America. The CIO will judge the Administration by its ability to translate these fine sentiments into tangible and constructive programs to meet the problems of all Americans."

In his review to Congress of the first year of his Administration, Eisenhower claimed "a great strategic change in the world" with "that precious intangible, the initiative, becoming ours."

"We shall use this initiative," he said, "to promote three broad purposes: First, to protect the freedom of our people; second, to maintain a strong, growing economy; third, to concern ourselves with the human problems of the individual citizen."

But the President's address indicated that only part of the nation should concern itself with what he called "the forward road to a better and stronger America"—that large sections of the American people aren't going to have much to say about the foundations of "the forward road," how wide it is, how straight it is, and whether it will reach a better America or detour into depression.

For example, in the economic section of his message, Eisenhower said:

"A government always ready, as this is, to take well-timed and vigorous action, and a business community willing, as ours is, to plan boldly and with confidence, can between them develop a climate assuring steady economic growth."

Noticeably missing from the President's description of interested parties to the nation's economic future were labor, the farmers and consumers.

He limited it to business and government—which recalls Interior Sec. McKay's proud boast some months ago that "we're here in the saddle as a government of business."

'Keep It Growing'

The economic section said the Administration would "not leave to chance" the transition from a wartime to peacetime economy, and "is determined to keep our economy strong and to keep it growing."

Eisenhower said the Administration's "economic preparedness" includes proposals in the field of taxes, fiscal policies, improved social security and unemployment insurance, farm support, public works, and international trade—but, again, the specifics were promised for later messages to Congress during the next several weeks.

In the field of labor and welfare legislation, the President again called the Taft-Hartley Act "basically a sound law" but suggested that "in some respects it can be improved." His proposals will be sent to Congress on Jan. 11.

Other highlights of the President's speech on domestic issues:

CIVIL LIBERTIES: Eisenhower said convicted Communists should be stripped of U. S. citizenship for "actions akin to treason," and said Atty. Gen. Brownell will ask for legislation to legalize wire-tapping.

CIVIL RIGHTS: There was no mention of fair employment practices legislation. The President noted moves against segregation in the armed forces and the District of Columbia. He asked statehood for Hawaii, not for Alaska.

HEALTH: Flat opposition to "the socialization of medicine" was voiced, but he urged more federal encouragement of medical research.

SOCIAL SECURITY: The President renewed his plea for extending social security to 10 million persons not now covered, asked more aid for the physically handicapped, urged extension of unemployment insurance to 6.5 million workers now exempted. He also asked overhauling of federal grants-in-aid.

TAXES: Eisenhower asked continuation of present corporation income taxes and of excise tax rates which expire in April, but hinted "further reductions in taxes can and will be made."

HOUSING: The President in a later housing message will ask continuation of public housing, "redirection" of slum clearance programs and other measures so that "every American family can have a decent home."

AGRICULTURE: Again the details were delayed to a later message, but the President criticized the existing price support law and urged a flexible and "modernized" farm program.

CIO Leaders Discuss Plans

MEMBERS of the CIO Executive Committee met in Atlantic City last week for a two-day discussion of legislative, political and administrative matters for the coming year.

Also taking part in the "bull-session-type" discussions, were secretary-treasurers of the CIO's larger unions, the PAC operating committee, CIO regional directors and the PAC staff.

The CIO International Committee also met in Atlantic City for an evening discussion.

What Eisenhower Said About Jobs

Here are excerpts from Pres. Eisenhower's address to the nation, on the eve of the congressional session, concerning full employment and social welfare issues:

THIS ADMINISTRATION believes that no American — no one group of Americans — can truly prosper unless all Americans prosper. We are one family made up of millions of Americans with the same hopes for a full and happy life. We must not become a nation divided into factions, or special groups and hostile cliques.

We believe that the slum, the out-dated highway, the poor school system—deficiencies in health protection, the loss of a job, and the fear of poverty in old age—in fact, any real injustice in the business of living—penalizes us all. And this Adminstration is committed to help you prevent them. . .

And there is still another accomplishment. Perhaps this one should more properly be called groundwork for an accomplishment.

It is groundwork that has been laid by this Administration in the strong belief that the federal government should be prepared at all times—ready, at a moment's notice—to use every proper means to sustain the basic prosperity of our people.

I therefore give you this assurance:

Every legitimate means available to the Federal Government that can be used to sustain that prosperity for this purpose—is being used and will continue to be used as necessary.

This Administration believes that we must not and need not tolerate a boom-and-bust America. We believe that America's prosperity does not and need not depend upon war or the preparation for war.

We know that this great country can make the adjustments necessary to meet changing circumstances without encouraging disaster and without bringing about the economic chaos for which the Communists hope. Our system is the greatest wealth producer in the world—in terms of the life and the well-being of every citizen.

Sound planning and aggressive enterprise must, of course, be accompanied by the indispensable ingredient — a persistent and reasoned faith in the growth and progress of America, a faith which cannot be shaken by self-appointed peddlers of gloom and doom.

Survey Shows Demos Stronger

A survey by Crossley, Inc., and political analyst Louis H. Bean predicted that Democrats would win control of the House if an election were held today. Bean is a former official of the Agriculture Dept.

The Boston Post, which published the survey, said it showed that the Democrats could pick up 40 House seats. The survey was made in widely spread areas —the Northeast, the Ohio Valley, the winter corn belt, and the Pacific Coast states.

ACWA Hikes Pension $5

CIO Clothing Workers retired from the cotton garment industry will receive an additional $5 a month pension, raising the benefit to $35, come Feb. 1.

On the request of ACWA-CIO's officers, trustees of the Amalgamated Cotton Garment and Allied Industries Insurance Fund approved the increase.

Promises And Performance

Pres. Eisenhower has the support and agreement of all sections of the nation in his latest promise to maintain a full employment economy—and, from labor, a reminder that the time is overdue for performance on those promises.

In his radio-television address to the American people last week, on the eve of the new session of Congress, Mr. Eisenhower said that "every legitimate means available to the federal government that can be used to sustain that prosperity . . . is being used and will continue to be used as necessary."

There is a defensive note in the recent criticism by the President and Republican National Chairman Leonard Hall of "self-appointed peddlers of gloom and doom," and in the rollicking optimism of the Commerce Dept. which finds "the unemployment situation was exceptionally favorable during most of 1953."

Apparently, the Commerce Dept. believes that the more workers who lose jobs, the better the economic situation—an argument cut from the same cloth as GOP promises to provide more defense for less money.

Certainly, the news developments of the past week indicate the time for positive governmental action to keep the full employment promises is long overdue:

- The latest Commerce Dept. unemployment report shows the unemployment in December increased by 422,000—and that is only part of the story.
- In New England, the big American Woolen Co. is moving to shut down 11 mills. Yet the only direct Administration action to ease layoffs—contained in the President's recent statement underwriting former Pres. Truman's program for allocating defense contracts to job crisis areas—is under strong congressional attack, including that of Senate GOP Leader Knowland.
- As the auto industry began a new season, Studebaker announced another sweeping layoff, covering some 3500 workers.

What Course Of Action?

Behind the Commerce Dept.'s report of 422,000 more unemployed workers are even more serious figures. Only last August—at a seasonal peak—the U. S. had 63,408,000 workers on the job. In December, that figure was 60,764,000—a drop of nearly three million. The unemployment total of 1,850,000 is underestimated further by the estimated 700,000 workers no longer counted in the labor force and seeking employment and another 700,000 new, young workers who each year enter the labor force. They are all men and women who still have to pay the butcher, baker and candlestick maker every month.

Led by Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO several times in recent months has spelled out our ideas for keeping America at work.

Fundamentally, it calls for a shift from the "trickle down" theory—which Herbert Hoover found fruitless—to a positive program for expanding consumer buying power as the only foundation for a full employment economy.

Some of the specifics urged by CIO: Implementation of the Full Employment Act, tax legislation aiding low-income groups, a higher minimum wage, expanded social security, improvement of unemployment compensation, a decent housing program, and planning for public works.

As Reuther noted recently, "depressions are man-made, and what man can make, he can also avoid making."

'Now, Gentlemen, No Sour Notes'

In Other Words—

A Speech That Was Banned

Robert L. Condon, veteran California labor attorney and freshman congressman, was sent to Washington with strong labor support. In recent months, as in his campaign, he has been libeled with charges of being a Communist-sympathizer—charges voiced most recently at a House Un-American Activities Committee hearing in San Francisco. When Condon arranged to reply on Station KGO-TV, the station cancelled his time. Here are highlights of the speech that was banned:

By ROBERT L. CONDON

I HAVE been the target of one of the most evil attacks a man in public office can suffer. I can no longer sit silent.

I am an American. I have fought for America all my ife, both in peace and in war, and tonight, I believe I fight again for our beloved America.

You have read most recently that an ex-Communist informer, before the Velde Un-American Activities committee, meeting in San Francisco, attempted to implicate me. Earlier, you had learned from me that a similar attempt before the Atomic Energy Commission had been made.

The plot started last summer, when I was barred from witnessing an atomic explosion on the basis of unproved and unsubstantiated allegations. The AEC acted upon the basis of an unevaluated report from the FBI containing everything from absurdity to hearsay. For instance, it was claimed that I had received unsolicited mail from an organization considered subversive. Certainly I cannot control what material is to be delivered to me by the U. S. Postal Service.

I say now, as I have said again and again and again, that I am not now nor never was a member of the Communist Party.

I am sure that this carefully engineered accusation before the Velde committee is related to the fact that in my political career I have opposed the oil lobbies, the power trusts and the other monopolies which exercise such an unholy influence upon our representative government.

Just what is the specific charge made by the admitted ex-Communist? That I attended a "closed Communist meeting" in 1948. That statement is an absolute lie.

In 1948 there was a third party movement behind the candidacy of Henry Wallace for President. Upon instructions of the Democratic County Central Committee, I met with many of the leaders of this third party group in an effort to convince them not to run candidates against Democratic incumbents. It was at one of these meetings that Velde's witness might have been present. We now learn this story was first told five years ago.

Why now is this ex-Communist secretly flown from Chicago to San Francisco to appear before this political Velde committee six months before the primary election?

The hit-and-run tactics of the Velde committee in not giving me advance notice that this ex-Communist was going to be produced are outrageous. A fair-minded chairman, sincerely interested in protecting the integrity of Congress, would certainly have consulted with me before attempting to smear my name.

Look At The Record

I have voted wholeheartedly for the support of the UN, and against the aggression of North Korea. I have voted against cutting the budget for our Air Forces. I have voted for the funds for economic and military assistance abroad.

I even voted for funds so the Velde committee could continue to function. I apologize to you for this.

Why do they so recklessly trifle with the treasured reputations of Americans? Because as a party, they are completely bankrupt.

The danger signs of an economic crisis are not being heeded. Since the Republican party cannot face these issues, they use the magician's trick of diverting attention elsewhere.

I am making no apologies. Everything that has been said about me in the past few months was said in my campaigns in 1948, 1950 and 1952. It has no more validity today than it had then, and today it is staler and older.

I am now publicly stating that I am a candidate for re-election to Congress in 1954. The plots to frighten me or my constituents have failed. I thank God that in this country, our people still have the right of choice at the ballot box.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MR. EISENHOWER'S proposals for a "dynamic" program will not be completed until Jan. 28. The long-drawn out process, nearly four solid weeks of successive speeches and messages, curiously suggests not full disclosure but a kind of clogging of communication channels, a disinclination to abandon airy generalities, a desire to stave off hard, hot questions.

We had first from the White House on Jan. 4 a 15-minute speech, complete with two teleprompter machines from which the President could read directly into camera's eye, asking people to heed his State-of-the-Union message Jan. 7.

Some observers were reminded of the old-fashioned movie "trailer"—the advertisement inviting you to come back Thursday and see the next thrilling episode in the Perils of Pauline.

The movie trailer, however, gave you a glimpse of the villian tying a beautiful girl to railroad track with train rushing upon her and hero far, far away. All very exciting and melodramatic.

Mr. Eisenhower underplayed it, suggesting with his famous smile that naturally people couldn't expect him to disclose the program in advance—but he did hope the country would like it.

An Idea Of Leadership

But before the State-of-the-Union message, we were told that even this wouldn't be totally specific. Farm policy and Taft-Hartley would be the subject of two separate messages on Jan. 11. Three more special messages would cover other topics, including taxes. The Budget Message comes next and the Economic Report on Jan. 28.

All of this arises, undoubtedly, from the President's belief that this is a way to exert leadership. Maybe it is, but it is reminiscent of the earlier months when he avoided press conferences and tried to rely on private consultations with congressmen and formal, controlled statements to the people.

He still does not seem wholly at ease in the give-and-take of news conferences and prefers to rely on the televised appearances, where professional advisers and advertising agencies control matters and no outlanders intrude with sharp-tongued queries.

Unfortunately many of the Cabinet members follow the President's example.

Sec. Dulles and Sec. Wilson hold almost weekly conferences, and the Treasury Dept. and Post Office leaders are available. That's the end of the line.

Interior Sec. McKay has had exactly one (1) news conference here in nearly a year. Ditto for Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby of Health, Education and Welfare, although she is a newspaper publisher herself.

Commerce Sec. Weeks has had two (2) conferences, Agriculture Sec. Benson the same.

A Justice Dept. spokesman says that Atty. General Brownell had has five conferences, but at least one or two have been informal replies to reporters after a visit to the White House.

It Doesn't Seem Healthy

Former Labor Sec. Durkin had five conferences in a few months; his successor, James P. Mitchell, has had none.

Subtract Durkin, and we have six Cabinet members who have totaled nine or 10 news conferences—an average of about 1.5 each in nearly a year.

There is a certain secretiveness here, an apparent distaste for the hot spots of politics, that does not seem healthy.

Reporters have no vested right to formal press conferences with the President or anyone else. But these conferences fill a place in the American scene comparable to the question period under the British system in the House of Commons.

They allow reporters to ask questions filling gaps in public knowledge. They tell officials much of what is on people's minds. They allow officials to defend their principles with fervor—but not to duck comment about the specific results of these principles.

If the news conference had not previously been developed as part of the national political scene, it would have to be invented.

The gradual disappearance of the press conference is one of the factors allowing Brownell, for example, to avoid questions for quotation on whether he did or did not, as charged, conceal something from the secret files when testifying on the Harry Dexter White case.

It is one of the factors making it difficult to judge, after 11 months, whether any really "dynamic" program will be proposed or can be passed in this Congress.

As Tom Was Saying

On the occasion of Columbia Univ.'s 200th anniversary, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey last week suggested a code of fair play to govern investigations. This is the same Gov. Dewey who, over the holidays, claimed "Truman and Democrat mean diplomatic failure, military failure, death and tragedy . . . Americans dying thousands of miles from home . . ." Charity—and fair play—should begin at home.

Vigorous Deeds, No 'Folding Our Hands,' Needed To Maintain Jobs

The short-range outlook is bright, but the Administration should be looking far ahead, Leon Keyserling, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, says in evaluating the economic outlook for 1954. His views are condensed from an article, "Good Times in '54, but . . ." in the New Republic.

By LEON KEYSERLING

AS I SEE the short-term economic outlook for 1954, it seems to me that in the over-all there are about two chances in 10 that 1954 as a whole will be a better business year than 1953, two chances in 10 that it will be about the same, five chances in 10 that it will not be as good as 1953 but quite good nevertheless, and only one chance that there will be a serious downturn.

The reasons why 1954, despite some probable undulations downward for a short spell, should be a year of high prosperity in general are these:

1. The new Administration readjusted its restrictive monetary policy rather sensitively as economic conditions commenced to change, and it is my belief, or at least my hope, that the government, regardless of party, will act sensitively and quickly on a broad front to help counteract adverse economic trends as they make themselves manifest;

Consumer Spending Cited

2. Incomes available for consumer spending are very high and are likely to grow in the aggregate, and retail trade is now quickening;

3. Many large businesses which condition the whole economy are planning investment programs geared to the long-range growth potential of U. S. and world markets, and some current estimates are that basic capital expenditure may be only 4% lower in 1954 than in 1953, while new construction is estimated as little as 2% lower;

4. Federal outlays are not scheduled to decline precipitately in the near future, and the federal-state-local total may decline less in view of the great backlog of need for local public improvements;

5. The bellwether industries, such as autos and steel, while not in as good shade as the economy at large, are likely to hold up better than was forecast by most of the gloomy a few months ago;

6. The dynamic urge to make new and better products, to probe new markets, to improve productivity and to reduce costs, is still present;

7. Liquid assets of all kinds are abundant;

8. Prudent confidence with regard to the future is more prevalent than a few months ago.

Factors For A Downturn

However, as against these strong favorable factors, there are others pulling in an unfavorable direction. Farm income and purchases have been running much lower than a year ago; the recent trend of industrial production has been downward although not yet seriously so; the purchasing power of weekly wages has declined slightly as the cost of living has risen; spot unemployment is inflicting real hardship in some places; housing starts for the second half of 1953 are down about 10% from the second half of 1952, although there has been an upward movement in the most recent months; and the current estimate is that expenditures of the federal government for the fiscal year 1954 will be about $2.5 billion lower than for 1953.

Most important of all, for the first time in several years the total output of the economy has been leveling off instead of growing, and it is of the essential nature of our economy that it cannot remain stable by standing still.

Balancing the favorable factors against the unfavorable, there might be some justification for extreme pessimism, if one were merely looking at a page of statistics and neglecting the imponderable factors in the American economy which many times since World War II have confounded the pessimists.

The most important of these is that the future will not be determined by rigid mathematical derivations from the statistics of yesterday, but by the human actions we take in response to the evolving problems of today and tomorrow.

Just as the main economic task of recent years has been not to step on the accelerator too fast, so the central task just ahead will be not to get frightened and jam on the brakes too fast.

There will be some softening of some industries, and some rolling readjustments in some sectors, but these should occur in orderly fashion, and if they can be prevented from spreading to the economy at large, they can lay a firm foundation for a sustained and throbbing economic expansion on a healthy basis onward to 1960.

Barring a total war, the total annual product of the U. S. economy can rise in uniform dollars from an annual rate close to $375 billion recently to close to $500 billion by 1960; the annual rate of consumer outlays can rise from the neighborhood of $230 billion to $325-330 billion by 1960, private business investment can rise from the neighborhood of $57 billion to near $85 billion.

The course most individual firms should follow in 1954 is clear. Since the over-all outlook is for reasonably high level general prosperity, the firm that is alert and well-managed need not fear disaster due to conditions beyond its control. It can do considerably better than the national average . . . if it becomes more efficient, does not look for a free ride, watches inventories, and adjusts prices and product policies.

A Full Employment Policy

If enough individual businesses respond to this challenge, instead of surrendering to abject fears or to depression-mongers, over-all economic results in 1954 may well be very close to 1953 and better than any preceding year. But if any individual businesses fall into what Paul Hoffman has called the psycho-depression mood, they can lag behind the pack and be unprepared to share in the long-range economic growth of the country.

More important, if too many individual businesses plan for a real depression, we will have one.

Policies of government are also of vital significance. The President has expressed his belief in the need for and in our capacity to maintain a stable and growing economy, which means an economy of rising employment and production year by year.

On the other hand, there are some men in high places who are committed to the economic policy of periodic contractions or "readjustments" in the economy. An example is a high official who in a recent statement said the government should take vigorous and aggressive action to prevent a "spiraling recession," which he defined as an economic downturn of 25-30%, but should not take vigorous and aggressive action on a broad front in the event of a "readjustment," which he defined as an economic downturn of 5 to 25%.

If the philosophy of folding our hands and waiting until the hour is late should prevail, we could all be in for very serious trouble.

'You Have To Work For Prosperity'—Reuther

The CIO rejects the defeatist belief that depressions are inevitable, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in a statement for the British Broadcasting Co.

"Depressions, like war, are man-made," he said, "and what man can make, he can also avoid making. Neither depression nor prosperity is inevitable. You can drift to depression, but if you want to build prosperity you have to work and you have to plan. That is precisely what we in the CIO are determined to do in America with other men of good will."

"Why, Edith Potter, I haven't run into you for ages!"

Looking To November—

Sparkman Says Small Business In Slump

(Fifth in a series about outstanding senators involved in next year's campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

SMALL BUSINESS, target of a successful monopoly onslaught in the last session of the Republican 83rd Congress, is in real trouble today, in the opinion of Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

As chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee from 1950 to 1952, Sparkman was called "the greatest champion of small business in the Senate in the last decade."

He conducted many investigations showing the growing stranglehold of big business over major industries and was the author of the law setting up the former Small Defense Plants Administration in 1951.

That agency, which looked after the interest of small firms, was abolished along with the Reconstruction Finance Corp., which had done so much to provide financial help to small businessmen, in a GOP maneuver last year.

'Red Trouble' Feared

Although Sparkman no longer is chairman of the committee, small businessmen all over the country are still going to him with their problems. Many are Republicans, who say frankly that the Alabama Senator has shown more concern for their welfare than leaders of their own party.

"Small business today is definitely having a hard time financing itself—both in regard to new capital outlay and operating expenses," Sparkman said. "Congress in the last session virtually destroyed aid to small business as far as the federal government is concerned."

Sparkman, who is alarmed about the step-up in business failures in recent months, believes that this trend along with the depression being experienced by agriculture "can produce real trouble in other areas unless something is done."

"The greatest need of our economy at present," he believes, "is a positive program of help to both small business and agriculture."

Now completing his first full term in the Senate, Sparkman has run up such an outstanding record that only one issue now appears likely to be of any consequence in his coming campaign for re-election.

What the coalition of big industrialists and Dixiecrat bigots opposing Sparkman hope to use to defeat him is an entirely false charge, stemming from his selection as Gov. Adlai Stevenson's running-mate in 1952, that he is "soft" on the matter of race relations. Already, a picture published in The CIO News during the last election showing him with a group of Negro leaders is being circulated.

Significantly, however, the "cutlines" under that picture have been eliminated. The reason: They quoted Sparkman as refusing his visitors' request and saying he stood firmly on his record in regard to FEPC and similar legislation.

Consistent Record

The truth is that Sparkman has consistently been a typical Southern Senator in voting on race issues—and has often been cited as voting "wrong" on these questions in The CIO News Voting Records.

Unlike Southern extremists like former Rep. Rankin (D. Miss.) or the late Sen. Bilbo (D. Miss.), however, Sparkman has never been a bigot, or used bigotry for political purposes. He has often said that the prime factor in creating racial tensions is the lack of economic opportunity.

Believing that "when people are well off, racial tensions diminish," Sparkman has worked constantly for such things as good housing, better schools, support for farmers and small business, and other measures to bolster the economic welfare of all people regardless of race.

"In the matter of southern race relations," he says, "poverty is the biggest single detrimental force to be overcome."

His record in support of legislation to improve the South's economy is better than that of almost any other Southerner. And it runs back a long time, to the year 1936 when he was first elected to Congress from Alabama's 8th Dist.

He supported federal aid to schools and hospitals, old age pensions and broader social security. He also was a leader in the fight for TVA and the whole public power program.

Stood Up To Lobbyists

In 1946, Sparkman was reelected to the House and at the same time elected to fill out the unexpired term of the late Sen. Bankhead. He immediately resigned from the House and entered the Senate.

Acknowledged the leading authority in Congress in the field of housing, Sparkman as chairman of the Senate Housing subcommittee stood up to the powerful real estate lobby and fought it at every turn. He worked hard to preserve rent controls and was one of the principal sponsors of the Middle Income Housing Bill, FHA, farm housing, the GI Home Program and all public housing measures.

"The action on housing taken by Congress in the last session threatens the complete extinction of the federal housing program," he said. "That was bad legislation. We must try in this session to bridge the Republican-created gap in needed home construction."

Although he originally voted for passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, Sparkman shifted to support the President's veto. Throughout the 81st Congress, when the last key tests on Taft-Hartley were made, he voted right down the line for repeal of the act.

A Key Wage Issue

On still another key issue, Sparkman has shown his sound opposition to anti-labor measures. In the last Congress, the head of the lamp division of the Westinghouse Corp., which has two new plants in Alabama, instigated a drive for repeal of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and made a strong effort to line up Southern Senators behind the move. Cotton textile manufacturers joined in.

But Sparkman, recognizing that sweatshop conditions anywhere are a menace to the economy of the entire nation, voted in the Banking and Currency Committee, on each of several decisions, to maintain Walsh-Healey labor protections intact.

Sparkman has taken many courageous stands on behalf of civil liberties. In 1941 he issued a carefully reasoned statement condemning the "smear" tactics of the Dies Committee on un-American Activities. Likewise, in 1950, he joined Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) in a statement criticizing Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) for failing to prove his charges.

Fought Oil Giveaway

He has worked closely with Hill on other matters, notably the fight last year to prevent the tidelands oil giveaway and use the royalties for federal aid to education.

In their home state, the two Alabama Senators joined to personally lead a movement in 1949 which resulted in the ousting of every Dixiecrat from the Alabama State Democratic Committee. In this fight they had to oppose the "Big Mules," including many of the big money men of the State, who had captured the Alabama election machinery.

This Dixiecrat group has behind it the same out-of-state big business money that is being spent to lick liberal candidates everywhere. The fact that, in Alabama, Sparkman's stand on the issues is so generally approved, explains why they're being forced to wage their campaign against him solely on a lie based on bigotry.

Penurious

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) last week charged the Small Business Administration set up by Congress last July to make loans to small business hasn't lent a penny.

He said the Eisenhower Administration was indifferent to the needs of small business and that, because no one was named to head SBA, it has "had to drift along without positive direction." He added that several important SBA programs were allowed to "disintegrate" until they are no real help to small business.

FAMILY SOLIDARITY—Sen. Sparkman and his family at CIO Labor Day rally in Los Angeles (left) got standing ovation, reflecting high esteem in which Alabama's Senator is held throughout the nation. "Shirtsleeve" campaigns, like the one in Enterprise, Ala., shown in picture at right, give Sparkman a chance to discuss problems with his constituents directly. This summer, he traveled 14,000 miles in Alabama to get people's views.

SOUTHERN INDUSTRY and the welfare of its workers have constantly been Sparkman's concern. Here he chats with workers in Birmingham's Betchol-McComb Airplane Modification Center, typical of new "industrial" South.

FARM PROBLEMS have been dealt with by Sparkman, the son of a tenant farmer, from his youth. One of the leading sponsors of legislation to aid agriculture, Sparkman talks "turkey" with cattlemen in Montgomery, Ala.

URW Troubadour Sings Of Unionism

By GEORGE SCRIVEN

THEY CALL Joe Glazer the "CIO's Burl Ives." For sure, he is the labor movement's "Minute Man of Music."

Now and then, Glazer, CIO Rubber Workers education director, leaves URW headquarters in Akron, O., and goes on a guitar-strumming, barnstorming tour to talk and sing up the union story.

He recently returned from a tour of one-night stands through the South.

"It seemed to go over big and I hope I did a lot of good in pepping up interest in the respective locals and making wives and family members see how they can help—and why they should—to make the union strong," Glazer said.

Right now, he is plotting another southern swing—this one next spring, down through Tennessee and on into Mississippi.

Actually, though, there's a lot more to Glazer's job than just singing. The music is only a small part of the education program.

On his recent tour, Glazer showed union movies, conducted a union quiz show and passed out literature on the URW and the union movement.

He made one-night meeting stops in Waynesville, N. C., Atlanta and Noonan, Ga., and Gadsden and Tuscaloosa, Ala.

JOE GLAZER
A strumming guitar helps to roll the union on.

He played two "shows" a day in the Alabama towns—to make sure workers on different shifts would be able to attend.

The music is just a gimmick.

"It helps liven up a program—education the easy way," he said. "The idea is to get away from speeches and still get the union story over."

Glazer's music, incidentally, doesn't have a "gimmick" sound. It's a hit with union members. In troubadour style, he just picks his guitar and begins on one of more than 50 union songs he has written:

"The give-away boys in Washington
"Are busy as can be."

Or:

"There was no unemployment in heaven,
"We worked steady all through the year,
"We always had food for the children,
"We never were haunted by fear."

Glazer fits the lyrics to popular or folk song tunes. He has cut a number of records for CIO Education Dept. and the CIO's Political Action Committee. He has just turned out a new record for the CIO-PAC, a blast at the Republicans called, "A Promise Ain't a Promise Anymore."

The tall URW education director—a member of AFL Musicians Local 24 and of the American Federation of Radio and Television Artists—said he first tried the guitar gimmick when he was assistant education director for CIO Textile Workers in New York.

It caught on. He gets big hands with his guitar at union conventions and rallies.

Education director for the URW since July 1950, Glazer toured France in 1951 as a Marshall Plan consultant. He showed films, spoke and played the guitar at union meetings.

Born in New York, he is a graduate of Brooklyn College. He did graduate work at New York Univ. and Univ. of Wisconsin. During World War II, he was an Air Force radio operator instructor.

His assistant, William Abbott, formerly State CIO Council education staffer in Wisconsin, gives him a hand on arranging union schools, preparing leaflets and setting up local union programs and committees.

Right now, they're working on the URW legislative institute—a spring training tour of Washington for rank-and-file URW members.

It's not all music for Glazer. Recently, for example, he was on a picket line in Welland, Ont., Canada. A URW local was on strike for a new contract there. Glazer was in town and helped out.

Glazer is married and the father of three children.

They're a good audience when he tries out a new song.

'The Year Of Attack' Gets Labor Aid For March Of Dimes

"THE YEAR of attack" is the name given its 1954 program by the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis as the annual March of Dimes campaign got under way.

With the designation of Jan. 22 as Organized Labor's Day, the unions are expected to play the largest role ever in the fund drive.

J. J. Herkenham, Jr., director of the Labor Union Services for the Foundation, pointed out that families of union members will benefit directly from the "year of attack" program.

A two-pronged onslaught against polio, costing $26.5 million, will start this year through tripling supplies of gamma globulin and carrying on a vast validity study of a newly-developed trial vaccine.

But there will be no curtailment of the three established anti-polio programs—patient aid, scientific research and professional education. Most expensive of these will be aid to the 66,000 polio sufferers carried over from 1953 and to any additional stricken persons.

Top labor leaders are co-chairmen of the Foundation's National Labor Div. These include CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther; David J. McDonald, president of the CIO Steelworkers; AFL Pres. George Meany, and George E. Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives Association.

Direct contributions by unions to the March totalled $1.75 million in 1953. This figure does not include individual participation of workers and their families through unclassified contributions or employe group gifts.

The Foundation cited as typical of CIO support the work of the Textile Workers and the Indiana CIO Council.

It said that in response to the zeal of William Pollock, TWUA executive vice president, the union raised more than $100,000 in the five years he served as TWUA's March chairman.

Pres. Neal W. Edwards of the Indiana Council heads the Labor Service Div. for the March in the State for the second year. He told affiliated locals and councils: "Your support of the March of Dimes has enabled the Labor Service Div. to provide a program of direct service to members of the CIO and their families, as well as to all organized labor."

YOUR CONTRIBUTION to the March of Dimes helps children like Brenda Adele Johnson, two-year-old polio patient at Children's Country Home, Westfield, N. J. With the aid of an exercise tilt table, she is learning how to balance while standing.

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has "whole-heartedly" endorsed the March of Dimes "as an opportunity to pay tribute to Franklin Roosevelt by contributing substantially to this fine, decent, worthwhile fight against a horrible disease."

In a letter to CIO affiliates, regional directors and councils, Reuther said:

"Next Jan. 30, which marks the 72nd birthday of our late President, we can again demonstrate our respect by assisting in a fine humanitarian cause which he founded—the battle against infantile paralysis.

"The Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial Committee, dedicated to keeping his memory alive and assisting in the cause he founded has designated his birthday as the target date for this year's drive for funds needed to win this battle." Reuther is a member of the honorary committee of the memorial group.

Similar backing for the March of Dimes labor appeal came from CIO and AFL locals across the nation.

Checks should be made payable to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis and mailed to The Franklin D. Roosevelt Birthday Memorial Committee, 9 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y.

'What About Our Right To Work?' CIO Asks Timken

THE STEADY barrage of advertising against labor by the Timken Roller Bearing Co. has drawn the counter-fire of the Stark County CIO Council in Canton, O.

Timken's ads have nothing to do with promoting the sale of its bearings or the alloy steels. Instead, over the years, the firm has directed a stream of vituperation at the late Pres. Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, former Pres. Truman and the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Timken's ads also frequently claim that "The right to work shall not be abridged or made impotent." In Canton, however, 1600 workers would like to know what the phrase really means. Laid off suddenly from their jobs, some of them gathered around the factory gate with signs asking: "Who abridged my right to work?"

Responding to the Timken barrage, the Stark County Council said "the Steelworkers Union and the CIO have been reluctant to answer in kind because we feel that the people of our community are wise enough to evaluate the attacks for what they are. We have urged the Timken Co. to discuss all matters of disagreement with us over the collective bargaining table rather than disturb the amity and goodwill of our community by such advertising, but we have been rudely rebuffed.

"Our union and its members need have no apologies for their love, respect and support for Mr. Truman and Mr. Murray. Their contributions to the American people make their place in history so secure that they will be remembered and loved long after their attackers have quieted down.

"Our right to support the late Pres. Roosevelt and Mr. Truman and their policies is just as sacred as was the right of some of our attackers to support Taft, MacArthur or such candidates as they chose to support.

"The Timken Company knows that communism is no longer an issue in the CIO. Those unions which bore the taint of red-domination have been expelled years ago. Even George Sokolsky, one of our most emphatic critics, credits the American labor unions with the major effort to destroy communism.

"Here is what he recently wrote: 'The only group that is actively fighting the red unions is organized labor . . . Industry does nothing about it'."

The Council's advertisement quoted the CIO constitution providing that no Communist or person consistently supporting communism may hold office.

If there are Communists in unions, the ad reminded, "then Timken and other employers should take stock of their hiring policies for they must first be hired in the plants and factories in order to join our unions."

The union recounted its efforts to sit down with the Timken management to discuss any problems. The ads, said the union, in no way promote the sale of Timken products and do not promote or improve goodwill and accord in the community.

IUE Sets Pay Goals At Westinghouse

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers last week called on the Westinghouse Electric Co. for a substantial wage increase, minimum pay of $1.25 an hour and a guaranteed annual wage program.

"AS LONG AS YOU STAY NON-UNION, SAM, YOUR FUTURE ISN'T WORTH ONE CENT!"

These demands were included in the 10-point basic goals and the five-point supplemental program adopted by the union's Westinghouse Conference Board at a meeting in Philadelphia.

IUE-CIO represents 58,000 workers in the Westinghouse chain. Negotiations will begin Apr. 1, and the present contract expires in June.

The demands, voiced in a keynote address by IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, also included equal pay for equal work to eliminate paying women substandard wages, profit-sharing such as managers receive, pension plan improvements, and an additional paid holiday to bring the total to eight.

THE UNION also asked four weeks' vacation after 25 years, with additional days for service ranging from five to 15 years, the same privileges for hourly workers on sick leave and death in the family as are accorded salaried workers and a revision of the incentive system.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, called for the substantial wage increase to "match the increased productivity of Westinghouse workers, to improve their living standards, and to maintain sufficient purchasing power to keep the nation's economy sound and to prevent unemployment."

Coupled with the request for the guaranteed wage was a demand for severance pay of one week's pay for each year of service. The five supplemental demands were headed by better pay for night shift workers, whose 10c hourly bonus, Carey charged, does not include an 18c increase won by the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers in 1946 (before IUE was formed).

CAREY REVIEWED the membership gains made by IUE-CIO on the Westinghouse chain in the four years of the union's existence. He said "IUE-CIO represents 58,000 workers in the Westinghouse chain; UE represents, at best, a dwindling 12,000."

Carey cited the economic gains won by IUE-CIO in four years. He said that despite UE's "sell-out" and "the vigorous resistance of management . . . IUE-CIO won from Westinghouse wage increases totaling nearly 50c an hour and fringe benefits worth probably another 10c an hour."

FIGHT FOR JOBS—Federal intervention to bar Westinghouse Co. from moving aero-gas turbine plant from Essington, near Philadelphia, to low-wage Kansas City was sought by IUE-CIO leaders and Mayor Joseph Sill Clark at Washington meeting with four Philadelphia congressmen. Seated at table are (l. to r.) IUE Vice Pres. Harry Block, Pres. James B. Carey and Clark. IUE delegation fills room.

Jersey CIO Helps Chain Gang Victim

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council has joined the fight to save Walter Russell, Negro packinghouse worker, from return to a South Carolina chain gang.

"There appears to have been a substantial abuse of Russell's rights during his arrest, arraignment, trial, sentencing and imprisonment in South Carolina," said Arthur Chapin, State CIO civil rights director.

"The CIO is concerned about the denial of civil liberties to any person."

GOV. Alfred E. Driscoll has ordered Russell extradicted. In an effort to halt the move, Russell's lawyer and the Council—as a "friend of the court" — have joined in asking the Essex County Court for a writ of habeas corpus.

While buying a pack of cigarets in Clover, S. C., early in 1943, Russell was attacked by the white proprietor of the store. He was arrested and held in jail three months without a lawyer before being taken to court.

Russell pleaded guilty and was sentenced to four years on a chain gang, where he was severely beaten. After several unsuccessful attempts, he escaped in 1946 and went to Newark, where he has lived since.

Sol Kapelsohn, State CIO general counsel, obtained a postponement of the hearing on the writ until Jan. 18.

Williams Seeks State Labor Law

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan has announced that he will ask the 1954 State legislature to enact a State labor relations act.

He said he was seeking such a law because "the new NLRB is rewriting the federal act (the Taft-Hartley Law) by administrative decisions." Williams recalled that he has urged the Legislature to enact such a law ever since his election in 1949.

IUE Certified In GE Office Vote

The Boston regional office of the National Labor Relations Board has recommended certification of the CIO Electrical Workers as bargaining agent for office clerical workers at the Lynn and Everett, Mass., plants of the General Electric Co.

The IUE did not receive a majority because of 478 challenged votes which the Boston NLRB office found had been improperly cast. The IUE already had been certified as agent for the production workers following an election held at the same time.

GOP Optimism Doesn't Help Anxiety In Mill Towns—Rieve

ECONOMIC predictions or legislative proposals from spokesmen for the Eisenhower Administration offer little basis for hope among textile workers.

The GOP's "political optimism" was scored by Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers who pointed out that his membership already had experienced two years of depression. Rieve outlined a six-point program to overcome the "prevailing anxiety" of workers in textile mills throughout the country.

"The big business policies of the Eisenhower Administration have already resulted in a serious loss of confidence by textile workers in the future of their industry," Rieve said.

He hailed the President's action last week in ordering defense contracts channeled into "distressed areas" such as Lawrence, Mass., and Providence, R. I., but commented that the plan was too vague for comfort or encouragement to workers in these centers.

Rieve noted that TWUA-CIO had long urged similar remedial steps and reminded that TWUA delegations repeatedly visited Washington to call attention to the critical problem of unemployment. "We have come away empty-handed every time," said Rieve.

Peak employment in the textile industry has dropped by 250,000 in two years, Rieve commented, and mill liquidations have left a trail of ghost towns across the country.

Rieve's program called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, increased minimum wages, expanded Social Security coverage and benefits, federal minimum standards for unemployment insurance and a strengthened Full Employment Act.

Jobless Conclave Set in Wisconsin

The Wisconsin CIO Council has called a conference at Milwaukee Jan. 17 to open a counter-attack on the unemployment problem. Several hundred delegates are expected to attend the meeting to which representatives of the Council's 200 affiliated locals have been invited.

GOP Gov. Walter J. Kohler of Wisconsin ignored warnings from the Council last Apr. 10 and Nov. 9 that unemployment was growing in the State. Nevertheless, he will be invited to the conference.

Shoe Union Gets Better Health Plan

"THE BEST agreement with small shoe manufacturers" has been signed by the CIO Shoe Workers with 60 northeast Massachusetts concerns employing 10,000 members of the union.

That's the way USWA Pres. Russell Taylor described the pact that was enthusiastically ratified by members in the plants.

The outstanding features of the contract are the medical and hospitalization benefits. They include $8 a day hospitalization for 31 days, special hospital services of $50, doctor's fees while in hospital of $50; $150 surgical fee, and $15 a week sickness and accident benefits for 13 weeks, and up to $225 for maternity care.

Other contract gains included a half day's pay for the traditional Armistice Day holiday, which is the first time that any agreement in the industry provides for more than six paid holidays.

USWA was represented by Taylor, Angelo Georgian, national USWA director for Massachusetts, and a committee of 23 representing the locals.

Gold Coast Workers Drive Reds From Union Offices

THE RAPIDLY growing labor movement in the Gold Coast of West Africa has literally been snatched from the grasp of the Communists within the past two months by the workers themselves.

They have kicked out of office union leaders who had spearheaded a bolt of the Gold Coast Trades Union Congress from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and were guiding it toward membership in the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions. In addition, they have ousted officers of local unions who had been following the party line.

Highest-ranking among those driven from office was Turkson Ocran, general secretary of the congress. Ocran introduced the resolution, at the congress' convention in August, that took the organization out of the ICFTU.

Impetus for the anti-Communist drive came from the country's prime minister and leading political figure, Dr. Kwame Nkrumah.

The in-fighting was led by I. K. Kumah, vice president of the congress, who took the issue to the membership. One result of his work, in addition to the ousting of Ocran and Anthony Woode, another national level leader, was the removal of party liners from the leadership of five local unions in Takoradi, a major seaport, within one week.

N.Y. Teachers Ask Pay Hike

A DRIVE for $25 million in salary increases has been opened by United Teachers, Local 378, CIO Government & Civic Employees, in New York's City's public schools.

"With a new Administration in city hall, to whose election CIO made a major contribution, we believe that now more than ever the salary problems of teachers and related groups can be solved," the local said.

A single pay schedule for teachers in the $4000-$8000 brackets with no more than 10 step-rates is the major goal. Increases of $1000 a year are sought for senior high, junior high and special school teachers; $500 for elementary school teachers and other school personnel.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

THE MINNESOTA CIO Council has named two important committees—one for community services and the other for human rights and civil liberties.

Both were authorized by the 1953 State convention. Nicak Krmpotich of the CIO Steelworkers is temporary chairman of the human rights committee, and Hubert Schon, executive director of the United Labor Committee for Human Rights and area representative of the Jewish Labor Committee, is secretary. Art Raichle of the CIO Electrical Workers is temporary chairman of the other group.

The Indiana CIO Council voted $400 for Purdue Univ. Economic Workshops, which have set up a three-year program. A recent planning meeting for Economic Workshops for High School Teachers was attended by Council representatives, including Pres. Neal W. Edwards, and industrial representatives.

"One of the most shameful and despicable performances of this session (of the General Assembly) was the failure to enact a good FEPC law," says the legislative report of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, just issued.

"In this session, for the fifth consecutive time Republicans failed to live up to one of their most important campaign pledges," continues the 34-page pamphlet, which includes the State CIO's legislative program and actions of the General Assembly.

The Council plans to send to its affiliated unions shortly the voting records of Assembly members.

The Michigan CIO Council has asked county councils to set up migratory labor committees. The Council suggested a five-point program, which included "stressing the fact that any action on the part of the migrants to help retard the progress of the labor movement will, in turn, tend to lower their own living and working standards."

Sec.-Treas. Harold Slater of the Washington State CIO Council is a member of the advisory committees to State legislative committees on penal institutions and on unemployment.

Pres. James Miller of the Buffalo CIO Council protested to Gov. Thomas E. Dewey the failure to use any appreciable part of the $580 million bond issue for the State throughway system to improve the Niagara Frontier section of the road. He spoke on behalf of thousands of workers in the area who are caught in traffic jams on their way to and from work.

With the judicial election coming in the early Spring, Sec.-Treas. Fred Erchul of the Milwaukee County CIO Council urged affiliated locals to take part in Labor's Political League, whose steering committee met recently. AFL and independent unions also belong to the league.

The Connecticut CIO-PAC is off to an early start on registering voters for the November election. It has set up an office at Storrs under the direction of Mrs. Dorothea Glynn, who was engaged to supervise the job of checking the names of workers to see whether they are registered. —F. R.

Michigan CIO Vets' Santa

"Merry Christmas to Our Veterans from Michigan CIO Council Affiliates," said the label attached to cigarets received by hospitalized ex-GIs in the State. Ten thousand packages of cigarets were given to the veterans as the Council distributed the gifts for the 13th year.

An incomplete list compiled a few days before Christmas showed that some 80 local unions and county councils made contributions.

IWA To Ask Contract Bans Against Any Kind Of Bias

BANS ON discrimination of any sort will be sought by CIO Woodworkers in future contracts.

Vice Pres. James E. Dicey of IWA-CIO said copies of the model contract clauses have gone to all locals for use in coming negotiations. The clause bars "discrimination, interference, restraint or coercion . . . against any employe by either party because of age, sex, race, creed, color, or because of membership in the union."

The last IWA convention adopted a fair employment practices directive.

Other civil rights developments:

- Three southern states were warned that abolition of their public school systems would lead to classroom quackery they would be powerless to regulate. Exec. Sec. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People served notice on South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi at the group's annual meeting.

The three states have threatened to substitute subsidized "private" schools for the public school system if the Supreme Court rules against them in the present school segregation cases.

- Noting that there have been no lynchings during the past two years, Tuskegee Institute announced abandonment of its 41-year-old lynch reports, explaining that "lynchings as traditionally defined are no longer valid for judging race relationships."
- Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Lehman (D. N. Y.) will receive the Jewish Labor Committee's Baltimore Community Tribute on Jan. 27 for their efforts for human rights. Union leaders will join in honoring the pair who fought for revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.

GOP Power Sell-Out Rouses New Attacks On Policies

By GERVASE N. LOVE

ADMINISTRATION power policies were under increasing fire last week as members of Congress, farmers and conservationists stepped up attacks aimed at protecting the public interest.

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) in a blistering foray accused Administration officials and utility lobbyists of "working hand-in-glove" to undermine the public power program.

He told the Intl. Platform Association, a professional lecturers' group, that the National Association of Electric Power Companies, "sparked by a high-priced, high-pressure executive named Purcell Smith," has taken charge of the fight against federal development of Hells Canyon. Smith is executive director of the private power group.

"THIS LOBBY GROUP," Kefauver said, "is out to poison the minds of Congress and the country against the ideal of public power . . .

"Sometimes insidiously, and sometimes with bold contempt, they attack the Tennessee Valley Authority, rural electrification, public development of Niagara, and any other point at which public power comes to the front."

Hells Canyon, in the Snake River of Idaho, was earmarked for a single high dam by the Truman Administration. Early last year, Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay withdrew federal objections to plans of the Idaho Power Co. to build three low dams at which much less power would be generated. The Federal Power Commission is now holding hearings.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) declared the Eisenhower Administration's "revolutionary" new policy for selling power developed at federally-owned dams will do "irreparable harm" unless checked.

The new policy, of selling power to private utilities on a short-term basis until "suitable" arrangements are made for marketing it to preference customers such as rural electric co-ops, went into effect Jan. 1 despite requests for a delay from 26 members of Congress.

THE REQUEST was turned down by Acting Sec. of the Interior Ralph A. Tudor in a letter which Murray described as "a complete evasion." Murray said he and some other senators will try to have the policy "aired fully and completely" before the Senate Judiciary Committee. Chairman Langer (R. N. D.) also has been critical of the new policy.

Rep. Burdick (R. N. D.) warned the Administration it will be "committing political suicide" if it creates obstacles for Rural Electrification Administration co-ops. He demanded to know if the new power sales policy is "a move to embarrass and hamstring the REA system," and if "those fomenting this move are in full sympathy with public power, or do they seek to turn the whole business, lock, stock and barrel, over to private interests."

Burdick explained how a private power company "sandbagged" him when he sought to have electricity brought to his country home in Maryland, near Washington.

-Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Disptach
"There's The Monster That Controls This Property"

"Only three poles were required to run the line to my place," he recounted, "and believe it or not, I had to dig up $680 cash on the barrelhead before the company would put in that line.

"I asked them what that was for, and they replied that was the cost of the poles, wire and labor. Then I said, 'I presume that line will be mine then, after I paid for it.' Their answer was, 'No, we still will own the line.' I had no alternative but to be sandbagged.

"At Williston, N. D., I have two REA lines, and I paid no bonus or blood money at all. I am given the chance to pay back the government, which I do at the conclusion of each month.

"This situation prevails all over the West where there are REA lines. The people want them, they know the benefits, and the political party that makes any attempt to high pressure them out of business will get a political licking that will make headlines."

MIDWEST FARMERS, at the convention of the Consumers Cooperative Association, warned that the fertilizer increasingly needed in the nation's bread basket requires development of the full power potential of Hells Canyon—not just part. A fertilizer co-op in which the association has an interest owns phosphate beds in Idaho which can be developed only with the aid of low-cost power such as from the proposed big dam.

McKay was warned that he is in for "one hell of a fight" if he persists in building a big dam in the Dinosaur National Monument, in northeastern Utah.

The Emergency Committee on Natural Resources, headed by Dr. Ira M. Gabrielson, president of the National Wildlife Federation and former head of the Federal Fish & Wildlife Service, said McKay's plan for construction of the proposed Echo Park Dam near the confluence of the Green and Yampa Rivers would be an invasion of the national park system. The CIO has taken the same view.

TVA Has Another Good Year

The Tennessee Valley Authority reported last week on its annual look at the states it serves—Tennessee, Kentucky, North Carolina, Virginia, Mississippi, Alabama and Georgia. As in past years, it liked what it saw.

It found residents of the seven states paid 6.2% of the nation's 1952 income tax receipts, compared to 3.4% in 1933, when TVA was set up. Since 1929, it reported, the number of jobs in the area has increased by 72%, with the national average but 41%, and about 1600 new industrial plants have gone into business. And during the fiscal year ending June 30, the power project retired $5 million of its bonds and paid about $10 million into the U. S. Treasury, all out of $19.3 million in net revenue.

CIO Group Plans National Safety, Health Conference

THE NATIONAL CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health last week announced plans for a leadership conference on industrial safety and occupational health, workmen's compensation and aid to the physically handicapped.

The conference will be held at the Morrison Hotel in Chicago on Jan. 22 and 23.

In a joint announcement, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Vice Pres. Michael Quill said the conference—first of its kind held by CIO—was designed to develop a unified, national program for CIO in these three fields.

The conference, approved by the CIO Executive Committee, is expected to draw attendance from 200 qualified people from CIO affiliates and councils. Quill, committee chairman and president of the Transport Workers, will preside.

Frank Cronin, CIO regional director in Illinois; Pat Greathouse, regional director of the CIO Auto Workers in that area and a member of the National CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health; and Joseph Germano, district director of the CIO Steelworkers and president of the Illinois CIO Council, will open the two-day conference.

Panels composed of CIO experts and experts from federal and state departments will discuss each of the three topics.

Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell, whose previous commitments prevent his attending, will be represented by one of his assistants, and Reuther has been invited to speak.

Steel Aide Elected

John Moulin, of the CIO Steelworkers, has been elected vice president of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions.

You And Your Money—

Charity Racket 'Take' Should Prompt Givers To Make Check

"AN EXCELLENT IDEA" is the way Supt. of Schools E. R. Swanson, What Cheer, Ia., described the "Jungle Jim" equipment (above), which Local 111 of CIO Glass Workers gave the primary school.

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

OF THE MORE than $4 billion given by generous Americans to charitable causes each year, more than $120 million goes to out-and-out racketeers who trade on human sympathy to enrich themselves.

And additional millions go to organizations that mean well, and are honest, but who either pay too much to fund-raisers or dissipate their receipts through wasteful administrative methods.

The curtain was raised on the charity facket in a probe by a joint committee of the New York legislature, which brought announcement by Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) that he would introduce a bill to require charitable groups to make public reports on how they spend their money.

F. Emerson Andrews, of the Russell Sage Foundation, said Americans are giving more generously than ever before, but that "charity rackets diminish regular giving by planting doubts in the minds of contributors."

A guide for giving was offered by Lieut. Gen. Willis D. Crittenberger, president of the Greater New York Fund, who testified that the Fund spends only about 9% of its receipts for fund raising, and 3% for administration. Testimony before the committee showed some outfits spend up to 90% on fund raising and administration.

CRITTENBERGER said the way to protect yourself is not to give to groups that: Pay fund-raisers a commission; send unordered tickets or merchandise on a "remit or return" basis; use the names of persons as sponsors or board members without authorization.

Sidney Paymer, chief counsel for the committee, said the National Kids Day Foundation was guilty of all these practices. Nathan Frankel, the committee's chief investigator, said that of the funds this group raised, 82% went for fund-raising expenses, 2.5% for administrative expenses, 7.5% to promote National Kids Day, and 8% was available for future use.

The committee was told that the National Kids Day Foundation took in $3,978,000 in five years, and only $302,000 was spent for its announced purposes. The committee was told that the names of Bing Crosby and Mrs. Bob Hope, among others, were used without authorization.

Moral: Before you give, make sure the cause is legitimate. In other words, before you write a check, make a check.

'SRO' Sign Faces Junior As School Crowding Grows

THE "STANDING room only" situation in America's elementary and high schools is growing worse, the National Education Association said in a recent report.

The group estimated that 632,000 children this school year would be deprived of full-time schooling for lack of classrooms. Last year NEA figured 500,000 youngsters were attending classes on double-session or other makeshift arrangements.

The study by NEA's research division noted a continuation of the "crisis situation" reports of recent school years. America's public schools will employ 71,589 "emergency" teachers this year, many of them working on substandard teaching certificates.

This, the study said, does not reveal the entire story since "a substantial part of the (teacher) shortage is concealed by enlarging classes."

The school building program has improved slightly as to rural elementary schools, NEA said, but was definitely worse in regard to city high schools. Last year 28 states reported serious high school shortages; this year the number jumped to 41.

More than $5 billion, it was estimated, is needed for new school construction to house today's enrollment. This does not include repair or replacement of old buildings or future needs.

New Chicago School Honors Murray

On the South Side of Chicago—not too far from the scene of the Memorial Day Massacre when Chicago police killed 10 unarmed people in 1937—there's a new primary school being built that will be named in memory of Philip Murray.

The late CIO and CIO Steelworkers president is being honored by the Chicago Board of Education at the suggestion of John Doherty, board member and USA-CIO representative.

The new Philip Murray school will replace a portable building now being used, and should be ready for occupancy next fall.

U. S. Sales Tax Bill Presented

A BILL to impose a 5% manufacturer's sales tax was introduced as Congress convened last week.

The measure, sponsored by Rep. Mason (R. Ill.), would replace all present excise taxes except those on alcoholic beverages and tobacco. Only foods, drugs, seeds, fertilizer and a few other items would be exempted.

The CIO is opposed to all federal sales tax proposals and to all disguised versions, such as Mason's bill.

Station Changes Vandercook Time

The CIO-sponsored nightly newscast, "John W. Vandercook and the News," is now being heard at an earlier hour in Knoxville, Tenn., the American Broadcasting Co. reports. In Knoxville, the Vandercook program is now heard over Station WBIR at 7 p.m. each weekday night.

FTC Clears Big Soap Makers

The Federal Trade Commission has dismissed complaints charging the Big Three soap manufacturers with unlawful discriminations in price and in granting of promotional allowances. The firms are Lever Bros. Co., New York City; Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, and Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co., Jersey City, N. J.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

THE SEMI-ANNUAL midwinter shoe sales give your family an important opportunity to save on shoes. Footwear is actually a moderate-income family's biggest clothing expense, often taking as much as 20% of its entire clothing expenditure. You can darn and patch the family's other garments, and pass along kids' wearables from one to the other, but when shoes go you have to get new ones.

Going Up

Meat prices will be higher because supplies will be smaller during the first half of the year, the Agriculture Dept. predicted last week.

You can beat the high cost of shoes by judicious shopping. Here is a two-point policy:

1. Anticipate your needs by making it a habit to buy at least the adults' shoes in semi-annual midwinter and midsummer shoe sales. Almost all stores and nationally-advertised brands offer reductions of 15-20% on staple styles. But be careful about the clearances of high-style fashion items which very likely were overpriced to start with. Also, make sure you get correct fit. If shoes don't fit they are no bargain no matter how much they were reduced. They not only will be painful, but give poor wear.

2. You can't wait for sales or "buy ahead" for children since their growth won't wait. In fact, many moderate-income families tend to have children's shoe sizes checked only twice a year, possibly in an effort to keep down costs. A growing child's feet should be checked four times a year.

But you can still save on children's shoes by shopping the retailers and chains who sell moderate-priced brands. The quality of these shoes is generally quite good, but you may have to take more care to judge the fit yourself, because the clerks do not always take as much time to properly fit the shoes as do the fitters in the higher-priced shoes.

Check The Construction. The best construction is the so-called "welt" shoe. Generally welt-made shoes are a little heavier, give longer service than other types and are easy to repair. In this construction, the upper is not attached directly to the sole but both upper and sole are sewn to a thin strip of leather (the welt). To tell welt construction, run your hand inside the shoe to make sure the insole feels entirely smooth, with no bumps indicating nails or staples were used.

Judge the Leather. Good leather (so-called "full grain") has a close, fine grain and small pores. If you bend the shoe at the quarter you'll notice 15 to 16 fine lines in a half-inch of good leather, but only six or seven in cheaper, coarse leather. Many moderate-priced shoes nowadays have synthetic soles like Neolite. The better synthetic materials actually outwear leather soles, but tend to be hotter in summer, colder in winter and don't carry off perspiration as well as leather. In leather soles, so-called "bend" leather is longest-wearing. Thick soles wear longer and are also more comfortable, for women as well as men.

Other Quality Clues. In well-made shoes the rear seam has a leather reinforcement at the top to prevent splitting. In the best shoes, the leather overlaps at the top of the rear seam.

Judging the Fit. Don't rely on the size stamped on the shoe; shoes made by different factories vary. Try on both shoes with your full weight on them. Shoes made on correct lines are straight along the inner edge and do not curve outward from the naturally straight inner lines of the foot. Nor do they have a pointed toe, but a broad, round one. It's often advisable for a woman to try the larger-size girls' shoes.

Careful fit is vital for children's shoes, especially if you buy them at moderate-priced stores. When bought, shoes should be a half-inch longer than the foot and at least one-quarter inch wider at the toe.

Public Demand Gaining For Adequate Health Care

INCREASING public demand for better medical care at lower cost is reflected in a billion-dollar national health program ready for congressional study.

The Committee for the Nation's Health in its annual report last week said the Ives-Flanders-Javits bill is evidence that medical care is a non-partisan issue which no Administration can ignore. The bill's sponsors are Republicans.

The non-profit, non-partisan CNH, an organization of physicians and laymen spearheading a drive for an adequate national health program, pointed out that the Eisenhower Administration has not accepted American Medical Association policy in health matters.

"The demands of increased millions of Americans for more and better health insurance, for doctors, and for hospitals that shall be both physically and financially accessible, are increasing without regard to the party which controls the executive or holds a majority in Congress," the Committee said.

"We saw this exemplified in the action of Congress in making larger appropriations for medical research than had been suggested by the Budget Bureau."

The rising number of union medical services, CNH reported, "represent the best pattern of health insurance . . . because they furnish comprehensive medical services, preventive as well as curative, instead of the limited health insurance plans which focus on high-cost illness and do nothing to prevent them or reduce their costs."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

IN THE PAST FEW WEEKS, CIO has scored two great victories over what is left of the Communist-dominated unions in this country. I have already reported to you the victory of IUE-CIO at Lynn, Mass., where workers once again chose the American trade union way as against the party line.

No less important is the action of the miners in Butte, Mont., who have cast off their affiliation with the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and have joined the United Steelworkers of America-CIO.

It is heartening to know that this movement for American trade unionism was led by workers in the shop, by their rank and file leaders. In their statements after the election, they pointed out that they had tried to rid their organization of the commie stooges while also trying to hold their union together.

When these efforts failed, they did what all honest Americans, who sincerely believe in the trade union movement, find it in their conscience to do: they broke with the Communists and joined the ranks of their fellow workers dedicated to the preservation of democracy.

At the National CIO convention, the Organization Dept. had the honor to report that our membership was at its highest point, and that those Communists, who once used international unions as loudspeakers for their propaganda, were reduced to the barest whispers.

There is still much organizational work to be done before we finally eradicate the last of the Communist strongholds, but we can take great pride in the fact that without loss of liberty or dignity, without stooping to the un-American tactics of those publicized people who claim to be fighting communism, we of CIO have carried out the most successful campaign against the Communists this country has ever seen.

CIO TEXTILE WORKERS Pres. Emil Rieve, in a forecast for 1954, has come up with several important points that deserve our consideration. Last week, in this column, I spoke of the economic difficulties that we were having. Now Rieve points out that the textile workers of this country have already gone through almost two years of depression.

The only industry in the United States that is suffering wage cuts at this time is the textile industry. It is good to note, in the face of this challenge, that the CIO Textile Workers are increasing and strengthening their organizational efforts. And National CIO is supporting this effort to the fullest extent.

A good report comes from Brother Gus Faber of the CIO Transport Workers. He tells us that in addition to the history making wage scale achieved by Local 100, in New York, of $2 an hour for bus operators, Local 257, Miami, Fla., won 11c an hour for employes of the Freuhauf Trailer Co., and 7.5c for employes of the City Ice and Fuel Co. Local 282, Bristol, Pa., won 10c an hour, and Local 518, Oakland, Cal., won a new rate for airline navigators of $807.50 a month. That kind of victory means organization of the unorganized.

Another victory was won by the CIO Electrical Workers in an NLRB election at Collins Radio, Dallas, Tex. The vote was: IUE-CIO 408, IBEW-AFL 292, and no union 19 out of 830 eligible to vote. The campaign was handled by CIO Rep. R. W. Purcell.

AND MORE VICTORIES: Irwin De Shetler reports from California: LIU 78 won at Porterville Sunland Packing Co., Lobue Bros., and the Garin Co., Brentwood, Cal., with CIO Rep. James Spangler in charge assisted by CIO Reps. Santiestevan and Rose and Local Reps. McGraw, Parker and Dismond.

In Philadelphia, Local 1711, now affiliated with CIO's Brewery Workers, reports victories at Cargill, Inc., and the Enterprise Tallow & Grease Co., and, in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., a victory at the American Tobacco plant.

CIO Electrical Workers won at the Cincinnati Tool Co., Cincinnati, O., with IUE-CIO Rep. Jim Greenwood and CIO Rep. Jim Elsnor on the job. The CIO Steelworkers won at Dayton Steel Foundry, Dayton, O., CIO Packinghouse Workers won at Creative Textile, Inc., Vega Baja, Puerto Rico.

CIO Chemical Workers won at McKesson & Robbins, Memphis, Tenn. (CIO Rep. Bill McKomzio worked on the campaign), and International Mineral & Chemical, Wales, Tenn. Jim Temple of CIO and Max Lackey, UGCCWA-CIO, worked on the campaign.

CCL Warns On Layoffs

A WARNING that mounting unemployment in Canada is more than seasonal was sounded last week by Donald MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

Joblessness during this winter may pass the post-war record of 1949-50, he said, citing the fact that 48% more workers were looking for jobs in November than in November 1952.

MacDonald called on the dominion government for moves to offset the harmful effects of spreading unemployment.

"Unemployment insurance benefits should be raised," he said. "A comprehensive public assistance system, as advocated by the Canadian Welfare Council, could be instituted. Projects from the long-standing 'shelf' of public works should be undertaken where unemployment is heaviest. Increased aid to underdeveloped countries would provide new long-term markets. Immigration should be restricted while jobs are non-existent for prospective citizens.

"It is time that the government fulfilled its duty to the people as a whole by thorough planning with industry and labor."

OWIU To Join In Merger Convention Of Oil Workers

A CONVENTION of independent unions of oil workers, to which the CIO Oil Workers has accepted an invitation, will be held Feb. 15 in Philadelphia.

The purpose, according to a call issued by 10 leaders of unaffiliated unions in the industry and its branches, is to establish "a new international union of oil and allied workers through a merger of as many as possible of the presently existing unions in this field."

Maynard P. Sands, Independence, Mo., president of the Central States Petroleum Union, representing employes of the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and subsidiaries, is spokesman for the group which called the meeting.

IN COMMENTING, he made the same point Pres. O. A. Knight and other leaders of the OWIU-CIO have repeatedly made in the past.

"Collective bargaining efforts of oil workers have been handicapped by the fact that we were divided into dozens of separate unions," he said. "We have now come to the realization that the welfare of wage earners in the oil industry can best be served by the establishment of a single over-all union in the industry."

Knight, who also is a CIO vice president, said the OWIU-CIO is "pleased" to meet with the independents to try to work out the formation of a new body representing a greater proportion of oil industry workers.

"WE DON'T know yet exactly what such a merger would entail," he explained, "but I believe the OWIU will be willing to go to great lengths in order to reach a harmonious understanding with the independents and thereby build a stronger international oil union.

"OWIU has for many years been the largest and strongest union in the oil industry, but our bargaining power has been hampered by the fact that we have not represented a sufficiently large proportion of the total number of oil workers.

"Whatever we can do to bring about the establishment of a union representing a substantially large number of workers will be to the best interests of those men and women who work for wages in oil and related industries."

Knight said he had polled the union's international executive council on attendance at the convention. It authorized representation by the three international officers, the eight executive council members, the eight members of the policy committee, the eight district directors, and one additional rank and file delegate to be elected in each of the eight districts. All but the international officers and the district directors work in the industry.

The oil industry has proven a haven for independent unions for many years. Often many of them have been company-dominated, but they have exhibited increasing restiveness as the OWIU-CIO chalked up its series of contract gains in recent years.

Bus Drivers Get $2 Rate

Thanks to the CIO Transport Workers, several thousand drivers on three privately-owned New York City bus lines are working 40 hours a week at $2 an hour—highest rate in the industry.

The improvement went into effect Jan. 1 on the New York City Omnibus, the Fifth Avenue, and Avenue B and East Broadway lines under terms of a recent arbitration award.

Employes of six other lines will receive the 26.5c an hour increase and the 40-hour week within the next few months. Meanwhile, they are receiving a 10c hourly bonus.

TWU Has New Home

The CIO Transport Workers and their big Local 100 have moved to new headquarters at 210 West 50th St., New York City. The move to the new location, where their offices and other facilities occupy two floors, was necessitated by the union's increased activities and growing membership.

Harvester Sued By UAW For Health Plan Changes

BREACH of contract has been charged by the CIO Auto Workers in a suit against the International Harvester Co.

The UAW-CIO contends the company violated a health-welfare agreement signed in 1952 which runs until 1955. Suit was filed by Dir. Raymond H. Berndt of the union's I-H Council on behalf of 27 local unions representing 30,000 company employes.

Action by the company transferring insurance coverage from the firm's own Employee Benefit Association to the Aetna Life Insurance Co. brought about the suit. The union said two benefits were removed from the disability plan when it was converted to the insurance company despite an agreement that benefits will be identical.

Benefits removed by the company, according to the suit, were the right of worker representation on a chain-wide joint appeal board and the right to have an employe representative in each plant to take up disputed insurance claims with the local management.

The suit asks the court for a declaratory judgment restoring the plan in its original form with the joint appeal board and the function of the plant employe representative.

UPWA Gains Health Plan In New Hygrade Contract

ESTABLISHMENT of the Packinghouse Workers' Welfare Fund was announced by Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers following six months of negotiations with Hygrade Food Products Corp.

Initially, 4500 employes of Hygrade and its subsidiary, Kingan, Inc., in 10 plants across the country will be covered but the union plans participation throughout the industry under UPWA contracts.

With the employer contributing $2.85 a week for each employe, the fund will provide a $2500 life insurance policy, full family hospitalization and surgical-medical benefits, special accidental death and dismemberment protection as well as polio coverage.

The fund went into operation with a $75,000 surplus paid in by the company from monies previously accumulated by agreement with the union for health and welfare purposes, UPWA announced.

Locals now covered by the fund are in Detroit, Indianapolis, Boston, Buffalo, Omaha, Atlanta, Mishawaka, Ind.; Newark, N. J.; Syracuse, N. Y., and Jacksonville, Fla. —LPA

NLRB Stalling Causes Strike

PROTRACTED delays by the National Labor Relations Board and a series of firings caused a strike by CIO Textile Workers at the Federal Silk Mills, Williamsport, Md.

Federal Silk makes considerable tape for the government—not the red variety for which government is noted—but parachute tape. On non-government work, wages averaged 79c an hour.

TWUA won an NLRB election at the plant last June but certification has been withheld to date. Meantime, the firm fired several active union members and carried on an intensive campaign to discredit the union.

The combination of low wages and employer harassment provoked the walkout when the plant attempted to resume operations after the holiday.

TWUA Reg. Dir. Wesley C. Cook is trying to get the NLRB to expedite a decision on certification to compel the employer to bargain.

Textron Sued On Wage Boost

Charging failure to pay a 5% wage boost due last September, five locals of the CIO Textile Workers in New Hampshire have filed a $25,000 suit against Textron, Inc., there.

A 1950 contract called for pay increases for 2000 workers in divisions of Textron at Manchester, Suncook and Nashua, N. H. Action is returnable in March.

USA Gets 15c Package In Continental Can Pact

CIO STEELWORKERS last week scored a major victory in their 36-day strike against the Continental Can Co., winning a 15c wage package.

The settlement, announced jointly by USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald and Gen. Lucius Clay, chairman of the Continental Can board, covers 14,500 members, who went on strike Dec. 1.

The strikers immediately began returning to work in the company's 33 U. S. and three Canadian plants.

The new contract, which runs for a two-year period from last Oct. 1, contains the following major provisions, McDonald and Clay said:

- An 8.5c across-the-board wage increase, retroactive to last Oct. 1.
- Provision for slicing down the sex and geographical wage differentials, with an average 3c adjustment going into effect next Feb. 1 and an additional 2c next Oct. 1.
- Improved vacation and holiday provisions, costing 1.5c an hour.
- Provision for severance pay, never before included in the contract.
- Establishment of a joint union-management job evaluation program.

"NIX, POP! I CAN'T LET YOU OPERATE MY EQUIPMENT IF YOU DON'T CARRY A UNION CARD!"

The two-year contract, the announcement said, provides for a reopener on wages, pensions and insurance next Oct. 1, with the union free to strike at that time.

Negotiations continued with American Can Co., struck at the same time. An approximate 18,000 Steelworkers are still manning the picket lines at American's plants.

James Robb, director of USA Dist. 30 in Indianapolis and chairman of the 45-member union negotiating committee with Continental, and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg took part with McDonald in the final negotiating sessions in New York City.

As the strike began the union was seeking a 21c package and management's top offer was 10.5c. The union's demand called for 8.5c in wage increases, following the pattern set in basic steel last year.

As important as the wage increases, the union said, was the problem of geographical differentials and the lower pay for women workers who make up 20 to 25% of the can working force.

In American, where the strike continued, the geographical differentials amounted to as much as 17.5c an hour less in Florida than in northern plants, with women workers receiving as much as 5c an hour less than men.

NAM, Farm Bureau Wheeze Out Same Tired T-H Tune

LABOR'S opposition, playing a tired old tune on a wheezy instrument, again is calling for "strengthening" the Taft-Hartley Act.

Over the holidays, when they should have been relaxing, spokesmen for organized industry huffed and puffed to battle any Administration move to liberalize the law and thereby fulfill a campaign promise.

The National Association of Manufacturers called on Congress to put more teeth into the controversial legislation or else leave it alone. Industry's best hope is that all its din will result in Congress leaving the present as is. Privately they would concede there is little chance of adding more repressive features.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, which represents the "factory farms" rather than the dirt farmer, added its clamor to that of the NAM.

According to the NAM, the Taft-Hartley law would be "improved" by adding stronger guarantees of free speech for employers, a ban on strikes for union recognition, tighter definitions of union responsibilities for the actions of union members.

It would likewise bar all forms of the union shop and spell out an alleged "right to work" section that would guarantee workers a job without having to hold union membership — something industry itself won't do. Similar proposals were advanced by the Farm Bureau Federation.

Beirne Asks Probe Of Lee In FCC Post

APPOINTMENT of Robert E. Lee to the Federal Communications Commission has been protested by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers.

Lee, a close friend of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), is up for Senate confirmation. His appointment would give Republicans a 4-3 edge on the FCC. Normally, his case will be studied by the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce headed by Sen. Bricker (R. O.).

Beirne asked for public hearings in a letter to Bricker "with special emphasis on Lee's competency."

Lee has produced McCarthy's TV program, "Facts Forum," and was active in the 1950 campaign which unseated former Sen. Tydings, Maryland Democrat. McCarthy strongly supported Tydings' GOP opponent in that contest, Sen. Butler, which was the subject of a Senate inquiry and led to the jailing of the victor's campaign manager by a Maryland court.

Police Claim Reuther Death Plot 'Solved'

THREE underworld characters were arrested last week and a fourth was being hunted in connection with the near-fatal shooting of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on Apr. 20, 1948.

Named in a two-count warrant charging assault with attempt to commit murder and conspiracy of assault with intent to commit murder were:

Santo Perrone, wealthy Detroit underworld figure and ex-convict with a long and sordid record of strikebreaking; his son-in-law, Carl Renda, also a professional strikebreaker; Peter Lombardo, now serving a five-year sentence in the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., on a charge of auto theft; and Clarence Jacobs, a Canadian who has had trouble with U. S. police and immigration authorities.

Renda, arrested by Detroit police in his home, stood mute when arraigned. A not guilty plea was entered for him and he was released in $25,000 bail for examination on Jan. 14. A detainer was placed against Lombardo.

JACOBS was arrested by Ontario provincial police on a fugitive warrant. At his arraignment, Crown Atty. Bruce J. S. Macdonald read a letter from Wayne County (Detroit) Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien which said:

"Jacobs participated in the actual shooting."

Perrone has vanished from his Detroit haunts and is being hunted.

In Detroit, O'Brien said "this is the solution." However, he added that "there may be other involvements," and said four additional men were being sought.

REUTHER, then president only of the CIO Auto Workers, was sharing a late-evening snack with his wife, May, when he was felled by a blast from a shotgun fired into the kitchen of his home. He was left with a permanently crippled right arm. When advised of the break in the investigation, he said:

"I have followed a policy of full cooperation with the law enforcement agencies. The matter is in their hands. Any information must come from them."

His brother, Victor G. Reuther, then UAW educational director and now assistant to the CIO president, was the victim of a similar attack on May 24, 1949.

THE SENATE Crime Investigating Committee headed by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), after hearings in Detroit, issued a report in May 1951 declaring the "inference" was inescapable" that there was a tie-in between Perrone and the Detroit Michigan Stove Works, and Renda and the Briggs Manufacturing Co. "to enlist the assistance of Perrone's gangster friends" in the firms' labor relations.

Ike Fills NLRB Post

ALBERT C. BEESON, a San Jose, Calif., industrial relations expert, was nominated last week by Pres. Eisenhower to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board.

If Beeson gets Senate confirmation, he will take the place of Paul L. Styles, who resigned last year.

Since 1947 Beeson has been industrial relations director of the Food, Machinery and Chemical Corp. in San Jose.

CIO Supports Crusade For Freedom

CIO. PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week announced that the CIO Executive Committee has "voted its wholehearted approval and support for the Crusade for Freedom."

In a letter to Clyde Vandeburg, executive director of the American Heritage Foundation which is conducting the Crusade for Freedom, Reuther said:

"The leaders and members of the CIO and its affiliated bodies have long been aware of the tremendous need for the peoples of the free world to talk directly to the millions of people in the satellite nations who are isolated behind the Iron Curtain.

"In Radio Free Europe, we see an excellent medium for bringing the precious words of liberty and freedom to the restless millions of people under the yoke of Soviet-dominated Communist totalitarianism."

The events of last June in Berlin and other parts of the satellite world, Reuther observed, "show clearly that the flame of liberty still burns brightly and that the words of truth from the democratic peoples are heard and understood behind this man-made artificial barrier."

"So," he continued, "we of the CIO are glad to lend our support to the Crusade for Freedom in order to strengthen Radio Free Europe."

Reuther also told Vandeburg that CIO international unions and the state and city councils would support the Crusade for Freedom.

"I feel certain," he said, "that millions of CIO members will sign the Freedom Scroll and will generously give their Dollars for Truth to the Crusade for Freedom."

Reuther, McDonald Hit Ike's Plan To Make T-H 'Worse Than Ever'

THE JOB OUTLOOK—Mounting layoffs in industry due to defense cutbacks and lagging purchasing power are reflected in long lines of unemployed seeking compensation like those in a Detroit office shown at top. Michigan's jobless are estimated at 150,000. In the lower photo Defense Mobilizer Arthur S. Flemming (center, seated) listened to the story of near-disaster in New England mill cities told by a delegation of CIO Textile Workers last week. Standing just behind him are TWUA Research Dir. Sol Barkin and New England Dir. J. William Belanger. (Stories on Page 2.)

Job Outlook Turns Bleaker Across Nation

By WILLIAM MILLIS

UNOFFICIAL estimates of the nation's unemployment total topped two million persons last week, as reports from several CIO unions in basic industries and CIO councils in heavily-industrialized states gave flesh-and-blood meaning to the economic figures from government agencies in Washington.

With but few exceptions, the economic news last week was of more job layoffs—in auto, steel, aircraft, oil and other industries.

And the predictions and the U. S. reports were on the bleak side. Paralleling the cutbacks in industry, which have hit manufacturing employment hardest, is a shortening of the work week which is meaning sharp reductions in wages for millions of American workers and their families.

For example, the latest estimate of private industry payrolls is at an annual rate of $164 billion. That was a drop of $1.6 billion in the month from mid-October to mid-November and of $3.7 billion from last summer's record.

Lagging Commerce Dept. estimates of unemployment have been outdated by recent figures of unemployment compensation claims.

The latest Commerce Dept. figure for mid-December is 1,850,000, but that "doesn't begin to tell the full story," CIO has pointed out. For one thing, it doesn't allow for the 700,000 workers who have left the labor force.

Last week, Labor Dept. reports showed the layoff trend is continuing. In the last half of December, its figure on "insured unemployment" jumped by 188,000 or 13%.

In the week ending Jan. 2, claims for state unemployment benefits reached the highest point in more than three years. New claims were 413,304, up 19.4%, while continuing claims were 1,662,702, up 20.4%.

Auto

Twin cuts in auto production and defense contracts hit the Detroit auto area, as the Michigan Employment Security Commission estimated unemployment in the state at close to 150,000. That's more than 5% of the labor force.

Over the week end of Jan. 8-10, when the industry normally is rushing into production of new model cars, more than 12,000 auto workers were laid off. Chrysler fired some 7600 workers; Hudson laid off 4500 for at least a week.

Exceptions

Dayton, O., is one of the few cities where the job trend is up —not down.

According to the Dayton CIO News, employment in that industrial city has climbed to over 132,000, an increase of some 600 persons.

In Milwaukee, some 350 members of the CIO Brewery Workers have been recalled by Schlitz and Pabst after recent layoffs.

In Detroit, the A. O. Smith Corp., an auto frame and parts supplier, has recalled some 700 workers.

The trimming-down of the nation's defense spending was reflected in a Defense Dept. order cancelling more than half of the Army's orders for jeeps and medium trucks. Firms affected include General Motors, Chrysler, Reo and Willys.

Steel

Steel production last week was scheduled at 75.0% of capacity, down from 84.3% a month ago. (Until a few months ago, steel was operating at more than theoretical capacity.)

In the Buffalo, N. Y., area, as an example, Bethlehem has cut operations to two-thirds of capacity, closed down 12 of 34 open-hearth furnaces, and put 17,000 members of the CIO Steelworkers on a four-day work week.

Electrical

A CIO Electrical Workers delegation which came to Washington got backing in both houses of Congress in a fight to stop moving of the Westinghouse Navy jet engine plant from a Philadelphia suburb to Kansas City. Some 2500 jobs are at stake (see page 8).

Textile

In Washington last week a delegation of CIO Textile Workers from New England reported to government officials that the woolen and worsted industry has contracted by more than 40% in a little more than two years and the situation has become desperate. (See story on this page.)

American Viscose Corp. laid off some 200 workers at Roanoke, Va., Lewistown, Pa., and Parkersburg, W. Va., while a shorter work week of 32 hours was ordered at the Marcus Hook, Pa., plant to save some 100 jobs.

Aircraft

At Dallas, Tex., the Chance Vought Div. of United Aircraft announced layoffs totalling more than 3250, about one-fourth of its production force.

Oil

Some 4100 oil field and refinery workers have been laid off since last fall, principally in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. As result, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers said that "if reductions in force by oil companies become general, we plan to ask for a shorter work week so as to spread the available employment to as many men as possible."

Maritime

Rising unemployment in the maritime industry will be one issue before a joint conference in Washington this week of CIO and AFL maritime unions.

Furniture

Declining production and employment in the furniture industry, directly affecting members of the CIO Furniture Workers, was indicated in a Wall Street Journal description of the Chicago home furnishings show as producing the smallest orders since 1950.

The States

In New Jersey, new claims for unemployment insurance reached 88,672, or 7% of covered workers and the highest in eight years. The State CIO Council asked the Legislature to improve jobless benefits (see Page 8).

In Ohio, where layoffs are estimated to exceed 115,000, eight Democratic state senators asked Gov. Frank Lausche to call a special session of the Legislature to liberalize unemployment compensation and enact an anti-recession program.

In the New York Legislature, Democratic members called Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's request for upping benefits by $3, to $33 weekly, "a measly increase" and far from adequate. Unemployment in the state, they said, climbed from 236,000 in early December to 340,000 in early January.

In Wisconsin, Republican Gov. Walter J. Kohler turned down an invitation to attend a State CIO Council full employment conference scheduled to be held in Milwaukee on Jan. 17.

Looking to the future: Prof. Malcolm P. McNair of Harvard's Graduate School of Business predicted 1954 will bring a 6 or 7% drop in production, unemployment of more than 2.5 million, warned "the readjustment in 1954 bids fair to be both broader and somewhat deeper than that of 1949."

McDonald Says—

Ike And Smith Make T-H Worse Than Ever

Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers issued the following statement on Pres. Eisenhower's message to Congress on the Taft-Hartley Act:

DAVID J. McDONALD

PRES. EISENHOWER'S message to Congress proposing amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act utterly fails to achieve the "justness and fairness" which the President pledged during his election campaign.

The few minor proposals which purport to mitigate only some of the many harsh provisions of the act are completely overshadowed by other proproposals of major consequence which would make the act even more anti-labor than at present.

In contradiction of his campaign promise to lessen the extent of government interference in labor relations, the President's recommendation for government conducted strike ballots would substantially increase such interference on the part of employers.

As detailed in Sen. Smith's bill implementing the President's message, a vote would be conducted by the NLRB during a strike to determine if a majority of the employes desire continuation of the strike.

Such a provision can only lead to intensified and prolonged industrial strife. Heated and emotional election campaigns by both parties to a dispute would replace the calm, sober judgment and good faith bargaining which are essential for expeditious resolution of the dispute.

This recommendation of the President is aimed at discrediting the leaders of a striking union and, in effect, provides the procedure for decertifying a union during a strike. It would thus be a powerful weapon on the side of struck employers.

Surely, the recommendation does not gibe with the President's prior statements concerning the necessity for having free and responsible unions.

It should be kept in mind that the Steelworkers Union has its own democratic procedure for authorizing strike action. No strike may be called without the sanction of the Steelworkers' Wage-Policy Committee. This committee consists of elected officials of the union and elected representatives from local unions throughout the nation.

Furthermore, in strike votes held under the discredited election provisions of the Smith-Connally Act, members of the Steelworkers voted overwhelmingly in favor of strike action.

The President also recommended changing the checkoff provisions of the act to permit employes to revoke voluntary checkoff authorization at any time. At present revocation is permitted once a year. Certainly this is sufficient protection for an employe who signs a voluntary authorization card.

This proposal would also weaken the union's security and would upset industrial stability, since campaigns for revocation might be started at any time during the life of the contract. In addition it would create manifold bookkeeping and administrative problems for unions and employers.

Other provisions of the message, such as those dealing with federal-state responsibility, also represent a backward step. Certainly Congress should take no action on these far reaching recommendations without hearings.

New England TWUA Asks U. S. For More Than Promises

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

CIO TEXTILE workers from depression-struck New England cities last week challenged the Administration to meet the grim facts of life with something besides promises.

Officials and workers from Lawrence and Lowell, Mass., and Providence, R. I., traditional centers of the woolen and worsted industry, appealed to government officials and a congressional group to translate pledges into work for idle mills. An all-day series of conferences in Washington offered little in the way of immediate hope to the TWUA-CIO delegation.

Pres. Eisenhower recently selected the three cities for assistance under Manpower Policy Four, intended to aid "distressed areas" by sending them defense orders.

"Perhaps these cities should be getting Point Four aid, not promises of help under Policy Four," TWUA Research Dir. Sol Barkin told Defense Mobilizer Arthur S. Flemming.

He recited the tragic figures: 39 mills employing 23,000 closed in New England during the past two years; 135 mills employing 45,000 liquidated since World War II.

The industry, Barkin said, has shrunk from peak employment of 134,000 in February 1951 to 88,500 today. He warned that additional mill closings and higher unemployment are not far ahead.

Discussing the proposed sale of 11 mills by the American Woolen Co. in New England, Barkin said the internal battle within the company "is one of the blackest pages in American corporate history."

Barkin advanced a program calling for: Approval of the findings on a prevailing wage for the industry by the Labor Dept.; stockpiling of military fabrics to provide employment; extension of unemployment compensation benefits; elimination of duties on raw wool imports, and appropriation of funds for a study of new uses of woolen fibers by the Agriculture Dept.

Arthur W. Brown, TWUA area director in Lawrence, reported that five plants there employed 20,800 in 1948. Several of these firms have since liquidated and a scant 200 are at work in the remainder, Brown said. Approximately 20% of the labor force in Lawrence is idle, the highest percentage in the nation.

Brown reminded officials that statistics of the unemployed compiled by counting those drawing jobless insurance are not good barometers except after several years of high employment. There is no way of determining the jobless total after a siege of long depression, since unemployment benefits credits must be earned in wages, he said.

TWUA's New England Dir. J. William Belanger said the area was the country's "No. 1 economic problem." He urged "action, not statements, before it is too late."

Elizabeth Nord and Louis Vergados, TWUA joint board managers in Providence and Lowell respectively, forecast additional mill closings in their areas and mounting city relief rolls unless help is given.

Ike Wants T-H Made 'Worse Than It Is'

By AL ZACK

PRECISELY 356 DAYS after taking office and 345 days after saying "we should promptly proceed to amend" the Taft-Hartley Act, Pres. Eisenhower last week revealed his labor policy. Despite campaign pledges to make the law "fair and just," the President's proposals, CIO said, "would make Taft-Hartley worse than it is."

Highlights of the labor legislative situation:

1. The President's 14-point message, supplemented almost immediately by a bill introduced by Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, contained one major surprise—a proposal for a government-conducted strike vote.

2. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, charging the Eisenhower message failed to "change the anti-labor character of the law," took immediate issue with the strike-vote proposals. It added, he said, "to the anti-labor arsenal provided by the law."

3. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers said the proposals would make Taft-Hartley "even more anti-labor than at present." The President's message, he said, "utterly fails to achieve the 'justice and fairness' which the President pledged during his election campaign."

—Herblock in Washington Post

"All Clear On The First Tee"

The Eisenhower message—every Washington observer, including Sec. of Labor Mitchell, immediately assumed—was calling for a rank-and-file vote in advance of a strike. The vote, the President said, should be conducted under government auspices.

Called Union-Busting

But when the Smith Bill was filed, accompanied by a statement from the Senator alleging that it was the Administration bill, this assumption was shattered.

The Smith Bill clearly called for a vote at some undetermined date after the strike had started. This, CIO charged, was "clearly a provision for government strike-breaking. This is union busting, which Pres. Eisenhower proclaimed against during his campaign speeches."

As the week ended, the confusion over the strike-vote provision was still raging in Washington. At his press conference, the President refused to say whether he wanted a vote before or after the strike started. That, the President said, was up to Congress.

Key To Controversy

Significantly, he failed to put a "must" tag on this controversial proposal, which had been roundly condemned by all leaders of labor, by Democratic senators and congressmen and by the GOP's claimed expert on labor relations in the Senate, Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.).

Key to the controversy was not only the timing of the strike vote but the very existence of a government-conducted vote among union members on the subject of either calling or continuing a strike.

During World War II, the Smith-Connally Act provided for pre-strike votes such as it was assumed the President wanted. Statistics show that 2,923,655 workers were eligible to vote in these elections. Only 332,874 voted against striking.

"Fortunately," CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg pointed out in a press conference, "strikes of this number and magnitude did not occur." The reason, he said, was not the law but "voluntary and patriotic response of the union membership to the no-strike pledge of their union leaders."

The pre-strike vote, every responsible labor authority pointed out, would be a clear attempt at driving a wedge between the union membership and its leadership. A post-strike vote, on the other hand, also would be an attempt to break a strike.

While the pre-strike vote would result in both management and labor campaigning for frozen positions, "when they might be better occupied in bargaining in good faith, Reuther noted, the post-strike vote, taken at any time the management-packed NLRB wished, would be clearly used to break strikes.

The Smith proposal also included the non-democratic voting procedure once contained in Taft-Hartley when union-shop elections were required.

Voting Plan Explained

To win the election, with non-union members eligible to vote, the union would have to receive a majority of all eligible voters, not a majority of those voting. Thus, if 500 workers were eligible to vote, and the result was 250 for the strike and none against, the vote would still have failed.

Goldberg told reporters he doubted that Sen. Smith "would agree to measure his own acceptability to his constituency by such a test."

CIO pointedly observed that it wasn't worried about the outcome of such votes, which would cost the government tremendous sums and require much additional personnel for the NLRB.

"The record proves we have no reason for fear," CIO's official analysis added, recalling that all CIO unions provide for democratic determination of strike action.

"Our objection," CIO continued, "is rather to government interference in labor-management affairs in such a manner as will hamper, rather than encourage, good faith collective bargaining and the reasonable settlement of disputes."

Most of the other points in the Eisenhower message and the Smith Bill likewise failed to meet the specific campaign promises of the President or his party, CIO said.

Reuther said the message contained a "few ameliorating recommendations" but these were regarded by CIO as mere "sugar coating to disguise new anti-labor restrictions."

"This is not a middle of the road approach," CIO said. "This is not the reform promised by President Eisenhower as a candidate."

Rather, CIO's analysis pointed out, both the message and the Smith bill were "a victory for the National Association of Manufacturers in the undercover struggle" which has been raging in the Administration for a year.

"This is another give-away to the Republican party's financial angels," Goldberg charged.

Besides the strike-vote provision, the GOP called for more state laws which would go further than Taft-Hartley in restricting union activity. Smith's bill also provided for state compulsory arbitration in some instances despite the Eisenhower campaign denunciations of compulsory arbitration.

Instead of "even-handed justice" in labor relations, Goldberg observed, the Administration would provide "52 brands" of justice, one for each state, territory and the District of Columbia.

Injunctions Kept

In the injunction field, the Presidential message again violated the Eisenhower campaign pledges. Then he deplored injunctions in labor disputes and in his message he also observed

NAM Agrees

The National Association of Manufacturers put its "OK—but" stamp on the Eisenhower Taft-Hartley proposals. From Los Angeles, NAM Pres. Harold C. McClellan said the NAM was solidly behind the President's proposals.

His "but" dealt with the President's proposal for more study of the business-inspired attempts to give anti-labor states the right to pass "tougher-than-Taft-Hartley" laws. The NAM indicated it was for this anti-union feature, without waiting for more study.

Weeks At Work

Administration insiders report the Eisenhower proposal for government strike votes was rammed through by Sec. of Commerce Weeks, previously credited with killing ex-Sec. of Labor Durkin's attempts to amend Taft-Hartley.

Washington correspondents reported that Durkin's successor, James Mitchell, fought against the proposal but finally agreed to support it as a "team player."

Weeks, claiming credit as one of the message's authors, called the Eisenhower program "sound, constructive and fair to all."

Reshuffling

In a reshuffling of Senate committee assignments, the Republicans last week added Sen. Cooper (Ky.) and Sen. Upton (N. H.) to the Labor Committee. Upton is successor to the late Sen. Tobey (R.). The second vacancy resulted from the shift of Sen. Aiken (Vt.) to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Sen. McCarthy (Wisc.) was assigned to the Rules Committee, which must pass on the request of his Investigating Committee for funds.

The following comment was made by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on Pres. Eisenhower's Taft-Hartley Act message to Congress:

THE PRESIDENT'S message to Congress on the Taft-Hartley Act, while containing a few ameliorating recommendations, in toto does not change the anti-labor character of the law.

In fact, the proposed addition of a government-sponsored strike vote in every potential labor dispute adds to the anti-labor arsenal provided by the law.

No responsible authority in the field of labor-management relations has suggested restoration of the discredited Smith-Connally Act, which provided such a vote and which was dropped, as a demonstrated failure, at the end of the war.

The proposal is obviously based on the same misconception that prompted the strike-vote section of the Smith-Connally Act, and the similarly abandoned provision in Taft-Hartley for union shop elections—the misconception that unions act contrary to the will of their members rather than in response to that will.

For example, all unions in the CIO provide for democratic determination of strike action.

In both the Smith-Connally and union shop elections, it should be remembered that more than 95% of the votes were cast for the union position.

These futile elections are expensive to the government. But, even more important, they intensify industrial disputes rather than solve them.

Time better spent in bargaining in good faith and in seeking reasonable compromises would be consumed in campaigning by both sides for their solidified position.

In the field of labor relations, every dispute would be conducted in an election year atmosphere. We all know how difficult it is to have a bipartisan approach in such an atmosphere. And a bipartisan collective bargaining approach, between labor and management, is what is needed at all times in labor-management relations.

The remainder of the President's message is general in character. The CIO will offer additional comment on the President's program when the specifics are made known in the Administration's bill when it is offered.

Since the hearings of last year unfortunately were conducted in the vacuum resulting from the Administration's delay in stating its position, we are confident the labor committees of the Senate and House will afford the CIO and all other interested parties an opportunity to make known their views on these proposals of the President.

Stop The Loss of Jobs!

According to newspaper reports, the Advertising Council is planning a giant publicity campaign to combat the "depression psychology" and to sell the idea of prosperity.

The Council's campaign can be highly useful—if it does not fall back on the Hoover philosophy that we can "smile our way back to full employment," and if it shows that America has the resources, the manpower and the intelligence to build a peacetime full-employment, expanding-production economy.

But there are a growing number of workers—their number is up 800,000 in three months—who are out of work, and who will need more than an advertisement on a bus or a billboard to remove their feeling of "gloom and doom."

The Administration has said, on a number of occasions, that it will move resolutely to combat unemployment if times get bad.

But what are bad times? They may mean one thing to the jobless worker with no opportunity for work, and another thing for the corporation executive poring over figures of record profits.

The Administration cannot afford to wait until we are in the midst of crisis to use the many weapons of government economics to fight this recession. As the current CIO Economic Outlook points out, Uncle Sam's spending and tax programs should serve as a "balance wheel" to keep the economy stable.

The blind men who scream for "economy" just for the sake of balancing the budget should remember that the true balance sheet of America is not its dollars but the sum total of the human welfare of its people.

On that basis, an unemployed man or woman is a far more serious deficit than a red-ink figure on the government's statistical charts.

To The Right Of Taft

After weeks of circus-type ballyhoo and 18 months of vague promises, the Eisenhower position on labor legislation at last has been revealed.

The Adminstration, which calls itself "middle-of-the-road," has produced a policy on Taft-Hartley that is to the right of the late Sen. Taft.

Indeed, many of the liberalizing amendments which the Senator suggested last year, when the Administration was refusing to take a position on Taft-Hartley, are now conspicuous by their absence.

With no advance notice, the Administration has proposed T-H amendments which CIO Pres. Reuther rightly brands as adding to "the anti-labor arsenal provided by the law."

The President's proposal for a pre-strike vote, conducted by the government in all labor disputes, is an open insult to unions, their leaders, and especially to union members. It suggests that union members are so weak that they will be led around by the nose, unless a kindly government protects them.

Eisenhower does not suggest that any other group in America needs the government similarly to manage its affairs. He doesn't suggest polling stockholders on decisions of management, with the use of proxies denied.

The President might well profit by re-reading the speeches he read during the campaign. For last week's message set a new high for breaking campaign pledges—even Republican campaign pledges.

Too Old To Simonize

In Other Words—

Totalitarian Threats To The South

This discussion of totalitarianism in Latin America was written by Luis Alberto Monge, general secretary of the Inter-Americal Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) and a speaker at the Cleveland CIO convention. It appeared in the ORIT Inter-American Labor Bulletin.

By LUIS ALBERTO MONGE

THE COMMUNISTS have once again become very active in Latin America. They are working with immense financial resources in our countries.

The Communists are concentrating on certain strategic points. Thus, they are attempting once again to penetrate the Brazilian labor movement. They are displaying unusual activity in attempting to seize control of the Chilean labor movement through manipulating the recent unification of democratic and Communist factions. With each day their strength grows in Guatemala.

The Communists are paying particular attention to the dictatorships, where the persecution of the free labor movement offers a particularly good opportunity. They are also especially interested in workers in basic industries, which are generally in the hands of foreigners.

Communism has again become dangerous in Latin America because the majority of our workers continue to look with indifference at the Communist danger, which they consider remote and distant. The principal reasons for this are psychological and circumstantial rather than political.

The Communist danger can be summed up under two headings: 1. Destruction of political liberty, and 2. Economic exploitation by a totalitarian state.

Closer To Home

The majority of the workers of Latin America cannot understand this menace when they themselves suffer political oppression at the hands of dictatorships which call themselves anti-Communist, and economic exploitation by national and foreign firms which also proclaim their anti-communism.

The worker of the United States, who enjoys a high standard of living and political liberty, rationally understands the menace of communism. The Latin American worker, on the other hand, cannot dedicate all of his attention to the Communist danger because he is absorbed in the struggle to reconquer his own liberty and his own fight against extreme economic exploitation.

The ORIT, therefore, considers that the first steps in the struggle against Communist totalitarianism in Latin America are the destruction of Latin American dictatorships, and improvement in the conditions of life and labor of our peoples.

Special attention should be paid to Peronismo. Peronismo is a dictatorship for the Argentines, but for the rest of Latin America it has been converted into an imperialist and totalitarian menace. The Argentine government has spent millions to "Peronize" Latin America. Each of the embassies has come to function as a fifth column.

Peron Objectives

Peron has two objectives in international affairs: political and trade union hegemony in Latin American countries, and an appearance of sympathy and support from other Latin American countries with which to blackmail the United States. The second objective derives from and complements the first.

We have constantly fought the imperialist penetration of Peronismo. If Peron wants to gain sympathy from the people, he must first re-establish democracy in Argentina and renounce his desire to "Peronize" Latin America.

The democracies which remain, some in better condition than others, have proved themselves incompetent in the solution of social problems, thus creating the conditions which foster Peronismo and communism. This incompetence is more dangerous than the totalitarian tendencies themselves.

However, the political picture has some optimistic aspects. The maintenance of democratic institutions in Chile, after the coming to power of Gen. Carlos Ibanez; a similar event in Panama after the assumption of power by Col. Jose Antonio Ramon; the triumph of Paz Estensoro over the military in Bolivia; the improvement in Columbia after the coup of Gen. Rojas Pinilla, and the smashing electoral triumph of Jose Figueres in my country, Costa Rica, are unequivocal signs of a democratic trend.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THIS CITY, like any other democratic capital, has its fair proportion of high-principled, public-spirited officials and another fair proportion of politicians who are occupational cynics. It must be recorded that Pres. Eisenhower's first specific proposals for legislation provoked a wave of skepticism unparalleled in recent years on Capitol Hill.

One example involved the farm program, proposed in a 7000-word hodgepodge message promising "fairness" to farmers even while threatening to cut down their government checks. Many legislators promptly began talking one way publicly and another way privately.

A typical southwestern House member privately admitted that piled-up farm surpluses under rigid 90% price supports might be self-defeating, that maybe the President was correct in advocating sliding-scale flexible supports.

"But this isn't what I am saying for my people," he hastily added. So far as "his people" are concerned he's a red-hot 90% parity man. And he's a little contemptuous of the President's idea that, merely by sending a hodgepodge message to Congress, the White House is successfully exerting "leadership" toward a "sound" program.

Efficiency

The "new team" in Washington is so excessively efficient that it wants to save reporters the trouble of interviewing senators.

A Post Office Dept. release announcing appointment of Abe Goff of Idaho as departmental solicitor went on to say, deadpan, that both Idaho senators had "enthusiastic comment"—and then quoted the comment.

Considering the fact that Goff couldn't have got the job if either senator had objected, the gurgling press release seemed superfluous. Also it involved the use of public funds for political propaganda.

'Economy' Before People's Needs

It is a safe bet that this Congress, headed into an election, will not dare to cut the size of government checks earmarked for millions of farmers. Nor is this, in the minds of all members, merely an exercise in cynicism.

Agriculture Sec. Benson's plan, which he sold the President, is fundamentally a budgetary plan and a scheme to cut down government activities in the farm area. It does not consider farmers as human beings caught in a postwar squeeze of sliding demand, sliding farm values, sliding prices. It takes little account of the needs of consumers for food and fibers at prices they can afford to pay.

It is based on a desire for government economy, no matter what the cost in human suffering, and the now-familiar yen to whittle down government functions. The congressmen have their ears closer to the ground.

Another example involves taxes. Mr. Eisenhower asked prompt extension of the 52% corporation tax and the excise taxes now scheduled to expire Apr. 1. The House Ways and Means Committee hastily began discussing another bill to buy political capital by "relieving" various individual citizens of taxes they now must pay.

Taft-Hartley Generalities

A third example involves Taft-Hartley. The President's vague and generalized message made it triply certain that no comprehensive T-H revision will be voted this year.

Sen. Ives of New York, the Republican party's most knowledgeable national figure in the field of industrial relations, was openly shocked at the President's proposal for a rank-and-file vote by union members regarding a strike. The inescapable inference is that Ives wasn't even consulted on Eisenhower's message in final form.

The new Secretary of Labor, James P. Mitchell, was forced to admit in a lengthy press conference that he didn't know the exact contents of Sen Smith's bill purporting to be the Administration measure.

Smith verified for a New Jersey newspaperman a suspicion that he himself had dreamed up the fatuous notion of forcing a government-conducted strike vote "two or three weeks" after a strike has started, instead of in advance. But Eisenhower promptly indicated to a news conference that the details of T-H legislation were up to Congress, thus suggesting that he didn't care that Smith's proposal violated Sec. Mitchell's undeniable preferences.

The President's personal popularity and prestige bounced back to a new high after his United Nations speech on atomic energy. But members of Congress, wise in politics and intimately informed on legislative issues, took his farm and T-H messages as confirmation of their view that he still doesn't know much about civilian matters—and that they can more safely reject his "leadership" on specific matters than defy their constituents.

★ A report from Europe is that Charlie Chaplin, who once made a Hollywood film murderously satirizing Adolf Hitler, now plans a European-produced film on Joe McCarthy, his friends and contributors. Even if not shown in the United States, such a satire would unfortunately get a worldwide viewing elsewhere as an exposure of "reactionary" Americans, including the zillionaires who back McCarthy politically.

The Cost Of Layoffs

REMEMBER how the daily press hollers, every time there's a strike of consequence, about umpteem-million man-hours of production being lost because of labor-management disputes?

The press isn't hollering now, but the nation's recent sharp rise in unemployment—a climb of 800,000 in the past three months—already has cost as much in idle manpower as all the strikes for six out of the last seven years. And if the presently-predicted layoffs continue, the total in lost working days soon will exceed the strike-idle total from World War II to date.

The mounting cost in idle men and lost production resulting from unemployment was checked by CIO economists with past U. S. figures on strike idleness.

The recent "new" unemployment hitting 800,000 workers has resulted in four million idle man-days each week, on the average. That is at an annual rate of 208 million man-days idle.

That figure of 208 million almost exactly equals the actual total of man-days lost through strikes for all the years from 1947 through 1951 and for 1953.

And the cost per year of the present "new" unemployment is almost twice the total for the peak year of labor-management disputes, back in 1946 after the end of World War II wage controls.

In 1946, strike idleness averaged 2.2 million man-days idle per week and totalled 116 million for the year. In 1952, when the figures shot up during the steel strike, the weekly average was 1.1 million and the yearly total 59.1 million. In comparison, the '53 strike figures were 519,231 weekly and 27 million for the year.

Now comes the beginning of '54, with the economic cycle turning down, and the present cost of unemployment is up to 208 million idle man-days a year.

That means lost work, lost production, lost wages, lost sales, all never to be regained. And they are figures you won't find in your daily paper.

Economic Outlook Says—

'Balance Wheel' Of Spending, Taxes Will Help Keep Prosperity

A "BALANCE WHEEL" role is advocated for government spending and tax programs to maintain full employment and support a high-level economy.

That's the suggestion of the current issue of Economy Outlook, the monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

"When the country is confronted with substantial unemployment," the Outlook explains, "well-directed increases in government spending or tax cuts which leave more money for private spending can help people back to work and add to America's economic strength.

"In peacetime, when private spending—by business and consumers—seems adequate to provide full employment, then government's spending should be kept to the necessary minimum.

"But in all cases, the objective must be a combination of enough private and public spending for full employment and economic growth from year to year."

To provide full employment for 1954, national spending from all sources—federal and other governments, business and consumers—must approximate $385 billion, compared to about $370 billion in 1953, the Outlook says.

But production and employment have been dropping, it notes, and economists now estimate total spending in 1954 at anywhere between $10 and $18 billion less than last year, or some $30 billion off the full employment goal of $385 billion.

Jobs, Production Dropping

This means that four to five million fewer workers might have jobs by the end of 1954. Talk of such a decline as a "healthy adjustment" is "dangerous and misleading," the publication says, because "from bitter experience we know that a drop to $355 billion in 1954 would be only the beginning" and "might be $320 billion in 1955."

But to close the gap, the Outlook maintains, the federal government would not have to spend a full $30 billion extra.

If Congress acts promptly, starting by cutting the taxes of low income families who spend all their incomes and stepping up spending programs like public works and housing, "recession could be halted and then reversed."

"A combination of tax cuts and increased spending totalling together around $10 or $12 billion, if it were announced now and then put into effect right away, would probably close the gap in 1954," the Outlook says.

Debunks Fear On U. S. Debt

"All in all, the $10 or $12 billion outlay would quite probably result in a total spending increase of $25 or $30 billion, enough to prevent recession and restore full employment."

The Outlook debunks the claims of the people who worry lest a mounting public debt push the country into something like national bankruptcy.

Only a few years ago, it recalled, the same people were insisting the New Deal would bankrupt the nation because the federal debt increased $24 billion to $40 billion in nine years ending in 1939, due to the fight against the depression.

On top of that, it continued, came the staggering increase to nearly $280 billion in 1945, due to World War II, and the present $275 billion—all with "no very serious effect on the economy."

"The only time the federal 'balance sheet' is in true balance," the Outlook observes, "is when we enjoy full employment and a growing national economy."

Any increase in the national debt, it maintains must be measured against the additional wealth the added indebtedness creates. (Adequate national security, it also notes, likewise is more important than the size of the debt.)

The real problem of the public debt is meeting the regular interest charges. Since payment must come out of taxpayers' incomes, the Outlook notes, "the higher the income, the lower the percentage going for interest."

To pay interest on an increased debt of $12 billion would cost the federal government $360 million a year, it points out. But it might yield an increase in the national income of as high as $30 billion a year.

Bankers Like It

The Eisenhower Administration's "hard money" high interest policy, as organized labor predicted, brought record-breaking profits to the nation's bankers last year in spite of higher operating costs and lower deposits and total resources, according to the New York Journal of Commerce. The Journal said the net jumped 5 to 15% over 1952, reflecting "both the sustained high volume of earning assets and the higher scale of money rates." "Money rates" is a fancy name for interest.

Steel Union, Church Center Aid As Puerto Ricans Move To Midwest

By ED LASHMAN

THE KEY to the city of Youngstown hangs on the wall of a former granite monument plant in that steel-making center which goes by the imposing name of the Puerto Rican Social Recreation Center.

It's a far cry from summer of 1952 when half of the 3000 Puerto Ricans in this city of 170,000 were walking the picket lines with their fellow CIO Steelworkers at the sprawling Youngstown Sheet & Tube and Republic Steel plants.

That year, Catholic Charities, a Community Chest agency, spent nearly $15,000 feeding Puerto Rican strikers who were not eligible for county relief.

And it's a far cry from that fall's expose of the filthy, squalid housing conditions available to Youngstown's newest citizens.

That story of greed and lack of responsibility on the part of landlords was brought to light by reporter Bill Callahan in a picture story in the diocesan weekly, the Youngstown Catholic Exponent, after a survey conducted by Community Chest Labor-Liaison Rep. John Carney. Carney now is on the staff of CIO's Community Services Committee.

As USA-CIO Dist. 26 Dir. James P. Griffin said, "we had no problem in the mills. The first thing the Puerto Ricans looked for was the union. And we saw to it that Spanish-speaking people were available to help handle their grievances. But it was the community problem that worried us."

"Foreign-looking" people are no new thing in Youngstown, with its 45 or 50 different nationalities.

Because the social welfare organizations already operating in the area were not equipped to meet the particular complex problems involving Puerto Ricans, including a language barrier, the Puerto Rican Social Recreation Center was established.

Provide Many Services

Its director is Dr. Alfonso Garcia, a native of Havana, Cuba, who had been an instructor at Gannon College in Erie, Pa. He began an intensive program to integrate the Puerto Ricans into the Youngstown community through the center, which provides counselling and referral services as well as cultural, recreational and welfare activties, along with interpreting service.

How well the center has succeeded in bringing Youngstown's diverse groups together with the Puerto Ricans and helping them make friends all over town is demonstrated by the key to the city which was presented at Washington's Birthday dedication ceremonies to "Puerto Ricans of the Mahoning Valley."

But it is best summed up in Dr. Garcia's words: "We'll very soon put ourselves out of business."

A Decent Home For All—

CIO Urges More Building To Block Crash

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

"NO GOOD American family should honestly have to be ashamed of its home."

The CIO endorsed that statement by Pres. Eisenhower but it warned last week at a national housing conference that Administration sights are too low to make this hope a reality unless a goal of two million homes a year is set and met.

Meeting in Washington to consider America's housing problem of 1954, the CIO Housing Committee pointed out that the target of a million homes this year —top estimate from Administration planners—will not "attack the problem of adequately housing the people . . ."

Further, the committee counseled, it will not "enable the housing industry to provide enough jobs for its own employes and related industries to fully use housing as an anti-depression weapon."

Attended by representatives of government and consumer groups, the CIO conference advanced its own program, taking issue at several points with the only program in this field yet issued by an Administration spokesman.

Thimmes Writes Ike

CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, who heads the housing committee, made public a letter to the President in which he set forth the union's views. Thimmes, who is also vice president of the CIO Steelworkers, served as a member of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Housing Policies and Programs which made its report several weeks ago.

The major propelling force in any housing program, Leon Keyserling told the conference, is the people's need, recognized and expressed by themselves.

The chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers during the Truman Administration said there were "basic gaps" in the housing study just completed.

He said it offered a "useful foundation" and hoped that Congress would pass legislation recognizing changes in American housing needs, the country's potential and the methods necessary to meet the challenge of better housing for more people.

HOUSING RALLY—There were gaps in the report which bears his name, Federal Housing Administrator Albert M. Cole (at left) told the CIO Housing conference. Eyeing Cole are CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes (center), housing committee chairman, and Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) At right, minority problems were discussed by Sec. Francis Shane (left) of the CIO Steelworkers civil rights group, Dir. George L-P Weaver of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, Vice Pres. Alex Fuller of the Wayne County (Detroit) CIO Council and Robert Weaver, chairman of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing, who addressed the conference which was held in Washington.

Keyserling predicted a U. S. population of 170 million by 1960 in line with the expected increase in new families and population growth in recent years.

He pointed out the constant relationship between the level of housing construction and the general health of the economy. Between 1946 and 1953, Keyserling recalled, an average of 900,000 non-farm housing units were constructed each year. In the 1937-40 period this average was 465,000 annually.

Unemployment Feared

Keyserling foresaw America's problem as one of raising productive capacity to raise national income from $375 billion in 1953 to $500 billion by 1960. The clear alternatives to this, he warned, were great unemployment and lack of opportunity for investment.

Keyserling said there must be a rise in housing investment to $10-$12 billion annually by 1960.

Federal Housing Administrator Albert M. Cole, a former congressman, defended the report made by the presidential 21-man study committee which he made public several weeks ago. He admitted there were gaps in the report and some matters that were left untouched but said he believed it was the most realistic approach to the housing problem done in a long time.

CIO Program In Summary

Here are CIO's proposals for a comprehensive housing program, supported as an anti-recession safeguard:

- Full resumption of the public housing program for slum clearance and redevelopment of urban centers.
- Large-scale construction of private housing for low-income groups, using small down payments and long-term mortgages.
- A warranty from the builder to purchasers of new housing.
- Abandonment of any plans to raise mortgage interest rates.
- Legislation for terms as long as 75 years on mortgages on specified rental housing.
- Greater authorization for erection of cooperative housing.
- Keeping any program for rehabilitating dwellings and neighborhoods in perspective as no answer to slum clearance.
- Recognition of the need for increased housing opportunities for minority groups.

Cole admitted that a proposed policy of rehabilitating run-down dwellings and neighborhoods would be no substitute for slum clearance projects.

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) told the conference he opposed any increase in interest rates such as was proposed by the Cole committee's study. He said he had long been an advocate of a flexible determination of such rates.

A proposal to build a million housing units and selling them to people instead of putting families into public housing projects was outlined by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.).

Pres. Ira Robbins of the National Housing Conference urged establishment of citizens' councils on the local level to serve as "a watchdog and gadfly" to the public.

The U. S. has arrived at the point where it is respectable to talk about housing problems for minorities but has also become ready to do something about it, reported Robert C. Weaver, chairman of the National Committee Against Discrimination in Housing.

Weaver urged that government aid be withheld from any housing program in which there is contemplated segregation and called for an end of slum clearance projects used as devices to dislodge large numbers of non-white groups.

The unavailability of housing for minority groups who could afford to buy at current prices was noted by Weaver as he called attention to the two Levittowns built in Bucks County, Pa., and on Long Island, N. Y.

Levittowns Hit

"Tens of thousands of homes have been built by Levitt," Weaver said, "but not one has been made available by the builder to a non-white family."

Wallace Campbell, Washington representative of the Cooperative League of America, urged more opportunity for co-op building and home ownership.

Campbell smilingly stated that there were three ways to get a home in America.

"If you have a lot of money, someone will be very happy to build you one. If you have no money and there are enough others like you living in squalor so that you become a threat to the health and safety of the community, the federal or local governments will build one for you.

"If you don't fit in either of these categories, you will just have to build one for yourself."

HIGHER interest rates for home buyers were attacked by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) who told conferees he favored flexible scales.

CIO Urges Ike To Up Homes Goal

THE CIO viewpoint on housing was made known to Pres. Eisenhower in a letter from CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, who was a member of the presidential housing study committee. Excerpts from Thimmes' letter follow:

"We of CIO are disturbed at persistent indications that government officials and industry spokesmen are setting sights for the coming year far too low.

Public Housing: "A small program of 20,000 or 35,000 public housing units does not justify the overhead required to develop further public housing. We of CIO consider a continuation of this token size program as being tantamount to no public housing program at all."

Low Income Private Housing: "We recognize there may be some reluctance to face up to the reality of what a low-income family really is and how important this group is to the achievement of a high rate of home construction. For the purpose of planning an over-all housing program, families with income up to $5000 are clearly low income.

"They are not eligible for public housing but they do need adequate housing and they do constitute the great mass of consumers with unfulfilled housing requirements. It is in the $3000 to $5000-per-year group that the major reservoir of desirable and available consumer demand must be recognized."

Interest Rates: "To sustain a high level of building, prices must be suitable to the purchaser. The rate of interest and other related charges constitute important items in the consumer's monthly housing costs. An increase in interest rates would be a major disaster for the expansion of home building."

Minorities: "To solve the minority housing problem, special attention must be given to making sites available for new construction of units available to minorities; the tendency to squeeze minorities into overcrowded, restricted areas must be successfully resisted; and the relocation of minority families in slum areas which are demolished must be provided in such manner as to provide better housing and more democratic neighborhood patterns."

HOUSING'S role in the nation's expanding economy was detailed by Leon Keyserling, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers.

N. Y. CIO Reports—

'You Pay The Bill'—Under Dewey It's Hefty

By BERNARD RASKIN

"TEN YEARS of misrule" under the Dewey GOP Administration were denounced by the New York State CIO Council as the Legislature began its session.

"The dominant policy of the Administration has been to put the demands of rich and powerful corporations above the needs and wishes of the people," the Council charged. "And the price to the people has been staggering."

A quarter-million copies of the eight-page report, bearing the title "You Pay The Bill," are being distributed to New York State farm, consumer and community organizations in addition to CIO and other labor groups.

Elections Coming Up

It is the second of a series on State and national issues which the Council plans to distribute in pamphlet form prior to the 1954 elections. The series is part of a $100,000 educational campaign which will include use of television and radio.

New York elects a governor and a full Legislature in November. CIO leaders see prospects this year as the best in a long time for electing an Administration "which will have decent respect for people and the problems they face."

Three recent acts of the Legislature, the Council charged, were "designed for the particular benefit of giant banking, industrial and real estate interests" at a cost to the people of the state of almost $1 billion.

"Jacking up rents in a housing shortage is dangerous business."

These are:

- Amendments to the unemployment insurance law which permitted division of more than $695 millions of the unemployment insurance reserves among a handful of the state's largest corporations and at the same time tightened eligibility and benefit rules against claimants.
- Weakening of State rent controls last year which has resulted in rent increases for two million families totaling more than $200 million per year.
- The financial package imposed on New York City by the State last year which prescribed transit fare increases and a standby payroll tax as the principal means to be used by the City in meeting its perennial fiscal crisis.

The Dewey Administration was also charged with "long-term neglect" of schools, housing and health services; "shortsighted policies" affecting farmers, consumers and workers; and "consistent concentration" on giving special advantage by law to big business at the expense of smaller business enterprises.

'Rawest Give-Away'

The report described the Hughes-Brees unemployment insurance amendments, enacted in 1951, as "the rawest and most reckless giveaway in the history of the state."

"Basic protection against the threat of depression was squandered through these amendments, as well as vast amounts of money," the report stated. "Unless quick action is taken to repair the damage done to our unemployment insurance reserves, the price of this gift to a few corporate giants by our Legislature may turn out to be catastrophe."

"Emphasis now is on employer's tax rebates instead of protection."

The Legislature has begun its 1954 session and is expected to concentrate on providing window-dressing for the Republican campaign this Fall.

The State CIO Executive Board, which met in Albany last week, planned further steps in the educational campaign so as to make the window dressing transparent and keep the public eye on the real issues.

IUE Gets Backing In Fight For Jobs

CONGRESSIONAL backing has been given the CIO Electrical Workers in their efforts to prevent the moving of Westinghouse's Navy jet engine plant from Essington, near Philadelphia, to Kansas City, Mo.

Some 2600 workers would lose their jobs if the firm goes through with its plan.

Several Senators and representatives came to the support of IUE-CIO after a large delegation of IUE-CIO members, Pres. James B. Carey and Philadelphia's Mayor Joseph S. Clark, met with congressmen and defense officials in Washington.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) questioned the proposed move on the Senate floor, calling on the Defense Dept. to find out why the company is considering taking the plant to Missouri.

HE SAID the government should be vitally interested because it has invested $25 million in power tools at the plant. Morse also declared the transfer would be costly, disrupt production and apparently would result in laying off the Essington workers.

Those present at the meeting included Reps. Graham, Barrett and Green, all Democrats from the Philadelphia area, and Rep. Hugh Scott, Republican, also from Philadelphia; Defense Mobilizer Arthur S. Flemming; Navy Undersec. Thomas S. Gates, Jr., and other defense officials.

"We're being shuffled between statements by the company and by government officials in this matter, and we don't like it," Carey said.

Gates indicated that the proposed move would be brought up by the Navy when its officials meet with Westinghouse representatives Jan. 20. Carey proposed that the workers involved also should attend the meeting.

Jersey CIO Asks Boost In Jobless Pay

INCREASED unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits are called for in a 56-point program presented last week to Gov. Robert B. Meyner and the Legislature by the New Jersey CIO Council.

Payments up to $45 for single workers and to $65 for workers with four dependents and high earnings are sought. The Council urges integration of unemployment compensation and guaranteed annual wage plans.

Support for an "adequate Bonus" for Korean and World War II veterans was another program highlight. Chairman John B. Kelly of the Council legislative committee and Legislative Dir. Harry Kranz made it clear, however, that no form of sales tax should be levied to pay off the bonus bonds.

BESIDES asking for continued rent controls and eviction postponements, the committee asked "establishment of a state fund for low interest loans to municipalities, cooperatives, etc., for a middle-income housing program."

The Legislature will be asked to investigate the insurance company profits on workmen's compensation in the state and to revise mine safety codes.

Veterans Thank Michigan CIO For Yule Smokes

SEVERAL VETERANS' Hospitals in Michigan have thanked the State CIO Council for the Christmas gift of 10,000 packages of cigarets for hospitalized ex-GIs. This is the 13th Christmas that the Council has distributed the cigarets.

"Your continued interest in the veterans is noticed by the patients," said N. E. Scheib, chief of special services, Saginaw VA Hospital, which was typical of the messages received by the Council.

Others that commended the CIO state body included the Battle Creek and the Dearborn VA Hospitals and the Michigan Veterans' Facility. A complete tally showed that some 90 locals and county councils contributed.

ICFTU Urges Stronger UN Ban On Cartels, Monopolies

STRENGTHENING of the proposed agreement against monopolies and cartels, recently recommended to the United Nations, was urged last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The proposal originated with the UN Ad Hoc Committee on Restrictive Business Practices. Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek of the ICFTU charged it still left open many loopholes which must be closed if it is to protect the public interest as it should.

The tentative compact, the ICFTU pointed out, should cover not only restrictive practices of private individuals and firms, but also those of governments. Both should be liable, it added, to international investigation not only on complaint of a UN member-government, but also from "responsible non-governmental organizations representing important economic and social groups."

Northern Rhodesia

A demand that African natives be given the same job opportunities and wages as whites has been voted by white miner union members at the Roan Antelope copper mine in Northern Rhodesia.

The action created a sensation in the rest of southern Africa and especially in Nationalist-controlled South Africa, where the anti-Negro government of Premier Malan rules. Throughout southern Africa, white miners traditionally have had the most skilled and best paying jobs, with Negroes barred from them.

France

The National Collective Bargaining Board, with employers boycotting the meeting, approved a union-recommended monthly budget of $71.92 for an unmarried worker living in Paris, a sharp increase over the present minimum of $54.28 a month.

The board's decision on living costs was meant to serve as the basis for a government decision on increases in the minimum wage paid by both government and private employers. The unions have renewed their pressure for a substantial boost in the wage floors. G.N.L.

'Shocking' U. S. Migrant Policy Protested By Reuther To Ike

THE MENACE to friendly U.S.-Mexico relations and the "natural resentments aroused among workers of both nations" through illegal Mexican migration was pointed out to the White House by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week.

In a letter to Pres. Eisenhower, the CIO head described the "shockingly inadequate" way in which this government is handling the rising tide of illegal Mexican entrants and the programs for bringing in foreign contract farm labor.

Reuther urged Eisenhower to display leadership in his recommendations for migrant labor legislation and appropriations. The latest agreement with Mexico expired Jan. 15.

Copies of Reuther's letter went to Sec. of State Dulles, Atty.-Gen. Brownell and Sec. of Labor Mitchell.

REUTHER TOLD the President that the director of the Bureau of Employment Security in the Dept. of Labor had informed him that if by Jan. 15, "a satisfactory agreement is not reached with Mexico, it is our plan to join with the Depts. of State and Justice in recommending a proposal for continuing a similar program on a unilateral basis."

Such unilateral action, Reuther noted, would precipitate a most unfortunate situation by exposing Mexicans to exploitation without any protection from their own government and by straining our relations with Mexico.

Instead of such a drastic step, said Reuther, "a constructive, cooperative program should be developed after adequate consideration of the workers' viewpoint."

Reuther charged that organized growers in areas along the border and in many states farther north prefer to use Mexican contract nationals.

HUNDREDS of CIO union members in the packing sheds of California have lost their jobs, he added, because lettuce packing was carried on at substandard rates by Mexican contract workers, contrary to the intent of Congress.

A conference of U. S. and Mexican union officials last month agreed that participation in formal negotiations covering workers would be requested by labor representatives.

Reuther said these representatives "should be fully consulted, either through participation in formal negotiations or through close collaboration, if some other method of handling legal migration of Mexican workers is developed."

Reuther concluded that if Eisenhower familiarizes himself with existing abuses "you will be shocked and will insist on remedies, many of which are possible through executive action."

A similar letter was sent to the President by the AFL.

New Record

Illegal "wetback" migration from Mexico soared to a record two million persons in 1953, according to a New York Times estimate.

More than one million were arrested and deported when they were caught crossing the 1600-mile border by U. S. immigration officials. Authorities figure one gets through for every one halted.

Smith Stalls Hearings, Knifes Chance For FEP

GIVING NO REASON except that he found it necessary, Senate Labor Committee Chairman Smith (R. N.J.) has ordered hearings on the Humphrey-Ives fair employment practices bill postponed until Feb. 23.

His action, strongly objected to by both Republicans and Democratic Senators, is regarded by backers of FEP legislation as having killed all chances for its enactment by the 83rd Congress.

Smith acted in spite of the protests of Chairman Ives (R. N.Y.) of the Senate Civil Rights Subcommittee. Ives' group was scheduled to open the hearings, which have been in preparation since last May, on Jan. 12.

Ives released a blistering statement condemning Smith's action to the press. He said he "strongly objects to this postponement" and added that he felt that "such postponement may actually destroy the effectiveness of the hearings."

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.), a member of Ives' subcommittee, also expressed "deep disappointment" over the decision of the Republican leadership to postpone hearings. He said all Democrats on the committee will continue to push for early and affirmative action.

"Only early action by the committee would provide any substantial hope for its being considered and passed this session," Douglas said. "This has apparently been knocked in the head by the action of Sen. Smith and the Republican leadership."

Another of the 18 co-sponsors of the FEP bill, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), said that the postponement of the hearings, coupled with the lack of any recommendation for civil rights legislation in Pres. Eisenhower's State-of-the-Union message, indicates a "turning away from this fundamental problem" by the Administration.

SEN. LEHMAN (D. N.Y.) termed the postponement "very unfortunate" and a "great disappointment."

Smith's action was taken Jan. 7 after he had spent all of the previous day unsuccessfully trying to persuade Ives to call off the hearings. Democratic members of the committee said they were not consulted in advance.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, wired Smith that his organization was "inexpressibly shocked" by the postponement.

He added that there was "general belief at high Senate levels" that the postponement "really means cancellation of a bill which is desperately needed," particularly in view of increasing unemployment.

Members of minorities "form a highly disproportionate percentage of present unemployed and, in the absence of FEP legislation, will form a disproportionate number of those soon to be out of work," White said.

Townsend Named To NAACP Board

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has elected Arthur B. Spingarn to his 15th consecutive term as president. Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the CIO Transport Service Employees was among those re-elected to the board of directors.

Unions Hit By Wetback Tide, Warning

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

CHARGES that employers are making illegal use of Mexican workers and "wetbacks" in an effort to wreck U. S. unions were hurled by CIO spokesmen in a mass meeting at El Centro, Calif.

Called by CIO United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers LIU 78, the meeting attracted upwards of 400 union members and local business people.

El Centro is the center of crop-rich Imperial Valley, reclaimed by irrigation from the desert along the border of Mexico and now supplying practically all of the nation's winter lettuce.

Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO organizational director for five western states, said "the Mexican nationals and wetbacks are caught in an economic swirl which was devised—and solely devised—to beat down the workers in the agricultural industry."

Jim Smith, Local 78 president, accused growers and shippers of "using nationals to tear down this labor union."

Ben Perry, Local 78 director in Imperial Valley, said that employment among lettuce packinghouse workers has dropped from some 3200 two years ago, to less than 700 this season.

A new process for cooling lettuce for shipment, which includes packing of the commodity in the fields, is causing a sharp cut in the employment of packingshed workers. With packingsheds by-passed, and foreign labor used for field packing, domestic workers are being hard hit.

Smith pointed out that Local 78, which holds contracts with practically all packing sheds in the Valley, has a minimum wage scale of $1.33 an hour for lettuce packers. The Mexican field workers get from 70c to 87c an hour.

"Our own workers are being thrown out of jobs, their union weakened, and local business people are losing thousands of dollars of pay-roll money usually spent here by our members," DeShetler said.

"It is a policy that is economically unsound and morally wrong."

Texans Pay For Wetbacks

THE PRICE paid by the American people in disease, depressed wages, crime, lost business and human misery as a result of the "wetback" invasion of the U. S. is emphasized in a new book just published at Austin, Tex.

Publishers of the booklet, called "What Price Wetbacks," are the Texas State AFL and the American GI Forum of Texas, a veterans' organization made up primarily of Americans of Latin descent.

The publication is a report on an intensive investigation of the wetback situation by Ed Idar, Jr., executive secretary of the Forum, and Andrew C. McLellan, a Rio Grande City businessman who has long worked on the problems of Mexico and of Latin-Americans in Texas.

Its purpose is to show that the dangers of the wetback influx are not over-emphasized, as has been claimed in some quarters.

The two found that wages of wetbacks generally are around 25c to 30c an hour and that living conditions in the camps of the illegal immigrants, who enter the U. S. by swimming or wading the Rio Grande, are so unsanitary that they endanger all residents near them.

"Disease observes no racial or nationality lines," the report declares.

The booklet can be ordered for 50c each from TSFL, 412 Littlefield Bldg., Austin 15, Tex., or the GI Forum, 310 Nalle Bldg., Austin, Tex. —LPA

Ike Calls Farm Plan 'Flexible' —Farm Income Sure Would Be

—Seaman For LPA

"Passing Your Buck"

By MILTON PLUMB

THE MUCH-ballyhooed Republican farm program, which the Administration has repeatedly promised would check the recent alarming decline in farm income, was finally announced last week.

Thousands of "consultants" reportedly worked to shape the program Yet, except for a few modifications, the "new" proposals which Pres. Eisenhower outlined in a special message to Congress are nothing more than the same farm law enacted in 1948 by the Republican 80th Congress.

That law calls for a "modernized"—lower—parity and "flexible" price supports as low as 75% in place of the "rigid" 90%.

THE PRESIDENT'S program would lower some price supports next year and all of them in 1956, despite the fact that the drop in farm income in recent months has reached a $3.6 billion annual rate. However, to lessen the shock, the President recommended that the maximum dollars-and-cents drop in prices resulting from application of the new parity formula be limited to 5% in any one year.

If put into effect immediately, the over-all drop in parity prices would be about 20% for peanuts, 15% for wheat, 10% for corn and 5% for cotton, Agriculture Dept. officials said.

Wheat, having a present parity of $2.44 a bushel and a support price of $2.20, would drop, under the President's proposed formula, to a "modernized" $2.10 parity. On top of this cut, the new "flexible" price supports of 75% to 90% would be figured on the lower value.

AS ANOTHER means of cushioning the effects of the new program — and incidentally to continue 90% price supports beyond next November's elections—the GOP program incorporates a plan long advocated by Pres. James Patton of the National Farmers Union for creation of a "food reserve stockpile."

First congressional reaction indicated general support for the latter proposal by leaders of both parties, but Democratic leaders and a large number of Republicans from farm states broke sharply with the Administration on "flexible price supports.

Although the American Farm Bureau called the plan "essentially sound," both the Farmers Union and the National Grange expressed concern over the Eisenhower program. Grange Master Herschel Newsom said he was "apprehensive" and didn't see how it would "keep us from having the same surplus bug-a-boo."

SEN. LANGER (R. N. D.), recalling that during the campaign Eisenhower had said in a speech at Fargo, N. D., that he was for 90% parity, said his remarks now look like "campaign oratory."

Meanwhile, Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) pointed out that application of the President's proposals "would immediately reduce the price of wheat, cotton, corn and peanuts in Oklahoma by one-sixth. That would mean a full-scale depression in our State within a year."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

IF YOU ARE A TYPICAL wage-earning family, your 1953 Federal income tax probably represents the biggest tax bite you ever paid. A worker who earned the typical industrial wage of $71 a week during 1953 pays Federal income tax of about $350. That is more than most wage-earning families spend for clothing or home furnishings in a year. Next to food and rent, the Federal tax is probably the biggest item in your budget.

Tips On Tax Deductions

You have until Mar. 15 to sit down and figure out how much of that money you legally get back as a refund.

Many wage earners take the easy way and simply fill out the short form which automatically provides a ten per cent allowance for various deductible expenses, such as medical costs, contributions, etc. Or even if they fill out the long form (which must if they earn more than $5000), they still take just the allowance.

The wise way is to figure out your tax both ways, to see whether the standard ten per cent allowance, or itemizing your actual deductible expenses, would result in a lower tax. You can switch back and forth each year as you find you have deductions worth itemizing or it would be more profitable to take the standard ten percent.

Here is a list of potential deductions for wage-earners and moderate-income families if you itemize deductions:

MEDICAL: You can deduct all medical expenses over 5% of your income, or if you or your wife are over 65, the whole amount. There are limits: you can't deduct medical expenses of more than $2500 on a joint return, $3750 with an additional dependent, $5000 with two besides you and wife.

Deductible expenses include fees paid to doctors, dentists, chiropodists, optometrists, other practioners; medicines, including cold and cough preparations such as aspirin tablets, patent medicines; vitamin preparations and tonics suggested by a doctor; nurses' fees and costs of board, including costs of a practical nurse to care for a sick person; all costs of transportation for medical care.

WORK CLOTHES, TOOLS: Ordinary work clothes like dungarees are not deductible although some tax examiners are more lenient than others about allowing small deductions for them. The test is, could you wear the clothes away from work? The costs of any distinctive working uniforms are deductible without question if required as a condition of employment and not adaptable to general wear.

OTHER WORK EXPENSES: You can deduct union dues and assessments; fees to employment agencies; unemployment insurance in states that levy this tax on pay.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS: Deduct all contributions to bona-fide charities, non-profit hospitals, and schools, churches and welfare groups, including contributions through payroll deduction. You can also deduct fair market value for goods or food contribution to such groups as Scouts, Salvation Army, church bazaars, etc., also costs of gas and oil used in performing services for charitable, church or government agency like school or Civilian Defense.

INTEREST CHARGES: Fully deductible the year you pay them are interest charges on your mortgage, cash loans and installment purchases such as a car bought on time.

OTHER TAXES: You can deduct all state and local taxes you pay (but not Federal excises or Social Security tax). Deductible are property taxes; state and city income taxes; state and city sales taxes; auto and driver license fees, and poll taxes.

That Food Price 'Spread' Faces Another Senatorial Inquiry

STILL ANOTHER congressional check on the "spread" in food prices—the wide gap between what farmers receive and what housewives pay—is getting under way in Congress, as latest economic reports indicate that the consumers' cost-of-living soon will resume its skyward climb.

The Senate Agriculture Committee named Sen. Williams (R. Del.) to head a subcommittee to look into the farm price "spread." Other members are Sens. Schoeppel (R. Kans.) and Hoey (D. N.C.).

In the previous Congress, a committee headed by Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) looked into the question of who gets how much of the consumers' dollar. And in the last session, he sought a full-scale investigation of the problem, but was turned down by the GOP majority.

Recently the Agriculture Dept. reported on an investigation of its own, which proved largely a whitewash.

PREDICTIONS of the Wall Street Journal that Armour & Co., the country's second largest packer, would show a $10 million profit level for 1953 were borne out last week when the firm made its annual report.

The actual net was $10.3 million, an increase of 44% over the $7.1 million earned in 1952. This leap, which meant a boost in per share profits from $1.02 to $1.81, came despite an increase of but 5.62% in sales measured by tonnage.

General Mills, another food industry giant, last year was able to increase its sales only 5% over the 1952 figures, but pushed its net profit up 24%—from $4.3 million to $5.3 million. That meant earnings of $2.18 a share compared to $1.75 in 1952.

The Ralston Purina Co. turned an even neater trick. Because of the drought impact on its feed business, sales went down 16%, but profits were upped by 13.4%.

Looking to the future, the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index and the Bureau of Labor Statistics wholesale price index both were climbing in recent weeks.

In the week ending Jan. 12, the Dun & Bradstreet index, representing the total wholesale prices of one pound each of 30 commonly used food products, soared 18c to $7.03, highest point since $7.07 was registered on June 19, 1951. The increase was the tenth in as many weeks and the sharpest since the week ending Sept. 9, 1947, when the figure rose 31c to $7.02.

Recent jumps in the wholesale food price index presage later boosts in the BLS consumers price index.

New Health Center For Chicago ACWA

A medical center which will provide complete care, short of hospitalization, for 12,000 members of the CIO Clothing Workers and their families in the Chicago area has been chartered by the State of Illinois.

Labor Aids Top Gains For Credit Unions

MORE NEW credit unions were organized in 1953 than in any other single year on record.

That's the report of the Credit Union National Association which said an average of 180 were organized each month, bringing the total to 18,125 in North America. The eight million members of those credit unions saved an estimated $1 million in interest payments last year, according to CUNA officials.

Although the largest number of credit unions continue to be organized by industrial workers, CUNA says more and more farmers are following their lead because the drop in farm prices has sharpened the need for reasonable credit rates to finance agricultural eqiupment.

CIO affiliates operate 243 credit unions with a membership of about 119,000 and total assets estimated at $27,945,000. Labor organizations set up 149 new credit unions in 1953, bringing to the total operated by trade unions to 776.

Magnuson Asks Floor Under Private Health Benefit Plans

NATIONAL standards for private medical insurance plans were advocated last week "to outlaw the fine print that many chiselers put in present-day policies."

Dr. Paul B. Magnuson, chairman of the President's Commission on the Nation's Health during the Truman Administration, supported a proposal to establish government re-insurance of private pre-payment plans.

He said they would give a needed "shot in the arm" to expand coverage. Existing plans, Dr. Magnuson claims, concentrate too much on "$5 and $10 medical bills," ignoring or excluding the big medical expenses "that break the back of the average wage-earner."

He said any insurance company should be required to meet standards specifying completeness of coverage before it could qualify for government re-insurance. "I am unalterably opposed," the doctor said, "to the government insuring health insurance policies which aren't worth the paper they are printed on."

"Catastrophic" insurance should cover the entire family, underwrite all medical expenses and cover all prolonged illness with the possible exception of mental illness and tuberculosis. Dr. Magnuson suggested a government standard with a "ceiling" of about $2500 for any one illness.

AMA Scorched

Chairman Wolverton (R. N.J.) of the House Commerce Committee fired a blast at the American Medical Association last week for opposing all proposals for better health programs as "socialized medicine."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THIS IS THE most crucial year in our history. I want to take this opportunity to outline the things I want the staff of National CIO to do to meet the challenge.

The state of our union is fine. We're strong and healthy and we have a program that meets the needs of the workers and the nation. On the other hand, we now know enough about the policies and practices of the present Administration—through the few recommendations that have been sent to Congress, and through the most recent rulings of the NLRB—to realize that we are headed for harder days. Certainly, there has been no reassurance that workers will find themselves in a time of greater freedom of self-organization.

Yet we must organize. We have to forget how strong and healthy we are, and think of ourselves as back in the early days. We have to build from the ground up. Every living, waking moment has to be dedicated to bringing unorganized workers the union message.

We have to move forward with our legislative program. We have to realize that in political action, as well as organization, this is the year of decision. I know that the burdens on our staff are heavy.

YET I EXPECT that each and every man—wherever it is consistent with his assigned duties—will give every assistance possible to our political action program, will work closely with the regional and district directors of the various international unions, with our own regional directors, with the councils—in bringing back to the people of the United States the realization of the ability they have as free men in a free country. But let's face the facts. The people's confidence in their own power is asleep.

Sleep is one of those luxuries we may not be able to afford for a while. There are long nights and hard days ahead, but days filled with useful work in a great cause. We should never lose sight of that fact. We are fighting for what's right.

Sometimes people say to me, "Why don't you fellows in labor compromise? You want things your own way all the time." I say to them that we are willing to negotiate, and always have been.

However, men seeking justice don't compromise. Justice and truth don't wear any political labels, nor are they the particular property of any party or group or organization. And in seeking them, we do not act in behalf of any special group or organization.

I have talked before about the challenge that is upon us. It is no longer a matter of talk. Your national officers are dedicated to carrying out the policies and programs of CIO. We are dedicated to moving forward, not merely holding the line.

REG. DIR. FRANK CRONIN reports two NLRB elections: The CIO Oil Workers won at the Corn Products Refining Co., Pekin, Ill., and the CIO Packinghouse Workers at the poultry house of P. G. Gray, Esterville, Ia.

A series of victories was reported by Reg. Dir. George Craig. The CIO Paper Workers won at P. Mossman & Co. and the Hancock Paper Co., both in Philadelphia. The CIO Steelworkers won bargaining rights at the Fairless Works Tube Div., Bristol, Pa., and the Lenover Corp., Lenover, Pa., and the CIO Playthings Workers at the Thrifty Product Manufacturing Co. and the Na Ro Co., both in Philadelphia.

At the International Minerals & Chemicals Corp. plant in Wales, Tenn., the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won; at the International Equipment Co., New York City, the CIO Auto Workers were victorious, and at the Hawthorne Melody Farms Dairy, Whitewater, Wis., Local Industrial Union 1705 successfully beat back an AFL Teamsters raid.

15c Pact Won At American Can As USA-CIO Ends Long Strike

SCORING their second contract victory in two weeks, the CIO Steelworkers last week ended their 42-day strike against the American Can Co. and accepted a 15c package proposal.

Almost 20,000 can and milk carton production workers will get an 8.5c wage increase across-the-board and retroactive to last Oct. 1.

The contract is for a two-year period with a reopener on issues of wages, insurance and pensions next Oct. 1, with the union free to strike.

Al Whitehouse, chairman of the USA-CIO 75-man negotiating committee, announced the settlement terms. He said it was in many ways similar to that negotiated a few days earlier for 14,500 workers at Continental Can Co. Union members in both concerns struck Dec. 1.

The 8.5c increase follows the pattern set in basic steel last year. Equal in importance to the wage increase, union spokesmen said, were reductions of differentials based on sex and location. Some wages were as much as 17c out of line in Florida with scales in northern plants, with women receiving 5c an hour less than men.

The American Can settlement calls for improved holiday and vacation provisions. Good Friday and Election Day will now be added to the list of paid holidays. Service time computed for vacation pay purposes has been liberalized as have overtime provisions.

Union officials said that seniority clauses had been bolstered and that severance pay, a new feature, had been included in the settlement.

Pact Gained At Merck By Gas, Coke

A SEVEN-WEEK strike of some 3200 CIO Chemical Workers ended last week at five Merck & Co. plants and won wage increases ranging from 6c to 11c an hour.

The plants are at Rahway, N. J., Danville, Pa., and Philadelphia, where three factories of Merck's Sharp & Dohme Div. are located.

UGCCW Pres. Elwood D. Swisher said the pay raises are only part of the "victory package" won from the firm, one of the giants of the drug manufacturing industry.

The strike also gained the modified union shop and an increase in paid holidays to seven. Swisher praised John Dohaney, board member and the union's Dist. 4 director, for his leading role in the negotiations.

The workers got a 6c across-the-board hourly pay increase at Rahway, 8c at Philadelphia and 11c at Danville, where the basic rate was the lowest.

Workers at all plants received $50 for the two holidays when they were on strike and for the Christmas bonus. In addition, some 2000 Rahway and Danville workers got $96 in cost-of-living increases due for the last quarter.

Key Witness In Reuther Case Walks Into Cops After Flight

A KEY witness in the shooting of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther surrendered to police of Preston, Ont., last week, four days after walking out of a Detroit hotel where he was supposed to be under police guard.

Charged in a warrant issued in Detroit with assault with attempt to kill Reuther in 1948, Donald Ritchie first waived extradition after Canadian authorities picked him up and agreed to return to the U. S., then changed his mind. Preston is about 185 miles northeast of Detroit, between that city and Toronto.

Reuther was president of the CIO Auto Workers at the time of the assault, a post he still holds in addition to the CIO presidency. The UAW, which shared in offering rewards totaling some $240,000 for the capture of his assailant, paid $5000 in cash to Ritchie's wife an hour after he fled the hotel and 15 hours before police announced his departure.

Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien of Wayne County (Detroit) said his case against four underworld figures named a week earlier was based on Ritchie's statements. He released copies of one statement in which Ritchie admitted receiving $5000 for riding, as a spare driver in case of an emergency, to the scene of the shooting with three other men.

Clarence Jacobs, a Canadian held by Ontario police as a fugitive, was named as the triggerman. The statement quoted Ritchie as saying the day after the shooting, he was paid $5000 by Carl Renda, professional strikebreaker and son-in-law of Santo Perrone, Detroit underworld figure and union-buster.

Renda was arrested and freed in $25,000 bail. Perone is a fugitive. The fourth of the originally named quartet, Peter Lombardo, is at the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., with a detainer against him.

Rail Union Gains 5c Hike

THE CIO Railroad Workers last week won a 5c hourly wage increase for some 36,000 Pennsylvania Railroad shop employes—more than 70% of the railroad's maintenance personnel.

The new contract does not contain the cost-of-living escalator clause in effect since 1951, but incorporates a total of 13c an hour gained under that provision into the basic wage rate.

The union boosted paid vacations received by workers with 15 years' service from two to three weeks.

A few days later, the road laid off 600 to 700 more shop workers.

CIO Leaders Hit Ike's Taft-Hartley Proposals

that injunctions often have "the effect of making settlement . . . more difficult."

But the message called for only one slight modification of the Taft-Hartley injunction sections—the changing of mandatory injunctions in boycott cases to discretionary ones.

The so-called national emergency section, which CIO says "everyone recognizes as unsound," is only changed in a manner which would make "procedure even more unsound."

The President proposed giving emergency boards of inquiry the right to make recommendations, but stipulated these recommendations could only be made when the injunction has almost run its course. CIO pointed out that "whatever virtue there sometimes may be" in such recommendations was lost by this ill-conceived timing procedure.

Elsewhere the President failed to repeal Taft-Hartley's major union-busting clause, as he had promised, and only proposed to slow-down such union busting. He urged provisions which would give employers more opportunity to coerce workers under the guise of free speech.

He likewise proposed to ban all negotiation and discussion on any subject once the contract was concluded, even though the matter might never have arisen in negotiations.

The President likewise proposed changing the satisfactory checkoff of union dues worked out under the present law; called for study and new laws against union welfare funds; gave slight relief in secondary boycott cases and provided some changes in union shop provision clauses for industries like the maritime and building trades, but CIO pointed out that other Taft-Hartley provisions could take these gains away.

Adverse reaction to both the message and the bill came quickly:

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) had "grave question regarding the wisdom" of the strike vote proposal. Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) said it "looks anti-union."

And Sec. Mitchell, addressing a GOP dinner in New Jersey, called for enactment of the Presidential program except for the strike vote proposal. He specifically opposed that provision, saying it "seems to have developed misunderstanding and confusion."

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on At Issue, Martin Agronsky's television program, at 8 P. M. on Jan. 27. The program, to be telecast over ABC-TV, will originate in New York.

TRANSIT CASE—John F. O'Donnell, TWU-CIO general counsel, urges fact-finding committee to act quickly on demands of the union's members employed by New York City transit lines. Next to him is Pres. Matthew Guinan of TWU Local 100. At extreme left is Jack F. Turcott, board member and newsman. Other members are John I. Synder, Jr., and George Faunce, Jr., industrialists.

Women Voters Get Big Hand At PAC Rally

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WOMEN in America were not always first class citizens, Dir. Jack Kroll of the CIO Political Action Committee reminded nearly 200 women delegates who attended a Conference on Family Participation in PAC last week in Washington.

The delegates, women who work in CIO-organized plants themselves, or are wives of CIO members, represented practically every CIO union as well as state and local councils and women's auxiliaries throughout the country.

Recalling the days not many years ago when women picketed the White House a few blocks away demanding the right to vote, Kroll said too many women now seem to have lost interest in that right, after winning it in principle.

He urged the delegates to speak out at their round table discussions and tell what can be done to draw more women into political activity.

Mrs. Helen Gahagan Douglas, former member of Congress from California and the main speaker at a luncheon meeting, made a stirring address interrupted often by applause. She was introduced by Mrs. Esther Murray, PAC field director, who headed arrangements for the conference.

Mrs. Katie Lochheim, vice-chairman of the Democratic National Committee, also spoke briefly at the luncheon on the importance of women's activity in politics. "Men do the difficult, women the impossible," she said.

MRS. DOUGLAS told the women that they live in a fascinating time in history. Urging them not to be discouraged by present setbacks, she reminded them how short a time women have had the vote.

"We have made tremendous strides in this short time," she said. "Don't be discouraged."

It's not enough just to be active politically, Mrs. Douglas told the women. "In order to be effective, you must be in control of your mind—you not somebody else," she said.

Modern means of quick communication by radio, television, press, have made it very easy for unscrupulous politicians to arouse fear in people's minds, she said, but "the citadel of freedom lies within you."

"McCARTHY is no threat to freedom if you don't give him power" through fear, Mrs. Douglas said vehemently, as the delegates broke into applause.

The women delegates were not backward about talking up at the half a dozen round table discussions into which the conference was divided at both the morning and afternoon sessions. They had many ideas about why women hang back in political activity, or seem to lack interest, and what should be done about it.

Same Old Line

PAC conference delegates applauded loudly when Helen Gahagan Douglas compared the new GOP program to the sales talk of the auto industry, which claims to have something brand new in the way of cars.

"You find it has the same old body, the same old engine, with only a few more gadgets. What the GOP does have that is new, is a 'McCarthy siren," Mrs. Douglas said, as the delegates burst out laughing.

A number felt that the apathy of men on interesting women in politics, was partly to blame for women's failure to be more active.

"WOMEN usually sit back and listen. They are afraid the men will make fun of them if they say something wrong," said one delegate. Another said that most men don't discuss politics with their wives; some don't even want them to go to meetings.

Others said things like this:

- There is not enough attention paid to women's interests in unions. You can't interest women purely in political issues. You have to tie these into something that they themselves can do. There isn't enough presented that interests the housewife.
- Lectures are dull to most women, for women "are essentially doers, not listeners." They can be reached best through some community activity that touches them closely. There should be more effort to reach them through the work of Community Service Committee.
- Part of the lack of political interest is general apathy felt also by the men.

Several delegates spoke for PAC work on a year round basis, instead of just at campaign time.

OTHERS thought an effort to distribute pamphlet material more widely to the rank-and-file rather than just at the official level would be helpful.

Some advocated tying in political education with recreation. Parties, banquets, games could take up most of the evening, with a drop of political education added, but not enough to bore the women.

One delegate did not agree that it was hard to interest the women. She had found they were more interested than many of the men.

Another thought that it was hard to interest women in politics when their men were bringing home good wages and things seemed to be going pretty well. "They get interested when things go wrong," she said. "Then they wake up."

After putting in practically a 12-hour day presenting the problems, discussing what to do about them, and then summarizing the results at an evening session, the women took the second day to tour the Capital, meet some Senators and Representatives and visit Congress in session.

ADA Backing Is Welcomed By Mitchell

CLEARING UP a widely-publicized misunderstanding, Chairman Stephen A. Mitchell of the Democratic National Committee welcomed the support of Americans for Democratic Action.

Mitchell said help was welcome from ADA or other groups "who believe in the principles or approve the candidates of the Democratic Party."

ADA is an independent, liberal, non-Communist organization of voters in which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey have taken active roles.

Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., and James E. Doyle, ADA national co-chairmen, said last week that Mitchell's statement "helpfully clarifies" the relationship between the group and the Democratic Party.

They added that "the great advances of the last two decades have been produced in large measure by a coalition between Democratic and independent voters who shared a common belief in the liberal principles of the New Deal and Fair Deal. The task of our times is to re-formulate these principles in terms of the challenge of the future."

The misunderstanding between the two groups arose because of accounts of television statements attributed to Mitchell.

Beirne Warns PAC Rally Against 'Corporate Fascism'

A GRIM warning against "corporate fascism" as a result of the continued growth of big business was sounded by CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne last week.

"Unless you and I, who have enough to get by on every day or every year, unless we fight against big business," he told the CIO-PAC Family Participation Conference, "we'll wake up one day to corporate fascism and wonder where it came from."

Beirne, who as president of the CIO Communications Workers deals with the country's largest corporation, said that interlocking directorates with less than 150 directors, "who do each other's log-rolling . . . control the wealth and the economy of the United States."

He told the delegates that there is an answer to the situation.

"It's not to ruin them," he stressed. "It's in the understanding we accept of our own form of government and our determination to take our part in the democratic processes."

He drew a parallel between the constitution of the United States and the CIO, showing how both stress concern for the welfare of all the people and manifest a belief in the future. He asked for the "help and understanding of people like yourselves" in providing the strength "to fight the battle of tomorrow."

Beirne rapped the Eisenhower Administration for its quick payoff of big business and financial interests which suupported the GOP during the campaign. He also hit proposed Taft-Hartley Act changes as putting the government on the side of breaking unions.

ACW Trying To Find Takers For $5275

THE PHILADELPHIA Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers is looking for 214 men and women. It wants to give them approximately $5275.

The windfall is the second for former employes of the Eastern Uniform Co., Philadelphia, which went into bankruptcy in November 1941. It followed the union's 12-year court fight, led by Board Manager Charles Weinstein, first to collect back pay due under the Walsh-Healey Act, then to collect interest. The union won on both counts, beating out the government in a fight for the interst.

The first windfall represented $23,068 in back pay for 369 ACWA-CIO members. The second is the interest. It totalled $9294, and already the union has distributed $4015 to 155 former employes.

It's having a tough time locating some of the people to whom the money belongs. A number have died, and their heirs must be traced. Others have moved and now live in the South or Middle West. Still others just can't be found despite searches of union files and telephone directories, or the help of the Post Office.

Some of the claims probably will never be paid, Weinstein said, but one Philadelphia woman got a little extra. She had 32c due. To get it she would have had to pay 30c carfare. The union made the trip worth while for her.

Reuther Asks Jobs Parley

A Better Deal— That's what members of the CIO Brewery Workers want at two big rice mills in Stuttgart, Ark., and they've been on strike for 15 weeks to get it. On the line, during a weeklong rain and snow storm, are (from left) Mrs. Hazel Sanders, local union secretary; Fred Wells, picket-line captain; and Roscoe Dabbs, a mill employe for 12 years. The rice mill strikers were given backing by CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe at Arkansas State CIO Council convention in Little Rock. (See Page 9.)

Snow And Sleet— A rigorous winter storm in Washington didn't chill the enthusiasm of this large group of women delegates to a nation CIO Political Action Committee Conference on Family Participation, shown leaving the Capitol after meeting with Sen. Douglas, Rep. Bolling and other members of Congress. Delegates were members or wives of members of CIO unions in several basic industries, talked over plans for the '54 campaign. From Sen. Douglas they got this advice: "Talk with your neighbors over the back fence." (See Page 7.)

Reuther Urges Ike Call Full Employment Parley

A VIGOROUS request that Pres. Eisenhower "call at the earliest practicable date a broad, representative conference to discuss ways and means of maintaining full production and full employment" was voiced last week by Walter P. Reuther.

Reuther, president of CIO and the CIO Auto Workers, addressed his plea to the White House as a follow-up to the UAW's recent "Keep America At Work" conference in Washington.

"In a very real sense," he said, "actual unemployment last month approximated 3,250,000."

This estimate, Reuther noted, includes the 1,850,000 officially listed as unemployed by the U. S. early in December, as well as the 700,0000 drop in the labor force and the past annual increase in the labor force of another 700,000 workers.

ALL OF THESE, Reuther noted in his letter to the President, "would have been working or looking for work had there been greater possibilities of finding jobs."

The UAW president gave Eisenhower a company-by-company breakdown of mounting job layoffs in the auto and agricultural implement industry and then said:

"We in the UAW-CIO have faith and confidence in the future of the American economy. We believe we must steer a course between panic, on the one hand, which could produce a psychological depression, and a do-nothing attitude, on the other hand, which could produce a real depression.

"Clearly, a recession has set in. So far the decline has been small overall, but its impact has been severe in some industries and areas, particularly in farm equipment. This decline is a warning that can be ignored only at our peril."

Reuther praised the President for his call, in his State-of-the-Union message, for "economic preparedness" and suggested a national conference of government, labor, industry, farm and other groups as the next step toward "developing a practical program for full employment."

Pretty Big Molehill

Henry Ford II last week proclaimed that unemployment in Detroit "doesn't amount to a hill of beans."

The Ford Motor Co. president even said there is "no cause for pessimism and gloom" over the nation's contracting economic situation.

Coincidentally, the Michigan Employment Security Commission gave these alarming figures:

Unemployment in Detroit climbed by 25,000 in just one week, to a total of 107,000. One out of every 13 workers in the auto city now is out of work.

For Michigan as a whole, layoffs climbed in a one-week period from 138,000 to 167,000 workers. And an MESC aide predicted another 92,000 auto workers will be laid off during the coming year.

Program For Full Employment

A LEGISLATIVE program for full employment was sent to Sec. of Labor Mitchell last week by CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In forwarding the proposals adopted by the UAW's recent "Keep America At Work" conference in Washington, Reuther said of the fast-climbing unemployment reports:

"Behind these figures are the families of the workers who do not have jobs and are bringing home no wages. Our concern is for these workers and their families and for what their lack of buying power can mean to jobs and business prospects throughout the economy."

Specific UAW proposals include:

Federal standards to increase and extend state unemployment benefits, a federal minimum wage of $1.25 hourly, expansion of social security to at least $200 a month, increase of personal income tax exemptions, and a "full equity" price program for farmers.

HEAVY job layoffs hit the auto industry in the Detroit area again last week, as the U. S. Labor Dept. reported another sharp increase in new claims for unemployment compensation.

Initial benefit claims — the most up to date guide to unemployment — climbed by 13.1% to a total of 467,509 in the week ended Jan. 9.

Continued claims climbed by 13.6% to a total of 1,889,448 —a level exceeded only once since the end of World War II.

Here is a digest of job layoff developments in the past week:

AUTO: "Slow sales" were blamed by CIO Auto Workers Local 190 for a one-week shutdown of assembly operations by Packard. Packard laid off 7500 workers, Chrysler another 2700 who were building Packard bodies. Chrysler, Hudson and other independent auto makers earlier cut back operations. Only General Motors and Ford are operating at usual early-season levels.

At South Bend, Ind., a strike vote move by UAW-CIO Local 5 forced Studebaker to delay its move to eliminate night shift. The plant has gone on a four-day week.

STEEL: The Aluminum Co. of America has laid off some 550 workers at two fabricating plants in Tennessee. In Schenectady, N. Y., American Locomotive Co. will lay off 574 shop workers during the next month, reflecting railroad cutbacks. Unemployment in Pittsburgh, according to Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.), has climbed by 26,000 in recent months.

RAILROADS: The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad fired another 5000 workers, on top of 6000 laid off early this month. Some 20% of B. & O. workers now are on the shelf.

FARM IMPLEMENT: At Rock Island, Ill.—one of the agricultural implement centers in the Quad Cities, where 20% of the working force has been idle—there was a small item of good news. The Farmall works of International Harvester Co., which laid off 1700 of its 4500 workers last summer, announced it would recall 400 workers. Another 150 will be recalled at the East Moline works.

Churchill Rejects Strike Vote Plea

PRIME MINISTER CHURCHILL of Great Britain last week turned down a fellow-Conservative's suggestion for a government-conducted strike vote before a walkout can be called—something along the lines of Pres. Eisenhower's proposed Taft-Hartley Act amendment.

"The government have no intention," Churchill told Parliament, "of departing from the established tradition in this country, under which the trade union movement is left to manage its own affairs to the fullest possible extent without government interference. I am advised that the disadvantages of your proposal would greatly outweigh any advantages."

Pre-strike votes under government auspices have been suggested before in Britain, but none has been enacted. management disputes. (See story on Page 11.)

WLB Experts Condemn Ike's T-H Strike Poll

By AL ZACK

THREE TOP OFFICIALS of the old National War Labor Board, all recognized as outstanding experts in the field of labor relations, last week protested against government-conducted strike votes.

In a statement sent to the chairmen of the House and Senate Labor Committees, the trio—William H. Davis, chairman of the old board; Jesse Freidin, its general counsel, and Theodore W. Kheel, its executive director—said such votes "would do more harm than good."

Their warning, based on their experience with similar votes conducted under the Smith-Connally Act, was published by the CIO as a public service in an advertisement in major newspapers in New York and Washington.

THE THREE experts also cited, as proof that such government votes were wrong, experience with government-conducted union shop votes under Taft-Hartley, later scrapped by the Congress, and the T-H provisions for "last-offer votes" in so-called national emergencies.

Latest proposal for government strike votes came from Pres. Eisenhower, who apparently called for pre-strike votes, and from Sen. Smith, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, who definitely called for post-strike votes.

The pre-strike proposal, CIO said, was an attempt to drive a wedge between the union and its leaders and the membership, while the Smith proposal was designed to do that and also operate as a strike-busting weapon.

The three former officials of the War Labor Board contended that government strike votes, whether taken before or after a walkout, would make it more difficult to settle industrial disputes.

THEY SAID workers construed such votes as a means of strengthening the bargaining power of their unions.

Pointing to election statistics under the Smith-Connally Act, the trio observed they resulted in overwhelming victories for unions.

The statement claimed that the votes acted as an incitation to strikes and created an atmosphere of conflict when the stress should have been on developing mutual good will.

Hearings

Senate committee hearings on Taft-Hartley amendments will begin Jan. 25, Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) announced last week.

Lead-off witness, Smith said, will be Sec. of Labor Mitchell. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg will testify as will other labor leaders.

Reuther Hits GOP Indecision As Layoffs Climb

THE EISENHOWER Administration "has not taken decisive, aggressive and realistic steps" to halt the spread of unemployment, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged last week.

Appearing on the NBC Television program, "Youth Wants to Know," Reuther expressed CIO's concern at the Administration's failure to act.

"We are drifting toward greater unemployment," he said, adding that "the kind of dynamic economy that we have cannot mark time. You either go forward or you slip backwards."

In response to questions from 30 teen-agers from Washington area high schools, Reuther called the unemployment problem "very troublesome."

"I personally believe," he said, "that finding an answer to how a free society can maintain full employment in peacetime, making the good things of life, is basic in America."

America's full productive power, geared to the unlimited needs of the American people, will mean "full employment and full production for everyone in peacetime," he continued.

Reuther said the Administration's recent extension of the Truman order, that military contracts be shifted to areas of high unemployment, was "a very sensible policy."

But, he pointed out, that "as soon as the government tries to do that, other people begin to protest and there is a great deal of rumbling in the Senate and the House of Representatives about taking work from one section and giving it to another section."

This rumbling, Reuther said, indicated "the basic problem." He went on:

"There ought to be enough work for every section. Every American city ought to have full employment and every American, able and willing to work, ought to have such an opportunity."

Reuther charged that "too many big businessmen in America are talking about recession or adjustments being inevitable." That, he said, "is what the Communists are saying," adding:

"The Communists are wrong and big businessmen who are singing that theme song are wrong. Depressions are not inevitable. They are man-made, and what man can make, he can also avoid making."

Answering questions about the Eisenhower proposals to amend the Taft-Hartley Act, Reuther noted "you cannot legislate good labor relations. Fundamentally, labor and management must recognize the fact that there is no legislative substitute for good faith at the bargaining table nor for the voluntary discharge of responsibility on the part of both labor and management."

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on At Issue, Martin Agronsky's television program, at 8 P. M. on Jan. 27. The program, to be telecast over ABC-TV, will originate in New York.

CIO Protests On Beeson

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week asked Sen. Smith (R. N.J.) to urge the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, of which he is chairman, to recommend against confirming the nomination of Albert C. Beeson for membership on the National Labor Relations Board.

"Confirmation of his appointment would leave this board . . . completely under industry domination," Reuther said in a wire pointing out that Beeson's testimony before the committee confirmed his industry point of view.

"The CIO is strongly opposed to the Administration's attempt to pack this quasi-judicial board with representatives of industry."

Ike's Old Age, Health Bills Held Inadequate

By GERVASE N. LOVE

MESSAGES sent by Pres. Eisenhower to Congress on social security and health "fall far short of meeting today's urgent needs," the CIO declared last week.

"They do not measure up to America's capacity for a better standard of living for all her people," said Joseph N. Curran, CIO vice president and chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee.

Noting that the President's proposals go beyond past GOP stands, he continued:

"They are clearly a response to the widespread public apprehension that Republican foes of social security would scuttle the present system; and to a strong, popular demand for thoroughgoing improvements in our social security system.

"It, of course, remains to be seen whether the President's words or the GOP voting pattern represents the new Republican look."

Anniversary

The 83d Congress received Pres. Eisenhower's views on social security only two days less than 19 years after the 74th Congress heard the plan first broached by Pres. Roosevelt.

One thing the President's message on social security did, however, was to repudiate the recommendation of a House subcommittee headed by Rep. Curtis (R. Kan.) to junk the concept that social security rights are earned rights, and that the system should be converted into the Chamber of Commerce's idea of a dole for all the aged.

"Despite shortcomings which can be corrected," Eisenhower told Congress, "this system is basically sound. It should remain as it has been, the cornerstone of the government's programs to promote the economic security of the individual."

Curran said the President's social security stand is "weak" in three important points which are covered in the CIO-supported Lehman-Dingell bill. They are:

- "The aged and survivors need higher benefits and greater improvements than in the Administration proposals, although these are very good as far as they go.

Jobless Pay Need

- "Persons with chronic illnesses or long-time disability need monthlly payments similar to old-age pensions as well as rehabilitation services. The Eisenhower bill would not give these people a penny in the way of insurance benefits until they are 65.
- "Persons who are temporarily sick or disabled need substantial cash benefits. The Lehman bill proposes benefits up to $45 a week. The Administration proposes nothing."

The CIO statement also criticized the President for not dealing "realistically" with unemployment compensation in spite of rapidly growing joblessness.

Essentially, it said, "he has passed the buck to the states, which have failed miserably in the past," and gives no consideration to distressed areas.

The need is for national legislation, it continued, providing adequate benefits for at least 39 weeks. No matter what the President wants, it added, legislatures dominated by business interests will not correct too-low benefits payable for too limited a period.

The Manion Inquiry

Curran, who also is president of the CIO Maritime Union, said the committee appointed by the Manion Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to study unemployment compensation is made up of people who have tried to wreck the present system and prevent its improvement.

"There is every reason," he added, "to expect its role to be that of a lynching committee."

Curran described the President's health message as "disappointing."

"He has taken a few faltering steps forward, but has failed to come to grips with the pressing problem of medical care in America," he said.

"Realistic observers agree that only a national health insurance plan, plus great expansion of hospitals and personnel, will make good medical care available to all at a reasonable price . . ."

Curran said the most discussed proposal is for reinsurance of private health insurance plans—"whatever that means."

"It apparently does not mean, as claimed, added federal money to cover those who can't afford to buy prepaid health care," he said, "and it doesn't suggest means to improve the quality or efficiency of health care plans, or provide preventive medicine and diagnostic health services.

"Its net result would probably be only to increase health care premiums and further inflate doctors' incomes."

Curran maintained that "good administration and sufficient appropriations are essential" to sound social insurance and health programs.

Slashes Hit

"Unfortunately," he concluded, "the past year has seen severe slashing of essential services by the Administration or Congress, such as hospital facilities for seamen, research on industrial health, and the functioning of the state employment services.

"Far from being satisfied with recent developments, we must be more insistent than ever on adequate legislation, appropriations, benefits and breadth of protection."

HEALTH PLAN HEARING—Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the CIO Steelworkers (right) greets Chairman Wolverton (R. N.J.) of House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee at hearing on health and medical care insurance plans. Several CIO witnesses testified, urged national health insurance as fundamental need for adequate protection.

What Ike Proposes—

Summaries of Pres. Eisenhower's proposals to Congress on social security and health and welfare legislation follow:

Social Security

- Retain the existing "insurance" principle.
- Cover 10 million additional people, mostly the self-employed but including more farm and domestic workers, and clergymen and state and local government employes voluntarily.
- Increase benefits for those now retired by $5 a month for individuals at the $25 minimum to $20.25 additional for a man and wife now at $127.50 maximum; for those who retire in the future, higher benefits based on a new formula increasing the maximum family benefit from $168.75 a month to $190.
- Permit pensioners to earn up to $1000 a year without losing benefits, instead of the present $75 a month.
- Increase the wage base on which worker and employer pay taxes from $3600 to $4200 a year, permitting higher benefits to 15 million workers on retirement.
- Eliminate earnings in the four lowest years from computation of benefits, thus allowing larger payments.
- Permit a worker totally disabled after a "substantial" number of years in covered employment to draw the same benefits he would have received when he became 65.

Health, Welfare

- Appropriation of $25 million for a "limited" federal reinsurance program to encourage nonprofit and private health insurance organizations to offer greater protection to more families, the fund to be retired from premiums.
- Increase aid to states and local communities to improve health and welfare services, including construction of hospitals for the chronically ill, clinics, and nursing and convalescent homes.
- Simplification of present "complex formulas" for federal grants to states for health, child welfare, rehabilitation and similar programs.
- Strengthen Public Health Service research activities, particularly in cancer, mental and heart illnesses, dental problems, arthritis and blindness.
- A greatly extended program of vocational rehabilitation intended to restore 660,000 disabled men and women to the country's labor force in the next five years.

Dr. Edward J. McCormick, American Medical Association president, attacked the reinsurance plan. Private companies can handle the problem without U. S. held, he said.

PRESENT health insurance plans do not adequately protect the American worker and his family against the economic hazards of sickness and hospitalization, CIO representatives told the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce last week.

The only exceptions, they said, come in the cases of a few group medical practice organizations.

The CIO spokesmen appeared before the committee, headed by Rep. Wolverton (D. N. J.), during hearings on proposed health and welfare legislation.

They included John W. Edelman, representing the National CIO Legislative Committee; Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers; Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs of the Rubber Workers; James Brindle, acting director of the Social Security Dept. of the Auto Workers, and Dr. Morris Brand, medical director of the Sidney Hillman Health Center of New York, operated jointly by the Clothing Workers and the industry.

EDELMAN, in a brief introductory statement, stressed the "widespread and deep uneasiness" among working people over constantly increasing costs of illness and health protection.

"Our final conclusion," he said, "is that national health insurance is the only finally adequate answer."

Abel, Childs and Brindle described the health and hospitalization plans covering most of the members of their respective unions. All expressed concern that whenever coverage is increased, under most of the plans, doctors and hospitals boost their fees. They made it clear that higher premium payments do not necessarily mean greater protection.

They were sharply critical of the medical profession. Abel described it as the chief stumbling block in the path of steel union and employer efforts to develop a better plan, and called it "one of the chief beneficiaries of our program."

"Until the federal government takes necessary and appropriate measures," he said, "many millions of Americans will go without necessary medical care."

Childs said the major weaknesses in present voluntary health programs were failure to cover "most" medical expenses; non-coverage during layoffs; uncontrolled hospital rates and physicians' fees, and lack of integration in health plans.

HE SUGGESTED that the committee examine integrated programs, such as the Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, which offer greater service for comparable cost.

Brindle said workers want "prepaid medical care programs which will provide preventive, diagnostic, curative and rehabilitative care, both inside and outside the hospital." The UAW opposes the use of federal funds to subsidize inadequate or insufficient programs, he added.

Brand recommended federal loans to labor-management health and welfare funds, consumer-sponsored groups, hospitals and other non-profit groups to set up group practice medical centers, and establishment of a coordinated and integrated national health insurance program.

Labor Dissents In Hospital Report

USE OF social security and unemployment compensation funds to further the spread of prepay hospitalization programs was proposed last week by the Commission on Financing Hospital Care.

Two labor members of the 34-man voluntary commission filed minority reports pointing out major weaknesses in the commission's conclusions.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education, said the weaknesses arose "from the failure of the commission to consider and recommend a comprehensive system of social insurance covering the costs of hospital care."

He detailed the two major weaknesses this way:

1. "Costs of belonging to voluntary prepayment plans would continue to be too high for a large segment of the population, including many who are gainfully employed;

2. "The alternative offered to the substantial group of persons not covered would involve a means test."

Even in the framework of the voluntary approach to financing hospital care, Ruttenberg said, the commission "placed too much emphasis on action at the community level."

Boris Shishkin, AFL representative on the commission, filed a separate dissent which stressed the same points.

The commission found that in most communities there were inadequate funds for hospitalization of those receiving public welfare and no provision for assisting those in marginal income groups.

To Ike; From Winnie

In that one-page news summary which White House aides are rumored to place before Pres. Eisenhower each morning, we hope someone included British Prime Minister Winston Churchill's statement about government strike votes.

Turning down a proposal similar to that of our President—now incorporated in the Smith Bill—Winnie said:

"The disadvantages . . . would greatly outweigh any advantages."

That's true in Britain, and it's true in America.

The Journal Says 'Shhh'

The Journal of Commerce—that distinguished if somewhat dull contemporary of ours—is taking The CIO News to task for talking too much about unemployment.

A front-page column in the Journal notes recent stories in this paper about the growing number of jobless—and concludes that this "unduly pessimistic news" can have "unfortunate consequences" if it makes potential buyers stop buying.

What we judge the Journal of Commerce is telling CIO members is: "Please, be quiet when you're laid off. It may make your boss gloomy to hear about it."

Well, Journal, we have an old-fashioned notion that spiralling unemployment is news; and if that be gloom, make the most of it.

Cup Of Coffee

Coffee prices are up again, and soon the 10c cup of coffee will be as dim a memory as the nickel cup of java (remember it?).

Soon we can expect to get some earthy advice on this food problem from Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

And, chances are, Ezra will hope to solve the problem by saying: "Let 'em drink tea."

Dividend Tax-Cuts

The House Ways & Means Committee has announced a proposal for tax cuts—affecting those dividend checks on corporation stocks.

The tax theory behind that step, presumably, is that a dollar unearned is a dollar saved.

'Eat Faster, If At All'

A New York Post story from Berlin reports that the Soviet trade unions—if you'll excuse the expression—have come up with a new scheme for their members.

The proposal is that factory workers will order their lunch from the canteen a day in advance. So, Tovarisch, your cabbage soup will be waiting for you at the lunch table; and, according to Soviet trade union statisticians, you can then reduce the lunch hour to about 15 minutes.

That should please the Kremlin boys. But we predict the winner of the Order of Malenkov will be the engineer who figures out how to keep the Russian workers working without any lunch at all.

None So Blind . . . !

In Other Words—

The Case For Congressional Reform

This discussion of "a very basic and important problem," the need for reform in congressional organization and procedures, is excerpted from a speech by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey to the Women's National Democratic Club in Washington.

By JAMES B. CAREY

AS THE CURTAIN rises on the 1954 session, we must once more face the fact that the rules and procedures of Congress are still antiquated and incapable of satisfying the will and needs of the majority of American people.

This is more than a problem for Congress—it deeply affects the liberties and welfare of every individual in the country. The creaking machinery of Congress is so appallingly inadequate for modern times that free representative government is in danger.

A well-established code of rules is essential to expedition and efficiency in lawmaking. Despite this need, parliamentary procedure practiced by the House and Senate are largely governed by time-worn precedents. Skillful manipulation can have far-reaching effects upon the content and pace of legislative policy-making.

Rule Changes Repealed

In January 1949 the House adopted the 21-Day Rule, designed to break the power of the Rules Committee to block legislation. This rule remained in effect throughout the 81st Congress but was replaced in 1951. In 1950, the House Appropriations Committee adopted the innovation of reporting all annual supply bills in a single package, but it returned in 1951 to the long-standing practice of reporting appropriation bills one at a time.

Notable steps toward congressional reorganization were taken in 1946 when Congress passed the LaFollette-Monroney Act. This streamlined and simplified the committee structure.

However, in streamlining the committee structure, this change further burdened the American labor movement. In the House, the Education and Labor Committees were merged into the Committee on Education and Labor. Rep. Barden, a former school teacher and lawyer in North Carolina who had served on the Education Committee, became ranking member of the newly-merged committee, and during the 82d Congress served as chairman.

His only competency and qualification was due to the merger and the fact that he had taught school for one year. He lays claim to being an expert on education. In practice, however, he is a bigoted former county judge with a definite anti-labor bias compounded by a lack of knowledge and sympathy for the problems of working men and women.

The present chairman is an investment banker. His qualifications are only a little less tenuous than Rep. Barden's.

The LaFollette-Monroney Committee was limited in the recommendations it could make. Several important provisions of the bill were lost in transit.

Seniority And Sectionalism

One was a better way of selecting committee chairmen than by seniority.

One of the most serious defects in the seniority system is that it tends to keep the leadership in the hands of the most reactionary members of Congress.

Another serious defect in the seniority system is that it gives overbalanced control to those sections of the country which regularly re-elect their members. These one-party states which do not reflect changes in public sentiment elect the same men year after year.

In the House, three states—Kansas, Michigan and Illinois—have 10 of the 19 standing committee chairmanships. These three states, with less than 12% of the population, control more than half the House committees.

The situation in the Senate is even more shocking. Seven of the 15 standing committees are under the chairmanship of senators representing seven states with a total population of seven million people. The city of New York has more people than these seven states, and yet they control close to half the Senate committees.

Due to the seniority rule we do not have representative government in Congress, instead, we have sectionalism which jeopardizes the enactment of decent legislation that will benefit all the people.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ARTER A YEAR in power in Washington the Eisenhower Administration is batting considerably less than .200 in the field of civil rights.

The President's personal intentions are admirable (he is represented as being indignant about the arrest of a Negro Air Force officer for rejecting a Jim Crow seat on an interstate bus).

Vice Pres. Nixon is presiding over a commission seeking to enforce the non-discrimination clauses in government contracts. Navy segregation is being reduced. Atty. Gen. Brownell told the Supreme Court it had full power to outlaw school segregation.

Still, there isn't much force and fire in the general GOP drive.

The GOP's Record On Civil Rights

The 1952 platform promised "federal legislation" in the field of employment discrimination and "federal action" against poll taxes and lynching. This was a big retreat from the 1944 platform criticizing Franklin D. Roosevelt for not "doing enough" with his wartime Fair Employment Practices Commission—which Republicans in Congress then promptly helped kill by refusing it further funds.

The GOP isn't keeping even its watered-down pledges. There has been no "action" on lynching and poll taxes, no "legislation" on fair employment.

Sen. Ives of New York, second-ranking Republican member of the Senate Labor Committee, tried an early start this year on a modified FEP bill co-sponsored by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). But Ives was abruptly and arbitrarily ordered to postpone hearings.

Smith Swings The Hatchet

Sen. Smith of New Jersey, GOP committee chairman, directed Ives to delay the hearings until Feb. 23. The reason is obvious: The Republican leadership doesn't want a fight this session forcing the senators to stand up and be counted on a civil rights issue.

If Smith had let Ives move promptly, a favorable report on the Ives-Humphrey bill would have been filed and the GOP would have been stuck with it, early in the session, when filibuster threats are relatively unimportant.

Smith, a kindly Christian gentleman, stopped this nonsense by making sure that Ives could not file a report until sometime in March—and subject to further delay by Smith in the full Labor Committee. Then the GOP policy makers can claim "there isn't time" to handle a civil rights issue, and a filibuster, because of the pressure of other business.

Behind The Job Crisis

A good many government economists, accustomed to studying trends, think that unemployment will shoot over the two million mark by February and may jump to five million by the end of the year.

They won't talk publicly, for quotation, because they don't want to be listed among the "self-appointed peddlers of gloom and doom" denounced by Mr. Eisenhower in his Jan. 4 speech. But neither do they believe the official Administration propaganda explaining away the serious drop in employment.

The official line is that we've had an "overtime" economy and a "forced-draft" economy, with more people in the civilian labor force than "should" have been there. (They had jobs but they "shouldn't" have.)

So instead of counting as unemployed every person who has lost a job, the Administration subtracts hundreds of thousands from its guesstimates of the size of the labor force. A lot of laid-off workers, it claims, don't want new jobs and are therefore not "unemployed."

The grim facts remain: unemployment, measured by the narrowest standard, leaped 400,000 from November to December to a total of 1,850,000; employment dropped by 1,200,000. The mill layoff rate jumped to 24 per 1000 workers in November, hirings are falling, the rate of voluntary quits is approaching its postwar low.

In December 1952, jobless workers claiming unemployment compensation stood at 760,000; last December the number had climbed to 1,390,000.

Those Fanciful Figures

Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.) is pretty careless about facts. Many months ago District of Columbia officials exposed as a myth and falsehood Republican claims that "peak traffic movement" into Washington was "22 minutes earlier" than under the Democrats. The implication was that lazy, good-for-nothing federal workers had been scared by the Republicans into an "honest day's work."

There's no traffic survey figure that supports this claim, either in the District of Columbia or in nearby Maryland and Virginia, where thousands of federal workers live. The official figures prove the claim isn't correct, and the figures have been widely publicized here. But a couple of weeks ago Bridges repeated the claim in a public speech in New England.

The Capital Hill Scene—

Congress Rumbles But GOP Plans To Expand Million-Dollar Probes

By MILTON PLUMB

CONFRONTED with the heaviest legislative workload in years, the second session of the 83rd Congress is continuing investigations at a record clip, while Republican leaders have taken steps to expand their scope and speed them up.

This is happening at a time when criticism—within and without Congress—of the wasteful duplication and undemocratic methods of some chairmen of congressional probes is at a peak.

Chairman LeCompte (R. Ia.) of the House Administration Committee has estimated that over $1 million has already been spent on investigations by the House alone. Nearly $1.25 million more also has been authorized for the second session through action taken last year.

Senate investigations usually cost about the same as House inquiries, which isn't surprising since committees of the two houses so frequently are investigating the same things. They often pay the same witnesses their fees and expenses for testifying to the same matters as they've already testified to before the committee of the other chamber.

They Want More Dough

The millions already voted, however, are not enough to satisfy the appetites of such indefatigable investigators in both houses as the McCarthys, the Jenners and the Veldes,

Neither Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), nor Rep. Velde (R. Ill.)—despite the headlines which the Republican press has given to their probing—has yet produced any new evidence that has convicted anyone of espionage or subversion. They're determined, however, as chairmen of their respective investigating committees, to go right on spending more and more of the taxpayers' money.

Velde has just asked the House to underwrite its Un-American Activities Committee, which he heads, for another year at a rate that will make all previous chairmen look like pikers. He got $300,000 last year, wants the same again for 1954. That would put him $100,000 ahead of the record $500,000 the Un-American group spent in the 82nd Congress.

And McCarthy, who originally was talking about upping to $250,000 or even $350,000 the funds his Senate Investigating subcommittee will spend, now says he'll be satisfied to spend $200,000 in 1954 for a total of $400,000 within two years.

McCarthy Gets More Power

McCarthy's request has been approved by the full Senate Government Operations Committee, of which he is also the chairman. It now must be approved by the Senate Rules Committee and and then by the Senate itself, usually a mere formality.

Approval by the Rules group of McCarthy's request was made considerably more certain when the Republican conference voted him a seat on that committee. A unit of the same committee investigated McCarthy himself in the last Congress and produced a subcommittee report raising serious questions about the Wisconsin Senator's fitness to hold office.

—Yardley in Baltimore Sun

"You'll Be Eating 'Warmed Over Spy' For A Long Time To Come."

—Herblock in Washington Post

"What Does He Think We Are—Legislators?"

Meanwhile, McCarthy's investigating subcommittee is functioning with no Democratic members. All three members from the minority party resigned last July in protest against "one-man rule" by McCarthy.

In spite of criticism, McCarthy says he intends to keep on operating "roughly the same way."

At least some members of the Senate, however, want to take the "roughness" out of McCarthy's probing. McCarthy has sought to check them by raising questions about the motives and loyalty of the Senators behind the contemplated moves.

The Usual Smear

When Sen. McClellan (D. Ark.), for example, said he may introduce legislation to create a joint Senate-House committee to end overlapping investigations of communism, McCarthy commented:

"I don't think he will be the tool of elements in his own party that do not want to expose corruption."

And concerning a threatened move by Sen. Ellender (D. La.) and others to reduce funds for his investigations, McCarthy said that "would give the country a chance to have a better picture of just what both parties stand for."

Despite these threats, a growing number of members of Congress—realizing that "circus tactics" are undermining the important investigative function of Congress—are moving to curb abuses. And a number of Republicans are among them.

Rep. Frelinghuysen (R. N. J.) and Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.) both introduced bills this session to create new investigative machinery, and Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.) renewed a drive for adpotion of a bill to protect the rights of witnesses.

In general, these measures follow a pattern of similar bills introduced last year by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), Rep. Cellar (D. N. Y.), Rep. Roosevelt (D. N. Y.) and others.

Worse Than King George III

Cellar last week again decried the current "hectoring, bulldozing and bullying" of witnesses. He charged that McCarthy has "done more harm to the U. S. than George III ever did."

Investigations by the 83rd Congress have cost considerably more than the money counted in LeCompte's total of over $1 million in appropriations because a number of globe-trotting committees also used "blank check" foreign currency last year.

The latter money, put up by foreign countries to match U. S. aid, is available without limit to touring committees and no accounting is required by law. Since there were many foreign "junkets" last summer, the amount might easily run into additional hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Despite the growing outcry over mounting costs, it's still a good bet that the Republican 83rd Congress won't seriously curtail expenditures.

After all, 1954 is an election year and the GOP found in the last session that "scare" headlines about "warmed-over spy" distracted attention from the fact that the Congress—too busy probing—never managed to find time to do the job for which it was elected—namely, the enactment of laws for the good of the people.

Connecticut CIO Roasts GOP On Spit

CONVENTION SCENES—At Connecticut CIO convention, State Sen. Pat Ward denounces GOP for raising state sales tax while cutting taxes on insurance companies. Ward is CIO Auto Workers Region 9-A PAC director. In center, Estelle Lott, Council Union Label Committee secretary, beams approval at ACWA union label in Chester Bowles' suit. Bowles, former ambassador and governor, warned U. S. depression would bring "stark terror" abroad. At right, Gov. John Lodge says "your state Administration is trying to operate on the same basis as the national Administration." Judging from expressions, Council Sec.-Treas. John Driscoll (left) and Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff weren't enthusiastic.

By ED LASHMAN

A DETAILED indictment of Republican state and national Administrations was translated into a comprehensive political action program at the 16th Connecticut CIO convention in Bridgeport.

A 50% increase in the state sales tax was laid at the door of the Republican-controlled Legislature.

Concern was voiced that the "business-dominated" GOP national Administration neither "could nor would" act effectively to "stem the rising tide of unemployment."

Chester Bowles, former Ambassador to India and once Connecticut's Governor, drew whisties, cheers and applause as he told the delegates "we've got to develop our expanding economy because even the beginnings of a recession would be far more serious than any depressions of the past."

BOWLES SAID the strength of the American labor movement "with wage rates set by contract" has tended to help keep our economy going.

But he pointed out that unless America makes sure "the economic pie grows to take care of a 30 million increase in population in the next 10 years, our standard of living will decrease 20 to 25%."

In the field of international relations, Bowles drew a picture of Asia which showed "colonialism worrying its people more than Communism." He warned that we must "build a better bridge between America and the half of the world that lives in Asia."

COUNCIL Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff, sharply criticized Pres. Eisenhower's "broken promises and fumbling," pointed out that as "in every other period of Republican national Administration, the reins of power have been in the hands of the special interests."

Sec.-Treas. John Driscoll of the 90,000-member Council called for a special legislative session to increase unemployment compensation benefits, and warned that "the rising tide of unemployment likely will get worse."

He noted that with over $200 million in the unemployment compensation reserve fund, "there should be no good reason for the Republicans now in control of both houses at Hartford to refuse liberalizing benefits and eligibility requirements."

A prediction that 1954 would see unemployment increase to five million was voiced by CIO Regional Dir. Hugh Thompson. He charged that the Eisenhower Administration's proposed changes to the Taft-Hartley Act would amount to "government strikebreaking" in the event of such unemployment.

A. A. Ribicoff, former Democratic congressman, made a flat prediction of a Democratic victory in the coming congressional elections.

THE REPORT of the Council's legislative agent, Mrs. Margaret Driscoll, was labelled "Cause for Comfort and Concern." The report spelled out the CIO's victories during the 1953 legislative session in improvements in civil rights and unemployment and workmen's compensation legislation. But it also laid the blame on Gov. Lodge and the Republicans for "discriminatory" tax increases.

Rep. Dodd, Connecticut's only Democrat in Washington, and a former FBI agent, accused the Eisenhower Administration of attempting "a violent invasion of our fundamental civil rights" by attempting to "legalize wiretapping."

He called wire-tapping one of the worst instruments of every police state.

An appeal for bigger financial contributions for political action was made by Massachusetts CIO Council Pres. William J. Belanger. And CIO Textile Workers PAC Dir. Al Barkan accused the Administration of being "determined to weaken and destroy the labor movement."

THE 400 delegates adopted a detailed program of political action, including a registration campaign designed to get 350,000 industrial workers qualified to vote.

Sviridoff and Driscoll were reelected without opposition. Daniel J. Gallagher was unopposed for election as assistant president in place of Ferdinand Sylvia, who retired.

Solidarity

Solidarity was the result when AFL Hatters made an appeal for contributions to strikers walking the picket lines outside the Hat Corp. of America, Norwalk, Conn., plant for 28 weeks.

Connecticut CIO Convention delegates contributed $322.34 and pledged support for "unfair" listing of company brands by Alex Malbin of the Danbury Hatters who made the appeal.

Belabored Republicans Get Their Day In Court

THE REPUBLICANS, who were the subject of heavy attack by officers, delegates and guest speakers at the Connecticut CIO Council Convention, got a chance to have their say in court.

Unhorsed

Connecticut's Republican Gov. John Lodge and the State CIO Council are pretty much on opposite sides of the political fence.

But Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff, when introducing the Governor to the convention, made it clear that the Governor's recent fall from his horse while riding in company with a CIO official was only "coincidence and not an expression of opinion."

As Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff put it: "How much more democratic can an organization be than to offer its own rostrum to its detractors?"

GOP Gov. John Lodge said "I want you to feel that your state government is trying to operate on the same principles as our national Administration with respect to every large question involving the good of the people."

THE GOVERNOR stressed the role the state has been playing in keeping industry in the state while at the same time working to attract new industry. He said his Administration has been keeping watch on reports of "industrial slackening" and that it "seemed only temporary, but we're not going to assume that."

Lodge said that Connecticut has three times the national average of per capita defense production, and predicted such orders alone would keep up the state's employment level.

Another foe of the State CIO, GOP Rep. Morano, had been invited to speak but declined.

REPUBLICAN State Sen. George A. Saden, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, who was introduced as "one of the fairest men in the legislature," entered a defense of the Republican record on labor legislation.

He said the record of the Republicans represented "on the whole an excellent effort to meet the demands of labor as far as reasonably possible."

Atlanta Parley Opens Series Of CIO Regional Meetings

LEADERS of the CIO from eight southern States met with national staff members in Atlanta, Ga., last week-end in the first of the annual series of regional conferences of CIO councils.

Arranged by the CIO Councils Dept., the meeting brought together officers of state, county and city councils, regional directors and staff members of international unions, as well as some rank-and-file participants.

Other conferences scheduled follow:

Chicago, Jan. 29-30, Regions 7, 8 and 9, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 5-6, Regions 3 and 6, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio and West Virginia.

New York City, Feb. 19-20, Regions 1 and 2, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine, New York and New Jersey.

St. Louis, Feb. 26-27, Regions 10 and 11, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Mississippi.

San Francisco, Mar. 5-6, Region 13, California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona and Nevada.

Denver, Mar. 12-13, Region 12, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Montana.

Statehood Bill Gets Approval

A combined bill granting statehood to both Alaska and Hawaii was approved by the Senate Interior Committee. The Administration had favored statehood only for the island territory.

"TALK WITH your neighbors over the back fence," Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) advised a group of delegates from CIO-PAC Conference on Family Participation. These women delegates came from CIO unions in the steel, packinghouse, glass and chemical industries. Douglas urged bringing politics down to the everyday level.

Women PAC Workers Visit Capitol Hill

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

POLITICS is not for men only, Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) told a group of CIO women delegates from the CIO Political Action Committee's Conference on Family Participation who visited the Capitol to see how their government works.

It's important to bring political discussion down to the level of everyday living, he said, and that's where women can do a good job.

"Even working class wives have considerable leisure these days, especially after the kids grow up," he said. "You can talk with your neighbors over the back fence in a relaxed way," he said, and get over important information about candidates and issues they should help support.

SEN. SPARKMAN (D. Ala.) and several representatives also talked briefly to the women who packed a room at the Senate Office Building after their sight-seeing trip. Sparkman told the women that he and Sen. Douglas were "fraternity brothers"—that is, both are up for re-election.

Speaking of the Administration's "new program," Sparkman warned against "opposing just for the sake of opposing." He advised waiting until we see what they do, and then come in with sharp shooting if necessary.

Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.), on the other hand, felt that "in spite of pious words," the Republican Administration was committed to maintaining the status quo. "But a standing-still program is not good enough," Bolling said.

"A STANDING-STILL program is not good enough," Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.), standing at right, told PAC women workers. With him at table (from left) are Reps. Lanham (D. Ga.) and Holifield (D. Calif.) and Max Kampelman, assistant to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). Bolling stressed need for positive programs to keep full employment.

WHAT'S NEEDED to spur women to more interest in politics? That was one of the questions up for discussion at this panel session during CIO-PAC Conference on Family Participation. One problem is apathy by the men, some delegates said. Leading the discussion is Olga Madar (standing), recreation director of the UAW.

WOMEN VOTERS tend to agree with their husband's political preference, according to this chart on the 1952 presidential campaign which got a lot of attention from two delegates with PAC Staff Rep. Esther Murray (center).

CWA Seeks Better Health Insurance

WAGE BARGAINING plans of the CIO Communications Workers were reviewed by the CWA Executive Board, meeting all last week in Atlanta, with company-paid hospital insurance set as a major goal.

CWA represents 300,000 workers, with the largest portion employed by Bell System operating and manufacturing companies. The 1954 contract talks get under way shortly.

Major national bargaining goals of the union were set at last year's CWA convention in San Francisco. At last week's Atlanta session, they were brought into shape for the forthcoming negotiations.

Along with the hospital-surgical insurance improvements, other CWA goals will be basic wage increases, pension improvements, elimination of the presently sizable geographical wage differentials, shorter progression schedules, and job upgrading.

The CWA board also acted on a number of legislative issues, condemning Pres. Eisenhower's Taft-Hartley amendment proposals as "a share and a mockery" which would "undermine American trade unionism."

The Administration's flexible farm price support program was criticized as falling "far short" of Eisenhower's 1952 campaign promises, while the Bricker Amendment curbing the President's treaty-making powers was opposed.

CWA supported Rep. Celler's (D. N. Y.) bill for "a more just reapportionment" of congressional districts.

CIO Members Sign Report Urging Congress Pay Hike

"GROSSLY inadequate" salaries of members of Congress, now $12,500 annually plus $2500 in expenses, should be raised to $27,500, an 18-member fact-finding commission has reported.

At the same time it recommended salaries of $40,000 and "adequate" expenses for the vice president and speaker of the House, who now get $30,000 and $10,000 for expenses, and increases for all members of the federal-judiciary.

The commission which made the proposals was headed by Bernard G. Segal, Philadelphia lawyer, and included CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers.

It also urged that members of Congress be allowed the actual cost of six round trips per year between their homes and Washington. They now get 20c a mile for one round trip and have to pay for the rest themselves.

Strong Union Plans Drafted By GCEOC

PLANS to strengthen existing locals and extend organization to many new groups were initiated last week by the top committee of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

They met in Washington with CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe and his assistants, R. J. Thomas and Oral Garrison.

A series of regional conferences will be held to enlist the support and cooperation of CIO councils, local unions and the staffs of affiliated international unions. These groups will be asked to assist the GCEOC-CIO in its campaigns in already established areas.

The all-day meeting of the committee was followed by a two-day session of the GCEOC staff and officers. Problems of servicing, obtaining favorable legislation, new organizing and dues collections were discussed and methods proposed for solving them.

The committee is composed of Anthony J. Federoff, chairman; John L. Yancey, assistant chairman; Milton Murray, secretary-treasurer; Riffe; Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers; Joseph Bogan; Patrick J. Brady; Michael Di Pirro; John Evans; Frank Feloney; Pres. Joseph Fisher of the CIO Utility Workers; Carey Haigler, Ewald Sandner, and Hilda Siff.

Ohio Special Session Asked To Aid Jobless

POINTING to a weekly climb in the number of Ohio jobless for the past 15 weeks, eight Democratic state senators have called for another special session of the Legislature to take anti-recession action.

The entire Senate minority contingent joined in presentation of the resolution to Gov. Frank Lausche and the current special session as the number of Ohio unemployed mounted above 115,000.

The resolution scorched the Republican majority for having failed to adequately liberalize unemployment compensation in the past session, praised the Gov. ernor for his efforts towards this end and called for a top-level citizens' committee to "watchdog" recession and depression signs and advise the state. Republicans were invited to join the request for another special session.

LAST AUGUST, when the General Session adjourned, there were only 27,000 claims filed with the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation. Today's figures, the Senate group asserts, do not indicate the true unemployment situation in Ohio. "Many more are unemployed who, for a variety of reasons, do not or cannot file for unemployment compensation," it said.

Republicans were scored for what was termed "woefully inadequate" treatment of the unemployed in the past session. "The 100th General Assembly gave unemployed workers a paltry $2 increase while giving Ohio employers a reduction in unemployment compensation tax contributions . . . of approximately $40 million per year," the Senators said.

They asked the Senate to go on record requesting the Governor to call for a special session "to liberalize the unemployment compensation law and to consider such other legislation necessary to develop a stand-by works program to minimize unemployment . . ."

Sen. King (D. Toledo) said there were 15,000 on the compensation rolls of his city and that technicalities make for slow payments. He insisted the Legislature had a real duty to act immediately in heading off disaster.

Quote

Spokesman for the reactionary bloc in the Ohio Senate is Sen. Ferguson (R. Cambridge). Attacking a resolution to liberalize jobless pay, he rumbled:

"Unemployment compensation is nothing but a dole . . . the dole led Great Britain down the road to ruin . . . and some of these crackpots want to lead us down the same road."

HoldermanToBeNamed To Jersey Labor Post

CARL Holderman, president of the New Jersey CIO Council and a veteran of 35 years in the labor movement, is slated for appointment as State Commissioner of Labor & Industry in the cabinet of Gov. Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey, it was said last week.

He would be the first labor representative ever to hold the $18,000 a year post.

Holderman was secretary-treasurer of the State CIO from its organization in 1937 until 1945, and has been its president since.

He also heads the New Jersey CIO Political Action Committee, which campaigned vigorously for Meyner and other Democratic candidates in last November's election.

CARL HOLDERMAN

IN THE POST for which he is slated, Holderman would have direction of nine major divisions of the State government, all of direct concern to working men and women.

These include the State Mediation Board and the Migrant Labor Board, and sub-departments which deal with employment security, workmen's compensation, disability benefits and labor generally.

Holderman was born 60 years ago in Hornell, N. Y. He joined the AFL Hosiery Workers in 1918, held local and regional union offices and in 1928 became an international vice president. The same year he was named a member of the executive board of the New Jersey Federation of Labor.

WHILE director of his union's New York-New Jersey district in 1937, he was drafted by the late Sidney Hillman to serve as regional director for the Textile Workers Organizing Committee. Two years later, when the TWOC became the Textile Workers Union of America, he was elected a vice president.

He has held a large number of public offices and committee posts, and is a member or official of many state and national organizations.

Reuther Witness Repudiates Story

Donald Ritchie, "key witness" in the attempted murder of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in 1948, last week repudiated a statement in which he named four persons in the shooting plot.

Ritchie, who collected a $5000 award from the CIO Auto Workers, of which Reuther also is president, for telling his original story to police, declared he had "no knowledge or information as to who were the person or persons involved" in the shooting.

The "witness" is awaiting extradition from Canada. Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien in Detroit said he was "not surprised" at the repudiation, and added that "he's a co-defendant now."

Six Months Later, TWUA Certified At Silk Mills

SIX MONTHS after an election, and more than three weeks after a strike started, the National Labor Relations Board last week certified the CIO Textile Workers as bargaining agent for employes of the Federal Silk Mills, Williamsport, Md.

The certification was issued after the board rejected the complaint of David Goetz, owner of the plant, that the union "influenced" the vote last June by paying $3 to each of 15 workers who use their autos in car pools. The payment was for time and expenses in getting the workers to the voting place.

Pat Ellington, TWUA-CIO international representative at Hagerstown, Md., was making efforts to set up a meeting with Goetz, who had said he was closing the plant.

The firm makes considerable parachute tape for the federal government, but on non-governmental orders has been paying wages which average 79c an hour. The walkout started Dec. 28, when a series of firings was topped off by Goetz's failure to pay the usual Christmas bonus.

Arkansas CIO Meets—

Riffe Sees Drive For Shorter Work Week

By PAUL HARDING

"A SHORTER work day and a shorter work week if American industry is producing more than can be consumed." This was the demand CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe put before the 16th annual convention of the Arkansas State CIO Council meeting in Little Rock.

Riffe mentioned the possibility of a six-hour day, but quickly added that he did not think industry is producing more than is needed.

To enforce such demands and alleviate the serious unemployment problem, he said, great numbers of the 40 million unorganized workers of America must be persuaded to organize. He called for a goal of "A Million More In 54"—new CIO members.

Riffe urged cooperation with CIO of "teachers, farmers and all other groups having the same aspirations as we do." He pointed out that farmers "were the first to get in trouble at the start of the great depression of the early 30's, and farmers are having a tough time now."

HE VOICED an appeal to Arkansas farmers to give their support to the members of the CIO Brewery Workers Union who have been on strike against two Stuttgart, Ark., rice mills for 15 weeks in efforts to secure union contracts.

Political action came in for a major share of attention with Richard T. Leonard, special assistant to CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, reviewing recent developments in Washington, particularly Pres. Eisenhower's labor message to Congress.

To implement its intensive PAC and registration program the council set up a series of "Defend Labor Rallies" to be held in 14 localities during January and February.

Specialists in politics and government will be the speakers at the meetings.

NO CANDIDATES for office were endorsed by the convention. However, a swipe was taken at Sen. John L. McClellan, up for election this year, for his support of the tidelands oil give-away.

Gov. Cherry was criticized because he has "made no preparations, no planning to meet the rising situation where unemployment now exists and where it will continue to be widespread throughout the state."

Officers of the Council, reelected without opposition, are George H. Ellison, Glass Workers, Ft. Smith, president; Lewis H. Sanders, Steelworkers, Benton, vice president; and Charles M. Catton, Chemical Workers, Ft. Smith, secretary-treasurer.

Rice Mill Strikers Get CIO Backing

THE CIO has renewed its appeal to organized labor and its friends to support the strike of the CIO Brewery Workers against two Stuttgart, Ark., rice mills.

The appeal was made by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe at the annual convention in Little Rock of the Arkansas State CIO Council.

Although the mill managements have brought in numbers of strikebreakers, the picket lines hold firm, as a convention resolution said, "through 15 weeks of blistering late summer heat and the cold rains, ice and snow of winter."

THE STRUCK PLANTS are the Wonder Rice Mill and the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association. Their products are retailed under the following brand names:

Sultana, Sunnyfield, Richlieu, Tohoco, Tropical, Good Treat, Oversea Chico, Adolphus, Comet, Show Boat, Riceland, Green Shield, Perfection, Monogram, Lotus, Goldcoast, Osceola, Wonder, Peacock and Cash Saver.

Riffe lashed out against the type of anti-labor attorney used by the rice mills in their negotiations. The attorney is John Daggett of Marianna, Ark., who says he is the author of Arkansas' anti-union legislation.

Senate GOP Ignores Ike, Pushes For Bricker Curb

By WILLIAM MILLIS

A HEAD-ON collision between Pres. Eisenhower and the Republican command in the Senate is building up fast, less than a month after Congress returned to Washington.

The issue is the Bricker Amendment—the proposed constitutional amendment designed to put a ball-and-chain around any President in the conduct of international relations.

Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee last week sent a telegram to all members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reflecting the CIO's conviction that the proposal would turn back the clock and "stultify" the U. S. role in foreign affairs.

"WE STRONGLY oppose the Bricker Amendment and any compromise that would alter the present treaty system," wired Potofsky, who also is president of the Clothing Workers. "This amendment would cripple our leadership of the free world and leave us helplessly adrift in the tide of world events."

On-again, off-again negotiations designed to avert a GOP split over the Bricker proposition have been under way ever since Eisenhower delivered his State-of-the-Union message. There have been frequent reports of a "compromise." None of them jelled, and the Ohio Republican's measure—cosigned in its original form by a large majority of the Senate—is the next important measure on the floor.

THE PRESIDENT, at his first press conference after Congress returned, restated his strong opposition to the Bricker proposal.

Beyond that, according to the New York Times, he has said he is ready to stake his leadership on the issue, perhaps in an appeal to the people.

But the Republican leader in the Senate, Sen. Knowland (Calif.), apparently missed the cue. He said the proposed amendment would be brought up after the vote on the St. Lawrence Seaway, and "we will go on with it to the end."

What the Bricker Amendment would do is reduce the power of the White House, expand the power of Congress in the field of international affairs.

—Herblock in The Washington Post

"Hail To The Chief! Fire Away!"

In varying forms, it would give both houses of Congress ratification power over international agreements, and possibly even extend that power to the 48 state legislatures—thus returning the U. S. to the chaotic situation existing before the Constitution was adopted.

Such organizations as the American Veterans Committee and the League of Women Voters have opposed the measure, with the League saying it is "not only unnecessary but . . . dangerous for the future security of our country."

One of the targets of the Bricker Amendment's backers is the Intl. Labor Organization, the only world agency in which labor has an equal voice with industry and government. And one goal is to hamstring the efforts of this and other United Nations agencies to expand the individual rights and improve the material well-being of peoples throughout the world.

Factors behind the Bricker move include these:

- The assertion by Congress, developing ever since World War II, of legislative supremacy over the executive branch, extended now to the President's powers in the field of foreign affairs.
- An expression of high-pressure isolationism and an ill-concealed move to curb U. S. participation in the UN.
- A weapon for special interest groups—thus, the American Medical Association backs Bricker's amendment because UN includes the World Health Organization and other groups interested in medical care.
- A club for "hate" groups on the fringes of McCarthyism. According to Columnist Drew Pearson, among the lobbyists for the amendment are Gerald L. K. Smith's Christian Nationalists and Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council.

BACK when the Republicans were campaigning for the presidency—and preaching against "the Yalta treaties"—such GOP leaders as John Foster Dulles backed the Bricker Amendment.

Now that the GOP is in office, and John Foster Dulles is charged with the conduct of the State Dept., there's regret over past oratory. The Constitution, with its plain statement on the power of the Senate to ratify treaties, has been rediscovered.

The Republican leadership in the Senate, however, appears in 1954 to be still waging the campaigns of 1952, determined in Knowland's words to "go on with it to the end."

CIO Urges Dulles To Seek Release Of Franco Victim

A PLEA that the U. S. attempt to secure the release of Manuel Robles-Arangis, Basque union leader imprisoned in Spain, has been made to Sec. of State Dulles by Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee.

Arangis, former president of the Catholic National Federation of Basque Workers and during the Spanish Republic a member of Parliament, returned to Spain in 1952 in the belief that he was protected by an amnesty for participants in the Spanish Civil War, Potofsky wrote Dulles.

In spite of the fact that he had engaged "in no activities warranting prosecution," he was arrested last June.

In his letter to Dulles, Potofsky, who also is president of the CIO Clothing Workers, enclosed a copy of a certificate Arangis received in 1945 from Pres.—then General—Eisenhower expressing "the gratitude and appreciation of the American people for gallant service in assisting the escape of Allied soldiers" while he was in exile in France.

"The CIO has consistently pressed our government to make representations to the Franco regime," Potofsky wrote, "urging the earliest return of elementary human and trade union rights to the Spanish people.

"We believe this case affords an excellent occasion for our government to use its good offices to attempt to right a shocking unjustice by urging the release of Senor Arangis."

St. Lawrence Seaway Gets Senate Okay

THE ST. LAWRENCE River Seaway, long favored by the CIO, won its first stage of congressional approval in 20 years of effort last week when the Senate approved it by a vote of 51 to 33.

It now goes to the House, which has never even voted on it during the stormy debates of past years. The Public Works Committee, which must pass on it, includes several strong opponents.

Passage of the bill in the Senate followed a week of almost continuous debate. Twenty-five Democrats, the same number of Republicans and the lone Independent, Sen. Morse (Ore.) supported it. In opposition were 18 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

Plans call for a 27-foot deep waterway from the Atlantic Ocean to the Great Lakes. The U. S. would join with Canada in building only that part in the International Rapids of the St. Lawrence.

'No Ships, No Jobs—' Unions Urge Strong Action By Ike

FACE COMMON PROBLEMS—Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union (left) and Pres. Harry Lundeberg of the AFL Seafarers' Union confer at a meeting of 13 CIO, AFL and independent unions in Washington. The conference was held to act on problems resulting from a sharp decline in U. S. shipping.

By FRED ROSS

"THE BOTTOM has dropped out of shipping. There are no ships, no jobs and an Administration with no shipping policy."

That was how Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union summed up the problems facing the maritime union conference which was held at Washington last week.

Thirteen CIO, AFL and independent maritime unions with a total membership of 130,000 participated in the meeting.

"This is the first time in our knowledge that representatives of all the legitimate maritime unions have attended one meeting," said Curran and Harry Lundeberg, president of the AFL Seafarers' Union.

The 50 delegates met to draft a program for lifting the shipping industry from its "deep depression."

CURRAN TOLD a news conference that only 1388 ships were in use today out of 5000 in operation at the end of World War II. A total of 657 have been taken out of service since February 1952, with a loss of 33,000 jobs for seamen.

Since 1939, coastal shipping has declined from 400 ships to 50, with a job loss of 14,000.

The seamen's leaders found that the answer to the problem would require prompt action by the Eisenhower Administration, which apparently has been blissfully unaware of the shipping depression.

A summary of the ship union's program for action by the government is in the adjoining story.

A PROMISE of cooperation of the ship owners with the unions in pressing vigorously for the revival of American shipping resulted from the conference.

It was announced that a conference committee and a dozen ship owners would meet Jan. 28. The conference committee will include Pres. H. L. Daggett of of the CIO Marine Engineers, and Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee.

The CIO delegates at the meeting included Pres. W. R. Steinberg of the CIO Radio Association, and following NMU officers: Curran, Sec. Neal Hanley, Treas. M. Hedley Stone and Vice Pres. Hulbert B. Warner.

In addition to the CIO and AFL unions already listed, unions participating in the conference included: Sailors Union of the Pacific, Canadian Seafarers, Marine Firemen, Masters, Mates & Pilots, Brotherhood of Marine Engineers, Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific, Radio Officers Union, Marine Cooks & Stewards, all AFL; Brotherhood of Marine Officers of the Mine Workers, and the Intl. Transportworkers Federation.

The conference elected MFOW Pres. Vincent J. Malone permanent chairman.

Ship Union Goals In Summary

Highlights of the program adopted by the maritime union conference in Washington were:

- Developing coastal shipping through federal subsidies for ship construction, chartering of government-owned vessels to companies on a basis related to profits, and U. S. development of special-purpose ships, docks and facilities.
- Government action to place all American-owned, foreign flag ships under the U. S. flag and to keep American flag vessels from being transferred to foreign nations unless such transfers are in the interest of the U. S. Merchant Marine.
- Amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act to legalize all union hiring halls, deny collective bargaining rights to Communist-controlled unions, to expel from unions narcotic peddlers and addicts, and Communists.
- Investigation of the Interstate Commerce Commission for permitting railroads to engage in unfair competition with coastwise and intercoastal shipping.
- Transportation of all U. S. military and foreign-aid cargoes on American flag ships.
- Continuing medical care now given merchant seamen in U. S. marine hospitals—which the Eisenhower Administration has threatened to close—and payment to the hospitals of penalties imposed on seamen for infringement of rules, which now go to ship operators.

Mitchell Confirmed

The Senate unanimously confirmed appointment of Sec. of Labor Mitchell, who had been serving under a recess appointment by Pres. Eisenhower. Also confirmed was Samuel M. Brownell as Commissioner of Education.

GOP Plans Tax Savings—For 'Big Fellows' First

THE REPUBLICAN-controlled House Ways & Means Committee has gone to work writing a new tax bill and—to nobody's surprise—it's passing out the savings to the big fellows first.

First major vote was to reduce Uncle Sam's tax take on corporation dividends by a total of $1 billion over a three year period, by slicing the tax on dividends received by individual taxpayers.

This bonanza for top-income bracket taxpayers was voted 18 to 6 along party lines, and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) charged the Republicans are "primarily interested in helping the big fellow."

On another party-line vote, the committee later turned down a proposal which would have eased the tax load on workers and low-income families. Rejected was a move to increase individual tax exemptions from $600 to $700. The vote was 15 to 10.

The committee, by another party-line vote of 15 to 10, defeated Rep. Forand's (D. R.I.) proposal to subject dividend payments to a withholding tax—just like your wages are.

CIO has supported such a move to close up one of the numerous present loopholes which are reducing U. S. revenues, while workers and middle-income groups carry an unfair share of the tax load.

The committee also widened another tax loophole which CIO has suggested should be closed, by extending the "split income" provision now affecting a married couple to all persons who qualify as the head of a household. This will take $50 millions off the government's revenue.

ALL TOLD, the committee says it is aiming at a $1.5 billion tax cut measure.

The dividend tax provision, according to Labor Press Associated, provides varying exemptions over a three year period from any tax on portions of such income and then deductions of from 5% to 15% from the actual tax bill. Some 1.5 million stockholders, it was estimated, ultimately would be free of any tax on dividend income, while 2.5 million others would get large tax cuts.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

THE BIG NEWS this month—and it's really big—is the sharp crack in the prices of household appliances and television sets. The price-cutting at retail levels is now spreading to manufacturers as they seek to clear their warehouses of excess inventories.

Some real buys are available at this time for families who avoided buying major appliances and TV sets during the Christmas season when prices are always highest. Prices of rugs, some furniture, plumbing and heating equipment also have been reduced.

Temporarily at least, some major appliances are selling at the lowest prices in years.

Here are tips on these and other buying opportunities:

MAJOR APPLIANCES: The manufacturer of Crosley and Bendix appliances has made a sharp price cut on washers, electric dryers, refrigerators and deep freezers in a temporary sale to clear warehouse inventories. The result is some unusually low prices for the next few weeks at least.

Prices have been cut on two Bendix automatic washers (also sold under the Crosley name as the same washers). One is the model with the flexible plastic liner which squeezes the wash damp-dry. The regular list price was $200; the new sale price is $160. With the 20-25% discount many dealers give, this washer can now be bought for as little as $120-$132. It is a compact, square-shaped washer that cleans clothes well, but does not damp-dry as well as most other automatics or as well as wringer machines.

The other Bendix on sale is the fully automatic, Model LWF, reduced from $300 to $228. It should be available for $180-$185 at the retail discounts so widespread these days.

Also on sale is the well-made Bendix (Crosley) electric dryer, which formerly listed at $240, and now has a sale price of $170, less the potential retail discount, which should bring it down to about $135. That would make it even $25 less than the next lowest-priced electric dryer, the Kenmore, which has been reduced to about the $160 mark.

However, if you have gas available, you should still consider that while a gas dryer will cost you more, it is noticeably less expensive to operate. In some areas the gas dryer will save a family of four about $50 a year in operating costs. Get a comparison of costs in your locality from your utility company.

The Crosley (Bendix) refrigerators have also been sharply reduced and should spur more competition among other manufacturers and dealers. Only one of the much-desired automatic-defrost models has been reduced. This is a huge 13.8 cubic-foot capacity which listed at $520 and now lists at $367.

The real significance of this open price-cutting by these big manufacturers is that the makers have increased prices several times since 1950, their inventories have piled up and now some at least are getting ready to trim their tags down to the public's buying ability.

TELEVISION SETS: More manufacturers are following the price cuts previously reported here on Westinghouse and Emerson sets. Now Philco too offers a 21-inch table model at $180 to match Emerson's price. It had listed at $200. RCA too has cut the tag on its 21-inch table model; now $200. These are all what are called full-quality sets; that is, with 22 or more tubes. They give better reception in fringe areas than the so-called "metropolitan" receivers which may have as few as 16-18 tubes.

Going Up

The price of coffee, America's favorite beverage, was moving higher and higher last week, both to housewives and restaurants. General Foods and Standard Brands, two of the largest roasters, jumped restaurant blends 5c a pound.

Major food chains boosted prices of national brands of coffee 3c to $1.03 a pound. Bag-packed brands did not go up in price—they were marked up three weeks ago.

Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.) predicted that "if this keeps up, we'll be drinking such watered-down versions of coffee it won't be worthy of the name."

Justice Dept. Makes A Deal, Drops A&P Anti-Trust Case

THE JUSTICE Dept., now bossed by Republican Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, last week concluded a deal with the giant A&P food chain and dropped an anti-trust action begun in 1949 during the Truman Administration.

The original action had followed conviction of A&P in 1946, when it was found guilty of violating the criminal anti-trust act and was fined $175,000. Subsequently, the Justice Dept. brought suit to break the big trust into seven independently-owned competing chains.

The consent decree, entered last week, ends this attempt to halt monopoly operation, which will be allowed to continue. A&P agreed, however, to dissolve the Atlantic Commission Co., its produce buying subsidiary.

With this subsidiary, A&P had been accused of working both sides of the street—buying for A&P at the same time it was selling to competitors.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

LAST WEEK R. J. Thomas and I visited across the border, in Canada, where we met with Brothers A. R. Mosher and Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Congress of Labor. Our Canadian brothers are making considerable organizational progress, as that fine country opens more and more to industrialization.

We also sat down and talked with CIO Chemical Workers Pres. Elwood Swisher. Pres. Swisher and the CCL have been discussing the various problems of affiliation of the Chemical Workers with their organization, and the situation is very good.

From Canada, I made an equally pleasant journey to the convention of the Arkansas State CIO Council. Our Arkansas unions more than make up in trade union spirit for their lack of overwhelming numbers. Arkansas CIO members have a first rate political action program going. They also have a fine legislative program to lay before the people of their state, and the energy and drive to carry on a fine educational campaign to back it up.

BROTHER T. M. McCORMICK, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Oil Workers, reports several significant victories: Gulf Oil Corp., Port Arthur, Tex.; Suburban Gas Co. of Virginia, Portsmouth, Va.; Hedrick & Lyman Gasoline Co., Pure Oil Products Co., and Tide Water Associated Oil Co., Ventura, Cal.

Another good report of organizational and wage gains comes from Brother Gus Faber, secretary-teasuer of the Transport Workers. TWU Local 700, Philadelphia, won a 17c wage package after a two-day strike at the Sley System. The local also organized the Racquet Garage parking lots and won identical benefits for these new workers. TWU Local 281, Philadelphia, won 10c and 15c boosts, a five-day 40-hour week for drivers and a guarantee of 20 hours a month overtime for employes of the Modern Fuel & Heat Co. TWU Local 206. New Orleans, La., won a 10c wage increase package for employes of A. Centineo Co.

The CIO Auto Workers won an important victory in a representation election conducted at the Oakville, Ont., assembly plant of the Ford Motor Co. by the Ontario Labor Relations Board.

OUR COUNCIL PEOPLE are looking forward to the series of conferences calling together delegates from the various regions to deliberate on ways and means of putting CIO's program into working effect.

The first of these conferences was held Jan. 22, in Atlanta. The next will be in Chicago. Assistant Dir. of Councils Carl A. McPeak has set up a tough schedule of hard work for these meetings, but it is work that is necessary if we are to prepare ourselves for the difficult jobs that lie ahead, The various departments and committees of CIO are cooperating to bring to these conferences facts and material to assist the councils in their work. I hope to have more complete reports of the conferences as they develop.

Labor's World

Wage Increases Asked By Millions In Britain

MILLIONS of British workers are demanding wage increases in the face of widespread employer opposition that already has resulted in walkouts and threats of further strikes.

Pay boosts have been demanded by the Confederation of Shipbuilding & Engineering Unions, which has three million members and which has called 24-hour strikes in thousands of individual plants; the National Union of Mineworkers, with 400,000 members; three railroad unions representing more than 500,000 workers; 10 unions representing one million building trades workers, and by the Communist-dominated Electrical Trades Union, which last Monday followed up a number of small one-day walkouts with a 24-hour strike of 30,000 members in atomic energy plants and export industries.

The Shipbuilding & Engineering Union, whose members average about $27.40 a week including overtime, and the railroad workers are asking 15% increases. Employers of the former refuse any pay hike, the rail unions are negotiating with the British Transport Commission, after rejecting as "niggardly" an arbitration award of 56c a week.

The electrical industry union, where workers average about $25.80 a week including overtime, is asking 4c an hour.

An important factor in all negotiations is England's export market, which is in stiff competition with other countries. But additional factors influence the workers—chief among them increasing productivity resulting in profits which they maintain should yield higher wages, and the continued rise in food costs.

Norway

The Norwegian Federation of Labor and the Clothing Workers Union have signed a two year agreement with two employers' groups for a cut in the work week from 48 to 42½ hours and, eventually, to 40 hours.

The agreement, an experiment, is based on increased production in two Bergen factories accomplished with the aid of U. S. specialists. Piece rates will be unchanged.

UAW Gains In Aircraft Pact

Some 6500 CIO Auto Workers last week gained a 11.5c an hour package in a new contract with Bell Aircraft Corp. at Tonawanda, N. Y. A 5c hourly wage increase and a no-strike clause were included in the agreement.

Carey Says Smith's T-H Bill Aids Bosses In Wage Parleys

REPUBLICAN proposals for government strike votes will create "an atmosphere highly favorable to management and extremely detrimental" to the IUE-CIO in negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse, scheduled to begin shortly.

That was the warning last week by IUE Pres. James B. Carey in a letter to Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee and author of a proposal for government strike votes to be held after a strike was in progress.

Carey told Smith the IUE was "shocked" by the proposal, especially the stipulation that every eligible worker who failed to vote would be counted as having voted against the union. Such action, said Carey, was not "consonant with the democratic process."

"Without any reflection on your senatorial integrity," wrote Carey, who is also secretary-treasurer of the CIO, "we are none the less convinced that the strike ballot proposal is a triumph for GE's anti-labor and union-busting propaganda."

In forthcoming negotiations, he said, companies "will be far less amenable to sincere, genuine collective bargaining." Knowing GE, Carey continued, "we know that management will exploit these pending restrictions by resisting, more than ever before, any real economic concessions to its employes."

IUE Reports New Plant Election Gains

SEVERAL organizational gains by the CIO Electrical Workers in Canada and the U. S. were reported last week.

Workers at the General Electric plant at St. Malo, near Quebec City, quit the AFL Electrical Workers and affiliated with IUE-CIO.

The other IUE-CIO victory in Canada was at another GE plant —in Montreal—where 125 salaried workers followed 800 production workers into the union. A local union charter has been issued to the salaried group, and provincial authorities were petitioned for certification.

AT METUCHEN, N. J., Westinghouse salaried workers beat off an attempt of the Independent Federation of Westinghouse Workers to expand and voted to retain IUE-CIO as collective bargaining agent. IUE-CIO actually increased its membership by gaining bargaining rights by technicians, draftsmen and model shop employes.

The vote in a run-off was IUE-CIO 112, FIWU 93.

In another National Labor Relations Board election, workers at the GE commercial shop at Auburn, N. Y., voted overwhelmingly for IUE-CIO over no union.

Ike Catches Up With His Mail— 11 Months Late

THAT PROMISED GOP "efficiency in government" apparently still has to be applied to the White House, which took precisely 11 months to reply to a letter from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey last week said that way back on Jan. 20, 1953, he had resigned from the Public Advisory Board for Mutual Security, a unit of what now is the Foreign Operations Administration.

It wasn't until Dec. 19, 1953, that Pres. Eisenhower accepted the resignation.

In a letter last week to the President, Carey asked that the record show he hadn't served on the board during the past year "and was not a party to the dilution of the purposes of this (Mutual Security) Act during this period."

Full Employment Drive Set By Wisconsin CIO

By ROBERT TREUER

A PROGRAM calling for concerted action at local levels to create full employment was approved by 397 delegates from Wisconsin's 200 CIO local unions at a rally in Milwaukee last week, sponsored by the State CIO Council.

Meeting only a full day after the State Employment Service reported more Wisconsinites out of work than at any time since 1936, the rally drew unexpectedly large representation. Mayors of eight cities hard hit by unemployment and several members of the Legislature sat in on the proceedings.

The plan delegates endorsed was prepared by the State CIO. It is based on the formation of CIO committees in every community charged with working with officials of different governmental units to develop full employment programs.

Delegates to the conference listed many projects that would quickly put men and women to work. They began with urgently needed schools, other public institutions, roads and housing—and went on from there.

Gov. Walter Kohler—who rejected an invitation to attend on the ground that the situation is "not serious" and who last year turned a deaf ear to State CIO warnings that joblessness was becoming dangerous—will be visited by a seven-man committee selected by the delegates.

The committee will give him a full set of resolutions adopted at the rally in the hope, as State CIO Pres. Charles M. Schultz said, "that now, at last, he will do something besides express his faith in the Eisenhower Administration's forthcoming actions."

Mayor Frank P. Zeidler of Milwaukee opened the all-day session with a call for the guaranteed annual wage "as a safeguard against this economic havoc."

He pointed out that under Republican rule, no funds are available to cities to finance programs providing large-scale emploment. Milwaukee needs a lot of things, he added, citing expressways, civil defense projects, roads and other improvements pigeonholed because of lack of federal support and cooperation.

Other speakers were Pres. Kenneth Hones, Wisconsin Farmers Union; Assemblyman Isaac Coggs, Milwaukee; Everett M. Kassalow, National CIO associate director of research, and Brendan Sexton, CIO Auto Workers education director.

"We have a program, and a good one," Schlutz said in summing up the rally. "We also have the people to push it in their cities, counties and districts.

"What we need are political leaders with the human understanding and the moral fortitude to carry out this program. If the incumbents won't do it, let's elect some people who will."

Job Toll At 18-Year High In Wisconsin

How bad is bad in Wisconsin?

According to the official Wisconsin State Employment Service, unemployment at week's end was higher than at any time since 1936.

An estimated 54,000 were drawing unemployment compensation, but more people than that were out of jobs. Closest available official estimates stood at 65,000 to 70,000, but these figures are conservative.

Hardest hit are the farm equipment plants (Massey-Harris, J. I. Case and others) in the Racine-Kenosha area. Woodworkers report several hundred laid off in northern Wisconsin—nearly 50% of their membership in the state.

Breweries have laid off over 3400 men — about half the working force—cutting seniority to 11 years in some plants.

Steel foundries and processing plants are slowing down, as are fabricating and machine plants and rubber processing plants.

"HARRASSED HOUSEWIFE"—That's what Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.) called herself, sipping a cup of coffee as the price of java went to $1.03 a pound and more in groceries, brought on protests in Congress. One coffee roaster blamed Brazilian speculators, while Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) asked U. S. curb on coffee exchanges.

Labor Dept. Holds Own In Ike's New Budget

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN promises a year and a half ago to "build up" the Labor Dept. and to strengthen its services to American working men and women remained on the shelf last week in the wake of Pres. Eisenhower's new budget message to Congress.

The President's "necessity" budget for the 1955 fiscal year amounted to $65.5 billion. And the total for the Labor Dept. was increased from $300,446,000 at the present time to $340,635,000 for the coming year.

But all of this $40 million increase went to one field—administration and payment of unemployment compensation.

FEDERAL government grants to the states for operation of unemployment compensation benefits—which were whacked last year, forcing a closing of offices—was increased by $24.9 million. And an additional $15.8 million was voted for GI unemployment benefits to Korean War veterans.

The Wage & Hour Div. was trimmed again, from $6,250,000 to $6,233,000, while the Bureau of Labor Statistics appropriation was increased slightly from $5,345,000 to $5,396,000.

The President's total budget was reduced $5.3 billion from the present fiscal year. District defense and foreign aid would take $44.8 billion out of the $65.5 billion total. A deficit of $2.9 billion was estimated, prompting an Eisenhower request for no further general tax cuts.

GOP Warned By Lehman In Rules Fight

STALLING BY the GOP leadership on amending the Senate Rules to make it possible to stop filibusters will be made an issue in the 1954 campaigns unless there is action this session, Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) warned Majority Leader Knowland last week.

Lehman rose to support efforts by Sens. Anderson (D. N.M.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.) to get Republican leadership to schedule debate on a Republican-sponsored rules measure. Buried since the last session, the bill would permit a vote of two-thirds of the Senate members present to cut off debate.

Present rules require a two-thirds majority of the entire Senate membership—64 votes—before a filibuster can be broken. Anderson, and other liberal Democratic Senators, have advocated reducing this requirement to a simple majority vote.

ANDERSON reminded GOP leaders that, during last year's debate, the late Majority Leader Taft had promised that the question of a change in the rules would be considered in due course. Five months later the proposed amendment cleared the Rules Committee, but it was never scheduled for debate.

Declaring that "I expect to be standing here next January with an increasing number of my colleagues in the united demand to exercise our right to pass upon the rules," Lehman added:

"I believe, Mr. President, that the day is not long off when the shackles of minority control, forged by the present rules—the filibuster rule—will be cast aside. The people are demanding—and they will demand even more loudly—that we put an end to this disgraceful practice."

CIO Challenges Dewey To Fight Against Slump

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council has called on Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to lead the eastern region in an anti-depression program.

The Council's Executive Board urged Dewey to call on the Legislature to increase the State minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and to memorialize Congress to make this the national minimum.

"The way to combat a slump in the economy," said Council Pres. Louis Hollander, "is to act to expand consumer purchasing power. A necessary first step is to raise the minimum wage to at least $1.25 an hour.

"New York should take the lead in establishing this minimum and in extending it to the whole nation."

Hollander pointed to the quick reaction of Southern congressmen against Pres. Eisenhower's plan to channel some defense contracts to high unemployment areas.

"THE PEOPLE of New York and neighboring states have a right to expect their interests to be protected as vigorously by our representatives as are those of the South by theirs," he said.

The Council's board urged Dewey to call a conference of New England and Middle Atlantic State Governors to chart regional defense against "sweatshop competition" of Southern states.

The Governor also was called on to mobilize sentiment among New York's congressional delegation on the question and to use his influence with Eisenhower for cooperation from the Administration.

N. Y. CIO Plans PAC Broadcasts

The New York State CIO will open a series of political education broadcasts with a speech by Rep. Roosevelt (D. N. Y.), scheduled for Jan. 27.

Butte Locals Get Charters

THE CIO Steelworkers have issued charters to two Butte, Mont., locals which recently voted to bolt from the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and affiliate with the CIO unions.

A charter as USA-CIO Local 6001 went to Butte Miners Local 1, in the Anaconda Copper Co. mines, and one as USA-CIO Local 6002 to the Anaconda Mill & Smeltermen's local.

Mexico Irate On U.S. Migrant Policy

A NEW "go it alone" program dealing with the admission of Mexican agricultural workers was adopted by the Eisenhower Administration last week.

The action immediately had these adverse effects:

1. It united the people of Mexico against the U. S. Reports indicate that opposition to the U. S. action comes from all segments of the nation, ranging from the Confederation of Chambers of Commerce, the man in the street, and the usually pro-U. S. labor groups all the way to the traditionally anti-U. S. groups on the right and left.

2. Mexican farm hands coming to the U. S. were stripped of wage and other protections guaranteed them under the treaty which expired Jan. 15. As a result Mexican farm organizations warned that no worker valuing his citizenship should leave Mexico for work in the U. S.

3. U. S. farmers in the southwest are threatened with an inadequate supply of Mexican labor for the first time in years. Mexico tightened border patrols by ordering additional troops to the area in an effort to halt the flood of illegal "wetbacks" estimated to number two million a year.

The U. S. decision brought a prompt protest from Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the CIO California Industrial Union Council.

"This kind of action would be like throwing the border wide open to a heavy influx of 'wetbacks'," he said, "and would worsen considerably the problems we already face."

Negotiations for a new treaty with Mexico broke down when the U. S. objected to Mexico's insistence on continuing to exercise her right to protect her citizens from exploitation through supervising work contracts and blacklisting employers who break their agreements.

CIO Attacks Super T-H

Reuther Charges Ike Broke Promises

TELEVISION and press cameramen were busy as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther opened labor's case against Administration proposals for Taft-Hartley amendments before the Senate Labor Committee last week. Reuther assailed "sweet-sounding" campaign promises of Pres. Eisenhower which have been translated in the Smith Bill into new anti-labor curbs which would make Taft-Hartley "even worse than it is." (See Page 3.)

CIO Replies To GOP Chief's Attack

The following statement was issued by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in reply to an attack on CIO by Republican National Chairman Leonard Hall:

MR. HALL'S POLITICAL name-calling does not alarm us, nor does it serve as an answer to America's economic problems. The inescapable facts, contained in the Administration's own statistics, are these:

Unemployment is rising; the farmer's income is diminishing; America's march toward a better living standard has not only halted, it has retreated.

Even more dangerous than the present adverse economic condition is the Administration's refusal to acknowledge its existence and its failure to provide a positive program which will provide our citizens with greater purchasing power—the most necessary prop to a skidding economy.

Mr. Hall falsely says that we in CIO ignored or camouflaged the unemployment of 1949 as part of a political plot. The record proves this statement as ridiculous as the current GOP party-line that all who face up to the economic facts of life are unpatriotic.

Mr. Hall should know that at no time—no matter who might be President—will the CIO assume the posture of an economic ostrich, hoping that thus "hard times" will disappear.

We in CIO have demonstrated a deep and abiding faith in America. We are convinced that America can provide jobs and a decent standard of living for all who work on the farms, in the factories or in the stores and offices. We can—once again—have prosperity.

Artificial optimism, on the one hand, or panic on the other, will not assure a realistic economic policy for the country. What we want is a realistic economic policy.

We would like to call Mr. Hall's attention to the business papers and magazines which are full of statements by businessmen that the economy is slowing down. For instance, the president of the U. S. Steel Corp., the nation's largest steel producer, says his company's operations will be down to 80% of capacity during the next six months.

When industrial leaders say that, it's apparently all right with the name callers. When we point out that this economic slow down will mean loss of jobs, loss of purchasing power and hardship, we are called "left-wingers," "egg-heads" and "gloom and doom boys," and a host of other names.

Name calling won't solve our economic ills. Constructive programs will.

We've now had name-calling by Speaker Martin and Chairman Hall. What we haven't had is an Administration program to protect the farm economy, provide jobs, and rebuild prosperity.

We think it time we had one.

CIO Protests Ike's Stand On Minimum Pay Hike

FAILURE of Pres. Eisenhower to act now to seek an increase in the 75c-an-hour minimum wage was strongly condemned by CIO last week, in critical comment on the President's Economic Message to Congress.

CIO said the Eisenhower message "offers a program of assistance to big business" only and "little to cheer about" for the nation's more than two million unemployed.

Chairman Emil Rieve of the CIO Economic Policy Committee said "the program being offered by the Administration sounds like a slightly modernized version of Andy Mellon—help the country by helping business and the upper bracket families."

Eisenhower in his message said only that "at the proper time" he would recommend an unspecified increase in wage minimum under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

At the last National CIO convention, Sec. of Labor Mitchell said he would move at once for such improvements.

Press dispatches reported that Arthur Burns, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, prevailed on Eisenhower to delete any immediate wage recommendation.

The message—in contrast to its general confidence of "prosperity based on peace"—said minimum wage increases should be made "at a time when economic activity can take them in stride."

TO WHICH the CIO economic statement asked:

"If things are as good as the report says they are at present, just why isn't this an appropriate time to get at the minimum wage amendments?"

Eisenhower's message also contained what CIO called "kind words about the inadequacy of present unemployment compensation benefits." The President's recommendation was that states raise their unemployment benefits to equal "at least half" of normal earnings.

CIO said that the President's restatement of his proposals in the fields of social security, housing and farm price support were of a "paltry and petty nature," contrasting sharply with the $2.8 billion tax bonanza offered big business and top-income bracket groups.

A portion of the statement:

Instead of a program of concrete action to meet the needs of jobless citizens, the President offers a program of assistance to business. Instead of facing up to the problem, the report pretends it doesn't exist, or that, if it exists at all, it is only a "corrective process."

NOWHERE does the report meet the true obligation of the Employment Act of 1946 by indicating the actual levels of employment and income which will be needed in the period ahead to meet the requirements of a full employment, expanding economy.

"To unleash new incentives of economic growth" a tax bonanza of $2.8 billion is being thrown to American business and the less than 1% of American families who own the lion's share of corporation stock. More sympathetic adjustments on capital gains taxes are also promised to upper income recipients.

For the other 40-odd million American families, these incentives will have to be "unleashed" by a total of $300 million in minor tax adjustments which are included in the program.

Shades Of Good Ol' Paul Bunyan!

FROM THE Paul Bunyan country of the Pacific Northwest, where the rugged unionism of the CIO Woodworkers predominates in the rough and tough lumbering industry, there comes this report which illustrates how CIO unionism is good for all sorts and conditions of men.

Local 1-118 of the IWA-CIO has a member who's "a prince of a fellow"—and there's no fooling about that.

He's Prince Alexandre of Liechtenstein, formally, but to his fellow workers at the British Columbia Forest Products mill, he's just plain "Alex."

Alex fills the Paul Bunyan tradition. He's a husky six-feet, one-inch tall and 24. A Labor Press Associated report from Victoria, B. C., said he finds his work as a lumber piler "hard but interesting."

Alex went to work in the Canadian mill after studying forestry in Vienna.

And Lichtenstein, according to the atlas, is a tiny feudal principality tucked away between Austria and Switzerland.

Employment Drops By One Million

EMPLOYMENT in the United States dropped by almost one million workers in just one month's period, the Commerce Dept. revealed late last week. In its monthly survey of the job situation, the department said:

1. The total civilian labor force as of Jan. 9 was 59.8 million persons. This was a drop in workers on the job or seeking employment by almost one million persons in a 30 day period. The mid-December labor force figure was 60.7 million.

2. Officially counted unemployment now numbers 2,360,000, an increase in one month of 510,000.

3. The official estimate on the labor force now has dropped below 60 million persons for the first time in years.

EARLIER, CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther protested "juggling of the facts" on unemployment, in an effort to get government contracts to job crisis areas in Michigan and elsewhere.

Reuther spoke after meeting with Defense Mobilizer Arthur S. Flemming to point out the shortcomings in the system which the Labor Dept. is using to classify unemployment "distress" areas. Such areas are eligible for additional defense contracts.

Communities in which 6% or more of the work force are unemployed are supposed to be placed in Category 4 — "distress" — status. Yet, Detroit, Battle Creek, Port Huron, the Quad Cities and other communities with unemployment of 7% or more still have not been placed in this classification, Reuther pointed out.

He said that his discussion with Flemming revealed that what the Labor Dept. had done in classifying these communities is to "interpret" and "adjust" the official state unemployment figures.

The Figures

Latest unemployment figures issued by the Labor Dept. showed contradictory trends.

New claims for unemployment compensation aren't rising as rapidly as in recent weeks. The total for the week ending Jan. 16 was 444,800 new claims. This was 24,100 fewer than the previous week.

But continued claims totalled 1,951,900—the highest since May 1950. This was an increase of 67,105 or 3.6% from the previous week.

The government also said there now is "substantial" unemployment (6% or more of the labor force) in 20 major and 31 smaller industrial centers.

Martin Challenged To Debate Reuther

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week challenged House Speaker Martin (R.) to debate the nation's economic situation.

Appearing on Martin Agronsky's television program on ABC, Reuther noted that the GOP leader had dismissed recent reports of mounting unemployment as "gloom and doom."

Freer Trade Program Urged By McDonald

STRONG support for a liberalized foreign trade policy was voiced by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers in a series of pin-point dissents to the program of minor concessions proposed by the President's Foreign Economic Policy Commission.

McDonald, only labor man among the seven public representatives on the commission headed by Clarence B. Randall, chairman of the board of the Inland Steel Co., followed basic CIO policy—aimed at benefiting all Americans—in his refusal to concur in most of the group's recommendations.

He made a strong but unsuccessful fight to win approval for a provision that the federal government has a responsibility to help American communities, workers and industries dislocated by an increase in imports made possible by trade concessions. His arguments were good enough to win the sympathy, but not the votes, of six members of the commission.

The USA-CIO president particularly opposed the commission's conclusion that the law requiring the use of U. S. vessels for shipments financed by loans and grants of the government and its agencies be repealed. A strong merchant marine, he maintained, is essential to an adequate defense.

THE COMMISSION'S recommendations also won the dissent of far rightwing Republican members on most points on the ground that they would promote free trade.

The proposals included:

- Extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for three years, and longer if concessions by other nations during this period justify. The President would be authorized to cut tariffs by 5% each year, or 15% by the third year.
- Authorization for the President, without a reciprocal agreement, to cut tariffs by 50% under Jan. 1, 1945, levels (most of them are that low now).
- Authorization for the President to waive "Buy American" statutes when countries give U.S. bidders equal treatment with their own citizens.
- Greater diplomatic effort to develop a more hospitable climate abroad for private U. S. investment capital.
- Approval of greater trade in peaceful goods between East and West Europe, but no relaxation of the embargo on trade with Red China and North Korea.
- Encouragement to free countries to make their money again convertible into the currency of other free nations.

One of the committee's recommendations suggested that U. S. negotiators for reciprocal trade pacts refuse to approve tariff concessions on products made by sweatshop workers receiving substandard wages.

Textile Wage Order Is Restored

THE DEMOCRATIC Truman Administration's order raising the minimum wage on government contracts in the woolen and worsted industry from $1.05 to $1.20 an hour was finally reinstated last week by the Republican Eisenhower Administration.

As soon as it becomes effective, said John Chupka, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Textile Workers and head of its woolen and worsted division, "we will re-petition for our original request" for $1.265 an hour, a cost of living escalator and fringe benefits.

The order was first issued, under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, by the late Sec. of Labor Tobin in the final days of the Truman Administration. Former Sec. of Labor Durkin, early in the Eisenhower Administration, suspended it.

Last week's action by Sec. of Labor Mitchell means that the order will become effective after 30 days unless opponents submit objections to Mitchell or take the matter to court. The latter course was followed by some 200 manufacturers, mostly in the South, after another order boosted the minimum in the cotton and synthetic textiles industry from 87c to $1 an hour. The matter is still in the courts.

The woolen and worsted industry employes about 112,000 workers, the great bulk of whom are paid more than $1.20. Mitchell said its actual effect on wages would be "negligible."

Chupka said the TWU-CIO was "relieved" that the "realistic revision" went through at last.

"Now we're back where we were in December 1952," he added. "It is our earnest hope that the industry . . . will accept the Secretary's decision rather than challenge it in the courts.

"The fact that two secretaries of labor, of different political parties, after two separate hearings, have come to an identical conclusion seems to us the strongest possible evidence that the higher figure is fully justified."

Big Steel Sets Record

RECORD SALES and the best earnings for any year since 1917 were reported last week by the U. S. Steel Corp.

Sales for 1953 totalled $3.8 billion, a $700 million increase, while net profits were $222,735,656. Earnings were at a rate of $7.56 a share, compared with $4.54 the previous year.

Chrysler Does It Again

The Chrysler Corp., which had already laid off some employes of its New Castle, Ind., plant, last week announced furloughs for an additional 500 to 600.

Reuther Leads Drive Against Smith Bill

Partial text of Reuther T-H statement, pictures and related stories are on Pages 6 and 7.

By AL ZACK

PRES. EISENHOWER'S Administration "has defaulted on campaign promises to bring justice and fairness" into the Taft-Hartley Act, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged last week.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee, Reuther observed that despite the President's "sweet-sounding" campaign talk, his proposed amendments would make Taft-Hartley "even worse than it is."

In a two-hour session before the committee, Reuther outlined a six-point program of changes needed to bring Taft-Hartley into the boundaries of fairness and justice the President had set during the campaign.

Promises Recalled

Later, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg presented a detailed, section-by-section analysis of the bill introduced by Chairman Smith (R. N.J.), which purports to implement the Eisenhower recommendations.

"Pres. Eisenhower as a candidate," Reuther recalled, "often called for the redress of labor's grievances against the Taft-Hartley Act. At no time, to my recollection or research, did the President of the official spokesmen of his party propose to worsen Taft-Hartley."

But, said the CIO president, "the President's mesage (on Taft-Hartley revision) and this bill (the Smith Bill) would make Taft-Hartley even worse than it is."

CIO, he said, is still prepared to support sincere attempts to eliminate Taft-Hartley's ills by realistic amendments.

"I would be less than frank," he continued, "if I did not say to this committee that we in the CIO are deeply disappointed with the President's message to Congress on Taft-Hartley, and with this bill, which we assume is intended to implement this message.

"This bill does not make the substantial changes in the Taft-Hartley Act which are necessary to bring justice and fairness into the law."

'We Like It Even Less'

In his detailed, point-by-point breakdown of the Smith Bill, Goldberg noted that Taft-Hartley does "violence" to the basic principles underlying sound labor-management relations. The Smith Bill, he said, compounds that violence and "we like it even less" than Taft-Hartley.

The CIO general counsel outlined to the committee the basic principles which—"should govern in the field of labor relations." He said:

"I believe that workers have the right to join unions of their own choosing and that they should be protected and encouraged in the exercise of that right. I believe that if a majority of the workers in a plant do join a union, the employer should be required to bargain collectively with that union as to wages, hours and working conditions.

"I believe that in this collective bargaining the employer and the union should be left free to work out their own terms of agreement. I believe the employer and the union—not the government—should write the collective bargaining agreement.

"Finally, while I don't like strikes, I believe that the right to strike is fundamental to collective bargaining and to preservation of a free society.

"Our quarrel with Taft-Hartley is that many of the changes it made in the Wagner Act violate these principles, despite Taft-Hartley's verbal homage to them."

Government Interference

Reuther recalled the specific campaign speeches by Pres. Eisenhower in which he called for elimination of undue government interference in free collective bargaining.

But, he noted, the Smith Bill does not do this.

"Rather," he said, "it adds to government interference in labor-management affairs in a manner that will hamper rather than encourage good faith collective bargaining and the reasonable settlement of disputes.

"This is notably true in the strike-breaking vote provision in this bill."

Governmental interference, he said, was compounded by the Eisenhower proposal further to restrict the area of collective bargaining during the terms of a labor agreement.

Under Taft-Hartley, Reuther said, the NLRB has given employers virtually carte blanche to intimidate their workers from joining unions. Quoting from Eisenhower's message calling the right of free speech fundamental, Reuther said:

"These are high-sounding phrases." But, he added, the Smith Bill would "provide simply that an employer brain-washing session shall not be the basis for setting aside an election. A situation already heavily and unfairly weighted in favor of the employer would be made even more one-sided."

"Let me say right here," Reuther observed, "that this handling of this issue by Eisenhower and the Smith Bill is quite typical of the whole approach the Administration has taken to labor relations. That approach has consisted of sweet-sounding generalities followed up by concrete anti-labor proposals."

A Summing Up

Goldberg summed up the CIO's appraisal of the President's proposals and the Smith Bill with this charge:

"The basic failure of Taft-Hartley and the basic failure of the President's proposals is that violence is done to these principles for sound labor legislation.

"Government intervention in labor disputes is made more heavy-handed.

"Freedom of collective bargaining is further restricted.

"The exercise of right to join unions is discouraged rather than protected and encouraged.

"The right to strike is further limited and curtailed.

"The law establishing our national labor relations policy is made more complex, complicated and obscure.

"These amendments do not reflect a genuine belief in these principles with which agreements has been so often expressed. Because of its violence to these principles, we do not like Taft-Hartley. We like this bill even less."

"WORSE THAN IT IS."—That's what Pres. Eisenhower's labor message and the Administration's Smith Bill would do to the Taft-Hartley Act, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the Senate Labor Committee. Seated is CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, who gave detailed analysis of GOP proposals. At right, Reuther greets Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) while Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) looks on. At left is Robert Oliver, CIO Legislative Committee director.

Object

Two Republican members of the Senate Labor Committee—Sens. Cooper (Ky.) and Ives (N.Y.)—have come out flatly against Pres. Eisenhower's proposal for government-conducted strike votes. All six Democrats on the 13-member committee also are expected to oppose it.

Pine Box Six Feet Down

Sen. Neely (D. W.Va.), who campaigned in 1952 for the repeal of Taft-Hartley, has a favorite story to illustrate what he thinks should be done with the law.

It is the story of a man whose mother-in-law lived with him for many years and plagued him all of that time. She died while he was out of town and the undertaker set him a wire reading:

"Your mother-in-low died last night. Shall I embalm, cremate, or bury her?"

The man replied: "Embalm, cremate and bury her. Take no chances."

That, says Neely, is what Congress should do with Taft-Hartley.

End Civil Rights Roadblock, Carey Urges Senate Group

THE CIO last week called upon Congress to lift its roadblock to civil rights legislation, urging the Senate Judiciary Committee to report out the Ives-Humphrey FEPC bill in place of two measures it currently is considering.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), a leading advocate of civil rights, declared, however, that "realistically speaking" there is no likelihood that this Congress will enact such legislation, although he intends to keep fighting for it.

In a telegram to Chairman Hendrickson (R. N.J.) of the Senate Civil Rights subcommittee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said that the Ives-Humphrey measure deserves support because "it would establish an effective federal FEPC employing investigation, mediation, conciliation, findings and finally, orders that would be enforceable through the federal courts."

Carey, who is chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, charged that the bill by Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.) on which the subcommittee is holding hearings is "wholly inadequate," "lacks any enforcement powers" and "does not authorize one penny for funds to operate the proposed Federal Commission on Civil Rights and Privileges."

Ike Asks 35,000 Housing Units

A HOUSING program, couched for the most part in generalities, was sent to Congress last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

The only point upon which it was specific was in the field of public housing, where he proposed an inadequate program of 35,000 new units a year for the next four years.

Congress last year limited this part of the program to an even more inadequate 20,000 units, compared to the 200,000 units urged by the 1953 National CIO convention.

The President's other proposals:

- A new type of federal mortgage insurance, calling for token down payments and long-term repayments on homes costing under $8000, an impractical limit for most heavily-populated sections of the country.
- Appropriation of about $1 billion for renovation of run-down neighborhoods and slum elimination.
- Liberalized loan terms for buying or remodelling old homes.
- More vigorous federal action to insure that "minority groups have a fair opportunity to acquire adequate housing."
- Raising the $16,000 ceiling on mortgages guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration and Veterans' Administration.
- Authorizing on a standby basis reductions in interest rates and lengthening of repayment periods on government-guaranteed mortgages if necessary to increase purchasing power during an economic down-turn.
- Reorganizing the Federal National Mortgage Association so it will be controlled by the financial interests that use it, freeing $2.5 billion in federal funds now tied up in it.

The CIO Housing Committee withheld comment on the President's message pending the introduction of enabling legislation in Congress. Lee F. Johnson, executive vice president of the National Housing Conference, termed it disappointing.

A Dictatorial Idea

As the Senate Labor Committee began Taft-Hartley hearings, CIO got to the heart of what's wrong with the "sweet sounding" campaign promises which have been turned into the mailed-fist provisions of the Smith Bill.

What's wrong fundamentally, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther testified, is that T-H is based on the idea "that at best unions are a necessary evil which must be tolerated but kept in their place, and that in implementing this philosophy the Taft-Hartley Act discourages collective bargaining and has embarked this nation on the pathway toward dictatorial treatment of workers—the very opposite of what we want in America."

This "dictatorial" philosophy was pretty well demonstrated when the GOP majority of the committee whooped through confirmation for National Labor Relations Board membership of Albert C. Beeson, who proclaimed his built-in bias for business and his desire for further amendments of Taft-Hartley by process of NLRB decisions.

That committee decision is one clue to present congressional attitudes—and fair warning that labor faces a fight to stop the drive to make Taft-Hartley worse than it now is.

'Pious Words'--And Deeds

When women delegates at CIO-PAC's Conference on Family Participation went to the Capitol recently, Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) remined them to take a careful look at the "pious words" in the flood of special messages from Pres. Eisenhower and to check them against GOP deeds.

A good case at point is the President's own message on health and welfare. Although it falls far short of meeting the nation's fundamental needs for adequate medical care for all Americans, the good words of Eisenhower in his health message were cancelled out, in one key area, by the budget message which he sent Congress just a few days later.

One point of the President's health program was increased federal aid to states and local communities for construction of hospitals, clinics and convalescent homes. Another point was increased funds for medical research.

Yet in the budget message, as Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) has pointed out, the President limited hospital construction grants to $50 million a year, just one-third of the amount authorized by the Hill-Burton Law now on the books. Funds for tuberculosis control were slashed 40%.

"If cutting off health funds will starve germs to death," said Hill, "we ought to be a healthier nation soon."

Come-Uppance

Never underestimate the power of an Ohio Republican, but it looks like Sen. Bricker may come a cropper in his move to return the U. S. to the era of the Articles of Confederation—if not earlier.

His unsuccessful attempt to silence Pres. Eisenhower's "unalterable" opposition is a demonstration of the arrogance of much of the Republican leadership in Congress.

We're glad to see such staunch conservatives as John W. Davis and Lucius Clay awakening to the perils of the Bricker Amendment, which CIO long has emphasized.

And we get a quiet chuckle out of the irony of the present debate. The Republicans have made quite a thing out of the Constitution, in campaign oratory. And now John Bricker—the staunchest Republican of them all—wants to turn the Constitution on its head.

Flying Saucers—And Cups

In Other Words—

A Program For Full Employment

A nine-point program to meet the unemployment problem was proposed by Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) in a radio address last week inaugurating the political education program of the New York State CIO Council. Here are excerpts from his talk, broadcast over a statewide ABC network:

By FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, JR.

WHILE I AM, of course, concerned about this situation of growing unemployment, I am even more concerned by the complacency of our Republican state and national administrations and some of their leaders.

There are those who contend that it is good to be going through what they call a "readjustment." Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey has said it is healthy to have "soft spots in the economy."

How can it be good to have almost three million Americans out of work? How can it be "healthy" to have almost three million people unemployed? We're not merely talking numbers. These are human beings out of work! These are heads of families unemployed! We're talking about human lives, human fears—human wants.

But fear cannot correct this situation any more than will name calling, or stuffy complacency and inaction.

Meet The People's Needs

When we review the unprecedented gains of the last 20 years, there can be no doubt that by moving forward, and by constantly looking ahead of us and not behind us, we can fulfill the needs of the people for decent housing, proper educational and health facilities, and all the other needs of the American people.

It is within this framework of hope and confidence in the future, rather than fear for the present, that I would like to put forward a program for the economic health of our nation. A program which, in my opinion, will both meet the immediate threat suggested in the figures of growing unemployment, and which will furnish a vehicle for continued economic growth.

First, may I suggest a tax policy which will increase purchasing power by giving relief not to those in the upper income brackets, who will put their money away in banks, but for those in the lower and middle income groups who put their money to work buying things for themselves and their families.

Perhaps the most effective way of doing this would be to raise the $600 personal exemption to a more realistic level of $800. This has been suggested by the Democrats, but the Republicans on the Tax committee of the Congress voted this down just the other day. They don't want to put purchasing power in the hands of the people; they want to eliminate the tax on corporate dividends as Pres. Eisenhower has suggested.

Second, an increase and expansion of social security. The President's proposal is all right as far as it goes. But I would like to see it expanded to include provisions of the Lehman-Roosevelt Bill for payment of social security benefits not only to persons who are retired, but also to those who are physically disabled.

Third, may I suggest an increase in unemployment insurance benefits. The present structure of this program is outmoded. Benefits have not kept pace with increases in the cost of living.

Increase The Minimum Wage

Fourth, an upward revision of the minimum wage law. The present provision of 75c an hour is unrealistic. It should be increased to about $1.25 an hour.

Fifth, a planning program for public works to be constructed in the event of a more serious recession. The time to plan is now—not in the midst of a depression.

Sixth, a bold new housing plan including an adequate program of public housing which the Republicans killed in the last session of Congress. This would not only help meet our tremendous housing deficiencies, but it could provide proper stimulus of other important industries.

Seventh, a proper farm program. Not the political hodge-podge which the Administration recently proposed and which is geared to how the farmer votes, but one which is realistic in terms of both our desire for farm production and farm prosperity.

Eighth, a program to assist small and medium-size business by enforcing our laws against monopoly and by assisting in the securing of loans.

Ninth, a program of providing low-cost electric power by the proper development of electric power generated by public resources.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE "REGULAR" Republicans on Capitol Hill—no political or intellectual giant but a faithful reflection of House Speaker Joe Martin—thinks that Atty.-Gen. Brownell will be the "next" Republican nominee after Pres. Eisenhower pulls out. Brownell deserves some character study.

He had a news conference the other day—his first since the Chicago speech in November charging that Harry S. Truman deliberately "promoted" a "known Communist spy," Harry Dexter White.

As conservative a columnist as Walter Lippman said that Brownell's conduct was "shocking," unforgivable, in exposing part of the FBI secret files on White for political purposes. Whether Brownell's conscience hurts is unknown but, judging from his news conference, it seems unlikely.

The 'Next' Republican Candidate?

Chief subject of the conference was the "1456" and, later, the "2200" persons Mr. Eisenhower and Brownell claim have been "separated" from the government under new "security" regulations.

Washington reporters covering the "subversives beat"—yes, that's what they call the various investigating committees—have been reliably informed that these figures are phoney. They have been told, authoritatively, that many persons resigned without even knowing that anonymous charges against them existed in the files.

People who in private life would have been forgiven such human transgressions as an instance of babbling or drunkenness, and who happened thereafter to quit federal jobs, are included in the GOP list of those "separated." Most of the "1456" and "2200" could have been fired under ordinary Civil Service Commission rules—not as security risks.

He Kept Silent

Lunatic-fringe Republicans in Congress, however, assert that nearly all the separatees were either Communist sympathizers or sex perverts. The reporters naturally wanted Brownell's breakdown of categories—who had been fired or "separated" for what.

The suave, slick Attorney-General refused to answer.

Reporters should apply to the Civil Service Commission, he claimed, for "overall" figures. Told that the CSC said the opposite, Brownell still declined to answer. Then the reporters asked about Justice Dept. "separatees," and Brownell again referred questions to the CSC. Told that the CSC said each department should release its own figures, he shrugged and once more refused to answer.

Brownell is a lawyer and an officer of the courts, sworn to defend the American system under which no person can be adjudged guilty except under due process and by the conviction of his peers.

He was asked whether he considered a "separatee" from his own Justice Dept. guilty if, after notice of charges but before an evaluation or hearing, the man resigned. Brownell's answer: "Yes."

A government worker may simply be sick of putting up with anonymous accusations and repeated clearances, and take a civilian job paying twice what he gets from the government, but Brownell calls him "guilty" without trial.

This is the man, says the Republican, who will be the "next" GOP leader.

Complaints Of Robert E. Lee

Robert E. Lee, friend of Sen. McThing and newest member of the Federal Communications Commission, has a kick against "liberals."

They are shooting him, he tells interviewers, for guilt by association. They attack him merely because he is a friend of Joe.

It is possible that in the fullness of time Lee might emerge on the FCC as a brave champion of freedom of belief and freedom of dissent. He is genuinely bothered by the Senate opposition, led by Sen. Mike Monroney of Oklahoma, who thinks Lee is not trustworthy.

He shouldn't delude himself, however, that he was attacked merely for friendship with McCarthy. He was attacked for specific deeds—his appearance as moderator on the notorious Facts Forum TV show promoted by the Texas oil millionaire, H. L. Hunt.

Lee insisted before a Senate committee that Facts Forum, which he helped launch as moderator, was objective on political issues. Mike Monroney came closer to the truth—that Facts Forum gives "two sides of one side."

A Quality Of Compassion

The President has a quality of compassion that may serve the country well in the matter of so-called "progressives" among former Korean prisoners of war and even those who thus far have elected to stay with Communism.

Mr. Eisenhower lived his life in the army. He had to order men into battle, he had to order some of his own soldiers shot for crimes against the military code. He knows the military necessity of discipline. But he is above vindictiveness.

At press conferences he has repeatedly said it is inconceivable that any boy who came back, even after making a serious political mistake, should be made by our own military people to regret the return. At a time when popular clamor against "progressives" and the boys who stayed with the Communists is high, the President recommended that people reread the biblical parable of the Prodigal Son. At such moments it's easy to "like Ike."

The Capitol Hill Scene—

McCarthy Left In Cloud Of Dust As Ike Joins In 'Numbers' Game

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THE OLD POLITICAL "numbers" racket is being played to a faretheewell in Republican Washington, but the stakes first set by Joe McCarthy have been multiplied ten-fold by the Eisenhower Administration.

It was just four years ago that the Wisconsin Senator, in his famous speech at Wheeling, W. Va., proclaimed:

"I have here in my hand a list of 205 . . . a list of names that were made known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party and who nevertheless are still working and shaping policy in the State Dept."

Now the GOP Administration has multiplied the ante, by comparison making McCarthy looking like a straight-laced accountant, always careful with his bookkeeping.

Last fall, in an effort to put some facts behind the Republican campaign war-cries about "Communists in government," the Administration announced that 1456 federal workers had been fired or allowed to resign as "security risks."

But it was left for Pres. Eisenhower to open the Pandora's Box when, in his address opening the present session of Congress, he announced:

"Under the standards established by the new employe security program, more than 2200 employes have been separated from the federal government."

That was enough to set Republicans like Rep. Bender (O.), New York's Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and others off on another rampage. In their oratory, all 2200 "security" separations were quickly translated into "Communists, spies and saboteurs."

So far, the President and Atty.-Gen. Brownell have resisted all requests to give any breakdown on the cases of 2200 out of the 180,000 federal employes dropped since the GOP took office. The "security" designation, as Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) recently pointed out, is a "political linguistic Mother Hubbard dress."

Some staunchly pro-Eisenhower newspapers and columnists looked into the 2200 figure, with interesting results. Columnists Joseph and Stewart Alsop revealed that a number of routine State Dept. resignations were incorporated into the total, without the employes' knowledge.

Case In Point

Pres. Eisenhower at his press conference refused to authorize a breakdown of the Administration's claim of "2200 security" firings. He said he knew of no one in his Administration who called the discharged government employes "spies and traitors."

Few days before, in New York City, Postmaster General Summerfield—an Eisenhower Cabinet member—lumped the "security" discharges together as "people who make treason a preoccupation."

—Herblock in Washington Post

"Gosh, It Isn't Even Safe To Resign Any More"

The GOP Washington Evening Star and Washington Post—concerned over the latest buckshot aimed at federal employes—also investigated, called the GOP figures meaningless.

Summing up its inquiry, the Post editorially said "it looks as if the President has been handed a phony figure"—but it's one you'll be hearing in the months to election day next November.

As CIO Commentator John W. Vandercook said recently in an ABC Radio newscast:

"Whether it was Eisenhower's deliberate intention or not, the impression his words and round figure conveyed is obvious. The implication plainly is that the Republican Administration has been so much more alert to the red menace that, in just one year, it detected and dismissed 2200 Communists, subversives, spies, Communist sympathizers or what have you that the Democrats missed.

GOP Member Spills The Beans

"But lest that slippery little legend of Democratic 'softness' versus Republican 'hardness' to reds be destroyed, neither the White House nor any other government agency has ever been induced to release a breakdown of those figures, setting forth how many of those fired were heavy drinkers, how many had suffered from nervous breakdowns, and so on.

"Now along comes Congresswoman St. George (R. N. Y.) and spills the beans with the statement that 'not more than 10%' of the 2200 the President mentioned were 'out and out Communists' and the rest were just 'presumably bad security risks—an entirely different thing, of course, from the card-carrying Communist variety.'"

Last week the dispute continued bubbling in Congress, with Sen. Johnston (D. S. C.) demanding that Brownell "immediately tell the public how many indictments he has obtained from among the 2200 firings claimed by the Administration, and if there are none, as I suspect, then he should resign his office."

How High Is Unemployment?

By Public Affairs Institute

HOW HIGH IS UNEMPLOYMENT? The answer to this question depends on how you count—and how you look at the unemployment problem.

Under the Employment Act of 1946, the federal government is responsible for promoting "maximum" employment. It is required to mobilize all its resources to promote conditions which afford "useful employment opportunities for those able, willing, and seeking to work."

The act clearly requires a continuing promotion of "maximum" employment opportunities. This is not being done today. Instead, we wait until unemployment actually mounts as registered by the inadequate unemployment gauge of the Census Bureau—before we do anything to correct the underlying conditions which caused it.

The number of workers in the labor force depends on the kind of employment policy the federal government wants to promote.

If the government wants to promote an expanding full employment economy it will foster conditions that will encourage all prospective labor force entrants to enter the labor market. This means that under prosperous peacetime conditions from 700,000 to 1.2 million new workers should enter the labor market each year to take jobs.

Under a less than "maximum" employment policy the government would minimize the size of the labor force. This is the policy followed now. It means that unless a worker is actually competing for a job and putting pressure on the job market he is not in the labor force and cannot be unemployed.

In communities of one factory or a few basic industries operating at reduced levels, laid off or new workers may not actively be looking for work today because they know jobs are unavailable. Unless they volunteer this information to the census taker they are not included in the labor force or listed as unemployed.

Official policy has resulted in defining away nearly one million persons who should be in the labor force.

'GOP Has Defaulted On Promises, Would Make T-H Worse Than Ever'—Reuther

Six guideposts of "justice and fairness" in labor-management relations were outlined by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the Senate Labor Committee hearing last week on the Smith Bill, the Administration proposals for Taft-Hartley Act amendments. Text of Reuther's statement, in large part, follows:

By WALTER P. REUTHER
President of the CIO

THE CIO BELIEVES that a sound national labor relations law must rest on the proposition that free collective bargaining and the right of workers freely to join labor unions of their choice is sound public policy.

You can't have free collective bargaining and you can't have free democratic trade unions if you approach the subject of labor relations and the law governing labor relations with the belief that unions are a necessary evil which must be tolerated but which must be kept in their place.

The necessary assumption for a good law is the assumption that unions are free and democratic organizations of men and women as patriotic and concerned with the public welfare as any employer or any member of Congress.

The Basic T-H Defect

The basic defect of Taft-Hartley is the philosophy behind it, the philosophy of distrust and hostility toward unions, that Taft-Hartley is based on the postulate that at best unions are a necessary evil which must be tolerated and kept in their place, and that in implementing this philosophy the Taft-Hartley Act discourages collective bargaining and has embarked this nation on the pathway toward dictatorial treatment of workers—the very opposite of what we want in America.

We in the CIO are deeply disappointed with the President's message to Congress on Taft-Hartley, and with this bill. We believe the President's message and this bill would make Taft-Hartley even worse than it is.

I want to record our conviction that the Administration has defaulted in its campaign promise to bring justice and fairness into the law.

This bill would not rid Taft-Hartley of its union-busting provisions. Rather, it adds new ones. While it does contain a few improvements, these are insubstantial and are meant only to disguise the anti-labor restrictions.

If real justice and fairness are to be achieved, amendments to Taft-Hartley must deal with truly fundamental issues. They must:

1. Eliminate government by injunction and restore the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

This bill does not do this. It contains only one modification of the various injunctions created by Taft-Hartley, that is the change of the mandatory injunction in boycott cases to a discretionary one.

The one-sided national emergency injunction is retained and its complicated procedures are made even more complicated. This bill provides that emergency boards of inquiry be empowered to make settlement recommendations after an anti-labor injunction has almost run its course, and presumably accomplished its purpose.

Whatever virtue there sometimes may be in such board settlement recommendations is lost by this ill-conceived procedure. The fundamental defect of the Taft-Hartley emergency provisions—the reliance on the labor injunction—is retained. Labor can never accept an anti-labor injunction as being just and fair.

2. Remove the undue governmental interference which Taft-Hartley has imposed on collective bargaining and restore free collective bargaining as the cornerstone of our national labor relations policy.

This bill does not do. Rather it adds to government interference in labor-management affairs in a manner that will hamper rather than encourage good faith collective bargaining and the reasonable settlement of disputes.

This is notably true in the strike-breaking vote provision in this bill. This provision would have the government conduct a strike ballot in every labor dispute, whenever and wherever a walkout occurs.

In addition to governmental interference in labor relations, this proposal is objectionable because it reflects a deep-seated anti-labor prejudice. It is based on the misconception that unions act contrary to the will of their members rather than in response to that will. This misconception is insulting both to union leaders and union members.

Our unions are democratic unions and leaders who act contrary to the will of the members in such important matters as conducting strikes will not be leaders very long. You can be sure of that.

Furthermore, as I pointed out to this committee on my prior appearance here, all of the unions in the CIO provide for democratic determination of strike action. There is no legitimate reason for this type of government interference. The proposal has the illegitimate objective of using a government poll to break a strike.

Before Or After Poll

We object to the government strike vote proposal, whether the vote is to be conducted before a strike, as proposed by Sen. Purtell in S. 2697, or after a strike, as proposed in this bill.

A pre-strike vote seeks to drive a wedge between the union leadership and its membership; a post-strike vote also seeks to break a strike. Both types of government-sponsored votes, in our considered judgment, intensify industrial disputes rather than solve them.

Government interference in the collective bargaining process is further increased by the bill's provision which further restricts the area of collective bargaining during the terms of a labor agreement.

This is an unwise and unnecessary proposal which can only result in impairing rather than improving good labor-management relations.

3. Strengthen the rights of workers to organize in bona fide unions of their own choosing by the elimination of hampering restraints imposed or encouraged by the present law.

Taft-Hartley makes illegal many traditional and necessary union practices long recognized as proper and legitimate.

This bill does liberalize the Taft-Hartley boycott provisions, but not nearly enough. Still prohibited are justifiable types of union mutual assistance, such as the refusal to handle goods produced under sweat shop conditions, goods produced during a strike or goods produced by runaway shops.

Moreover, the present restrictions in Taft-Hartley on the right to strike and picket are largely preserved. As an example of this, the bill does not restore to economic strikers their right to vote in a National Labor Relations Board election.

It should be remembered that one of the President's flat commitments was to rid Taft-Hartley of its provision prohibiting economic strikers from voting in a Board election—a provision which the President said licensed union busting.

4. Rid the Taft-Hartley law of the provisions designed to harass and weaken unions.

This proposal retains the Taft-Hartley provision which authorizes damage suits against unions for certain unfair labor practices while denying to unions or their members the right to any similar suit for any employer unfair labor practices.

This bill goes beyond Taft-Hartley in its harassment of unions by inviting the states to adopt repressive laws in any dispute which in the opinion of any state will result in a local emergency.

Experience of the past, before the Supreme Court outlawed such state laws as contrary to the federal law, proves that some of the states will deal with such local "emergencies" as strikes by the bookkeepers of a local telephone company, by outlawing the strike and imposing compulsory arbitration. The loose provision of the present bill could permit any state to override the provisions of the national law in almost any local dispute deemed by an excitable local authority to constitute an "emergency."

Under this provision there will be little, if anything, left of the federally protected right to strike.

5. Simplify and clarify the law; provide for the rule of reason in its procedures and enforcement.

Taft-Hartley itself is so intricate that it can hardly be understood by the workers to whom it applies, or by the employers for that matter. The present bill adds to its complexities. The only relief from red tape proposed is a slight simplification of the filing requirements as to union by-laws.

Any possible saving of paper which this would effect is more than offset by a new requirement that employers file non-Communist affidavits. We have never believed that any good result could be achieved by requiring such affidavits either from employers or union officers.

6. Prevent employer coercion and intimidation of employes under the guise of free speech—a principle to which we, like all good Americans, firmly adhere.

On the pretext of protecting the righ of employers to freedom of speech, th Taft-Hartley Act opens the door to em ployer prevention of union organization b threats and intimidation of workers. Th present Taft-Hartley provision has n bona fide purpose and never had; th Supreme Court held long before its enac ment that employers have the full rigl under the Constitution to express the views on unions and unionism, so long s their remarks are not, in context, coe cive or intimidating.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the NLB has given employers virtually cae blanche to intimidate their workers fr n joining unions. According to its lat t pronouncements, the NLRB even perm s employers to require workers to listen o anti-union diatribes on company time ad premises.

A long-established rule that the un n be accorded an opportunity to reply as been dropped by the present Board.

What does the Administration now p pose to do about this outrageous miss e of free speech on an unfree audience

Pres. Eisenhower's message states:

"The right of free speech is fun mental. Congress should make clear ta the right of free speech, as now defi d in the Act, applies equally to labor ad management in every aspect of their e lationship."

These are high-sounding phrases but let us look at how the Smith Bil proposes to implement the message. I would provide simply that an em ployer brainwashing session shall no be the basis for setting aside an elec tion. In other words it would knoc l out the only restraint now placed b the Board on employers, viz., tha they can't capture an audience for 2 hours before a Board election.

This handling of this issue by Presid t Eisenhower and the Smith Bill is que typical of the whole approach the A ministration has taken to labor relatio. That approach has consisted of swe sounding generalities followed up by co crete anti-labor proposals.

Get The Facts

Two CIO publications on Taft-Hartley provide excellent information on the most controversial labor law ever adopted. They are:

"The CIO Case Against Taft-Hartley," a definitive study of the act with congressional testimony by CIO Pres. Walter Reuther and General Counsel Arthur Goldberg. $1 a copy, quantity prices on request.

Also, "116 Questions About Taft-Hartley"—some of the most frequently asked questions, plus the answers. 5c each, 50 for $1.50, 100 for $2.50, 500 for $10, 1000 for $18.

Beeson, Built-In Bias And All, Gets Okay Of Senate Labor Group

A BUSINESS man who openly and avowedly admitted he is biased in favor of business was recommended by the Senate Labor Committee last week for confirmation as a member of the quasi-judicial National Labor Relations Board.

He is Albert C. Beeson, 47, industrial relations man for the Food, Machinery & Chemical Corp., San Jose, Calif., and a former college economics lecturer who had told the committee he "did not consider objectivity a necessity" for teaching, but who "was frankly there to try to explain the American enterprise system from the business man's viewpoint."

ALBERT C. BEESON

The first person ever to be named to the NLRB directly from either labor or management, as Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) pointed out, Beeson faces a Democratic floor fight before he can win Senate confirmation. The Democrats accused the Republicans of trying to steamroller his nomination through the committee.

In a last-ditch effort to block approval, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, appeared before the committee as the final witness before it went into executive session and voted approval by a party count of 7 to 6.

Earlier, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther had wired committee members asking them to reject Beeson on the ground that his industry background and point of view would leave the NLRB, "which under the statute is supposed impartially to adjudicate disputes between industry and labor, completely under industry domination." His confirmation would give Pres. Eisenhower's appointees a board majority.

Carey, citing Beeson's "fixed employer bias," told the committee that if he is approved, the NLRB "will not be able to command the trust of labor."

Carey maintained that Beeson has no more right to a place on the board than he has himself. Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) protested that Carey is a "fair minded" man and would "fall over backwards."

"Falling over backwards, sir, is not a good description of an impartial judge," Carey rejoined.

When Carey complained that the committee was hearing him with a "rather antagonistic attitude," Sen. Purtell (R.-Conn.) protested. "Well, sir, I feel terribly intimidated," Carey declared.

With the Republicans in complete control of the NLRB for the first time, Chairman Guy Farmer said in a recent speech in New Orleans, "I have no doubt that we will, as time goes on, reverse still more" of the decisions made by previous boards.

All Is Confusion, Mitchell Indicates

CONFUSION in the Republican Administration over what it calls its labor policy was demonstrated conclusively last week when Sec. of Labor Mitchell testified before the Senate Labor Committee on proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), the committee chairman, has introduced a bill calling for a government-conducted vote after a strike is under way to see if the strikers want to continue it. He calls his measure an "Administration bill."

Mitchell told the committee he personally felt such a vote should be taken before a strike is under way.

However, he refused to say if that's what the Eisenhower Administration really wants. He promised to find out and come back with the answer within a week.

The presumption was that he would have to go to Pres. Eisenhower himself to get the GOP out of its dilemma. The President's labor policy message to Congress offered no guidance. It merely called for a vote.

Mitchell defended the strike vote principle against attacks by both Republicans and Democrats, notably Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.).

But the same kind of a vote for management is something very much else again, he protested in reply to queries by Sens. Murray (D. Mont.) and Douglas.

Murray suggested that if workers are required to vote on the employer's last offer before being allowed to strike, stockholders should be made to vote on the union's last offer.

Douglas wanted to know if it would not be "reciprocal fairness" for the U. S. to poll the stockholders or owners of a business to see if "they approve the refusal to improve the employer's last offer," or accept the union's last offer.

That, Mitchell solemnly told them, was different. To Murray he said that a stockholder might own shares in many firms, and that he didn't have the "vital interest" a worker has. To Douglas he patiently explained that a strike vote is a "vital question of the livelihood of union members," but not of stockholders.

Goldberg Warns On State Labor Curbs

PROPOSALS in the Smith Bill expanding the role of the states in labor relations would make the Taft-Hartley Act worse than it is, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg told the Senate Labor Committee in his detailed analysis.

He cited specifically an amendment providing that nothing in T-H nullify the power of a state "to protect the health or safety of the people . . . during emergencies resulting from labor disputes."

What the proposal really does, he maintained, is to force compulsory arbitration on a large segment of American industry as a substitute for collective bargaining.

It would do this, he explained, by legalizing "state laws which, under the guise of dealing with local emergencies, prohibit strikes and provide for compulsory arbitration."

"The Smith amendment is worded as if its purpose were simply to preserve the police powers of the state," Goldberg said. "However, it is clear that that is not its effect. It is clear because the states have those powers now; no Supreme Court decision has impaired them in the slightest.

What Is At Stake

"What is thus at stake in this proposal is whether the Congress should abandon uniform federal rules for handling labor disputes in favor of letting each of the states adopt their own methods of dealing with what they consider to be local 'emergencies' resulting from strikes."

Goldberg said the amendment would validate state laws which govern disputes not only in public utilities, "but also in any industry wherein the state finds that an 'emergency' results from a strike." Typically, he recalled, such state laws substitute compulsory arbitration for the right to strike.

"Some substitute device, which can only mean government regimentation, is of course necessary if the right to strike is forbidden," he added.

Goldberg said that experience gives no reason to doubt that "hysterical state and local authorities" will view all sorts of labor disputes as emergencies.

"Thus the issue, as I see it, is whether the federal government should abdicate its power in this field in favor of inviting the states to prohibit the right to strike and substitute compulsory arbitration," he said.

"Now this is an issue on which Pres. Eisenhower as a candidate repeatedly declared his views . . . He repeatedly and strongly denounced compulsory arbitration. Compulsory arbitration, he said, was inconsistent with a free society . . .

"It is thus most strange now to find the President, by this proposal, in effect favoring curtailment of the right to strike and substituting compulsory arbitration.

52 Different Brands

"Instead of uniform and even-handed justice in the field of labor-management relations, there would be 52 brands of restrictions—one for each state, territory and the District of Columbia—all of them superimposed upon the restrictions contained in the Taft-Hartley Act."

Goldberg also criticized the Smith Bill for its failure to strike out of T-H the proviso subordinating federal union security restrictions to state laws.

"It would grant no relief from the Taft-Hartley provision validating the vicious state 'right-to-work' laws," he said.

"The slogan 'right to work' is transparently fraudulent.

"When the sweatshop brigade says 'states' rights,' it means the right of a state to enact harsh restrictions on the rights of workers. Curiously enough, the term 'states' rights,' as used by these interests, under no circumstances comprehends the right of a state to enact liberal labor legislation."

'Just As Phony As Prohibition'—Quill

The Taft-Hartley Act is "just as phony as the prohibition law," Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers declared in a television discussion on amending the act with former Rep. Hartley (R. N. J.), its co-author.

"I think it is a serious mistake to attempt amendments," he said on the America Speaks program of WOR-TV, New York. "I think Mr. Hartley would do a service to his party and the nation if he went back and prepared to completely repeal the law, and not help to create a labor front in America."

How Complicated Can You Get?

The "crazy-quilt" pattern of government action in national emergency strikes, as set forth by Taft-Hartley plus the Smith Bill, was dissected as follows by CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg:

1. The union serves a 60-day notice on the company, as required by Sec. 8(d)(1). This is in addition to any notice the union has already served under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement.

2. The union serves a 30-day notice on the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service as required by Sec. 8(d)(3).

3. The union serves a 30-day notice on the state mediation agency, as required by Sec. 8(d)(3).

4. Under Sec. 203 of Taft-Hartley, the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service will use its best efforts to mediate the dispute.

5. The President finds, under Sec. 206, that the strike will imperil the national health or safety and appoints a board of inquiry.

6. The board of inquiry make a report, which cannot include recommendations.

7. The Attorney General, under Sec. 208, petitions a Federal District Court to enjoin the strike for 80 days, and the District Court issues the injunction.

8. At the end of 60 days (changed to 40 days by the Smith Bill) the President reconvenes the board of inquiry, which reports the current position of the parties and the company's last offer.

9. After 60 days (changed to 40 days by the Smith Bill) the NLRB conducts a secret ballot on whether the employes wish to accept the final offer of settlement made by their employer. The board certifies the results of this ballot to the Attorney General. No consequences flow from this ballot whichever way it goes.

10. Under Sec. 209(c) of the act as amended by the Smith Bill, the President reconvenes his board of inquiry. This time, it makes recommendations for the settlement of the dispute.

11. At the expiration of 80 days from its issuance, the injunction is dissolved.

12. The President, under Sec. 210, submits to the Congress a full report of the proceedings together with any recommendations he may have for appropriate action.

13. Employes are now free to strike.

14. They notify the NLRB of the commencement of the strike, as required by Sec. 8(f) of the act as amended by the Smith Bill.

15. The NLRB directs the taking of a secret ballot among the employes on the question of whether they wish to continue the strike.

The Nation's Worst Boss—

U. S. Employes Get It In Neck—And Take It

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THERE'S MORE genuine job security in a unionized industrial plant — even in these days of mounting unemployment—than there is working for the federal government.

That reluctant conclusion is being forced on thousands of career government workers who in one year have seen their traditional security system dismantled piecemeal by the Eisenhower Administration, the courts and politicians of the McCarthy variety.

Uncle Sam, the nation's biggest employer and frequently called its worst, today is pursuing personnel policies that would have touched off a walkout of industrial workers. But government workers can't strike.

Firings in the name of economy but many of which were dictated solely for political considerations have been taking place steadily since the Great Crusade took office.

In Economy's Name

Civil Service Commissioner George M. Moore last week reported that federal employment had been cut by 183,000 since January 1953.

In Washington alone the cutbacks total about 24,000.

No figures have ever been made public on the number of workers fired by the various departments and agencies of government.

Significantly, however, the firings began and were heaviest in those government branches in which workers have—or should have—the greatest interest. There was no ruthless ax-swinging on innocent heads just on general principles.

The cuts in service to working people were handled with the finesse of a corporation merger by the tycoons-turned-trustees of government. The business-attitude of Congress cut funds and the layoffs resulted.

The Labor Dept. furnished a fine example of this technique. Budget cuts resulted in firings and a decline in the efficiency of the Wage-Hour Div., the Women's Bureau and the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Morale Vanishes

Under federal civil service procedure a reduction-in-force order affects a department or agency. But in most cases the first person to be "riffed" is not the one who lands out on the street jobless.

He exercises his right to "bump" and sets off a chain reaction down the line. Sometimes as many as five workers are involved before one person finds himself a statistic among the unemployed.

The resultant destruction of morale is obvious. Being human, the almost-riffed worker takes scant consolation from the fact that he sometimes still has a job but one which pays less than his previous one.

So confused has the situation become that it is often difficult for workers to quit and seek employment away from government. Washington has hundreds of career employes who would quit next payday if they could get a letter of recommendation from their superiors for their faithful service.

Trouble is, no one wants to write those letters because a year hence a McCarthy committee might get hold of one and use it against the writer. It has happened.

The Administration has short-circuited civil service provisions in hundreds of instances by transferring jobs into Schedule C under the pretense that they are policy-making or confidential posts. Schedule C jobs have no security and holders of spots in this category can be fired capriciously.

The lengths to which "confidential" jobs can be defined is shown by a GOP move to transfer the private chauffeurs of some government brass into Schedule C.

Federal civil service goes back to 1883 but procedures which have been established since are being junked weekly and protection for workers lessens. A fired employe finds that the supervisor who signed his discharge order sits on the appeal as judge and jury as well as prosecutor.

There is an almost complete lack of unified manuals of procedures on personnel matters between governmental agencies.

Key Court Case

All the manuals can be junked if a decision issued by a Washington judge is sustained. In the case of a fired $10,000-a-year government attorney, the court ruled that the President is able to fire summarily without regard to congressional wishes.

All of this has not resulted in any upsurge in union affiliation among government white-collar workers. If anything, most of them have become less aggressive in their battle for increased protection and improved conditions.

They feel their own insecurity and sympathize with the worker at the next desk who gets riffed, but are not organizing into unions as industrial workers might be expected to do in a similar spot.

The general attitude is that the neck which protrudes too far in Washington today finds itself separated from its head.

WASHINGTON SCENE like this one of Pentagon employes leaving after a day's work is typical. These workers and their counterparts in scores of federal departments and agencies have job jitters because of GOP economy drives.

Even Keel

A federal official in Washington, according to a newspaper report, has a sign on his desk which reads, "If you can keep your head when all about you are losing theirs, you simply don't understand the situation."

—PAC Pipeline

Protection

Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) has introduced a bill to protect the civil service rights of U. S. employes placed in "exempted" jobs. The bill would overturn a recent federal court ruling which gave the government sweeping firing powers despite all civil service rules to the contrary.

Case History Of A Grievance

UNION officers and conscientious shop stewards ought to be glad they don't have to try and get a grievance settled with the federal government.

Guards at seven federal penitentiaries, among them Alcatraz, Leavenworth and Atlanta, are represented by the CIO Government & Civic Employees. Some of the guards have a grievance dating back 23 years. GCEOC-CIO and the guards are still hopeful of a settlement—if they live long enough.

It all started back in 1931 when federal agencies started on a 40-hour week. But the Bureau of Prisons, a section of the Justice Dept., claimed it didn't have the money or the manpower, so the guards continued their 44-hour stretch. This arrangement continued until 1943.

Several years ago they appealed to Congress to help them. They filed a bill to allow a waiver of the statute of limitations which had run out on the men's wage claim. Year after year the bill was buried under the annual legislative avalanche.

In the last session the bill squeaked through the House almost on closing day but never got to the Senate for consideration. It will come up again this time.

THE FAMILIAR pattern of government - by - postponement is frustrating the efforts of federal workers to retain their job security and win better conditions.

When the first session of the 83rd Congress adjourned last year the members had taken action on only a handful of the 400 bills pertaining to U. S. government employes. There is little indication that the record in the second session will show improvement.

Part of the blame, unfortunately, can be assessed to the workers themselves. The great majority are unorganized and lack an effective voice on Capitol Hill.

All of this hampers the legislative program of the CIO Government & Civic Employees and other groups representing federal workers.

The complacement or sacred-bunny attitude of so many workers is reflected in the indifferent concern shown by Congress when measures affecting federal employes come up for consideration.

Bills affecting wages, annual leave, unemployment compensation and other matters are pigeon-holed in congressional files "waiting for reports."

Typical is the case of the Rhodes Bill, which calls for recognition of unions of government employees.

Rhodes Bill Stalled

Uncle Sam won't sign a contract with a union. It acknowledges their existence and it will talk—sometimes it will even negotiate with union representatives—but it won't sit down and sign a contract.

HR172 was dropped into the congressional hopper Jan. 3, 1953, by Rep. Rhodes, a Democrat from Pennsylvania's 14th Dist. (with a 100% "right" PAC record), the day the session opened.

On Jan. 20 after looking it over briefly the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee requested a report on the measure from the Post Office Dept. Two days later reports were asked from the Defense Dept., Civil Service Commission and the Bureau of the Budget.

When Congress adjourned the reports were still awaited. The postponement technique stalled action on the bill for a full year, at least.

POSTAL WORKERS' local unions of the CIO Government & Civic Employees meet in Washington to draft a legislative program calling for an $800 salary increase and passage of union recognition law. Seated at center are Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray and National Assistant Chairman John Yancey.

Facts Behind A GOP Myth

MUCH-MALIGNED federal workers are still taking it on the chin from the Republicans who keep claiming a mythical increased efficiency since they've taken over the federal establishment.

Despite the fact that District of Columbia officials pointed out there are no such figures and there was no such survey, Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.) recently repeated the claim that "peak traffic movement" into Washington is now "22 minutes earlier" than under the Democrats.

Wide publicity was given to the official proof that the figures were false, but the Republicans are still implying that formerly lazy federal workers have now been scared into doing "an honest day's work."

Labor's World—

Becu, ICFTU Head, Predicts New Resistance To Soviets

IF THE BERLIN four power conference fails, "the people behind the Iron Curtain may do something about it," Omer Becu, president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and general secretary of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation, predicted last week.

Becu, one of the foremost figures in the free world and a veteran of organized workers' battles against communism, was in Washington for a meeting of the ITF executive board, its first in this country since 1947.

"The spirit of the workers hind the Iron Curtain is wonderful," he said. "The Communists will never get them down. They'll never be in a position to put guns in their hands—the guns would be used against them."

The ITF has underground contacts in the Russian satellite countries, he said, and because of the nature of the work done by members of its affiliates is in a position both to gather information and to extend aid. It has set up clandestine committees, and furnishes propaganda and other material to keep the spirit of freedom alive.

THE BOARD voted to extend its work in lands dominated by the Reds. In a resolution renewing "utter abhorence of communism and every other form of dictatorship and totalitarianism," it reaffirmed the ITF pledge of moral and material support "until the day of liberation."

OMER BECU

Other board actions included the setting up of a meeting some time this year to organize a Latin American transport workers federation, with a regional office; scheduling a similar regional meeting in the Far East, and admission to membership of seven new unions representing more than 41,000 workers.

The ITF, one of the 19 autonomous trade secretariats associated with the ICFTU, represents free union workers in all branches of the transportation industry. It has more than 150 affiliates in 52 countries, with approximately six million members. Among them is the CIO Transport Workers.

'The CIO Back Home' Sets Goals As Regional Meets Begin

By MILTON PLUMB

THE IMPORTANCE of "the CIO back home" to operations of the National CIO in Washington was underscored in discussions at the second annual Southeast Regional Conference of CIO State and local councils held in Atlanta Jan. 22-23.

Nearly 200 delegates from eight states gathered in the Georgia CIO headquarters for intensive study of CIO legislative, community services, public relations and political action programs. They left determined to intensify their council activities in these areas, and to enlist more effective CIO local participation.

It was Delegate William Grogan of the Florida State CIO Council who summed up the major goal that nearly all persons attending the conference carried away with them.

"We must find a way," he said, "to utilize all members of the CIO so that, instead of just 'members,' we have 6.5 million Goodwill Ambassadors of CIO working in their home communities to win general public support behind our program for the betterment of the American people."

CONFERENCE Chairman Carl A. McPeak, CIO assistant director of councils, in calling the meeting to order emphasized that "1954 is a very important year in terms of legislation and political action."

"The success or failure of our council activities," he said, "will unquestionably have real bearing on what we can accomplish in Washington. And, in turn, the issues before Congress will have a great effect upon all of labor throughout the country."

Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Coordinator of Legislative Activities, said that although labor for some time has known how to mobilize its resources behind collective bargaining processes, it is just beginning to realize the importance of such mobilization in community affairs.

"We must now develop techniques for mobilizing our strength behind those other processes which set the general economic and political climate in which our collective bargaining agreements must be negotiated," Oliver said.

To explain the operations of the CIO Legislative Dept., Oliver called upon CIO Chief of Congressional Liaison Thomas H. Burke and Hyman H. Bookbinder, head of congressional research activities. Their remarks were supplemented by Ben Blankenship, of the CIO Communications Workers, and Hoyt Haddock, of the CIO Maritime Committee, both legislative representatives in Washington.

Threats of new efforts to pass a "right to work" bill in South Carolina, renewed drives to enact a state sales tax in Kentucky and Georgia's pending constitutional amendment abolishing public schools were typical of the many issues raised. While the general outlook was far from optimistic, it was pointed out that CIO's prestige in the South today is greater than ever before.

"The same obstacles you people in the South are fighting today," CIO Political Action Dir. Jack Kroll told the meeting, "had to be fought when the CIO was founded in the North. Your fight is 20 years later, but it's the same fight, and if you roll up your sleeves and work, you in the South can have the kind of state legislatures, local governments, governors, and representatives in Congress that you want."

CHARLES GILLMAN, CIO director for Region 5, called for a "crusade to bring back to the people the government of this country."

Importance of labor participation in community affairs was emphasized by John Ramsey, director of community relations for the CIO Southern Organizing Committee, and Berkley Watterson, assistant to Leo Perlis, CIO Community Services Committee director.

Paul Christopher, CIO director for Region 4, warned that "gangsters, gamblers, oil companies and anti-labor manufacturers" have all combined to raise a slush fund to defeat liberal Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), who comes up for re-election this year.

Dan Powell, Southeast CIO-PAC field director, warned "there is nothing you can get in a union contract after months of negotiations that can't be wiped out at the stroke of a pen in state legislatures or the halls of Congress."

Schedule

Second of the CIO regional conferences was held last weekend in Chicago, covering Regions 7, 8 and 9 in the Midwest. Coming meetings:

Pittsburgh, Feb. 5-6, Regions 3 and 6, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, Ohio and West Virginia.

New York City, Feb. 19-20, Regions 1 and 2, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, Maine, New York and New Jersey.

St. Louis, Feb. 26-27, Regions 10 and 11, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Mississippi.

San Francisco, Mar. 5-6, Region 13, California, Washington, Oregon, Arizona and Nevada.

Denver, Mar. 12-13, Region 12, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho and Montana.

4 CIO Leaders Named To Labor Dept. Advisory Board

THE LONG dormant Trade Union Advisory Committee on International Affairs in the Labor Dept. has been revived by Sec. Mitchell.

CIO members named to the reactivated body are Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committee; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, and Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the president.

The committee was first set up in 1946.

Pres. George Meany heads AFL members of the committee.

ORIT Board Meets In Costa Rica

The executive board of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), western hemisphere arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, met last week in San Jose, Costa Rica. The CIO was represented by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, an ORIT assistant secretary, and Michael Ross, of the CIO International Affairs Dept.

2 Union Veterans Mourned

TWO VETERAN American unionists—Frank Bonacci in Utah and Abraham Silverman in New York—were mourned by hundreds of friends last week.

Bonacci, veteran organizer of the mine workers in the Utah-Wyoming coal fields, died at 69. Until his retirement several months ago, he had served for many years as CIO regional director in Salt Lake City.

Bonacci served six terms in the Utah House of Representatives and was the author of several labor bills.

The Salt Lake City Deseret News & Telegram editorially praised Bonacci as "a dynamic and persuasive" speaker and fighter and "a good citizen."

In New York City, several thousand cutters and other members of the CIO Clothing Workers attended services for Silverman, who was a founding member of New York Clothing Cutters Local 4 and its business agent since 1930. He was 65.

You And Your Money—

Benson Dangles Price Cut 'Bait;' CIO Decries Farm, Labor Split

THE "BAIT" of lower retail food prices is being dangled before consumers by Administration spokesmen, in an effort to divide farm and city dwellers and push through the GOP program for flexible" farm price supports.

While the consumer price index is sticking at a level close to its all time record and coffee prices are running away (see stories this page), Sec. of Agriculture Benson has taken the lead in trying to start a farm-labor fight—but CIO isn't buying any of it.

At a recent hearing of the Senate Agriculture Committee, Benson asked:

"At what point will the 140 million Americans who do not live on farms rise up—as they did in the potato fiasco of a few years ago—and demand not revision but outright elimination of all direct aid to agriculture?"

For Benson, long a foe of effective government action for a healthy farm economy (which is mighty important to city workers), that was more of a statement than a question.

Benson got his question answered promptly by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and it was a resounding "no."

Reuther charged the Agriculture Secretary was trying to cover up his "virtually do-nothing policy for the past year" by attempting "to incite city workers against farmers and farmers against city workers, by falsely stating that city workers are opposed to price supports for farm products."

In letters to Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.) and Rep. Hope (R. Kans.), chairmen of the Senate and House Agriculture Committees, Reuther said labor "shall not be split away from and put in opposition to the working farm families of America."

Instead of trying "to set American citizens at each other's throats," Reuther urged the Eisenhower Administration to adopt policies insuring adequate income for farmers, to reduce farm-to-retail price spreads by lowering middlemen's markups, and to increase distribution of so-called surplus foods at home and abroad.

Coffee Prices Due To Hit $1.25

IF YOU'RE paying 15c a cup and $1.10 or more a pound for coffee, you ain't seen nothing, yet.

By the end of February, housewives will be paying as much as $1.25 a pound for coffee in their grocery stores, according to the National Coffee Association.

And the Agriculture Dept. gloomily says it may be "one or two years" before there's any trend toward lower coffee prices.

In New York City, retail coffee sales were reported to be off 50%.

As result of increasing consumer indignation, Pres. Eisenhower at midweek announced that the Federal Trade Commission had begun a full-scale investigation of coffee price increases, particularly dealings on the commodity exchange. FTC Chairman Howrey blamed the increases "in part to speculative activity."

A lot of steam was let off in both houses on Congress on the runaway price trend of the Brazilian beverage.

Most to the point was the report of Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) that wholesale commodity speculators are more to blame for the present price "gouge" than the reported decline in Brazilian production.

Gillette back in 1950 headed a senatorial investigation of coffee price highjacking, which resulted in no Justice Dept. action.

He said, "much of the drastic rise in coffee prices is due more to certain gambling and speculative practices than to economic factors of supply and demand."

On the Republican side of the congressional coffee urn, Sen. Beall (Md.) also wanted an investigation. Rep. Smith (Wisc.) went so far as to suggest a strike by coffee drinkers on "a coffeeless Wednesday each week." And Sen. Aiken, from the Vermont dairyland, offered milk as a substitute—natch.

At the State Dept.—where tea (in popular fancy) is reported to be the favorite drink—officials offered tepid defenses of the Latin American coffee producing nations. But if prices continue up, they added, "heaven help us."

Lawrence Story On Murrow TV Program

A documentary film story of Lawrence, Mass., depicting the effect of the declining textile industry on the city and its people, will be shown on the Edward Murrow program, See It Now, over CBS-TV at 10:30 p.m., Feb. 2.

BLS Index Dips Slightly; New Price Climb Hinted

A BARELY visible decline in the cost of living was registered during the month ending Dec. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed in its Consumers Price Index for the last month of the year.

The index stood at 114.9 on Dec. 15 compared to 115.0 on Nov. 15, a decline of less than one-tenth of 1%. The monthly average for 1953 stood at 114.4 because of brief drops earlier in the year. For the last seven months, however, the reading was above the average.

The over-all increase in prices during 1953 was slightly less than 1%, according to the BLS.

Declines of nine-tenths of 1% in transportation prices, due principally to a drop in the price of used cars, and of two-tenths of 1% in clothing prices caused the December decline. Although food prices were higher in 31 of the 46 cities surveyed, an increase of only three-tenths of 1% was reported.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index.

Child Care Tax Credit Approved

A LIMITED child care tax credit was recommended last week by the House Ways & Means Committee, but it falls far short of past proposals to allow working wives to deduct costs of care for their youngsters.

The committee voted to allow deduction of actual costs of child care, up to a maximum of $600, to widows, widowers and legally separated persons who are heads of a household. And the deduction would be allowable only for children up to 10 years of age.

The special tax deduction would be extended to working wives only in cases where the husband is handicapped and incapable of self-support.

The committee, however, turned down a proposal by Rep. Mills (D. Ark.) to extend the child care tax reduction to all working mothers. Also rejected was a move by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.) to increase the allowance to $1200 in some cases.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

WITH MANY BRANDS of coffee already $1.10 a pound and threatening to go higher, we may soon become a nation of tea drinkers, with very sparing use of coffee. And if that happens, you'll soon see the price of coffee head down as it has before.

Actually there is reason to believe there is no real coffee shortage and the market is being rigged.

Just since December, wholesale quotations for coffee have jumped 15 to 20c a pound, and retail prices have been spurting upwards as dealers get in new stocks. Alfred K. Landesberger, coffee department manager of Eastern Cooperatives, Inc., points out that the rise has been accompanied by headlines and stories like "Frost Damage in Brazil," and "There will not be coffee enough to fill the increasing needs of the world."

But, Landesberger says, the largest coffee-growing countries keep strict controls over shipments of coffee and its price. He feels that high financing of coffee has been keeping it in the interior of these countries, and that this regulation has been affecting prices more than actual supply and demand. Although the daily newspapers keep repeating the shortage story, which they are spoon-fed by coffee trade interests, estimates of the supply of coffee have varied enormously. Landesberger says flatly no real coffee shortage is in sight unless consumers start a rush for it and particularly start hoarding the vacuum packs.

Rate Decision Is Set Aside

The recent consumer victory on federal regulation of natural gas pipeline rates has been proved short-lived.

Last November, in a case involving Phillips Petroleum Co., the Supreme Court ruled that the Federal Power Commission must regulate rates on interstate pipelines. The ruling affected the entire industry.

Now the Supreme Court has reversed itself, without explaining, and agreed to review the case. Only Justice Black dissented. LPA

Try The Soluble Brands

So don't fall for the shortage story and, above all, don't let the higher price of coffee drain you of money needed for other things, as it can in a family of several enthusiastic coffee drinkers.

You can keep the lid on your coffee bill by careful use and serving other beverages more. You can still make a cup of tea for a penny or less compared to the 2.5c to 3c a cup for coffee. As millions of moderate-income families cut down their coffee consumption, you'll see the price sink again.

Soluble or dried coffee is definitely a money-saver. Modern soluble coffee is a much improved product, and even fussy coffee drinkers now like it, as indicated by the fact its sales have doubled in the past five years. You may save as much as promised by the makers of some brands of soluble drinks, since inveterate coffee drinkers like to use a heavier dose of it than the packages indicate. For example, some brands of soluble coffee claim you can get 40 cups out of two ounces—the number you usually get from a pound of ground fresh coffee. But coffee experts say you are more likely to get only 32 cups. Even so, soluble coffee in the larger-size containers, which have a lower cost per ounce, give you the equivalent of a pound of coffee for only 65-70c. Nor has the price tag on soluble coffee gone up as immediately and drastically as that on fresh-ground.

Moreover, the use of soluble coffee eliminates waste, since you measure it out for only as many cups as you actually use.

Tips On Coffee Money-Savers

Here are ways to save on coffee:

- You save substantially on the private brands of the large markets. Stores that have fast turnover also usually have fresh stocks. And freshness of coffee is generally a more important factor in flavor than even the blend. Vacuum-packed coffee costs more and is unnecessary except possibly for a small family that uses little.
- Moderate use of chicory (some like it, some don't) increases the number of cups you get out of a pound of coffee. It increases the yield much beyond the amount of chicory added.
- Measure your use of ground coffee carefully, in terms of level tablespoons.
- Make only the number of cups you actually need.
- Don't stick to just one brand because you always have used it. Prices vary, not only on fresh-ground but on soluble coffee. It pays to experiment with the less-expensive brands. You may find them quite satisfactory, especially since freshness is the vital factor.

Store Union Elects Greenberg

THE CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union has elected Max Greenberg as president, succeeding the late Irving M. Simon.

Greenberg was elected at a meeting of the RWDSU Executive Board last week in Detroit.

The new international president, who is 47, is a veteran of the CIO store union. Since 1937, he has been president of Local 108, the Retail Union of New Jersey. And since 1948 he has been an RDWSU international vice president.

Greenberg, who lives in West Orange, N. J., is a member of the State Mediation Board.

By John V. Riffe

ALMOST A YEAR AGO, CIO saw a grave problem arising out of the demand by selfish employers that the U. S. end the agreement between our nation and Mexico, which gave protection to the immigrant farm labor brought into this country to help harvest the various crops. Even at best, the conditions of these farm laborers were not up to American standards.

CIO held a conference at El Paso, Tex., to discuss with the Mexican labor organizations, particularly CTM, the ways in which organized labor could help the situation, not only for the protection of the exploited Mexican workers, but also for the protection of our own workers.

Not only was labor brought in by agreement, but hundreds of thousands of workers were recruited from among the illegal immigrants, the "wetbacks," who slipped across the border, almost at will. The labor organizations called upon both governments to allow labor representatives to sit in on their negotiations regarding housing, wages, working conditions—but we received no response.

LAST DECEMBER the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) held a full emergency conference in Mexico City. CIO, AFL, the Mine Workers, the Railway Brotherhoods were represented, along with CTM, and various independent unions from Mexico. The danger of a breakdown in negotiations was close at hand, and that breakdown, between the governments, would deprive workers of what few protections they now possessed.

A delegation met with Ambassador Francis P. White, in Mexico City. To say the least, our reception was neither helpful nor friendly.

Now, the breakdown is practically complete. It is estimated that some two million illegal immigrants will pour into the country, to work on the farms, to move into the factories, afraid to join unions, afraid to protest against the greed, even the brutality, of selfish employers. They are forced to work at wages that cannot help but break the high standards painfully won by our unions.

Agricultural workers are already the forgotten men and women of our society. The protections, under the law, for our own fellow citizens who work on farms are far and few between. This mass of cheap labor descending on our workers is a monumental problem.

NO LESS DISTURBING is the role that must be played by our Dept. of Labor, through the Employment Service. The department must now set up recruiting offices, right across the border—actually encouraging the wetbacks to come in and be sold.

The exploitation of Mexican nationals cannot fail to injure the relationships we have built up with that good neighbor.

Some time ago, Pres. Eisenhower called for a foreign policy based on deeds, instead of words. How does this action in Mexico stand the test of his own thinking?

Mine, Mill Leader Guilty Of T-H Red Oath Perjury

A SENTENCE of two concurrent prison terms of five years each has been imposed on Clinton Jencks following his conviction on a charge of perjury in signing a Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist oath while he was president of Local 890, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, at Silver City, N. M.

Jencks was found guilty by a jury in U. S. District Court at El Paso, Tex., after a trial during which he did not deny he was a Communist. Thirteen government witnesses testified that he was a Communist from 1946 through 1950, when he signed the T-H affidavit. The defense did not call a single witness, offering only his World War II record in evidence.

Failure of the defense to rebut government testimony was touched upon heavily by Assistant U. S. Dist. Atty. Holvey Adams in his summary.

"Thirteen witnesses have told the jury the Communistic history of this defendant," he said. "What have they (the defense) brought to show you the truth? Not a single witness."

Jencks was released in $10,000 bond pending an appeal.

Jencks was defended by John McTernan, former San Francisco lawyer who was associated with Henry A. Wallace's Progressive Party.

The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers were expelled from the CIO in 1950 on charges of being Communist-dominated. Two major locals in Butte, Mont., long an MMSW stronghold, recently withdrew and returned to the CIO through the CIO Steelworkers.

GCEOC Wins In Capital

FIRST VICTORY in a broad organizing campaign has been won by Washington Local 1 of the CIO Government Employees.

An initial contract providing a 14% wage increase and the union shop was won for building maintenance workers at the headquarters of Group Health Association, a co-op medical center.

The contract with the Mark Kinkler Co., a building management firm, was won after a 20-hour strike called after some three months of negotiations.

Along with the wage boosts and union shop, contract terms include the checkoff, paid vacations, six paid holidays, six days sick leave, grievance procedure and reinstatement of two discharged workers.

Michigan CIO Starts Drive To Reverse Job Layoff Trend

By TED OGAR

AN EIGHT-POINT program to halt and reverse unemployment in Michigan, with higher unemployment compensation benefits and public works projects the key proposals, was adopted at a Full Employment Conference co-sponsored by the Michigan CIO Council and the CIO Auto Workers.

The meeting, held in the shadow of the State Capitol, at Lansing, dramatized the plight of the 167,000 Michiganders who have been dumped onto the unemployment heap. Most of the 1000 delegates stayed over for the third annual Michigan CIO Legislative Conference the following day.

The CIO program called for increasing unemployment compensation benefits from the $35 a week maximum to between 65 and 85% of the state or national average wage, whichever is higher.

It stressed also community projects and public works, including new and better roads and schools, expanded parking facilities, more adequate recreational programs and facilities, more hospitals, expanded medical services and a realistic housing program.

MICHIGAN now pays its jobless a basic $27 weekly, plus $2 for each dependent up to four. Gov. G. Mennen Williams pointed out that benefits in the Detroit area are about $50 a month less than direct relief payments.

"This is contrary to the intent of the law as orginally adopted," he said. "The job of unemployment compensation is to stabilize the economy, to keep money in circulation, to keep the general economy moving so that the company which lays off a worker can sell enough products to rehire him."

Other points in the CIO program—aimed at building purchasing power—were:

Increasing the level and duration of workmen's compensation benefits; state disability insurance; state and municipal fair employment practices laws; a $1.25 an hour state minimum wage law; higher state old age and social security benefits, and a moratorium on debt payments for jobless workers.

PRES. GUS SCHOLLE of the Michigan CIO Council, recalling that the Republican-controlled Legislature has consistently ignored CIO proposals for better unemployment and disability compensation legislation, suggested a new tactic.

"We should organize delegations of the unemployed and the maimed and the disabled," he said, "and take them to the State Capitol and let the Republicans see and hear firsthand the results of their refusal to provide adequate benefits. Maybe that's needed to thaw out Republican hearts."

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the UAW blamed overproduction by the auto industry for causing most of Michigan's unemployment.

"The auto industry, with the exception of General Motors and Ford, is a sick one," he said.

"The problem is to get enough buying power into the hands of people who want to buy cars."

Morse Urges Public Works Now To Stop Job Layoffs

A LARGE-SCALE federal public works program is necessary now to meet the problem of spreading unemployment, Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) told the third annual Michigan CIO Council Legislative Conference, at Lansing.

"I refuse to accept the false notion that America must have periods of unemployment," he declared. "You can have full employment during the transition from a shooting war economy to a peacetime economy if government recognizes its responsibility for providing checks and balances."

He bluntly blamed growing joblessness on the Republican Party, which he bolted in 1952 to campaign for Democrat Adlai Stevenson. As early as last spring, he said, the GOP was "laying out the pattern of the 20s that led to the depression."

He added that the country cannot endure "this return to a laissez faire economy and the false doctrines of the cruel law of supply and demand."

THE MORE than 1000 delegates cheered when he called on the people to "correct the great mistake of 1952 by electing a Democratic Congress in 1954."

"The only hope for America lies in the liberal wing of the Democratic Party," he said.

He said he would be "delighted" to campaign for Gov. G. Mennen Williams or former Sen. Blair Moody should one run for the seat now held by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.).

Food Monopoly Inquiry Asked

Congressional investigation of monopoly control of food prices was demanded by the Michigan CIO Council legislative conference.

CIO Organizer Nails UE Libel, Gets $1500 Award

THE FINE hand of retribution, guided by a Pennsylvania court, dipped into the treasury of the United Electrical Workers and came out with $1500 in balm to soothe the wounded feelings of a CIO representative libelled in a typical Communist smear.

Armed with at least the financial means to repair any damage to his good name inflicted by the UE in an organizing campaign is Joseph M. Walsh, formerly CIO regional director in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., now a CIO representative assigned to the Communications Workers in Chicago.

The libel took place back in 1950, during a pre-National Labor Relations Board election campaign at the General Electric Co. plant in Scranton, Pa. The UE distributed a leaflet charging that Walsh had held a "secret meeting" with a high GE official in a Scranton hotel "last April." Actually the meeting had taken place in April 1949. Instead of being secret it was out in the open—at a Scranton Univ. labor-management forum.

The maligned CIO official filed suit for libel against the national UE and its Local 125 at Scranton, but not against officers of the local. After a three-day trial in Lackawanna County (Pa.) court, he was awarded $2500 in punitive damages. Successful libel suits in Pennsylvania usually yield the winner 7c gross.

The UE appealed the verdict and a long delay was in sight. It ended when the UE offered to settle for $1500 and Walsh, on the advice of his lawyer, agreed.

CIO Meet Sets Contract Path To Job Safety

By FRED ROSS

"THERE IS no expiration date for safety," Al Steinkamp told his 300 fellow delegates to the first National CIO Conference on Safety and Occupational Health at Chicago.

He was reading from the contract of Local 395, CIO Oil Workers, with Standard Oil of Ohio.

Steinkamp said the sentence meant just what it says—a clause providing for a joint labor-management safety committee has been in the contract some dozen years. And he said his 11 years' experience had convinced him it was a good thing.

His fellow delegates, who represented scores of CIO international unions and state and city CIO councils, agreed—they unanimously recommended the establishment of such committees by all CIO local unions through collective bargaining.

They also called for federal and state investigations of workmen's compensation laws, and urged that compensation cover at least 80% of an injured worker's wage loss.

The delegates thought the conference was "a darn good idea," but they didn't stop there.

They unanimously called on the CIO officers and Executive Board to approve annual conferences to be held under the auspices of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health, which sponsored the first parley.

The conference was chaired by the committee head, Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, whose lively humor helped keep the delegates' attention focused on the serious matters of safety and Health.

Other committee members are Pres. John Green of the Railroad Workers; T. M. McCormick, and William J. Pachler, secretary-treasurers of the Oil Workers and the Utility Workers, respectively; Pat Greathouse, director of Region 4, Auto Workers, and Dominic Tripode of the Playthings Workers. The committee's secretary is Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Bosses Fight Safety

It also includes Frank Burke, safety director of the Steelworkers, and George Brown, secretary-treasurer of the Oregon CIO Council. With John Kumpel, safety director of the Rubber Workers, they took part in one of a series of panel discussion.

For a couple of hours the delegates fired questions on safety at the three men and at William L. Connelly, director of the Bureau of Labor Standards, and Dr. Seward E. Miller, of the Div. of Occupational Health, U. S. Public Health Service, other panel members.

Burke said "I'm getting sick and tired of hearing employers say they can't do anything about safety, while they pay lawyers $50,000 and upwards annually to fight safety and workmen's compensation legislation."

He urged the CIO be given wider participation in the National Safety Council, that the delegates demand more state safety inspectors and that they work at the job of industrial safety "on and off the job."

Brown told one of the reasons the Bureau of Labor Standards was able to report substantial improvement in the accident and death rates in lumbering—the country's most hazardous occupation.

He said the Oregon CIO Council and the CIO Woodworkers in 1951 succeeded in having the State Legislature pass a measure consolidating all safety inspection in the State Labor Dept., which previously had shared the responsibility with the State Industrial Accident Commission.

This time the courts upheld the law. They had earlier declared unconstitutional a similar measure.

Direct Referendum Move

Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council, a member of the workmen's compensation panel, said a union representative should be assigned to work full time with state industrial commissions, which are "infested by management representatives like mice in a corn crib."

He said "maybe the time has come to by-pass legislatures" and go directly to the people by the way of petition and referendum. Clayman said the Ohio CIO would initiate a petition for improved workmen's compensation at the fall elections.

The ratio of workmen's compensation benefits to wages is lower than when the compensation laws were enacted some 40 years ago, according to Jerome Pollack, who is UAW-CIO Social Security consultant.

Pollack pointed out that workmen's compensation benefits have grown less than the benefits under relief programs and other social legislation.

Larger Appropriations

Frank Fernbach, associate director of the CIO Education and Research Dept., said $35 million was a "piteously small" amount to operate the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation. He said a much larger sum is needed.

R. J. Thomas, administrative assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, said passing resolutions on health and safety at CIO conventions was "not enough—that's the reason a conference such as this must be held to stimulate interest."

Other speakers included Spencer Miller, Assistant Secretary of Labor; Bruce Green, consultant on workmen's compensation, Bureau of Labor Standards; John Moulin, Illinois industrial commissioner; Dr. Paul Magnuson, chairman of former Pres. Truman's Health Commission, and Julius Rothman, assistant to Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee.

What We're Talking About

A novel but unhealthy way of heating bus garages was described to the CIO Safety Conference by Pres. Matthew Guinan of CIO Transport Workers Local 100 in New York City.

He said the Third Ave. Bus Lines heat four garages by keeping the Diesel engines of the buses running. Guinan doubted that this economy move by the company to save the cost of installing proper heating systems helped the bus drivers' health.

Neither do the drivers, who have stopped work several times in a futile effort to have the firm halt the practice. Conference Chairman Michael J. Quill, who is also TWU-CIO international president, said that a safety clause in the next contract should be the remedy.

Drive Urged For Better Compensation

THE CIO Conference on Safety and Occupational Health unanimously adopted a program calling for greater safety on the job, improved workmen's compensation laws, and the extension of federal and state rehabilitation programs.

In a series of recommendations to the CIO officers and Executive Board, the conference urged that:

- Each international union establish safety training courses and seek contract clauses establishing joint labor-management safety committees in every plant.
- The CIO Education and Research Dept. include safety training courses in its schools and conferences.
- The Executive Board call for federal investigation of the Workmen's Compensation Act and recommend to CIO councils that they press for probes of state workmen's compensation laws.
- A "full-scale campaign" be instituted to bring the facts about inadequacies of workmen's compensation to the public.
- The CIO throw its "full legislative and political action force" behind Pres. Eisenhower's proposals for an adequate federal rehabilitation program.
- CIO councils be instructed to "rally their legislative and political forces behind state programs for rehabilitation."

Carey Backs 'Truth Dollars' Drive

CIO MEMBERS know that the people of the Soviet satellite countries behind the Iron Curtain depend on Radio Free Europe to tell them the truth, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey said in a radio broadcast last week.

"We are determined that this voice of freedom and democracy shall continue to be heard," he said in reporting over the Mutual network on the Crusade for Freedom's current campaign to raise funds for Radio Free Europe.

Maintaining that "we cannot allow a shortage of dollars to gag the voice of freedom," Carey said:

"Today—and every day while this eminently worthwhile campaign continues—in each of the 42 state councils and the 239 local councils of the CIO, our members are actively working for the Crusade for Freedom.

"In countless thousands of union halls scattered all across this nation and located in tiny towns and huge industrial centers, local officers of the CIO are circulating Truth Scrolls. CIO members are signing these scrolls with the clear realization that each signature is concrete proof to the men of the Kremlin that Radio Free Europe is the voice of free America.

"And the men and women who are the CIO also are contributing their Truth Dollars to the campaign to keep the transmitters of Radio Free Europe humming."

CIO Blasts GOP Tax Deal

"I HOPE I AM overwary; but if I am not, there is even now something of evil omen amongst us. I mean the increasing disregard for law which pervades the country—the growing disposition to substitute the wild and furious passions in lieu of the sober judgment of the courts, and the worse than savage mobs for the executive ministers of justice."

'Take It Easy,' Says GOP, On 'Adjustment'

A "TAKE IT easy" and "don't rock the boat" attitude was proposed on the nation's situation by Pres. Eisenhower and a series of high Administration officials last week, in the wake of official figures showing that unemployment is rising at the rate of 500,000 a month.

In a letter to Walter P. Reuther, president of CIO and the Auto Workers, Eisenhower said:

"While we must recognize and seek to deal with particular instances of economic hardship as they arise, it is essential to the achievement of greater national economic strength to maintain a steady, unshakable attitude in the capacity of the American economy for continued growth.

"All of our citizens in positions of leadership have the responsibility of placing in the proper perspective transitional periods such as we are presently passing through."

The President's letter was in reply to Reuther's request for a national industry-labor-farm-government full employment conference. Eisenhower declined to accept the proposal; indirectly he indicated rejection.

Good Times, But—

At a press conference, the President, chuckling, rejected the idea that it is unfair or even un-American to discuss a recession—which has been argued by GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall and House Speaker Martin.

Eisenhower also said that good times depend upon prosperity for all of the people, not just for corporations, but he was being contradicted by a series of GOP spokesmen at congressional hearings during the week.

A major GOP legislative goal is to reduce taxes on business, on the argument that this "trickle-down theory" will provide "incentives" for business expansion, jobs and payrolls.

And at the same time Eisenhower was talking about prosperity for the masses, Chairman William M. Martin of the Federal Reserve Board opposed tax relief for consumers and said cuts should be limited to business.

Just 'Doing Fine'

One Republican leader, Rep. Wolcott (N. Y.), even claimed that tax savings through higher exemptions for low and middle-income families would be "moves to create inflation." CIO in a letter to all members of Congress condemned moves to give the bulk of tax savings to a "group of privileged people" (story on this page).

Through the week the Joint Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report heard a series of Administrative spokesmen. CIO's views are secheduled for presentation on Feb. 15 by Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee, and by Reuther on Feb. 17.

The most optimistic views came from Treasury Sec. Humphrey, who said the nation is just in a "rolling adjustment" and will be "doing fine" if it keeps operating at present levels.

ECONOMIC INDICATORS—Chart from recent report of Pres. Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers shows how manufacturing employment (solid line) has dropped sharply since mid-1953, paralleling industrial production decline (broken line), while total nonagricultural employment (dotted line) has shown much slighter decline.

His arguments for Administration tax programs drew strong fire from such Democratic members as Sens. Douglas (Ill.) and Fulbright (Ark.). And when Humphrey claimed that steel tonnage production has kept up, despite the drop in output to less than 75% of capacity, he was forced to retract by Douglas' protests. (Actually, this basic economic indicator is 500,000 tons under a year ago.)

On the employment front, the joint committee was told by the Administration that unemployment "in the foreseeable future" would be stabilized between two million and 2.5 million persons.

However, there's considerable doubt about the completeness of U. S. jobless figures, and Reuther charged the government is using "sleight-of-hand in dealing with unemployment figures."

Reuther estimated that actual unemployment now is above 3.6 million, and not the 2,360,000 given in the latest Commerce Dept. report. That latter figure did not include 275,000 listed as on "temporary layoffs."

Jobs now have declined for five straight months, for a total decrease of about 3.5 million persons in the labor force since the peak last August.

Layoffs during the last week struck 1800 at the Great Lakes Steel Corp. near Detroit, 2000 at the Indiana Arsenal at Charlestown, Ind., and 4500 at Hudson in Detroit. Unemployment in the Detroit area now exceeds 100,000. In contrast, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad rehired 1500 out of 11,000 workers laid off at the end of last year.

Production Falls

The basic industrial production of the U. S., according to the Federal Reserve Board, dropped about 1.5% in December with a "slight further decline" in January. Production now is 7% below the 1953 peak. Industry wages and salaries in December were some $2 billion less than the previous month.

Several CIO councils were urging state legislative action to aid employment.

The Iowa CIO Council asked a special session of the Legislature to up jobless benefits from the present $26 level. In Rhode Island, a $10 increase in benefits to $35 weekly was proposed by the CIO Textile Workers. In Indiana, Gov. Craig has rejected requests for a special session.

'Privileged Few' Get GOP Tax Savings, CIO Protests

By MILTON PLUMB

A "GROUP of privileged people" will get the bulk of tax savings totalling more than $3 billion which the House Ways & Means Committee had recommended through Jan. 25, the CIO told Congress last week.

In a letter to each member of the House and Senate, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and director of the CIO Legislative Committee, said that, although there are 52 million families in the U. S., the chief beneficiaries of the tax cuts will be only the 335,000 families who own four-fifths of the total value of all publicly-owned stock.

Oliver cited estimates of experts that corporations and holders of corporate stock will receive $2.75 billion, or over 90%, of the approved tax savings.

"Forty-eight and one-half million American families do not own any corporate stock at all," Oliver wrote. He added that a recent Univ. of Michigan survey showed that nearly 3.2 million of the 3.5 million remaining families own a total of only one-fifth of the total value of public stocks. He continued:

"While voting these favors for those who need them least, the Republican majority of the committee turned back a Democratic proposal for an increase of only $100 in individual income tax exemptions. The bulk of the savings under this proposal would go to millions of families in the lower income brackets."

Defeated

The perennial proposal of Rep. Mason (R. Ill.) to tax undistributed earnings of producer and consumer co-operatives was defeated last week by the tax-writing House Ways & Means Committee. The vote was 13 to 10.

OLIVER said that the $100 increase in exemptions would cost the government only $2.5 billion in revenue as against the $2.75 billion voted "for the people at the top."

Declaring that the approved tax cuts on dividends and depreciation are "major concessions to a limited group of taxpayers," Oliver said the committee "justified" them on grounds that they will "tend to stimulate the economy by permitting an expansion of business investments."

"The economy, faced now with growing unemployment, could best be stimulated by increasing the purchasing power of the mass of American consumers," Oliver wrote.

MEANWHILE, Sec. of Treasury George M. Humphrey defended the faster depreciation allowances and reduced taxes on dividends before the Joint Economic Committee.

Democrats, led by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), pointed out that the Administration tax program primarily benefits corporations and high income groups and leaves most taxpayers at about present levels.

Douglas accused the Secretary of "pooh-poohing" a decline in the economy, and Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) told Humphrey the problem today is to expand consumption. Tax relief for individuals, particularly low-income groups, is the way to accomplish that, Fulbright said.

Humphrey admitted he couldn't say for sure that the Administration's tax program would give the economy the shot in the arm it needs to level out the present decline.

"I KNOW nobody else who does," he added.

A fight for a $200 increase in the exemption for personal income taxes when the bill reaches the Senate was promised by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.). He said he intends to offer "a series of amendments to provide substantial tax relief, particularly for persons in the middle and lower income brackets."

The Administration, which opposes any reductions at this time for individual income taxpayers, may find itself in additional trouble on tax legislation as the result of a proposal made by Speaker Martin (R. Mass.) that "luxury" taxes be cut 50%.

This would mean a loss of nearly $1 billion in revenue at a time when Pres. Eisenhower has already estimated next year's deficit at about $3 billion.

TWU Solidarity Gains Pact At Biggest U. S. Airline

UNION SOLIDARITY won pay gains, fringe benefits and improved conditions for 6300 American Airlines employes, members of the CIO Transport Workers.

A slowdown, mass demonstrations in more than 70 stations across the country and a strike threat made the airline drop its union-busting proposals and agree to arbitration of wage demands.

TWU-CIO Air Transport Div. pressure on American Airlines forced the country's largest domestic air carrier to drop its million dollar job evaluation program under which it sought to remove any financial gains from a pay award.

Management sought to eliminate automatic progression provided under union contracts.

When the job evaluation gimmick failed the airline attempted substitution of a scope clause with the same purpose. TWU insistence resulted in a clause which guarantees adequate protection and coverage for all employes under contract. The union also won maintenance of present practice instead of a company proposal for unlimited subcontracting of work.

The agreement freezes 16c in cost-of-living increases into the base rates, bringing mechanics to $2.18 an hour. Shift differentials were raised and a new feature calls for up to 60 days' pay for industrial injury or sickness in addition to workmen's compensation.

MASS PROTEST meetings like this one at Tulsa, Okla., by CIO Transport Workers won better pay and conditions for 6300 American Airlines workers.

4 CIO Unions Pound Away At Smith Bill

By AL ZACK

THE CIO's union-by-union analysis of what's wrong with Taft-Hartley and the Eisenhower proposals, which would make it worse, continued last week before the Senate Labor Committee. Four more CIO witnesses were heard.

Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, testified the pending amendments would immeasurably increase the difficulty of the fight "to eliminate the influence of Communists in the American labor movement."

"No legislation that you could devise, aimed solely at getting rid of the Communists, could possibly undo the damage such amendments would cause to the morale of the American worker," he told the committee.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, of the CIO Communication Workers, said the proposals of Pres. Eisenhower would "destroy the progress which labor has made over the past 20 years."

Limited Hearings

He criticized the Administration for allowing "an entire year" to go by before submitting recommendations — including "a strike vote proposal which is entirely new," and criticized the committee for limiting hearings to a total of only two weeks. Beirne said:

"All interested parties should be given adequate opportunity to express their views on this, and other proposals in the President's message. Such haste is not consonant with democracy."

Boyd E. Payton, vice president and southern organizing director of the CIO Textile Workers, directed his testimony to the President's proposal on "free speech" for employers. The employer, he said, "is not the one who needs help." What is needed, he continued, is "freedom of coercion" from employers.

Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, testified on behalf of the Conference of American Maritime Unions, composed of 13 CIO, AFL and UMW unions in the industry.

Haddock said the Administration's proposal to change the union shop provisions of Taft-Hartley as they affect the maritime, construction and other casual employment industries "are of no benefit to the organized seamen."

Joins The Act

The House Labor Committee is prepared to jump into the Taft-Hartley act.

Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) called for a meeting this week to discuss labor legislation and other measures.

Speaker Martin (R. Mass.) said Republican members of the committee are in "general agreement" with Pres. Eisenhower's proposals for amending T-H.

Ammunition For Reds

Carey, telling the committee he was in complete accord with testimony presented by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and other CIO witnesses, observed:

"Nothing could provide more effective ammunition for the Communist arsenal in the United States, nothing could better serve as Communist fertilizer for a rebirth of Communist influence in the American labor movement, than the enactment of these further constrictions on democratic trade unionism which Pres. Eisenhower and the Smith Bill proposes."

Carey declared that the Senate committee "will betray its solemn obligations if it fails to realize, in every moment of its deliberations, that it is not dealing solely with a domestic issue of labor-management relations.

"It is dealing with an issue of world-wide democratic leadership, an issue that will affect the attitude of millions upon millions of workers in Asia, Europe, Africa, South America, and particularly in the Russian satellite countries, toward the United States," he said.

'Free Speech' Issue

Directing his fire at the Smith proposals for amending the so-called "free speech" sections, Carey said:

"I ask the committee to examine the source of the pressure on behalf of this so-called free speech issue. If you do that, you must, perforce, conclude that it comes primarily from anti-union employers.

"The outstanding example, in the industry with which I am most familiar, is the General Electric Co. That company has been among the loudest complainants about the deprivation of constitutional privileges.

"About six years ago, GE's anti-union zeal drove it to publish ads in metropolitan newspapers to tell all and sundry, including its employes who were engaged in an intense struggle to throw off Communists leadership of their union, that the company wished 'A Plague On Both Your Houses.'

"That generous benediction has recently been affirmed. During every election at a GE location in which IUE-CIO has engaged in the last three years, GE has issued letters attacking all unions in general, and the IUE-CIO in particular.

"All this is done, of course, with the design of deterring the employes from selecting a collective bargaining agent."

Not Forward Step

Beirne recalled Eisenhower's campaign promises on T-H reform and said:

"By no stretch of reason can these proposals be looked upon as a step forward insuring the fair treatment to labor and management which the President promised. These proposals include a few transparent, superficial gestures to relieve labor, and a great many provisions which, if enacted, would destroy the progress labor has made over the past 20 years."

The proposals, Beirne said, are an invitation extended to employers "to abuse their tremendus economic power over employes." He cited examples where this had been done in the telephone industry under the present free speech provisions of the law.

"The proposed amendments," he said, "do not liberalize the anti-union provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act to benefit labor unions, except in a few minor details.

"In fact, most of the proposed amendments further extend the anti-union provisions of the law in a manner which certainly cannot be considered to be a liberalization of these provisions."

'Captive Audiences'

Payton told the committee the Textile Workers did not seek to curb the legitimate free speech of employers. "What we would restrain," he said, "are those employer communications designed to strike terror into the heart rather than influence the mind."

He called for prohibition of employer "captive audiences" during working hours and for a return to the Supreme Court doctrine that an employer's right to free speech did not allow him to intimidate or coerce employes.

Haddock urged adoption of an amendment introduced last year by Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) that "would provide for a bona fide union hiring hall." In passing it, he concluded, Congress "would provide the merchant seamen with the protection they need and deserve."

His Sneers Are Showing

Sen. Goldwater (R. Ariz.), who constantly brags at Senate Labor Committee hearings that he is a life-long employer, was caught last week with his sneers down.

Goldwater, after hearing testimony by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey in opposition to Administration proposals to give employers more latitude for propagandizing workers in captive audiences, lashed out at Carey. He was tired, Goldwater said, of being part of a captive audience—the committee which was hearing witnesses.

Carey, pinned the Senator's ears back. "You can come late and leave early," he said. "You aren't a captive audience. No boss can fire you if you don't attend these sessions. I resent the insinuation."

Sen. Neely (D. W.Va.), in a sharply worded rebuttal to the Goldwater charge, reiterated the Carey statement and in a matter of moments the sneer had left Goldwater's face and was replaced with a deep red flush which lasted throughout the session.

A Case Of T-H 'Free Speech'

Here's how Taft-Hartley's "free speech" provision isn't working out in Georgia."

CIO TEXTILE WORKERS last month were trying to organize the 600 workers at a tire cord mill operated by the U. S. Rubber Co. in Hogansville, Ga. They couldn't hire a meeting place in the town so they signed a lease to rent a theater in Grantville, 13 miles away.

The day before the meeting the theater operator phoned to say that he had to cancel the lease on instructions of a cotton mill owner who held the mortgage on the theater.

To demonstrate his own good faith the theater owner offered the use of his farm for the meeting. TWUA-CIO accepted and the meeting was held in the open with about 100 in attendance.

TWUA Rep. John Scott complained about the denial of free speech guarantees by mill interests in a blistering letter to Sen. George (D. Ga.). Said Scott:

"This practice is commonplace in the smaller textile centers of the state. . . . It is similar to (tactics) used by the dictatorships we were fighting, namely Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy and now Communist Russia.

"It seems to me that the only difference is that in these mill communities it is on a miniature scale, done for selfish interest and with the express desire of undermining rights as we know them in the U. S. and Georgia."

Question & Answer

From the transcript of Pres. Eisenhower's press conference of Feb. 3:

"Question: . . . You referred in your Message to Congress that this was not the time for raising the minimum wage; it was a matter of timing. Does this mean that you don't plan to recommend a raise in minimum wages while we are holding the present level of unemployment?

"Answer: Well, he thought his Economic Report spoke for itself, and if one took any one of these items out of context and began to talk about it, one could make it mean anything.

"He really had put in many hours of hard work with his advisers on that report, and he would respectfully refer them to that Economic Report for what he really believed at this moment about the minimum wage."

'Expert' Testimony

William McChesney Martin, chairman of the board of the Federal Reserve System, testifying before a Congressional committee, as reported by the New York Times:

"If you increase the money consumers have to spend through raising tax exemptions on personal income taxes, there is no guarantee that the consumer will spend the money." Of course not—Mr. Martin probably knows lots of people who use dollar bills as wallpaper!

America's Hoarse Voice

From time to time, Americans ask why our information services abroad fail so dismally to reach the hearts and minds of the people in other lands.

One reason—though not the only one—was offered last week by a special investigating commission appointed by Pres. Eisenhower. It suggested that Sen. McCarthy's repeated criticisms and "investigations" are causing serious harm to the Voice of America.

Desirable results, the commission of four leading citizens declared, "are largely off-set if not destroyed" by this "consistent counter-barrage" against the agency.

It's not the first time that qualified observers have pointed out that the Senator from Wisconsin, whatever his motives, has done much to sabotage our pro-democracy, anti-Communist programs at home and abroad.

Wise Words

Regardless whether they support or oppose the Administration, Americans would do well to ponder the words of Sen. Morse of Oregon, printed elsewhere on this page.

The very independent and out-spoken Senator from the Pacific Northwest reminds the nation that Americans are becoming "frightened" by the economic situation; that we need talk and action about our economic problems—not silence and inaction; that correct governmental policies can do much to avert depression and expand our economy.

The Senator's words are those of a wise man—and he can expect to be soundly criticized for them.

Speaker of the House Joe Martin and the GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall, have both indulged in a name-calling spree against those who are concerned by rising joblessness. Neither of them has offered a program for full employment.

Instead, they have offered platitudes about better times and the need for optimism. Platitudes come cheap, but they have never been known to put a man back to work.

Unequal Proportions

In Other Words—

A Budget For More Deflation

Fiscal policies of the GOP Administration were criticized as "a plan for more deflation" by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), in this digest of a recent speech to the Senate:

By WAYNE MORSE

ADMINISTRATION apologists are attempting to stifle frank discussion of the economic state of the nation by warning against "the prophets of gloom and doom." Republican spokesmen warn that fear can lead to recession and depression, that frightened talk can precipitate economic crisis.

I have news for the Administration: The people of America are becoming frightened. They need more than soothing words because they see concrete evidence of economic distress—lower farm incomes, growing unemployment, shorter workweeks.

It lies within the power of the Administration and Congress to overcome that fear which could cripple the economy. It takes aggressive action on the part of the government to do this. Slogans will not do.

There are those of us in public life who will not be silenced when the good of our country demands frank discussion and sober consideration of what can and must be done.

Under the Employment Act of 1946 it is the continuing responsibility of the government to use all its functions and resources to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power. Fiscal policies have long been recognized as the chief means for implementing the objectives of the Employment Act.

The budget document for fiscal 1955 is a plan for more deflation. It does not meet the Administration's responsibilities under the law to promote maximum employment opportunities for those willing, able and seeking to work.

Unemployment is growing at a faster rate today than in early 1950, when a postwar peak of nearly five million unemployed was reached. During the first week of January 1954 new unemployment was at a rate of 467,500 per week. This exceeded the comparable weekly rate in 1950 by 10% or 42,000.

Mr. President, I am talking about flesh, blood and bone. I am talking about brother Americans who are beginning to suffer economically because, in my judgment, the Eisenhower Administration is not doing what its responsibility calls upon it to do, by seeing to it that the economic welfare of our people, as contemplated in the general welfare clause of the Constitution, is protected.

The declines in production, the loss of employment, and the closing of job opportunities for new workers need not have occurred except for the unwise economic policies put into operation by the Administration when it assumed office early in 1953.

Monetary and debt-management policies purposely restricted the growth of the money supply. Interest rates were raised sharply. Business, farmers, homebuilders, consumers, states and local governments found it difficult and costly to obtain needed credit to finance planned expenditures.

Same Old Banker Economics

The economic policies and the political philosophy that has emerged so far from this Administration reflect the same old banker economies so fashionable — and disaster-laden — before 1929.

The budget which this Congress is asked to approve proposes a reduction of billions of purchasing power in the economy in the next 18 months.

Unless this is offset by a setup in the rate of spending by consumers, increased business investment, and/or net foreign investment, there will be a further drop in production, employment, income and demand which may generate into a spiraling depression.

The underlying effect of the Eisenhower fiscal program is one of restricting the economy, when our objective and goal ought to be to expand the economy. There is no awareness that consumer demand must first be stimulated before businessmen will invest their tax savings and expand capacity, output, employment and payrolls.

The government should plan massive retaliation against recession, but the Administration has blueprinted an economic popgun.

The philosophy followed by Mellon and Hoover is the philosophy reflected in this budget. It can produce the same results today as it did in the 1920's. Such a disaster must not be permitted to happen.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A NUMBER of columnists have noticed that we seem to have a "new" Pres. Eisenhower, a man who at last seems "on top of his job," firmly asserting leadership and proving himself capable of handling hot questions with confidence. This column is in the nature of a minority report.

It is perfectly true that the President, after a year of experience with news conferences, shows a broader acquaintance with the details of government and a capacity to fend off unwelcome questions. He did a marvelous job of batting off questions about the Soviet intelligence agent in Japan who suddenly decided he would prefer to seek refuge with the Americans rather than return to Moscow.

Mr. Eisenhower simply flatly denied that he had any detailed report on the subject, that he assumed he would be informed about anything whenever his people felt it important that he get a report.

The key word here is "report." It is inconceivable, of course, that the President was totally ignorant of the facts, but the situation was delicate and he hadn't had any "report."

Mr. Eisenhower also spoke hotly against the Bricker Amendment. He would never compromise on a word which undermined the long-established division of powers between the legislature, the President and the judiciary.

The plain fact, however, is that Mr. Eisenhower bears a large share of the blame for allowing the Bricker Amendment situation to develop into a Senate rat-race, with ranking Republicans trying to get some "language" agreeable to everyone and with Sen. George (D. Ga.) moving in with some "language" almost as objectionable as Bricker's.

There never was, and isn't now, any reason for the country to get all hot and bothered about the President's treaty-making power. Mr. Eisenhower's repeated statements that he understood the feeling of apprehension among some, and that he would accept an amendment allaying this feeling of apprehension, simply encouraged Bricker and the GOP senatorial leadership to push the issue.

A Real Senate Snafu

The President pulled the rug from under them at the last moment—but the Senate in the meantime had got more hideously snarled than on any other issue in this correspondent's personal memory.

The education of a President is something this country must endure every once in a while. But we might expect any President to have read the Federalist papers sometime before his election, and to understand what Congress proposed to do to him by such things as the Bricker Amendment, and to fight it down the line instead of "conciliating."

His "conciliation" came close to losing the day and the fight.

Elmer Davis, the veteran radio and television correspondent, struggled from his seat at a conference and bluntly asked, "Can you tell us anything more about the 2200?"

The President, as the saying goes, was "on top of his job." He knew, without elaboration, that Davis was asking about the "2200" federal employes alleged by various Administration officials, congressmen and Republican politicos to have been "separated" as "security risks." He said he would try to have a "breakdown" on this later—how many were fired as suspected subversives, how many resigned without knowing there were any secret charges against them, etc.

Promise With A Difference

Suddenly it turned out, when a sharp-eared reporter asked another question, that Mr. Eisenhower hadn't really promised a breakdown. He merely promised to let people know whether a breakdown was feasible.

Postmaster General Summerfield, White House Counsel Bernard Shanley, Joe McCarthy and the Republican National Committee have all used the "numbers racket" for political purposes, to try to make people think that Democrats are soft toward Communism, and that "1456" or "2200" persons have been fired as disloyal by patriotic Republicans.

The President was skillful all right, as he answered the questions from Davis. But the people got no clear pledge that Mr. Eisenhower, head of the Republican party, would stop his subordinates from charging treason to Democrats.

These are just political issues. What Mr. Eisenhower will do in other fields is something else again.

He isn't "on top of his job" when he lets his Labor Secretary, James P. Mitchell, be overridden by the spokesmen of business interests on higher minimum wages and Taft-Hartley revision.

His continued toleration of an extremely right-wing Republican, Clarence Manion, as chairman of a commission to tell him what he thinks about federal-state relationships is deeply disturbing. He may find himself as badly trapped, by reports from the Manion and Hoover Commissions, as he was by his delay on the Bricker Amendment.

His devotion to the trickle-down theory of prosperity—give favors to business and business will "take care" of the people—is disturbing.

Big Money

If money will do it, the Republicans plan to capture a record number of congressional seats this fall.

The GOP may set a spending record for off-year elections. Best estimates are that $3.8 million will be laid out, twice the sum spent in 1950.

On The Economic Horizon—

Steel Union Set To Lead The Way For Annual Wage In Next Talks

THE AMERICAN people in general and members of the CIO Steelworkers in partcular are going to hear a lot about the guaranteed annual wage during the next few months.

The USA-CIO makes that clear in the February issue of its monthly official publication, Steel Labor.

The article also makes it plain that the union is really going after the GAW this year and that it fully intends to "lead the way" in giving workers in heavy industry the same type of economic protection their managements enjoy.

"Just as the Steelworkers pioneered the pension and social insurance programs that set the pattern for industry throughout the country," Steel Labor says, "so we propose to lead the way in the fight against unemployment and depression with the guaranteed annual wage."

The union's negotiations with the industry get under way in May and June. Its spokesmen will take into bargaining sessions a detailed GAW plan, proposing a company-financed trust fund type of program, with limited liability, tied into the unemployment compensation system.

A Matter Of Negotiations

It would yield to employes qualified by three years of service or more a weekly payment based on the standard hourly wage rate up to a maximum of 52 weeks a year. The union feels this is a "basic, practical" way to meet the current unemployment situation, and to help block a "more serious downturn in the years to come." But it doesn't think there is just "one ready-made GAW plan, just waiting to be cranked up and set going."

"From the very beginning," the union publication says, "the union has emphasized that the GAW is a matter for negotiation and cooperative study with industry, a proposal to be hammered into shape at the collective bargaining table."

What such a plan would cost the steel industry cannot be estimated until a lot of studies have been made, Steel Labor emphasizes, on things like unemployment patterns, layoffs and payrolls. The industry has been asked to provide the figures.

The Canadian Angle

Meantime, the Research Dept. of the Canadian Congress of Labor, with which USA and other CIO locals in Canada are affiliated, completed a survey of studies on the feasibility of GAW plans and their limitations. It came to the conclusion that organized labor is looking to the GAW for "regularity of employment and of wage."

"The unions are not seeking to put a premium on idleness," the department said in its monthly bulletin. "The guaranteed annual wage will lead to . . . some levelling out of the employment peaks and valleys which are characteristic of a good many industries."

"Of course we have a bipartisan policy. The Chamber of Commerce and the NAM are behind the Administration 100%."

The study pointed out that many causes of unemployment—such as material shortages, overproduction, inadequate knowledge of marketing, poor administration—are "directly within the control of management."

"If employers had to pay for the idleness which resulted from their own social irresponsibility," it comments, "it is altogether likely that there would be fewer workers out of work as a result of such causes."

Only One Factor

The CCL bulletin said that while the GAW is an important part of a "rounded program" for lasting prosperity and better labor-management relations, it is nevertheless only one factor.

Also needed, it said, are minimum wage laws, social insurance, public works, a housing program, elimination of monopolies, and a long-range program of foreign trade.

"Workers through their trade unions are simply seeking to redirect the social cost of at least some unemployment to where it originates or can be controlled," the bulletin said.

Another indication of growing interest in the GAW is in the Feb. 19 issue of Colliers Magazine, which carries an article on the GAW, "Labor's New Demand: 52 Paydays," by Karl Schriftgiesser. It contains the views of several of the CIO unions which expect to negotiate about the GAW during their 1954 bargaining sessions.

Book Review—

How To Stop Drive On Schools

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE KIDS themselves didn't know what it was all about, but the whole town of Oak Glen was torn in two by a bitter fight over its schools.

It started with a sensational news story played up in the local paper reporting a speech made by a locally prominent lady at a Parent-Teachers Association meeting who charged that the taxpayers' money was being wasted on new-fangled frills and un-American textbooks. As an example she singled out an item in the school budget designed for "teaching materials" on the United Nations.

Later it turned out that the lady, a former member of the school board, together with others in a "Citizens Committee" set up to wage war on the local school system, had received outside help. Lurid pamphlets printed in Texas and elsewhere attacking the UN as un-American were circulated in Oak Glen as they had been in other towns. (The UN flag was copied after the flag of Communist Russia, said one pamphlet.)

A smooth character who tried to keep from giving his name and residence and turned out to be from New York City got up on the floor at a public meeting on the school situation and, in a voice vibrating like a church organ, held forth against allowing the schools to be used to build "an all-powerful, cradle-to-grave authoritarian state."

Members of the school board received nasty anonymous letters and threatening phone calls, as a vicious undercover and open warfare raged in the town, turning friends into enemies and sowing hate, suspicion and confusion among the citizens.

This is the pattern followed in the town described in the documentary novel "How We Fought for Our Schools," written by Edward Darling in collaboration with staff members of the Center for Field Studies, Harvard Graduate School of Education.

Although "Oak Glen" is not the real name of the town, the events related in the book have actually happened in a number of communities across the country. Some CIO members with children undoubtedly have heard of such campaigns in their own towns.

The fictional part of the story seems to drag a bit at times, being too obviously pulled in to "humanize" the text, but the book does show clearly how the formula to cripple the schools and frighten the teachers works. More important it shows how a group can organize to fight successfully for our schools.

Courage And Hope—

CIO Joins In Backing Crusade For Freedom

LABOR LENDS A HAND to annual "Truth Dollars" campaign of the Crusade for Freedom, to be conducted between Lincoln's Birthday and Washington's Birthday in cities across the nation. At left, two union workers at Philadelphia knit mill sign the freedom scrolls, which will be collected by the Czech freedom tank (center). Vaclav Uhlik, one of eight Czechs who escaped in the tank, pilots it through New York City. At right, Eva Chambers works in Minneapolis plant producing 4000 freedom balloons which will be released in U. S. to help Crusade fund drive.

PRES. EISENHOWER says that every American who supports the Crusade for Freedom "is helping arm the spirits of captive people with hope and courage" and is "strengthening the will-to-freedom overseas."

CIO agrees, and has pledged its "wholehearted approval and support" to the crusade, backed up by the cooperation of hundreds of CIO councils and local unions across the nation.

"Truth dollars," 10 million of them, and as many Freedom Scroll signatures are the goal of the 1954 Crusade for Freedom, which reaches a climax in the period from Lincoln's Birthday to Washington's Birthday.

Theme of the campaign, to raise funds for Radio Free Europe's broadcasts to Soviet-occupied nations, is three-fold:

- "Help end World War III before it starts."
- "Send truth through the Iron Curtain."
- "Let George do it." (That means the face of George Washington on the $1 bill you contribute to the crusade.)

Thirty-one national organizations, including CIO, are participating in this year's Crusade for Freedom.

The campaign is a project of the American Heritage Foundation, and funds go toward the operation of Radio Free Europe's transmitters ringing the Iron Curtain in Europe and broadcasting the news and messages of hope to peoples in six Soviet satellite states.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is a vice chairman of the Crusade for Freedom. Urging CIO's membership to contribute generously, he has called Radio Free Europe "an excellent medium for bringing the precious words of liberty and freedom to the restless millions of people under the yoke of Soviet-dominated Communist totalitarianism."

And CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in a recent radio broadcast, said support for the Crusade for Freedom is an opportunity to demonstrate "that merely being anti-Communist is not enough. We must demonstrate conclusively that we are firm disciples of democracy—in deed and in action as well as in words.

"The Crusade for Freedom is doing that job and thus is bringing the hope of freedom to millions behind the Iron Curtain."

Riffe Urges Councils To Act

A call to CIO councils "to embark immediately" on the Crusade for Freedom has been voiced by John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of councils and organization.

Riffe emphasized that the campaign "is being conducted nationally through joint labor-management agreement and should be conducted locally and in the plants on the same basis."

He suggested that CIO councils work with local unions for circulation of Freedom Scroll petitions in the plants and aid in the collection of Truth Dollars for Radio Free Europe.

Riffe praised the crusade as "an opportunity to once again well and truly serve our country and the entire free world."

Copies of the Freedom Scrolls may be obtained without charge from the American Heritage Foundation, 345 E. 46th St., New York 17, N. Y.

The Sunshine Campaign—

'Every Day In Every Way, Things Are Getting Better—'

The "Sunshine Campaign" of the Hoover Administration was recalled by Financial Editor J. A. Livingston of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin in comparing it with recent GOP and big business statements. Livingston's column, reprinted with permission, follows:

By J. A. LIVINGSTON

S-h-h-h. If you have a doubt about business in 1954, don't mention it. Recession is a naughty word. People won't like you if you have misgivings. Everything is going to be all right.

You don't usually meet that sentiment in so many words. But William C. McKeehan, Jr., vice president of J. Walter Thompson advertising agency, came right out and said it. He has urged the Advertising Council to wage a multi-million-dollar prosperity campaign to offset gloomy forecasts of a recession.

And Speaker of the House Joseph W. Martin (R. Mass.) has come forth with an attack on "left-wing eggheads" who are trying to "yell the country into depression."

Martin assured an audience of 700 at the Benjamin Franklin Hotel that good times are certain. True, we've been in a period of readjustment "for many months—but our people have remained calm," and "there is not a valid economic sign, recognized by qualified experts, pointing to anything like the unemployment of 1949-50."

A Familiar Ring

All this has a familiar ring. A group of newspaper men were sipping highballs in the National Press Club just after a high-up government official had described President Eisenhower's budget message as a "bullish document, based on prosperity."

One of the newspaper men said: "This makes me think of 1930."

Another said: "How do you happen to think of that? Economics isn't your field."

The first newspaper man replied: "I lived through it. I wasn't born yesterday."

For persons who weren't there, 1930 was the year of President's Hoover's Sunshine Campaign. The country was just emerging from the shock of the 1929 Wall Street crash. The President called on the nation's public utilities, railroads, and industrial companies to spend more money on plant and equipment. That would check the business decline.

For a while, hopes were raised. Business turned up in the spring. Stock prices rallied. Wall Street cheered. Then plop. It was a false boom. The letdown was—well—quite a letdown. Coueism—think well and things will turn out well—doesn't work in economics or medicine.

Economically, this isn't 1930. This country has powerful economic props to prevent a depression. As Harlow H. Curtice, president of General Motors Corp., said recently, we have many "reasons to expect a strong and healthy economy," namely, high defense expenditures; need for schools, highways, hospitals and other public works; need for new housing; need for new plant and equipment; lower taxes.

However, Mr. Curtice sees "one danger we must guard against—and that is psychological. If those who persist in taking a pessimistic view of the future succeed in planting fear in the minds of the public, those seeds of fear could take root."

Can't Blame Talk

The record does not bear Mr. Curtice out. Throughout the post-war period, talk of a recession has been persistent and recurrent. Mr. Curtice, himself, noticed that. Yet the only decline worth mentioning took place in 1949 and that was minor.

Surely, if gloomy talk could cause a business break, we'd have had it long ago. And if brave talk could have stopped a depression, then the depression of the '30s would never have happened.

Psychological spirals have to be fed by reality. If Henry Johnson's kids plead for a television set, and the Johnsons have the down payment, and Johnson has a job he can depend on, then he'll buy the set. He's not going to be held back by gloomy talk or predictions.

On the other hand, if Johnson's neighbor has just been laid off and if Johnson's own plant is putting some men on short weeks, he's likely to think twice about an installment commitment.

It Doesn't Work

In the '30s, sunshine talk didn't perk things up, because the facts—the layoffs and business failures—contradicted all the talk. And if, in 1954, the facts contradict the recession talk, there won't be any recession.

If the prophets of good business really felt secure about the outlook for this year, would they try to shut up the prophets of recession and resort to name-calling? Or would they shrug them off as well-meaning fellows shouting economic gibberish into the wind?

It doesn't make sense to enter into a Pollyanna conspiracy. It isn't subversive to talk about the possibilities of a recession. Indeed, it's beneficial. If a slump comes, people will be prepared for it psychologically. And if it doesn't the talk will shut itself up.

Example

Benjamin F. Fairless, chairman of the board of the U. S. Steel Corp., blamed political "outs who want to get back in" for engaging in what he called exaggerating minor declines in the nation's economy.

If the public retains confidence, he told the Delaware Chamber of Commerce, 1954 should be the second or third best year in U. S. history.

Last week, the steel industry was scheduled at 73.9% of capacity, a drop from 75.6% the week before. About 125,000 members of the CIO Steelworkers are reported to be laid off.

Douglas Protests Lag On Benefits

Sen. Douglas (D., Ill.) has urged a speedup in payment of unemployment benefits. In a telegram to Gov. William G. Stratton of Illinois he said his office was receiving "increasing and numerous" complaints that checks are running five to seven weeks late.

The Stuttgart Story—

It Looks Like Paradise, But Not In The Mills

By PAUL HARDING

TWO GROUPS of people look on the Stuttgart, Ark., area as a sort of paradise.

These are the large producers and processors of rice, for which the region is famous, and the hunters from all over the nation who go there each winter to shoot the millions of wild ducks that each season infest the rice paddies.

But a somewhat lower estimation is held by the hundreds of workers who labor in the rice mills for the legal minimum wage of 75c-an-hour.

Sam Austin, father of five children living at home and going to school, is the skilled operator of a brand packaging machine in a mill where he has been employed continuously for 13 years. And as he put it:

"The only time I ever got a raise was when the government gave it to me," when federal legislation set and raised the legal minimum wage.

A LONG FIGHT.—The big Wonder Rice mill is one of two plants at Stuttgart, Ark., where striking members of the CIO Brewery Workers (right foreground) are on the picket line in 18th week of strike for union recognition.

SMILING IN THE SLUSH.—Cheerful while picketing a rice mill office are Ruby Able, Nettie Simpson, Nora Weatherby, Bessie Hildebrand, Hazel Sanders, Zelma Schroeder and Ruth Zarlingo. Strikers stood up to a series of storms.

Antebellum

One operator of a struck Stuttgart, Ark., rice mill says:

"History will repeat itself; the philosophy of the old southern landowners was right. Those days will come back."

Austin is one of more than 200 members of the CIO Brewery Workers Union in Stuttgart who are forcing changes in these wretched working conditions.

These workers, employes of the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Mills and the Wonder Rice Mill, have been on strike for 18 weeks in efforts to force their employers to sign fair union contracts.

Lines Are Solid

The strikes have been grueling. The employers have succeeded in bringing in strikebreakers from the rural areas where little is known of labor union principles and objectives. But because of their lack of skill and inexperience production is very limited. And the picket lines are as strong and the ranks of the strikers as solid as they were at the start of the strikes.

The boycott of the two mills' products, called by the Brewery Workers, is also having its effect and the strikers are confident of winning their modest demands.

Both Pres. Walter Reuther and Executive Vice Pres. John Riffe of the CIO have voiced their backing.

Meanwhile, the strikers are having tough sledding but they know they are leading the way for a potential membership of 10,000 to 15,000 rice mill workers in 18 counties of Arkansas, part of Mississippi, the western edge of Tennessee and even larger areas of Louisiana and Texas.

PICKET captain Charles Rickenback turned trapper, caught mink and raccoons, to help support his family.

Even on strike the rice workers are little worse off than when they are drawing the meager wages paid by the mills.

Austin, for instance, has himself, his wife and five children to support on his 75c-an-hour wage.

They Have To Scratch

In addition to food and clothing, he has to pay $25 a month house rent, buy wood for the cook stove and pay gas, light and water bills. His bill for gas, used to heat the house, was $10.61 for December.

"We have to scratch to make it," Austin says.

During January the area had two severe snow and ice storms, the worst weather since 1947, that have been hard on all the strikers, making picket line duty miserable and running up heating costs at home.

Naturally much of the housing that can be afforded on the low wages is drafty and badly insulated.

Particularly is this true in the case of Henry Dale, war veteran and an employe of Wonder Rice, who with his wife and three small children is housed at Humphrey, 13 miles away, in two old school buses fitted out with bottled gas and electricity.

The strikers are aided by small weekly benefits paid by the international union and they also pick up many odd jobs, some working in the daytime and faithfully taking their turn of picket duty at night.

Runs Trap Line

Unusual among these is Charlie Richenback who ran a line of traps through the marshes to help support his family of nine.

"I been trapping since I was 14," he says, "but this year I was not going to run a line. I'm gettin' kinda old and was going to take it a little easy. But then the strike come on and I decided I better get out the traps."

Richenback's trapping is typical of the resourcefulness and determination of the people.

Asking the support of all for both their strike and the unfair list, they are determined the strike will be won.

Here's How You Can Help The Rice Mill Strikers

You can help the striking CIO rice mill workers in Arkansas by buying union-made products.

The CIO Brewery Workers have a contract covering three mills of the Arkansas State Rice Milling Co., producing these brands: Water Maid, Mahatma and Sonny Boy. Another union-label brand, River Brand, is milled in Memphis.

Unfair brands produced by the struck Stuttgart, Ark., mills are:

Riceland Rice, Green Shield, Perfection, Monogram, Lotus, Sultana and Sunnyfield (these two are packed for A&P), Monarch, Richelieu, Tohoco, Tropical, Goldcoast, Good Treat, Osceola, Oversea, Chico, all packed by Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association.

15,000 Work In Rice Mills

THE 10,000 to 15,000 rice mill workers of the Arkansas-Texas-Louisiana producing region have made an excellent start at organizing themselves into locals of the CIO Brewery Workers.

Collective bargaining rights have been won in National Labor Relations Board elections for more than 500 employes.

In addition to the Stuttgart, Ark., mills of the Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative and Wonder Rice, where the workers are on strike, this is the situation:

Contracts have been negotiated with the Arkansas State Rice Milling Co. at Carlisle, and for the plants of the Arkansas Rice Warehouse Co. at Carlisle, Brinkley and Waldenburg.

Elections have been won and negotiations are now under way with the Arkansas Co-op mill in Jonesboro; Smith Rice Mills, Inc., in DeWitt; L. A. Black Rice Milling Assn., Dewitt, and C & L Rice Mill, Inc., DeWitt.

HELP PLEDGED.—At recent Arkansas CIO Council convention, John V. Riffe (next to right), CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils, pledged CIO assistance to group of Stuttgart rice mill workers.

CHICAGO CONFAB—Second in series of CIO regional council conferences brought several score council officials to Chicago Jan. 29-30, for discussion of legislative, political action and community relations programs and methods. Mississippi CIO Hears Job Warning

By ED STONE

HIGH TAXES, high prices and dwindling purchasing power cannot be remedied by press releases and good intentions, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers told the second annual convention of the Mississippi State CIO Council at Jackson as he condemned the Eisenhower Administration for its failure to come to grips with the hard facts of economic life.

Potofsky charged the Administration was not translating good intentions into concrete measures with the exception of expanding social security.

"This requires imagination, understanding, and the will to do the job before it is too late," he said.

Citing the mounting number of jobless, slumping farm prices and other signs, Potofsky said he was not predicting "inevitable economic collapse."

"ON THE CONTRARY," he told the more than 100 delegates at Jackson, "I am an optimist and I am very confident that in the past 20 years we in this country have developed techniques which can prevent a repetition of the disaster which befell us under the last Republican Administration.

"The point is that we must apply these techniques at the first signs of a slackening economy. The longer we wait, the harder it is to reverse the trend."

The history of CIO's growth in the state was traced by Dir. Lonnie Daniels of the CIO Communications Workers, the Council president. In 1946, he said, there were no CIO-organized plants in the state. Today there are 15,000 members in half a dozen unions.

Other convention speakers included Pres. Al Hartung, CIO Woodworkers; Richard T. Leonard, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Sec.-Treas. C. W. Werkau, CWA-CIO; Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs, CIO Rubber Workers, and Dir. W. S. Smallwood, CWA.

Elected with Daniel were J. B. Hanna, vice president; Ray Smithart, financial secretary, and Geraldine Dickens, recording secretary.

Potofsky Sets 8 Goals For Good Times

Here is the eight-point program to prevent an economic recession that was advanced by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers at the Mississippi State CIO Council convention:

- Joint action by government, labor, and management to convert from the Korean war economy to a peace economy, neutralizing cuts in military spending with higher consumer production.
- Maintain purchasing power through federal and state expenditures for low-cost housing, highways, schools and public works.
- Increase tax-exemptions from $600 to $1000 for those in low-income brackets to raise real income and hence, purchasing power.
- Raise the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour.
- Strengthen the social security system, with higher benefits and protection for more people.
- Continuation of large-scale U. S. economic assistance to other nations to assist their stability and make possible purchase of American goods.
- Maintenance of farm income with government insurance of a reasonable financial return for the farmer.
- Enactment of legislation encouraging free collective bargaining because strong unions mean high living standards for all Americans.

TWUA Asks Tariff Hike On Woolens

HIGHER TARIFFS on imported woolen and worsted fabrics have been urged by the CIO Textile Workers to save the U. S. industry from "further liquidation."

Sec.-Treas. John Chupka of TWUA-CIO, in a letter to Chairman Edgar B. Brossard of the Tariff Commission, advocated raising tariffs from the present 25% to 45%. Such action could be taken under present tariff agreements, Chupka said.

Pointing to the fast-shrinking domestic textile industry, Chupka said imports of woolen and worsted fabrics have increased to a point where they have caused serious damage to American mills and caused short work weeks and unemployment.

Chupka reported 60 woolen and worsted mills have been liquidated in the past two years, depriving 30,000 workers of their jobs. Since World War II, 150 mills employing more than 50,000 workers have been liquidated. Most of these were in single-industry towns where no alternative job opportunities existed.

Oklahoma CIO Asks Better Compensation

REVISION of the state's workmen's compensation laws was urged at the Oklahoma CIO Council convention at Tulsa.

Delegates heard demands that members of the State Industrial Commission be taken "off the patronage list" and that rates paid by industry either be lowered or workmen's compensation rates to injured employes be increased.

Len Yarborough, re-elected to his fourth term as Council secretary-treasurer, said the commission now lacks stability in membership and policies when it sits as a court on disability compensation claims.

He claimed that insurance rates were excessive, pointing to the $18 million collected in premiums during 1952 while benefits to injured employes ran to only about $4 million.

YARBOROUGH said there has never been a change in rates based on injury experience tables in Oklahoma.

"Ricochet Romance," a currently popular song in which a fickle lover gets told off, was suggested by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) as labor's theme song for the elections this year. Kerr said the song applies with deadly accuracy to Pres. Eisenhower's treatment of labor which he pictured as jilted by the Administration.

Proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act drew fire from Kerr and CIO Rep. W. B. Taylor. The strike-ballot provision requiring approval of a strike by a majority of workers involved—not merely of those who vote—was assailed.

"It requires you to assume the burden of not only overcoming your opposition but of non-voters as well," Kerr said. Taylor added that he wondered if Sen. Smith (R. N.J.) sponsor of the bill, "would be willing to run for the Senate under the same election rules."

JOBS INC., which filed incorporation articles early last month to sponsor right-to-work laws in Oklahoma, was branded "an insidious program against American labor conducted under false banners."

CIO Rep. Bob McVay told the convention that "this new group plans to exploit every possible issue to destroy the democracy of union labor."

The group, whose directors include prominent business executives, was denounced as a subsidiary of the National Association of Manufacturers.

E. R. (Bob) Burns of the Transport Workers was elected president of the Council. W. D. Wirick of the Steelworkers was named vice president. Balloting was spirited in both contests.

AVC Urges Veteran Groups To Block 'Vigilante Tactics'

AN ATTEMPT to work out a "genuine code of conduct" for Americans concerned with preserving individual liberties will be made Feb. 23 at a meeting in Washington called by Bill Mauldin, national chairman of the American Veterans Committee (AVC).

Invitations went out last week to the heads of all major veterans' groups—prompted by the action of the Norwalk, Conn., post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) in gathering information on suspected subversives.

"We do not need vigilante tactics which violate the spirit of true Americanism," Mauldin wrote in his invitations. "The actions of the Norwalk post highlight the need for serious thinking on the subject of national security and individual liberty. Veterans more than any other segment of the nation should set an example by their own behavior."

Mauldin said that all Americans recognize that a "strong, resolute and unified America has no cause for either fear or hysteria" in the face of the Communist threat,

Auto Workers Urge Higher Service Pay

The CIO Auto Workers called for pay increases for members of the armed forces in a letter last week to members of House and Senate Armed Services committees, the secretaries of defense, army, navy and air force, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, who also heads the UAW Veterans Dept., wrote that failure to act on pay boost legislation "cannot be justified" in view of an investigation that found poor pay and allowances heading the factors leading to low morale in the armed forces.

ARA Officers Re-elected

TOP OFFICERS of the CIO Radio Association won re-election to their third terms last week. They are Pres. W. R. Steinberg, Vice Pres. Philip O'Rourke and Sec.-Treas. Bernard L. Smith.

Re-elected with them were four other port agents who form the ARA national council. They are: James E. Croney, New Orleans; Theodore Berman, Houston; Joseph Y. Rubin, Baltimore; M. H. Strichartz, New York.

Ralph Baird was named port agent in Seattle in the only contested election.

Store Strike Solid In Port Arthur

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

BUCKING WINTRY Texas winds and employer opposition, the Port Arthur strikers last week began their fourth month on the picket line with spirits still as high as the day they walked off their jobs.

Members of the CIO Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814 have been pledged increased support in their strike against 22 of the city's stores, hotels, restaurants and drive-ins.

Addressing a mass meeting of CIO Oil Workers at a resort ballroom, Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of OWIU-CIO promised financial aid and an active campaign to win the strike.

"This is no longer just the LIU's battle," said McCormick, "But it's our fight too. It concerns everyone in organized labor."

He praised OWIU Local 23 in Port Arthur whose officers and members have rendered invaluable help in the strike. McCormick, pinch-hitting for OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight who was prevented by influenza from attending the meeting, urged Texans to pay their poll taxes and take an interest in politics. The strike, he said, had definite local and state political implications.

A BITTER BARRAGE of newspaper ads sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and the retail merchants group have been appearing almost daily. Some Port Arthur merchants have claimed they do not endorse the ad program.

These, McCormick told the more than 1000 at the meeting, "say they want to stay on neutral ground. If the merchants don't endorse the things that are being published, it's their duty to say so in the same newspaper. If they don't, it's time for OWIU members to stop putting hard money in their cash registers."

Lorne Nelles, director of CIO's southern organizing drive, promised that "all CIO will continue to support your strike as long as you want it —until the end when you have your union and your contracts."

He said the strike could be settled easily if the Chamber of Commerce and retail merchants would meet with the strikers and work out their problems. "That's the way to do it," Nelles said, "not through newspaper ads."

Fine

Not all of Port Arthur's retailers follow the union-bustng line of the city's Chamber of Commerce. One of them was apologetic when informed his wife had crossed a picket line to shop.

Writing the union the day after the incident was reported to him he said, "I have fined her $25 for the first offense, the money to come from her personal allowance. Her check is enclosed for your strike fund."

Labor's World—

CCL, AFL Join To Fight Climbing Unemployment

WITH ONE out of every 14 Canadian workers out of a job and looking for one, the Canadian Congress of Labor and the Canadian Trades & Labor Congress, counterpart of the CIO and AFL and representing one million workers, joined forces last week to fight rising unemployment.

The committee was instructed to "exert the maximum influence upon all levels of government in order that employment may be stimulated wherever possible and with the minimum of delay."

Latest official figures of the Dominion Dept. of Labor show that 338,000 workers were unemployed and looking for work on Dec. 10, an increase of 72,000 in three weeks.

LEADERS of the two labor bodies, meeting in Ottawa, estimated the jobless were nearing the 500,000 mark at the end of January. In some parts of the country, according to union figures, it has reached 15% of the total labor force, "well over the danger point."

The CCL Political Action Committee, meeting in Toronto, described the situation as "rapidly approaching a critical stage."

Both the Dept. of Labor and CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald said unemployment is more than seasonal. MacDonald pointed out that the total is at a post-war high, and said that "the experience of 1949-50 shows the number of unemployed could double before the winter is over."

Foreign Ministers

In a letter to the four foreign ministers meeting in Berlin, Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, said that 54 million free workers in all parts of the world look to them for the unification of Germany and a peace treaty for Austria.

Switzerland

Arthur Steiner, general secretary of the Swiss Engineering & Watchmakers Union, has been elected president of the Swiss Trade Union Federation to succeed Robert Bratschi, of the Railroad Workers. Bratschi, who also was president of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation, has taken a management post. His ITF successor has not yet been selected.

Potofsky Joins Mission To Brazil

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International Committee, was in an Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' delegation which participated in the official opening of an ICFTU office in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, last week.

The group, which left this country from New York, also included Pres. Walter Freitag of the West German Federation of Labor (DGB) and Pres. Tom Yates of the British Seamen's Union.

Wood Union Parleys Due In Northwest

THE CIO Woodworkers expect to begin negotiations this month with some 400 employers in Oregon, Washington, California, Idaho and Montana on 1954-55 contracts.

IWA-CIO will seek a general pay increase, correction of job-rate inequities, based on a company-paid joint job analysis survey, and three weeks' vacation after five years.

IWA-CIO officers headed by Pres. A. F. Hartung have been re-elected for two-year terms in a referendum.

Other officers re-elected are J. E. Dicey, first vice president; Claude Ballard, second vice president; Carl Winn, secretary-treasurer, and Tim Sullivan, trustee, who defeated Emmett Lawson.

MEANTIME, IWA-CIO members won long strikes in the northern and southern interior areas of British Columbia.

Both settlements included industrywide maintenance of membership, under which a member who transfers from one firm to another is required to remain in the union.

CIO Backed In Panama On Equal Wages

CIO PROPOSALS for equal wages for all Panama Canal workers have won support from top figures in the Panamanian government.

More than 10,000 persons attended a CIO-sponsored rally in the Balboa stadium to hear Pres. Jose A. Remon praise the union's fight for justice. He urged Panamanians employed in the Canal Zone to back the CIO campaign.

Labor Minister Ricardo Arias came out in equally strong fashion for equality of pay and opportunity for Canal Zone workers and the elimination of segregation and discrimination. Arias is also second vice-president of Panama.

THE PROGRAM has been given top priority by Local 900, CIO Government and Civic Employees, in the Canal Zone. The enthusiastic demonstration at the stadium was taken to indicate heightened cooperation between CIO and the Panamanian government.

Other speakers at the meeting included Lloyd Vaughan, CIO director in Panama, Sec.-Treas. Milton Murray of GCEOC-CIO and Archbishop Francisco Beckman of Panama. Vaughan reported that CIO membership in the Zone was at a new peak.

1000 Volunteer Organizers Sought For UPA Drive

CIO Paperworkers are recruiting an army of 1000 volunteer organizers from among its membership.

Described as an experiment in rank-and-file trade unionism, the recruitment of the corps calls for integration of volunteers with experienced staff personnel into organizing committees.

UPA Pres. Harry Sayre said special credentials would be issued to the volunteers who will concentrate at points of non-union paper industry locations throughout the country.

Sayre emphasized the importance of strengthening the union bargaining position "as we enter a period when recessionary forces will be tempting paper industry managements to eye wages as cost-cutting areas."

He added that campaigns involving volunteer assistance from paper workers had accounted for the majority of the union's present membership.

Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso said that despite "attempts to toughen Taft-Hartley and the changed anti-union complexion of the National Labor Relations Board, we are convinced that volunteer organizers can successfully deliver the message of trade unionism to their unorganized brothers and sisters in the industry."

Small Plant Aid Urged By Sparkman

"BASIC WEAKNESSES" of the "phoney" Small Business Administration created in the first session of the Republican 83rd Congress would be corrected under five amendments introduced by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

Sparkman, former chairman of the Senate Business Committee, said he is "very much disappointed in the record" of SBA.

"Part of the difficulty," he said, "has stemmed from the failure of the President to appoint an administrator. Unfortunately, small business seems to be assigned a low priority in Administration thinking."

Wendell B. Barnes, acting chief of SBA, was nominated by Pres. Eisenhower to head the agency.

SPARKMAN'S amendments would increase from $150,000 to $500,000 the maximum amount that the agency can loan, and would prevent the interest rate paid to banks for their part of joint loans with the SBA from being higher than that charged on the SBA portion of the loan.

They also would establish SBA, scheduled to expire next year, on a permanent basis and permit SBA loans to states and municipalities. Finally, Sparkman's proposals would abolish the Loan Policy Board, made up of the SBA administrator and the Secretaries of Commerce and the Treasury.

Sparkman said that the present board has veto power over the SBA and that its "policy is weighted against the very segment of the economy that SBA is set up to assist."

Tannery Local Gains On Wages

A 3c an hour wage increase outside the escalator clause has been won by Local 1712, United Tannery & Leather Workers, affiliated with the CIO Clothing Workers, in Gloversville, N. Y. A new two-year contract also provides a paid holiday on Election Day and fringe benefits.

About 500 men in nine tanneries are affected by the increase. A committee has been set up to study costs and machinery for instituting a pension plan.

You And Your Money—

Private Health Plans Scarcely Dent $10 Billion Medical Bill

THE HIGH COST of medical care, and the inadequate protection of present health and hospital insurance programs, were spelled out in a recent report by the Health Information Foundation.

The foundation, in a survey financed by drug, chemical and related interests, reported after in a nation-wide consumer survey of medical costs:

- In one year, illness cost U. S. families a total of $10.2 billion.
- Some eight million families, or 16% of the total, are in debt for hospital, medical and dental care amounting (as of July 1953) to $1.1 billion.
- Average family debt for medical-dental care was $137.
- Voluntary health insurance now covers some 89.5 million persons—more than half of the U. S. population—yet it met only 15% of the total cost of illness.

The facts and figures in the survey, which itself did not reach any conclusion, underlined past arguments of CIO that present medical care is inadequate and that prepaid national health insurance is the basic solution.

THE SURVEY also brought out that present health or hospitalization insurance is a "luxury" lower-income families must avoid. For example, while 58% of the population as a whole have some health insurance, only 41% of families with incomes under $3000 a year have such coverage. In comparisan, 80% of families with incomes over $5000 have private medical insurance policies.

The effect of "catastropic" medical costs on family budgets was further emphasized in the report. For six million families, medical care takes 10 to 19% of their annual earnings. For 2.5 million families, the range is 20 to 49% of their income. And one million families found medical care amounted to 50 to 100% of their earnings.

Nevertheless, the American Medical Association is still claiming that "the cost of medical care presents no great problem to a majority of American families."

That's what Dr. Walter B. Martin, AMA president-elect, told the House Commerce Committee which is considering Pres. Eisenhower's limited health proposals, including a suggestion for government "reinsurance," to underwrite private hospital and health plans.

Chairman Wolverton (R. N. J.) challenged the AMA's war-cry of "socialized medicine" against almost any and all health proposals, asked Martin if the AMA had ever defined it.

"Not that I know of, Mr. Chairman," the AMA leader replied.

'Prying' By Medicos Protested By CIO

CIO has charged the Nassau County, N. Y., Medical Society with "prying into a program in which it does not rightfully belong."

The Nassau-Suffolk CIO Council backed plans of the North Shore Hospital to establish outpatient clinics to treat needy patients, a plan which drew the fire of the local medical group.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius For LPA

CAN YOU SAVE any money by shopping the February furniture sales many stores are now running? Yes—if you avoid unscrupulous installment stores; compare values extensively among different furniture and department stores in your town; select well-made pieces that are truly suitable for your needs, and avoid the new "borax" furniture coming on the market.

"Borax" is the way the furniture trade describes guady, massive furniture which uses fancy styling to distract the consumer from its basic shoddiness or poor value. The term is said to have originated with the flashy furniture the manufacturers of borax once gave away as premiums.

Beware Of Furniture 'Borax'

This year--when furniture prices should be coming down because of reduced costs of some of the materials and increased competition—instead manufacturers are introducing a new kind of elaborate-looking furniture. Instead of lowering the price tags, they claim they are giving the public more for its money at the same price by making their furniture larger and more decorative.

But according to Betty Pepis, an experienced, sharp-eyed home-furnishings editor, the "more for the money" consists of added surface decoration rather than better construction and design. For example, she observed at the recent furniture showings for the wholesale trade that much of the 1954 furniture has more intricate finishes and trimming, including shiny hardware that "looks like heavy costume jewelry."

The new furniture is bigger too; longer sofas with more seating space, bigger chests of drawers. But larger furniture is "more for your money" only if you have the space for it. In today's smaller houses, the need is more for moderately-sized furniture that eases housekeeping and doesn't crowd up a room so it looks like an over-furnished model room in a store.

Simple design really gives you more for your money. Bulkiness may look impressive in a store but may be a nuisance in your home.

Tips On Buying Furniture

In the current furniture sales, reductions on upholstered furniture—living room chairs and sofas—are especially noticeable. Such pieces upholstered in foam rubber are offered at comparatively reasonable prices. Foam rubber makes satisfactory upholstery if properly constructed.

There are different qualities of it, with some foam rubber containing more air pores which reduce its value. You can tell by pressing the cushions between your hands which actually is the better-quality, less-porous foam rubber. Too, the foam rubber needs to be securely attached to the outer covering by a welt and possibly also button tufts. Make sure it is, else the covering will tend to wrinkle easily in use. Make sure the crimped-wire steel webbing underneath the foam-rubber upholstery is securely attached to the bottom of the chair or sofa.

The covering is important too, both for durability and to ease your housekeeping problem. It's best to avoid pile fabrics, especially mohair, which are costly and collect dirt. The cotton upholstery fabrics are durable and soil resistant, but avoid loosely-woven novelty fabrics sometimes found on modern furniture. For long wear make sure the fabric is closely and tightly woven.

Plastic-covered chairs of course are undeniably easy to keep clean, but have proven to have disadvantages of their own. The plastic film often cracks or tears and is difficult to repair. Cotton-backed plastic covering is more durable than plastic film.

In wood dining and living room tables, plastic top surfaces are gaining popularity for their real advantages. They are heat and scratch resistant, easy to clean with a damp rag and don't need polishing like wood surfaces do. These surfaces come in wood grains which you can hardly tell from real wood veneer.

February Rug Sales: Stores also offer specials on rugs in the mid-winter furniture sales. In fact, most of the large rug manufacturers themselves have reduced prices because of poor business, and rug values are better now than they have been in several years.

Corporation Gravy Train Rolling Along At New High

THE CORPORATIONS of America and the people who own them were viewing their prosperity with new respect last week as additional statistics impressed upon them that 1953 was one of the lushest years on record.

The 5500 corporations which report their dividends publicly paid out $8,546,000,000 to stockholders during the year—25% more than in 1952.

The figure would have been higher, too, if income taxes hadn't gone down the first of this year. Many firms delayed dividend payments until January 1954 so as to give the stockholders the benefit of the lower rates.

Early reports to the Dept. of Commerce on corporation profits show that the first 70 firms reporting boosted 1953 profits by 12% over 1952.

Among the industrial behemoths, U. S. Steel had its best earnings since 1917—$222.7 million, or $7.56 a share compared to $4.54 in 1952.

THE BELL System earned $421 million net against $358 million, or $10.31 a share compared to $10.09. Bethlehem Steel did so well it doubled its first 1954 dividend, earning $133.9 million compared to $90.9 million in 1952 or $13.30 a share against $8.08; the dividend boost was from $1 to $2 a share.

The Shell Oil Co. and its subsidiaries marked down 1953 as the best year in their history, with net profit of $115 million or $8.40 a share, compared to $90 million and $6.61 a share in 1952.

Price Fixing On Coffee Is Admitted

A NEW YORK coffee broker last week admitted under congressional questioning that Brazilian producers fix prices by holding back supplies.

Clarence Mackey, a reluctant witness, would not be pinned down on available coffee supplies and the reasons for present high prices. Instead, he mentioned visible and invisible supplies.

The bill sponsored by Sen. Gillete (D. Ia.) putting the New York Coffee Exchange under federal regulation was unanimously approved by the Senate Agricultural Committee and is ready for Senate action.

The government's Commodity Exchange Authority already has broad control over speculative practices in cotton, wheat, oats, eggs, butter, corn and other items.

GILLETTE SAID his bill would be no "complete solution" to American coffee drinkers' problems, but he saw it as a step towards correction of the "repetition of speculative raids."

Rep. Magnuson (D. Wash.) criticized the several present investigations into soaring coffee prices as overlapping and wasteful of time and money, and urged "one thorough probe."

Magnuson said the coffee price rise "has stirred up America like nothing since Pearl Harbor." He recalled the "rumblings of mutiny" during World War II when the nickel cup of coffee all but vanished, to be replaced by the dime version.

"In time," he went on, "most of us became reconciled . . . but I do not think we shall see the same acceptance of 15c coffee."

New 'Oil For Education' School Aid Bill Presented

LABOR-BACKED legislation setting aside federal oil and gas revenues from continental shelf production to aid the nation's schools has been reintroduced by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

Hill's "oil for education" bill would amend the law adopted at the last session of Congress giving the federal government title to the outer continental shelf. His amendment was killed in conference committee last year.

Another bill to end overcrowded and dilapidated schools was given to Congress last week by Hill, Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) and 18 other senators. This would provide federal help to states and territories for construction of public elementary and secondary schools.

Sponsors say that present conditions are a serious threat to the public school system. They propose that each state's share of federal funds appropriated for school building purposes would be based on per capita income and the number of children of school age. Administrative control would remain exclusively with the states.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

A FEW WEEKS AGO, I mentioned a great CIO victory in reporting the action of several hundred workers, who had been captives of the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, and who broke away to rejoin CIO through the United Steelworkers of America.

This victory, which means as much for the workers involved as it does for CIO, did not just happen. Those of us who have taken on the Communist-dominated unions realize how difficult it is to overcome their trickery, their maneuvering, their use of every legal—and illegal— means to keep their fist clenched around the future of the workers they have managed to capture.

While we welcome home these brothers, we might also pay tribute to the wise leadership of Steelworkers' Pres. David J. McDonald, who carefully, quietly, and firmly supported and led this movement.

EVEN WITHIN the unions, many people have not known how closely Pres. McDonald has concerned himself with the situation. For more than a year, the quiet struggle has been going on. In the field, Steelworker Nick Zonarich carried out the policies of the USA-CIO leadership. Many other Steelworkers' representatives were involved.

It was a mighty effort; for it is one thing to simply have workers, or individuals, pull out of an organization that they do not approve, but it is another and more difficult thing to give these workers the guidance so that they can bring back into the brotherhood of CIO their entire organizations, intact, strong, and unmarked by the division and confusion the Communists love to spread.

Through this effort, Pres. McDonald has added a fine new chapter in the real struggle of the American people against the Communist menace. There was no demagoguery, no breast-beating, no witch hunts, not even any big headlines. There was just patient and untiring effort on the part of men who deeply believe that the way to protect democracy is to practice it.

Of course, this victory for trade unionism is another bitter blow for the Communists. We can rejoice in that, but perhaps we can take even greater pleasure in the fact that thousands of American workingmen will now be able to concentrate their strength on fighting for their future, instead of wasting their resources against the domination of the Communists.

SOME PEOPLE seem to have the idea that all you have to do to whip the Communists is stir up a lot of commotion and hatred, go around calling names, and shouting about how patriotic you are.

It may be that Pres. McDonald's method of beating the Communists—and the method of many other leaders within CIO—is not the dramatic stuff that our newspapers like to spread in big headlines. History will surely set straight the hard facts, that speeches and slogans did not bring about the defeat of communism, but that communism was broken by dedicated men, working long hours, leading workers upward toward a higher ideal of their dignity and destiny than communism can hope to offer.

It is a genuine pleasure to welcome home those workers from Mine, Mill. The wisdom of their action will surely lead them to greater material benefits, but beyond those rewards they have the satisfaction of proving that free men are capable of using the institutions and methods of a free society to advance the cause of the workingmen and women of their nation.

Of course, the struggle goes on. There are still thousands of workers who need help in breaking away from Mine, Mill. I want to urge every staff member of CIO, regional directors, field representatives, national representatives to give the utmost of their cooperation to Pres. McDonald and the Steelworkers in this work. I believe our international unions, too, can see the importance of the effort, and I am sure they will support it.

The Communists are on the run, while the workers they once held are on the march to a better world through democratic trade unionism. That is a condition we can set down with pride in the history of CIO.

Steel Union Drive Rolling As 2000 Miners Sign Up In Butte

CIO STEELWORKERS are making headway in their organizing drive among the hard-rock miners and smelter workers of the Rocky Mountain states.

In Butte, Mont., nearly 2000 miners have signed CIO Steelworkers cards since the Butte Miners' Union voted to disaffiliate from the red-led Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union and join the USA-CIO.

Pres. Joe Mason of the Butte union told an overflow meeting that the changeover from Mine-Mill to CIO is progressing on schedule and a National Labor Relation Board election will be sought soon to establish USA-CIO as the choice of the miners.

The Butte union and the Anaconda Mill and Smeltermen's Union, among the oldest and most influential of Mine-Mill's locals, voted to bolt last December. Resolutions were adopted declaring that expulsion of Mine-Mill from the CIO and the domination of the international union of Communists had isolated the membership from the mainstream of American industrial unionism.

Jim Russell of Edmonton, Alta., Canada, congratulated the meeting on ridding itself of "party line Mine-Mill domination."

"I'M HAPPPY to find," Russell said, "that the 'rump' meeting held by Mine-Mill was unable to attract enough miners or to permit the machine from electing a full slate of officers." He noted that Reid Robinson, ousted former president of the union, had been brought in to aid Mine-Mill in its campaign.

Wesley Medill of Garfield, Utah, former vice president of Mine-Mill, related how he became "fed up" with the unscrupulous use of the union's funds and patronage by which the Communists thwarted the membership's desire to preserve effective and democratic operation of the union.

"A new era is looming for the miners of Butte in the CIO," said Medill, "and the movement to rid unionism in our nation of red control is given greater impetus as the result of the action of the Butte miners and the smeltermen of Anaconda.

In a letter to leading citizens of Butte the union officers stated they "chose to leave the discredited 'International' which was found guilty of Communist-control and ousted from the family of American industrial unions of the CIO four years ago."

UPWA Gets Annual Wage At Refinery

GUARANTEED annual wages of 2000 hours or 50 weeks a year have been won for members of Local 580, CIO Packinghouse Workers, employed at the Long Island City, N. Y., plant of the National Sugar Refining Co.

Another major bargaining achievement was complete medical coverage for the local's 1100 members and their dependents through a comprehensive health insurance program based on service rather than cash reimbursement.

The third point in the one-year contract calls for a 10c an hour wage increase. This brings the rate for men to a $1.75-$2.18 range and for women to $1.61.

These substantial gains, achieved after long and hard-fought negotiations, are expected to set a pattern for the sugar refining industry, said UPWA Dist. Dir. Meyer E. Stern.

THE GUARANTEED annual wage clause assures workers of 50 weeks of employment during the year or its equivalent in wages, considered to be an important contribution to the economic stability of the industry.

Broad medical coverage will be provided for members and their families through the non-profit Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York. Through HIP's 30 medical groups they will get medical, surgical and specialist care without cost to them. They will also be entitled to X-rays, laboratory care, visiting nurse service and ambulance service. Care will be given at home, at doctors' offices, at HIP centers and in hospitals.

In addition to HIP medical care the members will continue to get hospital service through the Blue Cross plan. They also have company-paid life insurance and accident and sickness insurance paying $40 a week up to 13 weeks.

CIO Councils In Action

A JOINT LABOR legislative program is being presented to the current session of the Virginia General Assembly, thanks to the recent formation of a Joint Legislative Committee which is meeting weekly in Richmond.

Participating in the committee are the Virginia State CIO Council, the State Federation of Labor, the Mine Workers and the railroad brotherhoods. CIO members are Julian F. Carper, State CIO Council executive vice president; Silas Switzer, CIO Textile Workers national representative; and Ernest B. Pugh, CIO Region IV representative.

Legislative Calendar

Fourteen state legislatures are in session and two more will meet later this year.

Sessions are under way in Arizona, Ohio, Colorado, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Rhode Island, Maryland, South Carolina and Virginia.

Regular sessions will open in California Mar. 1 and Louisiana May 10. The Maryland Assembly met on Feb. 3 to consider the budget and other matters.

• Two CIO unionists who are members of the New Jersey Legislature have introduced a five-point program for improved unemployment and disability compensation and a state labor relations act which has the endorsement of the New Jersey CIO Council. Introduced by Assemblymen Lazzio (R. Passaic) and Meloni (D. Camden), the proposals would carry out suggestions in Gov. Robert Meyner's inaugural address.

The Lazzio-Meloni bills would (1) increase unemployment benefits from $30 to $45 weekly for single workers and up to $65 weekly for those with four dependents or more; (2) up disability benefits, extend coverage and eliminate the waiting week; (3) establish a state wage-hour law with a $1-an-hour minimum; (4) create a State Labor Relations Board, a "little Wagner Act" for intrastate industries; and (5) repeal the public utility anti-strike law.

• The Evansville, Ind., CIO Council has joined with the AFL Central Labor Union, railroad brotherhoods and genuine independent unions to form a permanent local United Labor Council to act on community problems and legislation. The expelled United Electrical Workers were barred. CIO Council Pres. Hobert Butler was elected temporary chairman and CLU Pres. Louis Duncan temporary vice-chairman.

• The California CIO Council reported that nine new local unions have voted affiliation since the recent state convention.

• A renewed appeal for strike donations for the Nicholson File Co. workers, members of the CIO Steelworkers, has been issued by the Indiana CIO Council. The Nicholson workers have been out some five months at plants in Anderson, Ind., Philadelphia and Providence, R. I.

• The Cook County (Chiacgo area) CIO Council has issued the first of its "Citizenship in Operation" leaflets, one of an education committee series giving the background on economic and political issues. First leaflet was on the GOP drive for a federal sales tax, and the forecast was: "Cuts for the rich, butts for the people—unless the people act."

• Wayne County CIO Council officers praised the appointment by Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Nathan Kaufman as a judge of the Detroit common pleas court. Kaufman is a former member of the Council's executive board and a one-time president of Graham-Paige Local 142, CIO Auto Workers.

• The Michigan CIO Council was represented on an advisory committee which co-sponsored an institute held at Michigan State College's Kellogg Center for training labor leaders to conduct educational courses.

TWUA Raps Ike's Refusal To Ask Minimum Wage Hike

"SHOCKED dismay" at Pres. Eisenhower's decision not to recommend an increase now in the federal minimum wage was voiced last week in a letter to the White House by Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock of the CIO Textile Workers.

"Your message," Pollock wrote, "said, in effect, that the best way for workers to achieve higher wages is for them to become more skilled and more productive. Let me remind you that our industrial society is not based upon handicrafts . . . The most important factor in a worker's productivity is . . . the machine he runs."

Pollock reminded the President that in industries like textiles the federal minimum wage has had a profound effect upon the wages fixed by collective bargaining. He added that the federal minimum was for years the actual wage minimum in mills.

American Woolen Votes To Sell Mills

Stockholders of the American Woolen Co. voted in Boston last week to sell eleven mills and retire two issues of preferred stock. The mills to be sold are in New England and New York and employed thousands of CIO Textile Workers.

Beeson Post Is Stalled As Company Ties Raised

By GERVASE N. LOVE

NOMINATION of Albert C. Beeson to the National Labor Relations Board ran into an unexpected roadblock last week when the Senate Labor Committee to all intents and purposes reopened hearings on his qualifications for the post.

The snag appeared at a hearing Beeson had requested to clarify conflicts between his previous testimony and stories concerning his appointment which had appeared in the San Jose (Calif.) Mercury and News. He was vice president in charge of personnel for the Food, Machinery & Chemical Corp. of San Jose until Pres. Eisenhower nominated him.

Out of the hearing, which went into the night, came a decision by the committee to ask the company and its president, Paul L. Davies, to appear with appropriate records concerning Beeson's severance of relations with the firm and the pension rights he still holds.

The action was as confusing as the purpose of the hearing appeared to be in the minds of committee members. Beeson's nomination had already been approved by the committee, by a party-line vote of 7 to 6, and had been sent to the Senate.

Technically, it would require unanimous consent of the committee to ask its recall, and unanimous agreement in the Senate to return it. Practically, it was considered highly improbable the Senate would act while the committee is still holding hearings.

THE COMMITTEE'S action last week came after hours of relentless grilling by Democratic members on the contradiction between Beeson's earlier testimony and stories in the San Jose newspapers.

At an earlier appearance, Beeson had denied to Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y) that he had ever told the Mercury his NLRB term was for one year and that he expected to return to the company when it expired. The reporter, he said, had apologized to him.

Last week, reading from a prepared statement, Beeson contended he made an "honest mistake" in his original denial. He explained he had confused it with an earlier story which had quoted him as saying he "expected" Eisenhower to appoint him.

Lehman and Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) expressed open doubt of the honesty of his "mistakes." Under further questioning by Sen. Kennedy (D. N.Y.), Beeson said he was "so upset" by the first story he did not finish reading it. When Lehman read an excerpt from the same paper, he added, he "assumed" it was part of the same story.

It took further questioning by both Democrats and the Republican majority to elicit the admission that he "apparently" had told a San Jose reporter he expected to return to the firm where he had spent 19 years, after his NLRB service.

A company announcement of the appointment of his sucessor, to serve for one year until Beeson returned, also was read into the record.

Still further questioning brought from him the statement that the company "considered as on leave" for a period of six months all employes who entered the public service. This was a technicality under which pension rights were held in abeyance for that period, he said, and were reinstated without loss if the employe returned in that time.

His own contributions to the pension fund are still on deposit with the company, he said. He can either leave them there to gather interest, or withdraw them at will.

THE STATEMENT in the San Jose Mercury which he admitted giving, plus his pension rights, and the company statement about his successor, aroused the question of a conflict of interests in the minds of many committee members. They sought, after more than six hours of uninterrupted hearing, to resolve it by calling in Davies with the records.

The 5 to 3 vote broke party lines for the first time. The motion was made by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.). Lehman and Kennedy, the only remaining Democrats, voted with him. So did Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), the chairman, and Sen. Cooper (R. Ky.). Opposing it were GOP Sens. Purtell (Conn.), Goldwater (Ariz.) and Upton (N.H.).

Sen. Burke Files

Sen. Burke (D. Ohio) formally filed for re-election to the Senate last week for a full term. He was appointed last year by Gov. Frank Lausche of Ohio to succeed the late Sen. Taft.

"LEGALIZED" WETBACKS — Hundreds of migratory Mexican workers jam border gate at Calexico, Calif., after expiration of U.S.-Mexican farm labor treaty. CIO and other U. S. labor groups have asked resumption of treaty negotiations.

CIO, AFL Ask New Migrant Labor Talks

STONE-THROWING Mexicans rioted along the U. S.-Mexican border last week as recruiting began under the Eisenhower Administration's new "unilateral" program to import foreign laborers for the big corporation farms of the Southwest.

The Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee on Farm Labor urged Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell to resume negotiations with Mexico on a legal agreement covering imported Mexican farm workers.

The U. S. is now hiring Mexicans on this side of the border, following the breakdown of talks on a new migrant pact.

THE COMMITTEE, composed of 18 members drawn from the CIO and AFL, also pointed to the recent increase in unemployment in this country and urged that the Farm Placement Service undertake to find jobs for U. S. workers under conditions similar to those now offered foreign workers.

The report said that the service should "insist that farm employers provide American farm workers with transportation, housing, wage rates and other benefits equal to those provided by law for foreign workers."

Unless these same conditions are also offered to U. S. citizens, the department should refuse to certify an area's need for foreign workers, the committee said.

EXPRESSING "grave concern" over the breakdown of negotiations between the U. S. and Mexico for a renewal of the migrant labor agreement, the committee said that "changes sought by the American representative have reflected none of the recommendations made heretofore by Labor's Committee on Farm Labor."

The group called unilateral action by the U. S. "a serious mistake" that is "likely to have highly unfavorable repercussions to the U. S., not only in Mexico but in other Latin American countries."

Seaway Gets Quick Okay Of House Unit

BY THE overwhelming margin of 23 to 6, the House Public Works Committee last week approved the Senate-passed bill authorizing U. S. participation in the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Chairman Dondero (R. Mich.) announced that he would ask the House Rules Committee immediately to steer the measure to the floor.

If the proposal is cleared for action, the House will have an opportunity to vote on the seaway for the first time in the 21 years since Pres. Hoover negotiated the treaty with Canada in 1932. It has been pigeonholed in the past by various House committees.

ONLY ONCE before—in November 1941—has seaway legislation reached the floor of the House. Then the attack on Pearl Harbor kept it from coming to a vote.

Before approving the Senate bill, the committee adopted an amendment requiring that all revenue from the seaway be earmarked to pay off bonds issued to finance the construction. Dondero said he had been assured by Senate leaders that this amendment is acceptable.

The pending proposal does not deal with St. Lawrence power development, which the CIO believes should be undertaken as part of the project.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. CIO unions testify on Taft-Hartley amendments before Senate Labor Committee. (See Page 3.)

2. Senate Labor Committee votes to hear additional evidence on nomination of Albert C. Beeson to NLRB. (See Page 12.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What To Do
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. holding hearings, House Labor Com. meets this week to plan action.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Beeson nomination to NLRB	Would appoint man with industry bias to supposedly impartial board.	Senate Labor Com. after first approving nomination, voted to hold further hearings.	Write or wire your Senator urging Beeson's rejection.
Administration Tax Revisions	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	House Ways & Means Com. now drafting bill.	Watch future reports and for CIO field action request. This is a major issue.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Would enable U. S. to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships, which Canada will build alone unless Congress approves.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill on Feb. 3.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

Guild Gains Hike On Wire Service

The CIO Newspaper Guild last week announced an arbitrator's decision granting a general wage increase of $2.50 to $4.50 weekly to 1500 Associated Press employes.

The award by Arbitrator William E. Simkin was accepted by Guild AP membership vote and by management. New top minimum is $135.50, the highest in the industry.

Surplus Machines . . . . . And 'Surplus' Men?

What the "farm-bred, farm-led" recession has meant to workers in industrial cities is shown graphically in these photographs.

At top, unsold corn pickers pile up in a yard outside the J. I. Case plant in Bettendorf, Ia.—farm machinery which can't be sold because of declining farm incomes.

At left, a "basement house" is home for Emanuel De La Rose and his family of five at East Moline, Ill., in the Quad Cities area which is "the Detroit of the farm implement industry," where 20% of the labor force is unemployed. De La Rose is shown with his brother, Joseph, another idle worker. "We've been living on beans and potatoes," they said—and hope to be called back to work.

Ike Edges Away From GOP Smear Drive

STUNG by a flood of Republican charges of "sadists" and "treason," Democratic leaders in Congress last week warned Pres. Eisenhower to put some stoppers on GOP oratory.

Former House Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) warned the Administration it would lose Democratic support in the narrowly-divided 83rd Congress, in which the "minority" Democratic Party actually holds a numerical majority in the Senate, unless "mean, untrue and dastardly" attacks cease.

The President, at his midweek press conference, halfway turned his back on the antics of Republican leaders ranging from Sherman Adams, the "assistant President," to GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall and on to Sens. Jenner (R. Ind.) and McCarthy (Wis.).

Eisenhower said he was against displays of extreme partisanship and that he thought it was untrue, politically unwise and foolish to charge that all Democrats are tinged with treason or amount to security risks. But the President—also head of the Republican party—doubted that he could stop this except among his own branch of the government.

A sample of the GOP Lincoln Day oratory which brought Democratic protests to a head follows:

- The charge by Adams, at a GOP National Committee meeting, that Administration critics on the economic situation are "political sadists" who want a "fear deal" and are trying "to talk this country into a depression." (See photo on this page.)
- The claim by Hall, at the same meeting, that "left wingers" are "spreading gloom and doom across the land" for political purposes.
- The charge by McCarthy, on a GOP-sponsored cross-country tour, that the New Deal and Fair Deal Administrations were a period of "20 years of treason."
- The charge by Jenner that Democrats "opened the gates of the citadel to the Communists."

Rayburn was joined by Minority Leader Johnson (D. Tex.), and Sens. Symington (D. Mo.), Monroney (D. Okla.), and Hill (D. Ala.) in challenging the Republicans.

"Our backs are getting mighty sore," said Rayburn, "We said we wanted to cooperate but then we have people high in the Administration hint that anybody who calls himself a Democrat is at least tinged with communism."

And Symington warned that some GOP leaders are trying to "sow dissension and discord among the American people at a time when the U. S. faces probably the greatest peril in its history."

From Monroney came this warning to the President: "You can't be a bipartisan leader in the front room and accept rat alley attacks in the back room."

The President, who had said earlier that he didn't expect communism in government to be an issue in the '54 congressional elections, said last week that he expects GOP Chairman Hall to refrain from extreme partisanship. Hall, for his part, was whooping up this issue.

From CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in a wire to Hall, came this comment:

"I have been unable to find a single laid-off worker who has been put back to work by your epithets."

Smith Bill Hit By McDonald

CIO STEELWORKERS Pres. David J. McDonald last week charged that the Smith Bill to amend Taft-Hartley would "strike at the heart of our system of representative government" in the union.

In a statement filed with the Senate Labor Committee, McDonald also charged the bill—to make T-H worse than ever—would make far more difficult collective bargaining between the union and various large steel companies.

The USA-CIO president leveled much of his criticism at provisions in the bill introduced by the committee chairman, Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), which call for compulsory government votes after a strike has begun. He also criticized the bill's invitation to compulsory arbitration when state governments declare "emergencies."

McDONALD TOLD the committee, which completed hearings during the week, that the bill and Pres. Eisenhower's message on Taft-Hartley revision, destroyed hopes for "justness and fairness" in the nation's labor law.

The steel union's president said the state "emergencies" section of the Smith Bill would have the practical "effect of inviting more state governmental intervention, in addition to federal governmental intervention in collective bargaining relations under the guise of a local emergency."

He pointed to the union's collective bargaining problems with large corporations having plants in many states and said that if a large number of state laws are passed covering collective bargaining, "the possibilities of reaching an amicable agreement will be lessened."

"THE INVITATION to state intervention could well serve to set aside the fruits of free collective bargaining in the basic steel industry," McDonald said. "The proposal could place a premium on political influence rather than collective bargaining persuasiveness."

Bitterly attacking the strike vote proposals of Eisenhower and Smith, McDonald said they "strike at the very heart of a fundamental democratic right of workers; the right to establish and direct the government of their union. This right, in my opinion, is basic to free trade unionism."

Dissent

Two former government labor officials last week strongly condemned the Republican campaign for government votes in every strike.

David L. Cole, former chief of the Federal Mediation Service, and Archibald Cox, former chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board, opposed the plan strenuously.

Cole said it would "do more harm than good." Cox went further, saying such votes "would seriously damage labor-management relations" and would "increase strikes."

Beeson Vote Due In Senate

FLOOR debate on the controversial appointment of Albert Beeson to the fifth and key spot on the National Labor Relations Board was scheduled for the Senate this week.

Beeson's confirmation was railroaded through the Senate Labor committee on a 7-6 vote before all the facts on Pres. Eisenhower's nominee were heard. He claimed to have severed all ties with his former employer but Pres. Paul L. Davies of Food Machinery and Chemical Co. told a different story.

Davies told the committee that Beeson was on leave of absence. Democrats on the committee opposed Beeson's confirmation, calling him "a company man" and doubting his objectivity on the Board. Beeson interrupted hearings at one point to announce he would forego his $4400 equity in a company pension plan.

Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) declared important issues were at stake in Beeson's appointment.

The first, he said, was that the NLRB is "an extremely sensitive area" in which members must be "absolutely impartial" in order to merit the confidence of labor and management.

"POLITICAL SADISTS" — That's what Sherman Adams, assistant to Pres. Eisenhower, called all who mention climbing U. S. unemployment. He spoke at GOP National Committee meeting, setting off vigorous Democratic protests in Congress. At center is GOP National Chairman Leonard Hall. Note hucksters poster in background in which GOP tries to lump liberal, anti-Communist CIO News, New York Post and ADA World, for citing reports on mounting layoffs, with Communist Daily Worker. (For editorial comment, see Page 4.)

Congressman Is Convicted

CONVICTED on seven counts of payroll padding, a GOP congressman from California, Ernest K. Bramblett, faces prison terms up to 35 years and fines of $70,000.

Bramblett announced he would appeal his conviction "to the Supreme Court if necessary."

Bramblett was charged with lying to the House disbursing office about his office personnel. He was accused of designating Mrs. Margaret Swanson of Arlington, Va., as a clerk in his office when she did no work.

Mrs. Swanson's husband was minority clerk in the House and is now employed by the Senate. Swanson testified he advised Bramblett to remove his wife from his payroll and avoid a nepotism charge.

Two other House members, former Rep. Thomas (R. N. J.) and former Rep. Brehm (R. Ohio), were convicted in recent years on charges involving illegal financial transactions.

No-Raid Pact Okayed By Only Third Of AFL Unions

ONLY ABOUT a third of the AFL's affiliated unions have thus far agreed to sign the no-raiding pact with CIO, which a vast majority of CIO unions are prepared to initial.

Press dispatches from the AFL executive board session in Miami Beach reported that about 40 of 111 unions are ready to put their signatures on the pact signed by the two federations last December.

At that time CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther recorded the vast majority of CIO affiliates—with about 98% of CIO's membership—had officially agreed to ratify the agreement when similar action was taken by AFL unions.

The present pact is binding only on the two federations and on unions chartered directly by them. Its effectiveness will be widened only as CIO and AFL international unions sign the pact.

AFL Pres. George Meany did not disclose the identity of unions ready to sign but there were indications that they did not include some of the AFL's largest affiliates. It was reported by the press that many were withholding action pending a decision by the Teamsters Union as to what course it would follow.

Remington-Rand Repairmen Strike

After extending their contract a week in an effort to reach a new agreement, 500 repairmen of the Remington-Rand Corp., who are members of the CIO Electrical Workers, struck last week.

The walkout covered offices in a half dozen states, including New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin. Issues are wages, inequities, commissions, expenses, pensions, union security and cutting the service needed to get three weeks' vacation from 25 years to 15.

CIO Urges Tax Cuts To Aid Consumers

THE BEST way to solve the country's present economic difficulties is to increase the purchasing power of consumers, the CIO said last week.

And the best way to stimulate purchasing power at this point in time, it added, is "by increasing the personal individual income tax exemptions and by permitting excise taxes to lapse automatically on Apr. 1, and even by going further and reducing excises more than the automatic provisions permit."

The CIO's views were presented by Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the Dept. of Education & Research, at a round table discussion on the private investment outlook and implications for federal economic policy before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Ruttenberg took issue with the theory of Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey, who earlier had defended before the committee Eisenhower Administration proposals to stimulate production and purchasing power by granting tax concessions to corporations and upper-income families.

Ruttenberg recalled that new records for investment have been set in each post-war year despite continually rising taxes on corporations and individual incomes. The reason, he continued, was because "markets were strong and profit opportunities were great."

"Excessive inventories during 1953," he said after referring to the production drop since last year's peak, "followed by the rapid deceleration of inventory accumulations, indicate that consumers have not been buying all that existing plant and equipment could produce.

"This lack of consumption creates a paradoxical problem when we consider that the productive capacity of the nation must continually expand year in and year out, to absorb the influx of new workers.

"At this point in time, therefore, should policy be directed . . . toward encouraging corporations to make investments in new equipment and new plant, in the hope that such action will create job opportunities and an expanding economy?

"Or should policy be aimed at increasing the spendable income available to the mass of American consumers, thus enabling the people to buy up the product of existing plant and equipment and encourage expansion?

"All the easy money and tax encouragement in the world could not produce significant investment after 1929, when basic markets were weak . . .

"Increased purchasing power will encourage industry to produce at full capacity because of higher levels of demand."

Gerhard Colm, chief economist, of the National Planning Association, also criticized the Administration's plans. Pointing out that production will not go up unless producers have markets in sight, he said the Administration does not give "adequate consideration to reduction of taxes which affect consumer income."

Reuther Wins Fight—

Detroit Is Named Critical Job Area

THE CIO AUTO Workers were successful last week in their fight to get Detroit classified as a "substantial labor surplus" area and eligible for government defense contract priorities.

The action came after vigorous protests by Walter P. Reuther, president of the UAW and the CIO, to Sec. of Labor Mitchell and Defense Mobilizer Arthur Flemming. Reuther hailed the decision as a sign that "now everyone concerned can cooperate to alleviate the unemployment situation."

Toledo—with about one out of every 11 workers now idle—also was reclassified as a "substantial" unemployment area. Layoffs in the auto, glass, electrical, transportation and fabricating industries now have affected 16,500 workers in the Toledo area.

Detroit previously had been classified as an area of only "moderate labor surplus." After Reuther's protests, the Labor Dept. ordered another survey, which found 107,000 workers—or 7.1% of the labor force—were unemployed as of mid-January, and ordered the new designation. The current Detroit jobless figure is 121,000.

REUTHER PRAISED the action as a sign the Administration has "faced up" to the reality of unemployment. He voiced "great confidence" in the American economy in meeting that problem, but added:

"We know that they cannot be met and overcome with complacency and propaganda. This is no time to exaggerate or minimize our problems. It is time to face them realistically and honestly."

The possibility of new defense contracts for the Detroit area was doubted, however, by Defense Sec. Wilson, who used to be General Motors president.

Asked if any new military contracts will be channeled to the motor city, he replied: "Not particularly."

And Wilson optimistically said Detroit is "well able to look after itself" and that "come spring" the job situation there will be "all right."

In Detroit, GOP Mayor Cobo has voiced concern that layoffs in the auto industry "may have developed into something more permanent." Several CIO unions and the Wayne County CIO Council last week presented a plea to the Common Council to plan a local public works program.

In another auto center, South Bend, Ind., some 2500 UAW-CIO Local 5 members were laid off when Studebaker discontinued its night shift, upped the day shift from 32 to 40 hours a week. Studebaker now has cut employment to about half of the 23,000 peak in 1953.

Minimum Wage Boost Urged As Guard Against Recession

A SERIES of legislative counter-moves against growing recession were presented to Congress last week. Developments:

- A bill was introduced by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) to raise the minimum wage to $1.25 and eventually lower the work week.
- Proposed legislation by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) to provide more adequate planning of public works.

Murray, ranking Democrat on the Senate Labor Committee, called for revision of the Fair Labor Standards Act. He would raise the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour, as supported by CIO. The work week would be slashed immediately from 40 to 37.5 hours, then to 35 hours after two years.

IN ADDITION, he would bring several million more workers under the law's provisions. Murray cited specifically farm workers, employes in food processing and in the retail and transportation industries.

The Administration has failed to perform on its promises in this field, Murray charged, characterizing its attitude as part of the GOP "economic blindness that wrecked our economy in the Twenties."

The Douglas-Bolling bills would set up machinery for what they termed "an adequate shelf" of works projects for use if the economy continues its slide.

Responsibility for planning and action to meet the emergency would be centralized in the President, and authority would be given for a special office for his assistance. Federal, state and local governments would cooperate in establishment of the program.

Part-Time Hours Climb As 9 Million Workers Affected

ALMOST one-sixth of American workers now holding jobs are under-employed, working less than 35 hours a week, the Commerce Dept. revealed.

The latest government figures, issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, report that non-farm employment dropped by two million workers in the month from mid-December to mid-January. This was twice the previous estimate of the Commerce Dept. Factory payrolls alone dropped by 380,000 persons.

Paralleling the climbing unemployment over the past six months has been a steady reduction in working hours.

Of the current Commerce Dept. estimate that 59.8 million workers were at work in the week ended Jan. 9, only 48.7 million were listed as working full time, at least 35 hours weekly. Some two million persons were counted as "with a job but not at work," because of illness or vacations.

Under shorter hours, the government estimates, are 6.9 million workers employed from 15 to 34 hours a week. Another 2.1 million workers are estimated to work only from one to 14 hours a week.

The short work week pattern is spreading in the auto industry, according to a Wall Street Journal report.

Testimony before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report revealed that the government expects that unemployment will average 2.6 million during the first half of 1954.

Hardest Hit

Hardest hit by recent increases in unemployment are skilled workers, semi-skilled workers and unskilled non-farm workers.

While these groups comprise only two-fifths of the labor force, the U. S. Census Bureau said, they account for about four-fifths of the present unemployment.

The Double-Barreled Shotgun Blast Against Labor

Some years ago, Business Week magazine editorially predicted that with "a few million unemployed," the Taft-Hartley Act could be used to "wreck the labor movement."

A similar warning was voiced last week by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), in this excerpt from an address to the Senate:

WE SHOULD repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. To insure the maintenance of full employment it is necessary that management be willing to share promptly with wage earners as well as consumers the benefits of tremendous increases in productivity.

I am gratified that Mr. Harold Stassen (head of the Foreign Operations Administration, formerly MSA) has so advised European employers.

On the other hand, I am fearful that the punitive Taft-Hartley Act will encourage recalcitrant groups of employers in this country to break down the standards and reduce the economic gains in this direction made possible by the Wagner Labor Relations Act.

The President's endorsement of the Taft-Hartley Law, his appointment of business-connected persons as members of the National Labor Relations Board, and his proposed amendments and outright concessions to the National Association of Manufacturers are, of course, only new evidence of the bad advice he is receiving and his failure to understand the forces at work in our economy contributing to recession and depression.

Employers who know how the vicious provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law can be used to damage labor organizations and weaken their representation of workers can only interpret the President's affirmation of belief in Taft-Hartley as support of their ends.

In connection with Taft-Hartley report, it should be said that there are some people in this land who would relish a recession and be willing to run the risk of serious depression to break down the effectiveness of labor organizations.

Some persons would recommend a goal of at least three to five million unemployed, so there would be a floating pool of excess labor as a threat over the unions, their negotiators and individual members.

The mandatory elections proposal in Pres. Eisenhower's labor message takes on a very clear meaning when related to the goal of those who want stabilized unemployment. The results of a mandatory election in a city with breadlines would undoubtedly differ from the results in a full employment economy.

A recession and a tightening of the Taft-Hartley Act constitute a double-barreled shotgun blast at the labor unions.

Kid Stuff

So Sherman Adams, the Assistant to the President, has had his say. The CIO, and a large number of other Americans, in his opinion, are "political sadists" because we dare to mention the job layoff orders striking at millions of working men and women.

And the Republican National Committee even has charts to "prove" that The CIO News, the New York Post and the ADA World are in the same class with the Daily Worker.

We are not amused. The German Third Reich of Adolf Hitler was much smoother at that sort of stuff. And Mr. Adams might devote his talents as Assistant to the President to getting the Commerce Dept. and Labor Dept. to agree on how many Americans have lost their jobs. It was two million in a one-month period, according to the Labor Dept. All the Republican epithets won't put them back to work.

Two Balloons Go Pop

Two of "the big lies" in the GOP's war cries about "communism in government" were exploded last week:

• One is the claim that Joe McCarthy never slandered an innocent man, that he only gives the facts. The Wisconsin Senator himself knocked that one down, concerning his charge that John J. McCloy, former Undersecretary of War and High Commissioner in Germany, had ordered destruction of records on Communists in the Army. "I was in error on that," Sen. McCarthy confessed last week.

• The other is the claim that the Republicans have eliminated hundreds of "subversives"—the current figure is 2200—from the government. That was punctured in secret testimony of Scott McLeod, State Dept. security officer, before a House appropriations subcommittee.

The net total of "loyalty" firings from the State Dept. under the GOP is only four. McLeod's testimony, revealed last week, demonstrated. There were, he said, 534 departures for "loyalty" reasons under the GOP. But only 11 of these dismissals were for "security reasons." And of those 11 cases, seven were initiated under the Truman Administration—leaving a net of four for the GOP.

The whole GOP operation, as Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) said last week, smacks of "the big lie technique" used by both Communist and Fascist dictatorships. And while Pres. Eisenhower pleads for less partisanship in politics, the Republicans haven't called a halt—the "Communists in government" lie has more lives than a basketful of Kilkenny cats.

'A Reward For Crime'

Perhaps the most authoritative characterization of the Administration's "go it alone" program of recruiting Mexican farm labor came last week from Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio.

"When the federal government recruited illegal aliens for employment, it posted a reward for crime against the United States," the Archbishop wired the House Agriculture Committee. Congress, he added, should not "attempt to legalize lawlessness."

Congress should overwhelmingly reject the Administration's request that its unilateral program, declared to be without legal basis by the Comptroller General, be continued. As CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther put it, "attempts to sanctify a wrong by passing a law making that wrong legal should be struck down and repudiated."

Penny For Your Thoughts, Mr. Lincoln!

In Other Words—

Lincoln Would Turn In His Grave

Whether Abraham Lincoln would be happy with the present Republican Party was the subject of speculation by Sen. Burke (D. Ohio) in a recent speech before the Women's National Democratic Club in Washington, D. C. Excerpts follow:

By THOMAS BURKE

A FRIEND of mine complains that February is a very noisy month for him. His offices are close to the headquarters of the Republican Party and he tells me that early in the month there is a horrendous clacking of typewriters as the ghost-writing department hammers out the Lincoln Day addresses soon to be delivered by the bigwigs of the Republican Party.

As soon as the pace of the typewriters starts to slow, there is a new noise, the constant whirring of the mimeograph machines as the ghost-written speeches are made ready for distribution to the press. Then, my friend says, there are a few days of quiet until the speeches, always citing Lincoln as the text for partisan attacks against the Democratic Party, are delivered.

After this my friend complains there is a final whirring which he thinks is the Great Emancipator turning over in his grave as he hears his words abused by a party which has long since deserted his principles.

Now it seems to me that Abraham Lincoln is enough of an American institution to be a bipartisan property, so I shall feel free to cite some of his remarks as texts for my sermon today, but I shall try to employ them in the Lincoln tradition of charity to all and malice toward none.

It is interesting to speculate what Lincoln would say of our world today if he were here on earth, his melancholy eyes looking at our tumultous country from beneath the rim of a Homburg hat.

Would he be a Republican or a Democrat? I do not profess to know, but some of his words would certainly sound strange if they were heard today from Republican mouths.

Lincoln had an old-fashioned respect for promises, and in Bloomington, Ill., the home town of the man who said, "Let's talk sense to the American people," Mr. Lincoln said on May 29, 1856:

"We must not promise what we ought not, lest we be called upon to perform what we cannot."

Can't you see the advertising fellow who masterminded the last Republican campaign doubled up with laughter over the innocence and naivete of that statement? It wouldn't take them long to knock that out of the speech and put in something like "Who says we can't lower taxes and balance the budget and do it in a hurry?" That, as we can all see, would sound good and promise nothing.

In fact, I'm afraid the ballyhoo boys would have to a lot of editing to fit Lincoln into the pattern of Republican campaigning today. For instance:

Lincoln said: "The legitimate object of government is to do for a community of people whatever they need to have done, but cannot do at all, or cannot so well do for themselves, in their separate and individual capacities."

What The Hucksters Say

The Republican platform writers would probably modify that to read as follows: "Our government has become swollen beyond all need, feeding an army of useless bureaucrats. We need less government in business and more business in government. We must root out all vestiges of creeping socialism such as the TVA."

Lincoln said: "The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present. The occasion is piled high with difficulty and we must rise with the occasion. As our case is new, we must think anew and act anew."

I suppose the hucksters would change that to read: "We must turn again to the legacy of our glorious past. We must meet today's challenge with the simple faith and 100% American programs of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln."

Lincoln said: "Labor is prior to, and independent of, capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration."

I'm afraid the GOP ad writers wouldn't like that one. It's too long, too hard to remember, too many big words, not at all catchy. They would shorten it up and give it some zing so that people could remember it. The new version, of course, would be, "What is good for General Motors is good for the country."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER, who likes to think of himself as above and distinct from partisanship, recently admitted under questioning from reporters that he doesn't think his Executive Dept. subordinates should be "extreme" in partisan statements.

He also said that political opponents were vicious in their comments even about George Washington, in his day, and seemed confused about what anyone expected him to do about vicious Republican extremists now.

Here are two documented cases exposing the political trickery of the President's subordinates—not congressmen or lonely free-lance Republicans but Eisenhower's trusted Exective Dept. officials—in trying to make people believe that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Truman "coddled" Communists, in or out of government:

Quote

"The strange thing is that whenever the Republicans adjust anything," says Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), "it is always adjusted downward; the operation is always in the middle of the back, pushing down. The Republicans never push up or adjust upward."

The first involves testimony by Warren Olney III, a Justice Dept. official in charge of the Criminal Div. Olney told a House Appropriations subcommittee, in testimony recently published, that a "housecleaning" had produced "amazing results," turning up some "20,000 items . . . missing from the records and proper files."

He said these included key FBI reports linking Harry Dexter White and other officials with espionage and added the reports had never gone to Justice's internal security division for "evaluation." He intimated that, had these documents gone to internal security, the famous 1948-49 federal grand jury that indicted Alger Hiss might have indicted others.

The Facts Are Different

The facts, as dug out by Philip Potter of the pro-Eisenhower Baltimore Sun, are quite different.

The 1948-49 grand jury was directed by Tom Donegan, a former FBI agent who has helped interrogate Elizabeth Bentley—the witness on whose testimony the "key" reports were based.

Tom Donegan is sitting today in the same Justice Dept. of which Olney is an ornament. He is sufficiently trusted by Atty.-Gen. Brownell to represent Brownell on an inter-departmental committee on internal security.

A Justice Dept. associate says that Donegan, after leaving the FBI, was picked by former Atty.-Gen. Clark to handle the 1948-49 grand jury for the precise reason that he was familiar with the Bentley charges.

Donegan himself handled Miss Bentley before the grand jury—the first time she had appeared as a government witness. He kept her before the jury for weeks. He got her to rename 25 or 30 persons as alleged espionage contacts—and each accused person, except one or two who had left the country, was in turn hauled before the grand jury to testify.

The documents weren't "lost." They weren't "unavailable" to the grand jury. They weren't "unevaluated." Donegan knew all about them, presented testimony based on them. A Justice Dept. official charitably attributed Olney's phoney testimony to the House committee to "confusion."

A Case Of Fraud

The second case involves the "2200" alleged security risks who, according to Mr. Eisenhower's personal statement to Congress, have been "separated" from government. It involves specifically the "534 security risks" separated from the State Dept. by that Fearless Fosdick character, W. Scott McLeod, Sec. Dulles' security officer.

McLeod appeared before a House Appropriation subcommittee and, according to committee members, was compelled to admit that his "534" figure was a fraud.

He was handicapped, no doubt, because Undersec. Bedell Smith, an honest man, had already testified that "no" Communists had been uncovered in the State Dept. and that, so far as Smith knew, there had "never" been any "except Hiss" and one minor official fired years ago.

McLeod reluctantly admitted that the claimed "separation" of "534 security risks" involved exactly all 11 cases in which loyalty was an issue, and that seven of these "cases" were initiated during the Acheson regime.

McLeod was forced to confess that his "534 security risks" included people who resigned, some to go to other government departments where they are still working, without knowing there was any "derogatory information" in their files.

This is what the Brothers Alsop, Washington columnists, call the Brownell technique of "stabbing them in the back after they leave; they won't notice it."

It is also a political "extremist" maneuver, participated in by intent and design by Eisenhower's personal subordinates, to peddle a Big Lie. Is it any wonder that Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) felt called upon to remind the country of the late Huey Long's prophecy—that "when this country went Fascist, it would do so in the name of 120% Americanism?"

We're not going Fascist. Decency and truth are still part of the American tradition. But Pres. Eisenhower could stop the Olney-McLeod-Brownell viciousness in an instant if he wanted to do it, and his attitude of self-proclaimed confusion and personal non-partisanship is wearing thin.

Economic Outlook Says—

Low-Income Families Swatted As Tax Loopholes Cost $8 Billion

UNPLUGGED loopholes in the income tax laws are responsible for the federal government's turning toward excise and sales taxes for new revenue, the CIO Dept. of Education & Research charges in the current issue of the Economic Outlook.

But the Eisenhower Administration and the Republican-controlled House Ways & Means Committee—where tax laws originate—have no intention of tamping new legislation into present gaps and ending a handout of nearly $8 billion a year to upper-income families, it adds.

Instead, it continues, proposed revisions in the tax structure would give still greater relief to the wealthy at a time when the country's greatest need is additional purchasing power in the hands of the great mass of consumers.

"The income tax," the Outlook points out, "is a progressive form of taxation. It is based on ability to pay. Tax rates are lower on low incomes and higher on upper incomes. This tax takes a larger percentage of income from the wealthy and a smaller share of income from the poor.

'Undermined By Loopholes'

"Yet the individual income tax has been and continues to be, undermined by loopholes and concessions that primarily benefit upper-income families. Billions of dollars of possible federal revenue are lost each year through these loopholes.

"As long as the loopholes are permitted to continue—and further concessions are granted—we face the prospect that the individual income tax will produce a smaller and smaller portion of federal revenue in the future. And this progressive form of taxation would become a constantly less important part of our federal structure."

The Outlook warns that there will be continued pressure for more excise and sales taxes, which hit lower-income families hardest, so long as Congress refuses to plug present loopholes and actually creates new ones.

Lost Revenue

The CIO Economic Outlook estimates that from $7.4 billion to $7.9 billion would be saved if major income tax loopholes were plugged. The largest saving, $3 billion, would come from elimination of income splitting for tax purposes, the publication says.

"These loopholes," the publication explains, "make it possible for upper-income families and business firms to legally avoid the burden of the full tax rate that would otherwise apply at their income levels."

The avenues of tax escape open to the wealthy "chip away at the progressive nature of the individual income tax," it added.

The program of further tax concessions for the wealthy advocated by the Republicans will result in an eventual revenue loss of more than $3 billion a year, the Outlook maintains.

Big Boys Get Cuts

"Over 90% of the more than $3 billion loss in annual federal revenue," it explains, "will go to wealthy and business families; $2.7 billion goes to corporations and the wealthy holders of corporate stocks.

"The Administration's proposals for new tax loopholes are based on the theory that corporations and wealthy stockholders must be stimulated to invest money in new plant and equipment. This suggestion comes at a time when consumers are already unable to buy the products that existing plant and equipment can turn out.

"The argument is fallacious. If tax concessions are granted to the wealthy, most of the additional revenue will be placed into savings, rather than going into the spending stream to create more jobs and more buying power. Prosperity does not depend on high profits and high personal incomes for the rich, but rather upon expanding consumer markets that rest upon the purchasing power of the majority of American families in the low and middle-income groups."

The Outlook estimates that two of the new tax concessions proposed by the Eisenhower Administration and the Ways & Means Committee would mean a $2.7 billion loss in federal revenue.

The first is the partial elimination of the so-called double taxation of dividends paid by corporations to stockholders. The other would allow the cost of new plants and equipment to be written off at a much faster rate than at present.

While these grants of "special privilege" were being proposed, the Outlook recalls, the Ways & Means Committee was voting down another proposal to raise the personal income tax exemption "a mere $100, from $600 to $700," to give tax relief to lower and middle-income groups.

No Consumers, No Markets

In advancing the CIO's program for raising income tax exemptions from the present $600 to $1000, the Outlook says:

"If the Administration were seriously concerned with the problem of stimulating economic growth in this period of downturn, it would pay careful attention to the economy's major incentive for expansion—a rising consumer demand that depends upon increasing consumer buying power.

"It is an expanding consumer market that stimulates economic growth, in the long run. All the government's concessions to business and wealthy families will not sell the products of American industry and agriculture if consumer markets are weak."

Quad Cities— 'You Just Look

Note To Readers and Republicans—

Some Republicans are saying that the nation is just in a "rolling adjustment," that everything will be okay "come spring." Some Republicans are trying to spread the idea that telling the facts on unemployment is bad for America. The CIO News prints this story of the people behind the unemployment figures to remind its readers of the hardship caused by layoffs, to show the need for vigorous action to prevent a deep recession.

(First of two articles)

By FRED ROSS

THIS IS THE STORY of the people behind the statistics on growing unemployment.

It is the story of some of the jobless workers, whose number is now listed officially at 2,360,000 by the Commerce Dept. It is the story of laid-off workers in Quad Cities, which is one of the 50 industrial centers where unemployment is substantial, in this case because of recession on the farm.

In Quad Cities, the Detroit of the farm implement industry, more than one out of every five workers is looking for a job—jobs that don't exist. Normally 55,000 persons work in the Quad Cities—Moline, East Moline and Rock Island in Illinois, and across the Mississippi at Davenport in Iowa.

Fourteen major plants in the area normally employ 17,000 production workers. Today only half of them are on the payrolls.

The figures for the 14 plants do not include office workers who were let go along with the skilled and production workers. Such layoffs boomerang, resulting in furloughs for store, restaurant and filling station employes.

Don Murphy's Story

The 14 major plants include five Deere & Co. factories, two J. I. Case plants, two International Harvester Corp. manufacturing branches, the Minneapolis-Moline Manufacturing Co., the French and Hecht Div. of the Kelsey-Hayes Corp., a Container Corp. of America plant, a Bettendorf Corp. factory and the Riverside foundry.

But this primarily is a story of human beings, typical of whom is Don Murphy, who was laid off two weeks after he started buying a house. The Murphys have nine children.

Wounded in an explosion on the aircraft carrier Lexington during World War II, he was a line assembler for seven years at the International Harvester plant in East Moline.

Before he was furloughed, he made the down payment on a one-story, five-room frame house on the outskirts of Moline. But let him tell the story.

"We kept telling each other we really were going to have something we'd always wanted, something we believed our kids really should have," said the 36-year-old Murphy.

"Then it happened, I was out of work. About the middle of the day on Oct. 14—it was about two o'clock in the afternoon—the foreman came around and told me about the layoff.

"I had been sort of expecting it. Guys were being notified two days befort that. Still when you expect it, you sort of hope it will pass you by."

Murphy was entitled to three days' notice of layoff because he was a CIO Auto Workers steward at the plant, but the company ignored that. When the UAW learned of this, it swung into action to correct the matter for Murphy and other laid-off stewards.

After Murphy left the plant, he went immediately to the union office, and then home, where he told his wife about losing his job. He continued:

The Search For Work

"The next day I started to look for another job. Winifred (his wife) was about ready to go to the hospital to have our baby—he's six weeks old now—and the doctor told us she had to have an operation right after that."

He tried to get a job several places—even in a foundry, where a doctor had told him he should not work because of the heavy work involved.

Murphy's wages at the Harvester plant amounted to about $84 a week. He now gets about $32 a week through workmen's compensation and the Veterans' Agency set-up of the county—almost a two-thirds cut in income.

Newspapers have been carrying rosy stories of revival in the farm implement industry, based on the recall of a few hundred workers here and a handful of workers elsewhere.

"If the farmer starts buying again, we'll be all right," said Pres. Samuel Grogg of the Four Counties CIO Council, which covers the Quad Cities area.

Grogg also is CIO Auto Workers representative in charge of the sub-regional office of the union in East Moline. Pat Greathouse is director of the region, No. 4, and is also director of the UAW Agricultural Implement Div.

"DETROIT" of the farm implement industry is the Quad Cities of Illinois and Iowa, with view of a big International Harvester plant in area now is nearly SIGNS like this will grow if the farm implement industry is not revived.

The Quad Cities story is only one chapter in the book which should be called "Growing Unemployment," At Dubuque, the Deere tractor works plans to lay off another 300 workers during the next two weeks.

Burton Foster, one of the UAW representatives at the union's Moline office, and Grogg disputed the accuracy of the Illinois Employment Service figures on unemployment in the Quad Cities.

The service claimed that on Nov. 19 total employment in the area fell by only 6850 and in the farm implement industry by 6800 under last May 15, Foster said.

He claimed the figures are far "too low," and are qualified by the service which says that they are a "preliminary estimate based on incomplete reports and are subject to revision." The Jan. 15 figures had not been compiled by Jan. 26.

Grogg also said that the figures trail a month or so behind the date on which they are issued.

Efforts of the CIO Council and the UAW locals to get the U. S. Labor Dept. to declare the Quad Cities a critical unemployment area entitled to defense work have failed, despite the assistance of Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Rep. Chipperfield (R. Ill.).

Company Boycott

"No farm implement company representatives attended any meeting of the union with the congressmen, although they were personally invited," he said.

"When the layoffs first started in the late summer and fall, some of the furloughed workers had to wait five weeks for their first unemployment compensation checks," Grogg related. "The reason for the delay was that the 'economy move' of Illinois Republican Gov. William G. Stratton cut the number of clerks in the unemployment compensation office.

"The Council and the UAW locals succeeded in persuading the Republican Administration to hire more clerks and speed up the service."

Unemployment compensation checks for $27 are paid for 26 weeks in Illinois and for $26 for 20 weeks in Iowa. All earnings in excess of $2 are deducted from the checks.

SCENES LIKE THIS are increasing throughout the U. S. This picture was taken in the Quad Cities area where jobless workers line up to apply for their unemployment compensation checks of $27 a week—and for jobs.

'You Can't Take Th Jobless Benefit Of

INSIDE AN Illinois unemployment compensation office you can't take a photo of the long line of applicants.

Paul Soboroff, Moline office manager, and E. J. Woodring, Moline manager of the State Employment Service, gave the reason for the ban.

They said that when a magazine photographer wanted to take pictures about a month ago, Joseph T. Updegrove, then compensation office manager, called his main office in Chicago.

He was told absolutely no pictures should be taken of the applicants. The CIO News reporter, who interviewed Soboroff and Woodring, pointed out that he had covered many similar stories and always had received the cooperation of compensation officials in getting photos.

For Jobs, But They Don't Exist'

foreground. Jobless toll in Quad Cities 10,000, 20% of the working force.

Douglas Challenges Official Job Figures

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) took strong exception to the Labor Dept. figures of 5.4% unemployment in the Quad Cities.

For some time he has been pressing Labor Sec. Mitchell to put the community in a critical unemployment area which would entitle it to priority on defense contracts, finally winning an order for a new unemployment survey in the Rock Island area.

Joseph Cummings, chairman of the Council's Community Services Committee, said that a number of workers will exhaust their unemployment compensation this month and will go on public assistance.

Grocery orders in Iowa range from $22 a month for a single man to $80 a month for a family of nine. In Illinois a maximum grocery order of $56 is received by a family of four, which can get up to $40 a month for rent, and $12 to $15 for fuel.

Business has been hit hard, although the Associations of Commerce try to minimize the loss of business.

"My sales in 1953 were 20 to 25% under those of 1952, although they picked up slightly last Christmas," said a merchant with stores in Moline and East Moline who refused to be identified. "I, in turn, cut down on my buying of stock, and on advertising, and I had to let three or four clerks go."

at Picture,' fices Declare

On these occasions when he was asked to have photographs taken so that faces did not show, he gladly complied.

Soboroff said he would try to get an reinterpretation of the order by the time the reporter visited Peoria, Ill., but there it was the same old story.

The Peoria office covers six counties, Peoria, Tazewell, Fulton, Mason, Marshall and Woodring. J. E. Harmon, compensation office manager at Peoria, said that the number of persons drawing compensation in the area was 6500, only 1000 higher than a year earlier. The working force is 130,000.

"I can't even begin to give you an estimate of the unemployed in the area," Harmon said. (The photo at left, outside a Quad Cities office, gives an idea.)

'Like A Miracle'—

They Squeeze By On Beans, Potatoes

"WE'VE BEEN LIVING on Mexican beans and potatoes," said Emanuel De La Rose, laid-off worker at a Deere plant at East Moline.

He was talking about his family of five and the four members of the family of his 24-year-old brother Joseph, who was also laid off last October at the Deere plant.

They both live at Silvis, a community near East Moline, where there is a settlement of several hundred workers of Mexican ancestry, many of them jobless farm implement workers.

"I'm fortunate that I don't have to pay rent," Emanuel said in his four-room basement home, which his father helped him build. (His brother lives in a garage converted into a residence at the rear of his father's home.)

Live On $27 Weekly

Emanuel, who is 23, said his "good fortune" ended there. Since he was laid off, he has been unable to find a job, and has been drawing $27 weekly in unemployment compensation.

"Half of the compensation check goes for light and oil for heating," Emanuel said. "Besides my wife is pregnant and may have the baby momentarily."

He said he had been assured that an insurance policy would pay most of the maternity care.

Joseph and Emanuel were hopeful they would be called back to work soon. Victims of other layoffs, they said:

"There's nothing like a steady job, and we're for the guaranteed annual wage which would assure it."

John Bowman, a worker at the Deere malleable plant at East Moline, lives at Green Rock, another East Moline suburb. When he was laid off last October, he had five years' seniority.

Heavily In Debt

Bowman was not at home. He had gone to Golconda, some 350 miles away, to return his car to the finance company because he could not make the payment out of his $27 weekly unemployment compensation check.

His wife told the plight of the family of six. Her husband had built their home three years ago. Prospects were bright before the layoff struck like a bolt out of the blue.

Now they are faced with a debt of $750, due on a furnace, television set, deep freezer, and washer.

They make what payments they can out of the compensation checks which aggregate $108 a month. They also must pay $12 a month for gas, which they use for cooking and heating.

Not Much Money For Groceries

There is not much money left for groceries. Mrs. Bowman said that she added to the income by keeping a neighbor's child for $2 a week, while her mother is working. She said, "It keeps the children in socks."

"What can I buy out of what is left of the compensation checks?" she asked. "We live on beans, potatoes, bread, luncheon meat, jelly, peanut butter. I also buy such staples as lard, flour, salt, baking powder and sugar.

"We have a very little meat. The only meat we get comes with the monthly allotment we get as part of the purchase price for the deep freeze.

"It's a close get-by. The children have never been hungry and they always have been clothed well. Sometimes it seems like a miracle."

(Next week: The situation in Peoria, another farm implement center.)

IT'S TOUGH to be a jobless worker like Don Murphy who is shown here with part of his family in which are nine children. A wounded World War II veteran, Murphy was unable to get a job.

UAW MEMBERS contributed these shoes and clothes for jobless fellow workers in the Quad Cities area.

TWO ROOMS and no jobs is the fate of Arlo Britton, an unemployed worker, his wife and three children.

THERE'S NOT MUCH HOPE for a job left for these workers who are filling applications at the Moline employment service office. Jobs also fell in Quad Cities' businesses dependent on farm implement payrolls.

Textile Workers Institute—

'Dark Panic' Of McCarthyism Hit By Lehman

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

McCARTHYISM threatens our national character by breaking down our respect for the privacy of the individual, Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) told a CIO Textile Workers legislative institute in Washington last week.

Lehman pulled no punches, saying the committee headed by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) has done "irremediable harm" to the liberties and freedoms of Americans.

He charged that committee with going around the country arousing neighbor against neighbor and with having damned many innocent people without giving them a chance to clear their names. "McCarthyism is a widespread manifestation of panic and dark fear," Lehman said.

TAKING TIME OUT for a look at Washington's "magnificent distances" is the trio of CIO Textile Workers (at left) on the Capitol steps. They attended a legislative institute held last week for 45 TWUA-CIO members from 10 states. In the photo at right Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) told an institute dinner meeting that political action is essential to elect the kind of legislators needed to enact a CIO program for all the people. Organization of every worker would help.

Real Soviet Threat

TWUA-CIO members from 10 states attended the five-day institute. Lehman's address was made at the final dinner meeting.

Lehman emphasized that he did not belittle the dangers of communism either through the expanding power of the Soviet and her satellites or within our own borders. He pleaded that investigation and prosecution of subversives be left to competent agencies like the FBI, Central Intelligence Agency and the military intelligence services.

The New York Senator declared he had no objection to congressional investigating committees but he flayed the tactics of McCarthy's group "which have become judge, jury and prosecuting attorney." He explained why he voted funds for McCarthy's committee but pledged himself to work towards adoption of a set of fair rules and procedures for this and other committees.

"There is a great difference between legitimate, orderly investigations by Congress and inquisitions by congressional committees," Lehman said. He added that McCarthy's methods "threaten the rights, dignity and security of those singled out for attack."

Lehman said the two most serious concerns among our allies overseas are McCarthyism and the McCarran Immigration Act. Legal immigrants are scrutinized minutely before being allowed to come here, Lehman said, while "hundreds" of subversives came across the border from Mexico as "wetbacks."

On The Way Out

The 45 TWUA members at the institute heard Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.) predict "this Administration is on its way out."

Neely added that "there just aren't enough liberal Democrats and Republicans to pass the kind of legislation CIO wants. The only answer is organization of every worker and more political action."

The group attended sessions of the Senate and House and sat in on committee hearings where revision of the Taft-Hartley Act was being argued. They heard CIO spokesmen argue for control of the wetback situation before another House committee.

Each member held a meeting with his congressman, some reporting later that they had extracted pledges to vote favorably on legislation with which the group was concerned. A special session was devoted to studying the legislative records of hometown congressmen at National CIO headquarters.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) left the Senate floor to meet with the group and more than a dozen congressmen attended dinner sessions. Working from early morning until late in the evening, the group had little time for sight-seeing. Highspots of the social program was a visit to the Indonesian Embassy.

THEIR CONGRESSMEN'S records are studied by James and Virginia Varcadipane of Paterson, N. J., and Burns Cox of Alabama City, Ala., during a session with the CIO Legislative Dept. while attending the Textile Workers institute.

2 States Challenge Oil Give - Away

THE GOP's give-away of coastal oil lands was facing a constitutional challenge last week while Uncle Sam looked farther seaward to the management of the off-shore riches he reserved to himself.

Rhode Island and Alabama found themselves ranged before the U. S. Supreme Court against Texas, Florida, Louisiana and California and the federal government itself in their contest to break the title of the four states to the fabulous wealth beneath their tideland waters.

The court heard arguments to determine whether the two have-not states may file a suit challenging the tidelands give-away bill passed last May.

Atty. Sam Cohen argued for Rhode Island that the paramount rights of government in the disputed lands "are intimately bound up with foreign policy and national defense."

At stake in the case, Cohen continued, "are serious questions of state and federal power" and "tremendous economic interests in irreplaceable resources." He urged that the court should not back away from the issue because of its "political overtones."

AS SPOKESMAN for the nation's tiniest state, Cohen maintained that Congress in passing the law abdicated its responsibility, repudiated the public national interest and violated the principle of equality among the states.

The tidelands bill passed last August gave the states title to submerged lands three miles off their seacoasts except for Texas, which claimed and got traditional rights to tidelands 10.5 miles from shore. The federal government will supervise drilling and exploration beyond those limits.

'Slow Strangulation' Of TVA Feared

STUDY of the Administration budget proposals has convinced Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) that the Tennessee Valley Authority is "threatened with slow strangulation."

Sparkman said it will take the combined efforts of all friends of TVA and low-cost power in and out of Congress to prevent the program from being scuttled or dangerously crippled.

"If TVA should be destroyed," he warned, "the fight for the Rural Electrification Program and low-cost power might very well be lost."

Examination of the budget, the power policy of the Administration and statements of GOP congressional leaders proved, Sparkman said, that the plan "is first to curtail the growth of TVA and then slowly strangle it to death."

"They won't try to sell it," he said, "That would be too obvious. They plan a gradual liquidation."

Tennessee Gov. Frank G. Clement warned a House Appropriations subcommittee that the budget will result in a "brown-out" for the Tennessee Valley. He charged that the Director of the Budget got his estimates for the valley power requirements from Edison Electric Institute, the private power companies' organization.

THE PRESIDENT'S budget recommendations for TVA are a repudiation of his campaign promise to encourage maximum development of the area, Sparkman said. "Moreover," he said, "the President is gambling not only with the welfare of the millions who live in the Valley but also with the security of the nation."

A threat by some Republicans to make appointment of a TVA chairman a partisan matter was regretted by Sparkman. "Such a stand is contradictory to the act establishing TVA," he said, because the act specifically prohibits politics in the operation of the Authority.

Pointing out that heretofore TVA had been kept out of politics and that no board member has ever been appointed from partisan considerations, Sparkman said to do so now would be further proof that this Administration is "out to kill TVA." He promised a fight against destruction of the Authority.

OTHER SENATORS joined Sparkman in blasting Republican attempts to hamstring TVA —Sens. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) and Hill (D. Ala.) charged Administration forces with trying to cripple the Authority.

Listing defense activities in the area, Hill said it would be a kind of "shortsightedness" to provide adequate power for the Valley.

Sen. Eastland (D. Miss.) charged that high-ranking Republicans, including Eisenhower appointees, are spearheading "a propaganda barrage" for the sale of TVA assets to private interests.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

"THE PRESIDENT'S proposals and the Smith amendments (to the Taft-Hartley Act) are obviously another giveaway to the reactionary wing of the Republican Party and a victory for the National Association of Manufacturers, which undoubtedly helped draft some of the more vicious proposals."

That's what the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council said in a resolution which also called for lodging protests with Pres. Eisenhower, Chairman Smith and other members of the Senate Labor Committee, Sens. Knowland and Kuchel, both California Republicans.

Council Backs Symphony

The Steel City CIO Council was one of the leading union sponsors of a recent concert by the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. This was the second year the orchestra gave a concert with labor support.

- Pres. Robert E. Hess of the Minnesota CIO Council voiced strong criticism of the President's message on labor, particularly the proposals that the National Labor Relations Board conduct union strike votes and that employers sign non-Communist affidavits.
- The New York City CIO Council has voted full support of the CIO Transport Workers in urging Mayor Robert F. Wagner to dismiss Harris J. Klein from the Transit Authority. It said Klein is a "self-seeking trouble-maker" who is trying to disrupt transit wage negotiations.
- The Cook County CIO Council will hold an emergency unemployment conference at Chicago on Mar. 6. "The all-day session will be a working conference opening with reports from local unions on the numbers laid off in their shops," said Ellsworth M. Smith, Council secretary.
- Also concerned by growing unemployment was the Wayne County CIO Council, whose representatives appeared before the Detroit Common Council last week to present the problems of the city's 107,000 jobless.
- The Port Cities CIO Council has established a "University of Hard Knocks" at Muskegon, Mich., and a speaker's bureau. The school was set up to acquaint workers with their rights under unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, health insurance, social aid and welfare. The bureau will supply speakers for community meetings.
- The Indianapolis CIO Council distributed handbills to unemployment security applicants at the Employment Security Div. calling on them to send post cards to Gov. Craig and State senators and representatives asking an increase in unemployment compensation benefits.
- Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council told a one-day convention of the Passaic County CIO Council that the State Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers Association were exerting every effort to block his appointment as Commissioner of Labor & Industry. The convention, which was held in Paterson, N. J., re-elected Joseph W. Smith, Rubber Workers, as president.

Idaho CIO Forms New PAC Council; Benson Is Rapped

DELEGATES representing 5000 CIO members have formed the Idaho CIO Political Legislative Council at a recent meeting at Boise.

The CIO Steelworkers, Woodworkers, Communications Workers and Oil Workers were represented.

Howard Roe, IWA, was elected chairman. Other officers chosen are: Vice Chairman Forrest E. Heid, USA; Sec.-Treas. Fred L. Garrett, CWA; executive board members, Albert G. Beattie, CWA; J. C. McPhie, OWIU; Ben H. Larson, IWA, and Harold Hansen, USA.

ADOLPH Germer, CIO national representative, was the principal speaker. Fred McCabe, chairman of the legislative committee of the Idaho State AFL, spoke. George Roberts, CIO-PAC representative, aided in setting up the Council.

The convention condemned Agriculture Sec. Benson's efforts to pit city residents against the farmers, and called for higher price supports for farm products.

Other resolutions deplored growing unemployment and the worsening economic situation of the country, the failure of the Administration to call for improvement in the 75c minimum wage, and its packing of the National Labor Relations Board with industry representatives.

The convention also backed the CIO stand for public rather than private development of Hell's Canyon and requested that a Senate committee headed by Sen. Langer (R. N. D.) hold a hearing in Idaho on public power.

In The Legislatures—

Sales Tax, Anti-Union Curb Fought By Kentucky Labor

CIO LEGISLATIVE leaders in Kentucky are fighting a two-pronged attack on proposals to re-establish a state sales tax and to enact a right-to-work bill.

A similar right-to-work bill, introduced in the South Carolina Legislature, has met vigorous labor opposition. William Kirkland and Wayne L. Dernoncourt, State director and Columbia business agent of the CIO Textile Workers respectively, spoke against the measure at a Senate Labor Committee hearing.

The anti-union measure sponsored by the Associated Industries of Kentucky would make it unlawful for union membership to be a condition of employment and would outlaw checkoff of union dues.

Rep. Thomas J. Murphy, a member of the House Labor Committee and also an international representative of the CIO Steelworkers, said he doesn't think the bill has a chance.

The businessman who heads the Senate labor group sees "no purpose in upsetting the applecart" of labor relations progress made in the past 20 years.

FORMER Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley said "the people of Kentucky have too much sense to pass such legislation." And Gov. Lawrence Wetherby told the press, "if any bill is anti-labor I will not support it."

When the sales tax measure opened for hearings, legislators were told by the bill's sponsor that the 3% retail levy was the best friend of the little man.

"It's the little man's worst enemy," retorted Sec. William F. Billingsley of the Kentucky CIO Council.

Labor's basic objection to the sales tax, Billingsley declared, is that it is unjust because it lightens the burden of the well-to-do, and increases the burden of the poor.

"And if a tax is unjust," he added, "it must stand condemned, no matter how much money it would raise or how easy it would be to administer. Most people . . . make just enough to get by on. It takes every dime. The sales tax is very heavy on these people with nothing left over."

66 Councils Participate In Pittsburgh Regional Meet

THE THIRD in the current series of state and local CIO council meetings, held last week in Pittsburgh, drew 211 delegates representing 66 councils.

During the two-day conference, delegates from five states and the District of Columbia discussed legislative and political action problems, as well as community services, public relations and community relations.

Directing their attention to the major legislative battles on Capitol Hill, representatives of the CIO Legislative Dept., led by Robert Oliver, executive assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Legislative Committee director, gave an up-to-the-minute report on congressional developments.

Oliver outlined the Legislative Dept.'s new machinery for keeping councils abreast of fast-breaking developments. The delegates discussed plans for transmitting this information to all CIO members in their area.

Tilford Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee, led an afternoon-long discussion on political activities in the five-state area during the coming year. Local political problems and prospects for the coming congressional campaign were discussed.

Carl McPeak, executive assistant to CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. John V. Riffe and assistant director of councils, was chairman of the conference, which was arranged by Regional Dirs. George Craig and George DeNucci.

Michigan FEPC Knifed By GOP

Republican legislators killed Michigan's chances for fair employment practices laws in the present session of the State Legislature.

The FEPC bill was shelved by the House State Affairs Committee when the six GOP members voted against their own party and Pres. Eisenhower. In 1952 campaign speeches Eisenhower said he favored state enactment of FEPC laws.

After the adverse GOP vote, Gov. G. Mennen Williams said Democrats "will not accept this roadblock as a final defeat."

Oregon Ban On Picketing Is Upset

THE CLOCK has been stopped on a time bomb placed under unions by the 1953 session of the Oregon Legislature.

Circuit Judge O. J. Millard of Grants Pass, Ore., held that a section of the State's anti-picketing law was unconstitutional. In a 40-page opinion the judge made it clear, however, that he does not consider the matter settled.

Millard's ruling was on a case brought by Fred G. Scherer, State labor examiner, against an AFL union to halt picketing at a Portland restaurant. The restaurateur sought an injunction under the anti-picketing law and Scherer granted it. When the union refused to comply, Scherer asked the court to enforce his order.

THE JUDGE held that since the section of law was unconstitutional, the injunction cannot be issued. Millard cited a legal precedent from the Oregon Supreme Court that a "broad ban against picketing by a minority was unconstitutional."

Sec.-Treas. George Brown, of the Oregon CIO Council, said he was "very happy" at Millard's decision.

Brown added that while the case at Grants Pass involved an AFL affiliate, the CIO was also a party to the matter in the courts. He said the Council will be on hand to defend its interests and oppose the law in the Supreme Court if the decision is appealed, as it is expected it will be.

CIO Helps Plan Safety Confab

Labor will play a leading role in the White House Conference on Highway Safety to be held in Washington this week.

The Planning Committee of the Conference's Labor Group includes the members of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health. Michael J. Quill, CIO committee chairman and president of the CIO Transport Workers, and Raymond F. Leheney, AFL, are co-chairmen of the planning committee.

GOP Tax Gimmick 'To Torpedo Public Housing' Is Turned Down

A MOVE "to torpedo public housing through tax discrimination" has been stopped in Congress, after strong protests by Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.), mayors of several large cities and supporters of low-rent housing units.

The House Ways & Means Committee, now drafting tax legislation, last week reversed a previous decision to make interest payments on local housing authority bond issues subject to federal income taxes.

Eberharter, in a vigorous presentation to Congress a few days before the GOP-ruled committee backed down, said the original decision amounted to "an attempt to kick to death the already anemic public housing program, by making municipal housing authority bonds issued in the future subject to federal taxation."

The Pennsylvania lawmaker presented protests from a number of city officials, including Mayor Elmer E. Robinson of San Francisco, a Republican and president of the U. S. Conference of Mayors, Democratic Mayor Joseph S. Clark of Philadelphia and heads of several local housing authority.

"The public housing program of this Administration," Eberharter told the House, "is now so starved and anemic that it would take not much more than a slight breeze wafting through the House Appropriations Committee to kill it off entirely."

The inadequate present Administration proposal is for construction of only 35,000 new public housing units a year. CIO has urged a program for 200,000 units.

Quote

Pres. Eisenhower wants to "curtail" public housing as soon as possible, according to Ronald J. Chinnock, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards.

Chinnock, after calling at the White House to protest the Administration's housing proposals for 35,000 units a year, declared Eisenhower "said he doesn't like it any more than we do, but has to do certain things at this time to get some people housed. He hopes the program can be curtailed as soon as possible, and if the rest of his housing program is enacted it would make the public housing program unnecessary." (LPA)

Eberharter called the original action of the House committee, headed by Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.), "needless use of the tax law cannon or blockbuster" against the nation's housing needs.

If the committee's original recommendation—now set aside—had been carried into effect, Eberharter said, the effect would have been that "local communities would either give up further public housing projects, which is the committee majority's objective, or else they would put the government more deeply into the lending business in connection with public housing."

Chairman Reed said the committee backed away from its move to tax housing authority bonds to give Congress time to act on Pres. Eisenhower's several housing proposals.

LOVE THAT LABEL says National Commander Arthur J. Connell of the American Legion, who runs a clothing store in Middletown, Conn., where he sells only items carrying the union label of the CIO Clothing Workers.

ACW Union Label Boosted By Legion's National Chief

THE UNION label, symbol of craftsmanship, and the American Legion, the country's largest veteran's organization, have something in common in Arthur J. Connell, the Legion's new national commander.

Connell is proprietor of a men's clothing store in Middletown, Conn., where he advertises that he sells nothing but clothing bearing the label of the CIO Clothing Workers.

A visit to his modern, one-floor specialty shop showed he sold only nationally known brands made by the skilled members of ACWA-CIO and identified by the union label in the inside pocket.

A six-footer with silver hair, Connell admits that he likes the union label for business reasons because his customers are more and more inclined to demand it as a symbol of good value in the clothing they buy.

He has little time for selling clothes since his election to the Legion's top spot and the store is left largely in the hands of his assistants. Connell finds that he spends a day or two a month at home and the rest of the time he is traveling the country on Legion business.

A Navy veteran of World War I, Connell disclaims any ambitions to enter the political field which has claimed a number of his predecessors. Instead, he intends to remain in the retail clothing field—featuring the union label.

Coffee Control Bill Voted; Food Price Climb Due

WHILE the Senate last week moved to put coffee trading under federal regulation, the Agriculture Dept. warned consumers they may expect even higher food prices because of "tightening" meat supplies.

Sen. Gillette's (D. Ia.) bill giving the Commodity Exchange Corp. power to regulate coffee speculation passed the Senate without dissent on a voice vote. The GEC already regulates trading in cotton, corn, wheat and other items.

Wholesale food prices rose 8c to $7.09, the highest point in three years on Dun & Bradstreet's weekly index. The previous high was $7.16 in May 1951.

Consumers were warned by the Agriculture Dept. not to expect any break in food prices this year. Supplies, they thought, would be generally as large as in 1953 but strong demand and the "relative inflexibility" of food marketing costs will rule out any sharp price reductions.

Declining supplies of meat, fishery products, lard and fresh vegetables were forecast. Increases in items including chicken, canned vegetables and potatoes were predicted.

Best Seller

It used to be that a sure way to make any book a hit was to have it banned in Boston. Now there's a new literary success formula: Have it blasted by Pres. Eisenhower.

During his 1952 campagin the GOP candidate teed off on the government's 32-page brochure called "Tools for Food Preparation and Dishwashing." He termed it "a shameful wasting of tax funds."

The Agriculture Dept. last week ordered 15,000 additional copies of the booklet last week to meet increased demands. During the fiscal year ended last June the department mailed 21,360 copies compared with 14,561 requested by busy homemakers in fiscal '52.

AFL Hatters Ask Backing In Long Strike

A CAMPAIGN to inform the public, particularly organized workers, of the strike against the Hat Corp. of America, has been undertaken by the AFL Hatters, Cap & Millery Workers.

Representing the company is Walter Gordon Merritt, notorious anti-labor lawyer who was attorney for the manufacturers in the infamous Danbury Hatters case 50 years ago.

The firm, at South Norwalk, Conn., makes Knox, Dobbs, Cavanagh and Dunlap hats. The wealthiest in the country, it has 8000 retail outlets.

The strike began July 9, 1953, when the company forced the 1500 union workers to walk out by refusing to renew a contract clause intended to preserve their jobs. The firm had announced a policy of gradually discontinuing its South Norwalk operations and moving to a non-union plant in the South.

Food, Drug Enforcement Funds Cut

GOP ZEAL for "economy" is hamstringing consumer protection from contaminated foods.

Crippled by budget cuts, the Food & Drug Administration has had to eliminate many important jobs, including some of its enforcement staff making factory inspections. Work on sanitation and filthy and decomposed foods has been curtailed.

The recital of these facts led the New York Bar Association to adopt resolutions urging Congress to avoid impairment of the FDA and pass the Hale Bill, which would simplify procedures for setting food standards.

The lawyers' group was told by one of its own committees that FDA regulations safeguard public health and have "profound economic and social significance. Therefore, Congress should provide adequate appropriations to administer it."

A former Justice Dept. lawyer noted that recent Supreme Court decisions in food and drug cases indicate "a swing to the right." He said consumer protection will have to come from Congress rather than from judicial interpretation.

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission also has thrown another curve at consumers in the name of simplification. In the future, the FTC said, textile invoices no longer need specifically disclose fiber or material content provided they carry a warranty statement as to the content. The breakdown of fiber content in textile products formerly required will be supplanted by a statement that the content is properly labeled in accordance with "trade practice rules."

House Group Drops Charges Against Consumers Union

UNFOUNDED "subversive" charges against Consumers Union finally have been retracted by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Consumers Union is widely known as the publisher of Consumer Reports, a magazine which analyses products for the guidance of buyers.

The committee's annual report said "the committee finds there is no present justification for continuing this organization as one that is cited, and future reports and publications will reflect that this organization has been deleted from the list of subversive organizations and publications."

The committee placed Consumers Union on its list of subversive organizations after J. B. Matthews made charges against it in 1939 before the committee when it was headed by former Rep. Dies (D. Tex.).

Matthews at that time was vice president of a competing organization, Consumers Research. More recently he was named by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) as chief investigator of his Senate Investigating Committee, but was soon fired after he wrote a magazine article making charges of widespread communism among Protestant clergymen.

'Quality Seal' Drive Backed By UAW Local

THREE generations of a family, all members of CIO Auto Workers Local 5, joined in a union-management ceremony putting gold "quality seals" on cars rolling off the Studebaker assembly line at South Bend, Ind.

First of the seals was affixed by Pres. Louis J. Horvath of Local 5 and H. S. Vance, Studebaker head.

"The seal itself is new," Horvath said, "But the idea behind it is not. The tradition of craftsmanship . . . handed down to us by previous generations of Studebaker workers is reaffirmed by this seal."

Linking present craftsmen to the past at the ceremony were J. R. Smith, 71, retired after 28 years with Studebaker; his son, Orville W., who has 31 years of service, and his grandson, Charles W., employed since 1949. The three carry cards in Local 5.

No 'How To Buy'

Sidney Margolius' column, "How to Buy," a regular feature of The CIO News, was not received this week from Labor Press Associated.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

OUR FIRST SERIES of regional council conferences has been successfully completed. After a week's rest, Assistant Dir. of Councils Carl McPeak will start again. Four more conferences are on the agenda.

They are the key to our council program for the coming year, and they are presenting to the local council leadership a hardhitting 365-day-a-year program for building CIO, building the prosperity of our communities, and building the general welfare of our nation.

Personally, I am grateful for the way our local council leadership has taken to the challenge thrown down by current events by moving ahead on the program spelled out in these council conferences. From all reports, our people are "up." It has often been said that struggle brings out the best in people, and certainly we are facing no easy times.

Because CIO is taking a realistic view of the present situation, and because we make no bones about our grave concern with the trends of the times, there are some spokesmen for various political groups who say that we are gloomy. But I see no gloom in the fact that the men and women of our union are standing on their feet, ready, willing and able to make the sacrifices of time and effort to see this nation through to a rebirth of progress.

There are certainly long days and nights ahead, and unceasing work that calls for the highest kind of dedication to the fundamental ideas of trade unionism. Some things might have changed since the days I came out of the coal mines, but one absolute fact remains the same and that is that men and women banded together in the spirit of trade unionism can overcome any problem on the face of this earth.

CIO REG. DIR. GEORGE DeNUCCI reports the following CIO representation election victories in Reg. 6: Kroger Co., Dayton, O., Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers 35, other union 21, no union 1, challenged 2; Tellings Ice Cream Co., Dayton, Chemical Workers 3, other union 2, no union 0. Rep. Henry Adkinson handled both of these campaigns. Other results: Dayton Steel Foundry, Portsmouth, O., CIO Steelworkers 63, AFL Moulders 43, with Staff Rep. John Carroll handling this situation for the Steelworkers. Allied Chemical Co., Moundsville, W. Va., Chemical Workers 48, against 42.

Assistant CIO Organization Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that the CIO Steelworkers were victorious in a representation election at the Republic Heater Corp., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of 24 to 16. USA-CIO Reps. Frank Hudson and James P. Smith directed the drive. The CIO Oil Workers won a representation election at the Shell Chemical Co., Ventura, Calif., by a vote of 46 to 14 for the AFL, no union 28. Intl. Reps. Homer Coffman and James Morgan handled this campaign.

Organization Dir. John Maurillo, CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers Reg. 1, reports a representation election victory at the Sapolian Paint Co., New York, N. Y., by a vote of 61 to 55 for the AFL. The campaign was conducted by Staff Rep. Martin Heed, Dist. 3, UGCCWA-CIO.

CIO Reg. 2 Dir. Michael Mann reports that the CIO Shipbuilding Workers won a representation election at Brown-Allen Chemicals, Inc., Staten Island, N. Y., by a vote of 18 to 11 for no union.

REG. DIR. REGINALD BROWN of the CIO Utility Workers reports that the CIO Utility Workers beat off an attempted raid by the IBEW-AFL at the Rivesville power station of the Monongahela Power Co. of W. Va., by a vote of 84 to 24, with 11 voting neither.

CIO Reg. 8 Dir. Frank Cronin reports the CIO Packinghouse Workers won a representation election at the Armour Co. plant at North Platte, Neb., by vote 14 to 9 for the AFL.

Chairman John Green of the CIO Railroad Workers reports a representation election victory over the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots at the Central Railroad of New Jersey, Union City, N. J. The vote was URRW-CIO 94, AFL 22, void 3.

CIO Reg. 11 Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the Murray Gin Co., Dallas, Tex., by a vote of 331 to 150 for IAM, no union 6. USA-CIO Reps. Hank Rabun, Pete Haubner and C. T. Ray handled this campaign.

GCEOC Wins At N.Y. Social Agency

PROFESSIONAL, clerical and maintenance employes of New York City's Institute of International Education have joined the CIO Government & Civic Employees.

In an election conducted by the Honest Ballot Association, the Community and Social Agency Employes Local 1707 of GCEOC-CIO won overwhelmingly.

The Institute through its foreign student program selects, places, orients and supervises more that 2000 foreign students nominated by committees in about 60 world centers for study in U. S. colleges and universities.

Its U. S. student program screens the thousands of applicants to select the 800 graduate students who go abroad for a year's study under the Fulbright Act.

It was the professional group, all college graduates, who first sought unionization. Their principal grievance was an unbelievably low salary structure.

Even after an increase last year, the minimum for an associate, lowest-paid professional job, is below $60 a week. First union goal will be to bring these wages into line with similar jobs in private and government agencies.

Management at first refused to recognize the union long after a majority had joined. An anti-union group attempted to confuse issues. Help in organizing came from GCEOC members from the YMCA's national board and the National Council of Jewish Women.

Big Carrier Contract Hit By IUMSWA

A CONTRACT for a super-carrier costing almost $118 million has been given by the Navy Dept. to the non-union Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Corp.

In Quincy, Mass., which had hoped to get the contract for its Fore River shipyard, it was explained that traditionally lower wages in the South were an important factor in losing the contract.

Executive Sec. James F. McGonnigal of Local 5, CIO Shipbuilders Union, explained that competition is almost impossible between an organized yard like Newport News.

He contended no Negro workers are allowed to hold a mechanic's rating in the southern yard although they are experienced and have done the work for years. Instead, he said he had learned, a white mechanic drawing $1.97 an hour is put over a crew of about ten Negroes who do mechanics' work but get the handyman's rate of $1.69 an hour.

In a statement released in Washington, the IUMSWA charged the Administration was "playing politics" in awarding the super-carrier contract to Newport News in an effort "to keep the Virginia congressional delegation in the GOP voting column."

McGonnigal pointed out hidden practices that the southern yard will be able to use to save money on the big carrier. For example, he said, workers can be shifted just a few days before their vacations are due to work on a similar carrier being built on a cost-plus basis.

Labor's World—

Anti-Commie Unions Plan New Japanese Federation

A MEETING preparatory to setting up a new anti-Communist labor group in Japan was held last week in Tokyo, with representatives of more than 800,000 organized workers participating.

A movement for the formation of such a body had been under way for some time. Active in it were the General Federation of Japanese Trade Unions (Sodomei), with Sec.-Gen. Sen Koga spearheading the drive, and unions in the National Liaison Council of Democratic Trade Unions.

The latter body is composed of anti-Communist unions in the Communist-led General Council of Trade Unions (Sohyo) which are affiliated directly to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Largest body in the proposed new organization is the National Union of Textile Workers, with some 450,000 members under strong anti-Communist leadership. Other affiliates include seamen, miners, broadcast employes and theater workers.

Koga said the aims of the new body would be to eliminate all Communist influence from member unions, "stand on the side of the free world," and affiliate with the ICFTU. Strikes for political purposes, such as Sohyo has called, will be avoided, he added.

Sohyo was founded in 1950 with the approval of Allied occupation forces. Originally anti-Communist, it later veered to left wing socialism, then moved towards communism.

France

A general wage increase of 15% for workers in private industry has been ordered by the French government without a corresponding increase in prices, Finance Minister Edgar Faure announced.

The boost followed a recommendation for a 10% increase by the National Federation of Employers which was not put into effect by all members. It means an increase from 100 to 115 francs an hour is the minimum that can be paid a worker in the Paris region, or the equivalent of $64 for a 192-hour month—based on the 48-hour week—compared to the old minimum of $55.07. It will be slightly less in other sections.

ORIT

Gen.-Sec. Luis Monge of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) protested to member nations of the Pan American Conference against holding next month's scheduled conference in Caracas, Venezuela.

The protest had one good result. In it, Monge pointed out that more than 800 persons—many of them workers—were being held without trial for political or trade union activity, with many more exiled. A few days later, some 400 political prisoners were freed.

Honored

Dr. Ernst Schwarz, executive secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, recently was made an honorary member of the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM), the first foreigner to be so honored.

The distinction was bestowed, CTM Sec.-Gen. Fidel Velasquez said, "because of your highly meritorious actions in the international struggle for social betterment and furthermore as an expression of gratitude for the work of unity which you have achieved between the workers of Mexico and the United States."

UFWA Wins Baltimore Plant

CIO FURNITURE Workers have won bargaining rights at the country's largest venetian blind plant despite "every trick in the anti-union employers' book."

Pres. Morris Pizer announced that UFWA-CIO received 505 of the 876 votes cast by employes of the Eastern Venetian Blind Co. of Baltimore, Md. Two AFL unions on the balot received a total of 27 votes, 18 for the Chemical Workers and nine for the Teamsters. No union got 321 votes.

Prizer said the organizational drive before the National Labor Relations Board election was "a long and tough one."

The union head added that since UFWA "has received such a clear mandate from the workers, it proposes to the company that the business at hand—that of bargaining in good faith on wages . . . and other provisions for the protection of the workers—be tackled in as amicable and expeditious a fashion as possible."

N. Y. Guild Gains In Times Award

Weekly wage increases ranging from $2.50 to $4.50 have been awarded to CIO Newspaper Guild members on the New York Times by arbitrator Harry Shulman. The decision covers employes in the editorial, commercial and building maintenance departments.

Wolverine Shoes On Unfair List

The CIO Shoe Workers have urged union members to ignore the Wolverine Shoe Co.'s current advertising campaign aimed at promoting the firm's safety shoes among union people.

Pointing out that USWA-CIO is still on strike against the company, the union called on all union members to make sure that Wolverine is not supplying safety shoes in their plants.

CIO Protests Rush Drive On Migrant Bill

By MILTON PLUMB

EFFORTS to rush legislation through Congress to legalize the Administration's "go it alone" program of recruiting Mexican farm labor drew strong protests from Pres. Walter P. Reuther and other CIO spokesmen last week.

Pointing out that the Comptroller General has ruled that the Administration's unilateral program is "without legal basis," Reuther wired GOP leaders that "there can be no moral basis for continuing a program which has had such tragic consequences."

The CIO position was backed up before the House Agriculture Committee at four days of hearings, made necessary by the large number of protests. The Administration originally sought to push legalizing legislation through the committee in one day.

R. J. Thomas, assistant to CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, and Irwin L. DeShetler, acting CIO regional director in California, testified and read into the record a detailed statement by Reuther. (See separate story, this page.)

PETITIONS of 3000 U. S. citizens in the Imperial Valley asking Congress to stop recruitment of Mexicans and give them a chance to work instead are handed to Chairman Hope (R. Kans.) of House Agriculture group by CIO's Irwin DeShetler (left). At right, R. J. Thomas (center) states CIO objections to legalizing the Administration's extra-legal program while U. S. farm hands are unemployed.

"In opposing this program, which has seriously hurt our country not only in Mexico but throughout all of Latin America, the CIO is not working against the interests of either American farmers or Mexican laborers," Thomas emphasized.

He pointed out that the widespread use of low-paid Mexican braceros on the great corporation farms of the Southwest gives the big operators a dangerous "competitive advantage" over the millions of family farmers who make up "the backbone of U. S. agriculture."

Small Farmers Hit

"The small farmers are being driven out of business because the big farms which use sweated foreign labor can undersell them on the market," Thomas said.

"American family farmers, who do most of their own work, can't exist on the margin of profit that brings huge returns to corporation farmers who pay wages as low as 20c an hour to wetback labor," he continued.

And when American farmers' income falls, business men and city workers who produce the things they buy also suffer, Thomas added.

Rep. Cooley (D. N.C.), ranking minority member of the committee and one of the most influential members of Congress on agricultural matters, said he fully endorsed the CIO position.

"I can see the possibility of American farm workers walking the streets looking for jobs," he declared. "Last week I moved two families onto my farm because they were destitute. That situation can be multiplied a thousand times in my state."

Cooley brought out that North Carolina cotton growers must pay up to $4 per 100 pounds for labor, while Texas and other cotton producers pay around $1.50.

Cut-Rate Wages

DeShetler told the committee how Mexican "slave" workers are replacing U. S. workers in the Imperial Valley. He pointed out that although more acreage is being planted to lettuce, only 700 U. S. workers are now employed in 17 packing sheds, whereas there used to be 3200 employed in 80 such establishments.

"The work Americans used to do in the sheds at $1.33 per hour is now being done by Mexicans in the fields at about 70c an hour," he said.

New Parleys

In the face of solid labor and consumer opposition to the "go it alone" Mexican farm labor program, the Eisenhower Administration last week made a sharp reversal of policy.

Pres. Eisenhower told newsmen he has discussed the situation with Mexican Ambassador Don Manuel Tello and consented to resume negotiations with Mexico for a new agreement. The U. S. broke off the talks Jan. 15.

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week told the House Agriculture Committee that the Administration's unilateral Mexican farm labor program is "economically unsound, morally unjust and internationally disastrous."

Pointing out that Congress was asked to validate the program as an "emergency" because the Comptroller General has ruled it is illegal, Reuther declared

"We say there is no emergency, save that of an extra-legal activity whose access to the taxpayer's money has just been cut off by findings of the federal government itself."

The CIO president, in a statement filed with the committee, emphasized these points:

1. There is widespread unemployment today in the Imperial Valley and other regions for which the Administration wants to import Mexican nationals. U. S. citizens, displaced by lower-paid Mexican contract workers and illegal "wetbacks," should first be given the opportunity to fill the jobs.

2. The substandard conditions which growers offer Mexican labor depress farm income generally by becoming the prevailing competitive pattern. This undercuts the income of the millions operating family farms.

3. Administration policies after Jan. 15 played "directly into the hands" of Communists and other anti-American groups in Latin America by drawing protests throughout Mexico.

4. The over-all program "amounts to official encouragement of illegal immigration" since no steps are proposed to halt the flow of wetbacks. "Such a policy invites fifth column activities of subversion and sabotage," he said.

Reuther's statement was confirmed the following day when secret testimony by the Immigration and Naturalization Service was released. Spokesmen for that agency warned that hordes of illegal aliens are making a "mass invasion' over the Mexican border which now is beyond control.

Reuther's charge that the Administration's "go it alone" program has "gone far toward wiping out overnight" international friendship built up over the last 20 years was supported by Rep. Shelley (D. Calif.).

He called the Administration program "a prime example of diplomacy at its worst." Shelley said it is "slapping the face of a friendly neighbor intent only on protecting the rights of its citizens from exploitation by some U. S. employers—the same employers who seem to be dictating the policy this Administration is following."

Support

Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio last week backed the CIO's opposition to the Administration's "go it alone" program of recruiting Mexican farm labor.

Lucey, formerly a member of Pres. Truman's Commission on Migratory Labor, wired the House Agriculture Committee that there is no need to "further embitter our relations with Mexico" when more than 2 million Americans are unemployed.

The Wetback Situation In Summary

Here's how the "breadlines and barricades" situation along the Mexican border with respect to farm labor came about:

- In 1943, as an emergency measure to meet wartime manpower shortages, Congress authorized the importation of Mexican nationals for work on farms under an agreement with Mexico. The last extension, in 1953, required the negotiation of a new treaty to replace the one that expired Dec. 31, 1953.
- Both the U. S. and Mexico sought changes in the old treaty. No compact having been reached by the expiration date, the parties agreed to continue operating under the old agreement until Jan, 15, 1954, and to continue negotiations.
- During this period, the U. S. announced that unless Mexico accepted terms which would weaken protections to Mexicans brought in under the program, this country would do its own recruiting on this side of the border.
- Mexico balked. Negotiations were broken off, though Mexico reportedly was willing to continue if terms of the old pact were kept in effect during talks.
- The Eisenhower Administration went ahead with its "go-it-alone" recruiting program. Widespread resentment swept Mexico.
- On Feb. 2, the Comptroller General ruled the Administration had no power to recruit workers without a treaty.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. CIO urges Congress to reject Administration request that its "go it alone" Mexican farm labor program be made legal. (See Page 12.)

2. House Labor Comittee fails to act on motion by Rep. Bailey (D. W.Va.) that no action be taken on Taft-Hartley amendments this session. (See Page 2.)

3. Views of CIO on Administration tax program are presented before Joint Economic Committee. (See Page 3.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What To Do
"Go it alone" Mexican farm labor program (H. J. Res. 355)	Authorizes unilateral program of recruiting Mexican "slave" labor for big farms of Southwest, thereby depressing general farm income and throwing U. S. workers out of jobs.	House Agriculture Com. has completed hearings.	Write or wire your Representative urging rejection of measure and later support for larger appropriations to curb illegal immigration.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. completed hearings last week. House Labor Com. due to plan action soon.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Beeson nomination to NLRB	Would appoint man with industry bias to supposedly impartial board.	Senate Labor Com. has approved nomination. Floor action due.	Write or wire your Senator urging Beeson's rejection.
Administration Tax Revisions	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	House Ways & Means Com. now drafting bill.	CIO field action request issued last week. Urge your Representative to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor.

Help Jobless Now, Says CIO

Reuther Hits GOP Complacency

City Man—Home was never like this for James E. Craft, an unemployed Detroit worker. Until a few weeks ago, he lived on a farm with his big family. Then he lost his job and was evicted from his home. Now they "live" in an old hearse while Craft searches for work. (Story on Page 9).

Countrymen—Victims of two years of drought and developing farm mechanization, these unemployed sharecroppers and day laborers wait on steps of Dunklin County Courthouse in Kennett, Mo., to apply for relief and surplus foodstuffs. Some 700 farm families are destitute in the Kennett area.

Act Now—"Complacency and indifference" toward nation's mounting economic problems were scorched by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, as official U. S. unemployment figures topped three million mark. Testifying before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report, Reuther urged "practical and tangible action" to prevent a deep recession. He emphasized need for increasing the people's purchasing power through higher income tax exemptions, boosting the minimum wage, improving social security, and increasing unemployment compensation benefits. The theory that "spring and the robins will bring prosperity" is "dangerous and unrealistic," he said. (Story on Page 3.)

'Pro-Employer Bias' Laid To Labor Board By CIO

"THE PARTISAN, pro-employer approach" of Eisenhower appointees to the National Labor Relations Board was deplored last week by the CIO Executive Committee.

CIO's warning was underscored by the Senate vote of 45 to 42 to confirm Albert C. Beeson to the fifth and key NLRB post.

Democrats who voted with Republicans were Sens. Byrd (Va.), Eastland (Miss.) and Holland (Fla.).

The CIO committee had asked Pres. Eisenhower to withdraw the nomination of Beeson because of his close industry ties.

"Now more than ever," said the CIO group, "it is essential to have a fifth board member who is completely independent, impartial and objective. Unless such an individual is appointed, the independent character of the NLRB and public confidence in it will be in danger of total disintegration."

Political considerations, anti-union sentiment and employer favoritism have infiltrated the NLRB since the advent of the Eisenhower regime, the CIO charged.

THE DISREGARD of the new Board members "for the independent, quasi-judicial character of the NLRB; their insistence on revising well established policies without any mandate from Congress; and their veiled threats to the job security of certain Board personnel, bear all the earmarks of an indiscriminate political reorganization," said the CIO.

"Whatever may be said about such occurrences in an executive department, it is inexcusable and intolerable in a quasi-judicial agency," the Executive Committee added.

The committee traced establishment of the NLRB to the Congress which passed the Wagner Act. The board's functions, it observed, made it necessary to establish it as an independent agency, free of control by the executive branch.

NLRB policies have undergone a major shift in direction since Pres. Eisenhower assumed office. Due to two resignations and expiration of one member's term, three vacancies became available.

GUY FARMER was named man and Philip Ray Rodgers was appointed to the board by the President. Nomination of Beeson stirred up a controversy after he gave conflicting testimony about his business connections to the Senate Labor Committee.

The CIO said the Republican appointees "apparently conceive of the board as being subject to the vicissitudes of political changes which are prevalent in the executive branch." Their expressed attitudes can only create doubts as to the impartial character of the board, the statement said.

Citing new practices adopted by the NLRB, the CIO complained that these "already have had a severe impact on some of the protections which workers enjoyed under policies of the previous board."

THE CAPTIVE audience technique—compulsory attendance of workers on company time and property for a "brain-washing" session—was given approval by the new board, accomplishing "by administrative fiat . . . what Congress did not see fit to do," the statement noted.

Other policies detrimental to unions which got NLRB's okay included broadening the scope of the anti-union remarks an employer may make; permitting an employer to refuse to accept signed cards as proof of a union's majority status; sanctioning discharges of employes not involved in an illegal strike and declining to cover within the board's jurisdiction various types of companies formerly under the NLRB scope.

Just as significant, the CIO said, are the increasing delays in board decisions which are to the advantage of anti-union employers. The number of cases awaiting NLRB decision went from 400 to 566 in the three-month period ending last Dec. 31.

SIGNING of first agreement with Raritan Copper Workers of International Smelting & Refining Co., Perth Amboy, N. J., climaxed another victory of CIO Steelworkers over Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers. Shown signing is Plant Manager L. W. Kemp, while USA-CIO Staff Rep. Fred A. Clarici (left) waits his turn.

PROTEST—Michael Quill, CIO vice president and Transport Workers head, displays copies of his telegram calling for investigation of the grand jury process in Brooklyn after his indictment on a criminal libel charge.

CIO Supports Quill Against Libel Charge

THE CIO Executive Committee last week pledged its full support to Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers in his defense against a criminal libel charge.

The committee said the charge against Quill, who is a CIO vice president, is "in effect directed against TWU and its members." "We are confident that when all the facts are in, Vice Pres. Quill and TWU will be completely vindicated," it continued.

The New York City Council said the indictment of Quill was "a direct attack on TWU and the entire labor movement of New York City."

A Kings County (Brooklyn, N. Y.) grand jury indicted Quill on three counts of defaming Harris J. Klein, a member of the Transit Authority. Quill countered with a demand that District Attorney Silver, Klein and others be investigated by New York State's Atty.-Gen. Goldstein.

Quill asserted the grand jury system had been abused in Brooklyn and predicted that "no amount of indictments, wire tapping or threats of conviction will stop, delay or weaken the Transport Workers Union and the CIO from achieving its goal of genuine collective bargaining."

The indictment grew out of Quill's charge on Jan. 19 that Klein sought his help towards obtaining appointment as a justice of Special Sessions Court in return for his support of a $50 million package contract between TWU-CIO and the transit body.

Klein denied this charge and announced he would sue. Three days later the matter was before the grand jury.

Quill added that "in Brooklyn the grand jury is now a political instrumentality," He urged Goldstein "to see that this historic instrument of justice is not subverted into a weapon of corruption and intrigue."

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on the CBS television program "Man of the Week" Sunday, Mar. 14. The program is aired at 3:30 p.m. Eastern standard time.

USA-CIO Gets Eastern Pact In Mine-Mill Drive

THE CAMPAIGN of the Steelworkers to spread organization in the non-ferrous metal field was marked by a victory last week when the union announced the signing of a first contract with a major eastern ore refiner.

The agreement was reached after more than two months of negotiations with the Raritan Copper Works of the International Smelting & Refining Co., Perth Amboy, N. J. It covers 1100 workers, including office employes, and was completed in time to avert a strike.

In their fight for bargaining rights, the USA-CIO routed the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, which was expelled from the CIO in 1950. The contract follows several defeats handed by the CIO affiliate to Mine-Mill in the West, notably in the copper center of Butte, Mont.

THE CONTRACT grew out of a USA-CIO victory in a National Labor Relations Board election on Aug. 13, 1953. Certification was held up until Nov. 10 because of flimsy charges filed by the unaffiliated Mechanics Educational Society of America.

The new agreement was negotiated by the union's Dist. Dir. C. B. Newell assisted by Staff Reps. Fred A. Clarici, Tex Richcreek and James Jones, and a local committee headed by Pres. Joseph Miller.

It provided for an 8.5c an hour pay boost retroactive to July 10, 1953, plus more than 1c to improve the company-paid Blue Cross hospital plan and accident insurance program.

The new starting rate is $1.64 an hour. The settlement also yielded the union shop with checkoff, paid holidays, and improved vacation plan, a joint apprenticeship and safety committee program; and a pension agreement similar to basic steel.

House Group Drafts T-H Amendments

THE HOUSE Labor Committee this week began drafting legislation to amend Taft-Hartley after defeating, 18 to 10, a motion by Rep. Bailey (D. W.Va.) to table any revisions for the rest of the session.

The vote was along party lines, with all Republican members present voting against tabling. Three Dixiecrats, Reps. Barden (N.C.), Lucas (Tex.) and Landrum (Ga.), voted, as usual, with the Republicans.

Meanwhile, the CIO Rubber Workers filed a brief with the Senate Labor Committee condemning as "unworkable and unnecessary" the proposed amendment that would require a government-conducted election before a strike would be legal.

The URW's general counsel, G. L. Patterson, contended that too much emphasis has been placed on strikes as the cause of lost production. He pointed out that in 1953, nearly 50% more man-days were lost as the result of industrial accidents than in work stoppages.

"It might be better if we devoted more legislation attention to industrial safety and less to efforts restricting the right of labor to strike," Patterson said.

Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) of the Senate Labor Committee met with Pres. Eisenhower to discuss his proposed substitute for the government supervised strike vote. Smith's plan would give unions a stipulated time to file copies of constitutions requiring secret ballots for all strikes. Thereafter results of such ballots would have to be made public.

CIO Gives Score On 'Worse Than T-H'

"WORSE THAN Taft-Hartley" is the title of the latest CIO publication dealing with the nation's basic labor relations law and Administration proposals for amending it.

The 43-page pamphlet contains the recent testimony of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg before the Senate Labor Committee. Their detailed presentation demonstrates how the Administration proposals would make the law "worse than Taft-Hartley."

This new T-H pamphlet, priced at 25c a copy, can be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Reuther Hits 'Complacency' On Jobs

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

"COMPLACENCY and indifference to developing unemployment" were bitterly condemned by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in testimony last week before the Joint Senate-House Committee on the European Report.

"This is the time when complacency must give way to confidence not supported by political platitudes but reinforced by practical and tangible action." Reuther said.

That warning was underscored by a new Commerce Dept. estimate—based on a wider sampling—of unemployment in January, which showed:

1. Unemployment last month was 3,087,000. This was an increase of 728,000 over the previous Commerce Dept. estimate of 2,359,000.

2. Unemployment increased by 1,237,000 from December to January.

3. The total employment estimate also dropped by some 25,000, to 59,753.000.

The new estimate put unemployment at 4.9% of the labor force. But Reuther, in his testimony, pointed out that government figures still aren't complete. He estimated actual unemployment now ranges between 3,500,000 and 3,750,000 workers.

Nevertheless, such business groups as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce testified that present unemployment is "in no sense alarming."

At a press conference, Pres. Eisenhower said the Administration was waiting to see if business turns up in March. If not, he said, he'll recommend governmental action — possible a move to increase consumer buying power by increasing income tax exemptions.

Marked By Exchange

The congressional hearing was marked by an exchange involving Reuther, Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) and Roger Fleming, secretary-treasurer of the Farm Bureau.

Fleming, who testified after Reuther, charged the CIO president with "a lie made out of whole cloth" in stating that only big business-type farms support the Administration's flexible price support program. Patman promptly denouced his language as "entirely too strong."

"The CIO is on your side and doing more for the farmers than you're doing," he told the Farm Bureau officer. "I deplore the fact that any farm group would take issue with any labor group interested in helping the farmers."

Reuther told the committee that the most serious aspect of current economic problems is not the size of the unemployment, "but rather the measure of complacency and indifference that is being camouflaged behind the smoke screen of political name-calling."

"We can drift to war or depression," Reuther said, "but to win the peace or sustain prosperity, labor, management, agriculture and government must all work together and plan together."

Dangerous Theory

Depressions are man-made, he continued, "and what man can make, he can also avoid making."

Reuther branded as "dangerous and unrealistic" the theory that "spring and the robins will bring prosperity, and that if we look the other way, the bothersome problem of unemployment will go away."

He was critical of the limited time given by the congressional committee to groups appearing before it that day. "On the one hand," Reuther complained, "we have a 225-page report by the President, five days of testimony by Administration defenders, a series of five or six technical panels, and then 10 minutes apiece for the 10 top economic groups in the nation."

He expressed the hope that the committee would hold additional hearings in the near future to examine the situation more thoroughly. He described CIO's differences with the President's report as "profound."

Referring to recent criticism leveled at him by GOP spokesmen, Reuther told the group:

"If worrying about unemployment makes me a prophet of gloom or one of the Four Horsemen, then I must plead guilty. I suppose I'll just be stuck with the title."

"There may be genuine differences about methods of measuring the exact magnitude of unemployment today, but don't let any modern day Merlin think he can exercise away the bitter reality of being without a job. The problem is real, it is here now, and it is inexcusable in a country like ours which is so blessed with abundant resources and productive capacity."

Million Less Jobs

There were over one million fewer jobs this January than last, Reuther noted. If the country had been making its normal economic growth there would have been 700,000 more jobs this year than last, to absorb the young workers coming into the labor market. This, he commented, shows "how far below a full employment target we really have slipped."

Reuther said that equal in importance with the actual unemployment count is the rate at which it has been increasing. "The doubling of unemployment since October is every bit as significant as the absolute figure and only a very minor bit of this is seasonal," he claimed.

The Administration's goal of "almost as good as 1953" drew Reuther's fire.

"You simply cannot understand our almost unique American economic system unless you realize that our economy must grow and expand every year if unemployment is not to overtake us," he warned.

"The labor force increase and the rate of technological advance make this a fundamental necessity. Literally, when we aren't expanding in this country, we're falling back and unployment is growing."

The report's basic economic philosphy was termed "clear and blunt" by Reuther. "The way to help America economically," he said of the report's doctrine, "is to pour it in on top, 'unleash new incentives' for big business and trust to the old trickle-down theory.

"In contrast to a program of expansion for maximum employment, production and purchasing

ECONOMIC TRENDS were discussed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right) and Meyer Kestnbaum, head of the Committee for Economic Development, when both testified last week before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

Qualified Optimism

Replying to recent GOP charges that "prophets of gloom and doom" were trying to "talk" the nation into a depression, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report:

THE FACTS are that we of the CIO are extremely optimistic about the future and the possibilities of the American economy. We have stated repeatedly that the American economy is freedom's greatest asset. There is nothing fundamentally wrong with the American economy that an increase in the purchasing power in the hands of millions of American families won't cure.

No matter how long we may be on confidence, we shall continue to get into economic difficulties so long as we are short on purchasing power.

Unfortunately, name-calling or political propaganda will not meet our problem nor will it put unemployed workers back to work. As I advised Mr. Leonard B. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee, the size of unemployment has continued to increase despite the intensity of Mr. Hall's name-calling campaign.

We of the CIO believe that full employment and full production are possible in peacetime if we demonstrate the good sense to gear our productive capacity and our developing technology to the practical challenge of satisfying the tremendous unfilled needs of the American people. We of the CIO reject the defeatest philosophy that would have us believe that depressions are inevitable.

Wistful

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was highly critical of the President's economic report. He told the Joint Committee:

Perhaps the most glaring omission in this report is its refusal to look ahead and up, instead of backwards. If the purposes of the Employment Act are ever to be fulfilled, we've got to set new and higher targets each year in these reports and not look wistfully at the past. This the report fails to do.

THE GLARING injustice of the tax relief-for-the-rich program proposed by Pres. Eisenhower was attacked by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in his testimony last week before the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report.

The Administration's program should make its authors blush when held up against 1954's economic need to reverse the present downturn, Reuther said.

He advocated a realistic increase in the present $600 personal exemption for top priority in a recovery program. The desirable goal for personal exemptions should be $1000 a year. Reuther also said excise tax cuts slated for Apr. 1 should proceed on schedule.

Other CIO recommendations outlined by Reuther:

Minimum Wages: "The Administration's decision to postpone action on increasing the minimum wage is a serious mistake," the CIO president said. "Millions of American families with incomes below $3000 per year constitute the greatest untapped market for goods."

Raising the minimum wage from the present 75c per hour to the more realistic $1.25 will be a major step in increasing the buying power of these families, and this is the best possible time for such a move, he said.

Unemployment Compensation: "The President recognizes that present unemployment compensation benefits are very inadequate; but his remedy consists of exhorting the states to raise the levels," he said.

Housing: "We must set our sights on a goal of around 2,000,000 units a year if we are ever going to wipe out the great backlog of shelter needs."

Social Security: Basic improvement in the Old Age & Survivors' Insurance program is among the quickest ways to put money in the hands of a large section of the population which will certainly spend virtually all of this income.

Farm Program: A farm-led depression has its effect on city and town. Pending really improved legislation which will strengthen the economic position of the farmer, Congress must continue the present support program.

Ike Urged To Up Jobless Benefits

PUBLIC MEMBERS of the Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security have joined unanimously with labor members in calling upon the Eisenhower Administration to take stronger action to improve unemployment insurance.

The council—made up of representatives of labor, management and the public—voted at its last meeting to approve a resolution urging Congress to enact minimum standards for benefits payable under state laws. Only management members were opposed.

The public and labor members also joined to:

1. Urge that maximum weekly benefit ceilings be raised to an amount "not less than three-fifths to two-thirds of average earnings in covered employment."

2. Express concern that the task force on unemployment insurance appointed by the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations does not represent either the general public or certain other groups, such as organized labor.

The latter action reflects the concern of public as well as labor members that the task force is made up overwhelmingly of representatives of large corporations who are intent on diminishing the federal government's role in the program. One AFL representative was originally asked to serve, but resigned because he did not want to be used as a front.

No CIO representative was ever invited to serve.

In his State-of-the-Union message, Pres. Eisenhower urged Congress to extend coverage of unemployment insurance. He said that the Secretary of Labor would write to the governors urging that present state legislation be improved.

The secretary still has his communication under consideration. Experts believe he plans to urge that maximums be raised only to 50% of average weekly earnings in covered employment.

The report also urged standards preventing the denial of benefits to qualified, unemployed workers, and called for the establishment of an adequate contingency fund out of excess proceeds from the Federal Unemployment Tax which would be kept separate from the regular appropriations for administrative purposes over and above federal costs.

What's In March?

Pres. Eisenhower told his press conference that if there's no upturn in employment next month, he will move the power of government against the recession.

This is in marked contrast to the words of his chief assistant, Sherman Adams, just a short fortnight earlier, that anybody who said the word "recession" was a gloom-doom boy. For this change in attitude, we can all be thankful.

The Administration and the Republican party worked themselves into a thoroughly embarrassing position. Having attacked the leaders of the CIO and other groups for talking about the fact of unemployment, these GOP spokesmen found the statistics were also talking about the fact on unemployment.

So—a fast switch in midstream. Now it's all right to talk about unemployment, and in fact to promise to do something about it sometime if conditions get worse.

But what about the millions of people now unemployed? Promises for action next month will not help them today. In many cities, unemployment compensation claims have sky-rocketed. In other cities, workers have exhausted—or will soon exhaust—their compensation benefits. And, in a few isolated cases, breadlines have appeared.

Pres. Eisenhower, great general that he was, knew that in World War II the best defense was a strong offense. What was true then in military terms is true today in economic terms.

We shouldn't wait until next month to start an offense. We ought to be moving actively now on programs to build buying power, production and employment. Postponement is no better than name-calling, in terms of results.

The 'Handout State'

The give-away boys last week came up with another example of the new "handout state" which believes in grub-staking only the two-Cadillacs-in-every-garage set. This time it's public power, generated at dams built with public money, that's being given away.

The Administration's new plan, presented by the Interior Dept., sharply reverses the Roosevelt-Truman policy. It would hand over all the power created at public dams to private utilities, which in turn would sell to rural electric cooperatives. Anyone who thinks the private utilities wouldn't profit by this deal was obviously born after we went to press.

The co-op people involved rightly challenge this proposal as "improper and illegal." Why the people should pay some speculators a handsome profit for power which was created through the people's tax dollars hasn't yet been made clear by the advertising firms which are now doing the Administration's speech-writing.

But we'll bet they call us nasty names for just mentioning this new dam mess that's being created in Washington.

A Test Of Promises

This week, 13 months after taking over, the Republican-led Congress will begin considering civil rights legislation. It will be an opportunity to test GOP campaign promises against performance.

Remember it was the Republican campaigners who talked a real pro-civil rights line (when they were speech-making in the North). To date, their record hasn't been auspicious, to say the least.

It will be interesting to see whether the Autumn campaign promises are recalled during the Spring of legislative reality.

The Bulls Of Spring

In Other Words—

Liquidation On The Installment Plan

A former Commissioner of U. S. Reclamation, writing in the New Republic, applies the test of "Deeds Not Words" to Pres. Eisenhower's budget requests for reclamation and public power funds, and finds them wanting. This is a condensation of his article.

By MICHAEL W. STRAUS

DURING THE PAST several decades, the American flag has been flying over an increasing number of public powerhouses and transmission lines—nailed there by a succession of Congresses fixing a national power policy. And the supporters of that policy assumed that legislation would be required to reverse it; they accordingly girded for a legislative battle.

But their enemies have avoided the embarrassment of congressional debate on hauling down the flags by simply omitting a lot of items from the budget, allegedly in deference to the desires of "state and local groups, public or private."

Since the states and the public groups—usually very articulate when they want something—were strangely mute, the private groups spoke for them.

Killing By Inches

The omissions in the reclamation and various power agency appropriations are such that, in the absence of a political reversal, they forecast liquidation on the installment plan. Pres. Eisenhower asked $155 million for reclamation. Presidential requests are usually trimmed 10-15% by Congress. During the previous five years of Democratic rule, the actual annual reclamation appropriation was $273 million.

The present Administration's dissection of the reclamation appropriation was accomplished by excising public power, avoiding new starts on irrigation as well as on generation projects, and by merely continuing on a retarded basis inherited going-construction jobs which were so far advanced they could not be stopped without a political explosion.

The Tennessee Valley Authority and such agencies as the Bonneville, Southwest and Southeast Power Administrations were similarly cut back. All are big revenue producers for the Treasury, but in the economy budget, they were cut more heavily than agencies which produce no revenue at all. The Army Corps of Engineers, which recently committed the sin of letting some of its water fall through public-power turbines, also received a considerable cut.

But non-power resources activities, undefiled by "creeping socialism," such as the National Park and the Fish and Wildlife Services, the National Forests and the Bureau of Mines, appear not to have been budgeted into any new policy.

A request for funds for Hells Canyon, standard in later-day Democratic budgets, is glaringly absent. Instead is substituted a fascinating paragraph that wigwags some entirely new formula of federal-local resource relationship to be spelled out in "proposed legislation"—not as yet either proposed or disclosed. This reads:

Keep Your Eye On The Ball

"In accordance with this Administration's policy of encouraging state and local undertaking, there is included in the budget an initial appropriation of $10 million under proposed legislation to enable the Corps of Engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation to cooperate with states, local governments or private groups in the development of their water resources."

Watch the enterprising private enterprisers of the power lobby, who planted this, pick it up and run! Under that philosophy the "private groups (i.e. power companies) could not only get the public dam sites for free, but also have the dam thrown in. At least they would be "encouraged" to do so to the tune of $10 million direct subsidy as "an initial appropriation.

The resource sections of this presidential text run true to the budget style book of double talk designed to keep the executive out of political trouble. But the figures don't support this prose. No strong program of resource development is provided.

From the viewpoint of either friends or enemies of public water and power development, policy without program is meaningless. Nobody in 17 dry Western states is going to get an acre-foot of water or a low-cost kilowatt from reclamation through application of the best, most liberal, progressive of proclaimed policies to a non-existent program.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A SLICK PRESSURE GROUP, calling itself the Farm-City Conference and backed by some of the country's important organizations and corporations or corporation heads, is scheming a nation-wide "grass-roots" campaign to scare congressmen into voting against "unnecessary" government spending.

Everyone, of course, is against "unnecessary" spending. You couldn't find anyone admitted that he favored government expenditures that were not at least "desirable."

The distinction is this: It may not be "necessary" to have schools but most of us think they are desirable and justified objects of taxes and spending. It isn't necessary to build river levees; we can let floods wash people's homes downstream. It isn't even necessary to provide for the national defense; we can let the free world collapse and save some money.

Slogans

Bill Gold, columnist for the Washington Post, had two wonderful jokes recently.

No. 1: There's a report that the current Moscow election slogan is "Vote for Malenkov: the life you save may be your own."

No. 2: A Georgia farmer voted for Ike in '52 to "get his son back from Korea." Now he has two more sons back from Detroit—laid off.

The Farm-City Conference—and we'll talk about the nature of this odd group a little later—nevertheless is plotting a great "crusade" for government economy.

There's even a slogan: "I'm Gonna Howlabout Unnecessary Government Spending," which boils down to the initials IGHUGS.

If you are a member of Kiwanis International, or merely a customer at a supermarket, you may find yourself either propagandizing against "unnecessary" government spending, or being propagandized, during the period Mar. 1-15.

Moving Into Plants

This is the period in which the Farm-City Conference has decreed that the "crusade" should reach its climax.

A Farm-City Conference leaflet says that IGHUGS "material" will be available though "many" company plants, farm and professional organizations. There will be "eye-catching advertisements" available for "local sponsorship" in "at least 800 cities." The IGHUGS is especially adapted, the leaflet claims, "as an in-plant program by industry."

They want to use your grocery stores, newspapers and company bulletin boards, in short, to display canned propaganda disguised as "local" grass-roots sentiment.

The Farm-City Conference claims the support of sundry organizations, including Kiwanis, the American Medical Assn., something called the Committee for Young Men in Government, something called the Tax Foundation, and the following corporations: Avco Corp., General Electric Co., International Harvester Co., Sears, Roebuck & Co., Quaker Oats Co.

I don't know how deeply all these corporations have been sucked in, but Sears, Roebuck officially confirms the report that it is "cooperating."

Nearly Taken For Hayride

The Farm-City Conference says that the "crusade" was "kicked off" in Chicago in a January press conference by John Stuart, board chairman of Quaker Oats, John McCaffrey, president of International Harvester, and Mrs. Carl Harris, "director" of the powerful General Federation of Women's Clubs.

The General Federation, as a matter of fact, was nearly taken for a wholesale hayride by the Farm-City Conference.

A letter went out on Jan. 8 to 15,000 presidents of local women's clubs—total dues-paying membership 850,000—imploring them to participate in the "crusade." The letter, signed by Mrs. Carl Harris and "approved" by the GFWC president, Mrs. Oscar A. Ahlgren, contained this choice paragraph:

"This non-partisan campaign will help strengthen all senators and representatives who are trying to reduce the unnecessary government spending which boosts taxes so much higher than they need be."

Who Puts Up The Money?

The General Federation, barely in time, got out of the "crusade." A genuine grass-roots revolt by many members forced the federation's officers to write a letter "withdrawing" cooperation from the Farm-City Conference.

There is still some funny business involved. This reporter is told that some "participating" groups and corporations that at first hesitated but agreed to go along with the Farm-City Conference "crusade" had the support of the "highest" officials in the Treasury.

Detailed information about the other members, however, is strangely lacking. You can't find out who's putting up the money for designing and laying out the "eye-catching advertisements" available for local "sponsorship."

Watch that "grass roots" crusade! When they say they're against "unnecessary" government spending, what they mean is that they want to cut the heart out of all expenditures for the general welfare—and cut them below the Eisenhower budget proposals. And I shouldn't be at all surprised if the "highest" officials in the Treasury Dept. are quietly encouraging the sabotage.

The Capitol Hill Scene—

'Dirty Business' Of Wiretapping Is Boiling To A Showdown

By AL ZACK

HAS YOUR telephone line ever been tapped? Did some cloak-and-dagger boy or a private dick ever record one of your phone conversations?

Don't be too quick to answer, "No." There's more of what Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once called "that dirty business" going on than most Americans realize.

It's not only a "dirty business," it's fast becoming a "big business" and a highly profitable one for the Peeping Toms with earphones.

The Reporter magazine, which has published a most comprehensive expose of wire-tapping, says "wiretapping is now a common practice in almost every troubled area of American life."

Nobody Is Safe

Now many public telephone booths are being tapped by the police, hunting bookies and procurers, and your innocent call will be tape recorded.

If all this doesn't make you shudder, consider these facts. Wiretappers, even those who start out being ultra-honest, are engaged in a degrading business, one that J. Edgar Hoover once said would turn FBI agents into "crooks in no time."

So a wiretapper can convict you with your own words, by the simple—but dishonest—manipulation of a tape recording machine. Suppose, for example, a person accused of a crime told his wife in a telephone conversation, "I am NOT guilty."

It is a simple operation for a wiretapper to clip that all-important word "NOT" out of the recorded conversation, re-record the tape so that the cut can not be detected and swear he recorded you as saying, "I am guilty."

Or, a perfectly innocent person can be smeared by having someone call him on a tapped line and say, "Bring those secret papers you stole today to the same place you brought the last ones." Wouldn't that sound innocent to a jury?

A Long Controversy

Aside from these possibilities of dishonest use of wiretapping, there is the fundamental question of personal liberty and privacy involved, a right guaranteed by the Constitution and spelled out in the Fourth Amendment against "unreasonable" search and seizure.

Historically, the controversy over wiretapping goes back to 1916, William S. Fairfield and Charles Clift say in their authoritative article in The Reporter. But the telephone company in New York City admits to tapping wires for police officers as far back as 1895.

After years of controversy and court cases, wiretapping was specifically outlawed in 1934 by Section 605 of the Federal Communications Act. Violators were threatened with a two-year prison term, a $10,000 fine, or both.

But in the 20 years since that prohibition was adopted, only one wiretapper has been tried and he was convicted.

The reason for this lack of prosecution was summed up in 1940 by the then Atty.-Gen. Robert R. Jackson, now a Supreme Court Justice.

"I do not feel," he wrote, "that the Dept. of Justice can in good conscience prosecute persons . . . for a practice . . . engaged in by the department itself, and regarded as legal by the department."

U. S. Courts Ban Evidence

Since then, the FBI has gone on tapping wires, but it has been unable to make use of the evidence it has amassed. The courts have held that such evidence was gained illegally and also have outlawed the use of evidence developed from information gained by wiretapping.

But such is the confused state of this practice, that this rule has applied in federal courts, and not in state courts. Late in 1952 the Supreme Court held that evidence obtained by wiretapping, which would be outlawed in a federal court, is legally acceptable evidence in a state court if the state has allowed it.

Once again, the wiretapping controversy is making headlines, this time as the result of efforts made by Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr. He wants a law permitting him to order wiretapping to obtain evidence, which he can use in courts, in cases involving national defense.

What Brandeis Said—

Here's what the late Supreme Court Justice Brandeis said about wire tapping:

". . . The evil incident to invasion of privacy of the telephone is far greater than that involved in tampering with the mails. Whenever a telephone line is tapped, the privacy of the persons at both ends of the line is invaded and all conversations between them upon any subject, and although proper, confidential, and privileged, may be overheard.

"Moreover, the tapping of one man's telephone line involves the tapping of the telephone of every other person whom he may call, or who may call him. As a means of espionage, writs of assistance and general warrants are but puny instruments of tyranny and oppression when compared with wire tapping."

The Brownell argument is simple. The United States is being threatened by an evil force: Communism. Spies and saboteurs use telephones and the FBI can catch them by wiretapping.

Those who support this position, argue that we can't handcuff ourselves and thus allow Communists to capture the country.

Open Door To Secret Police

Consequently the Brownell forces support bills allowing wiretapping, with the Attorney-General's okay, in the conduct of investigations to "ascertain, prevent, or frustrate" any attempts to interfere with the "national security and defense" by treason, sabotage, espionage, seditious conspiracy, violations of neutrality laws and laws requiring foreign agents to register "or in any other manner."

Thus, the door would be thrown wide open for the creation of a secret police force, exempt from the constitutional limitations which protect the rights of citizens from their government. Some of the Brownell adherents would give wiretapping rights only to the FBI, but other investigatory agencies, like the Army Intelligence, want the same right, with the okay for wiretapping coming from their own top brass.

Civil libertarians, really alarmed by the proposals, would outlaw wiretapping completely. In defense of that position, it is argued that the U. S. can't whip the police state of the Communists, by adopting a police state of its own.

The Communists, and the Nazis before them, make regular use of torture as a means of extracting confessions from suspected spies. But no one in America, even the most extreme anti-Communists, advocates the use of torture and even the old police "third-degree" is considered barbaric and un-American.

Those who oppose the Brownell position point out that there's no such thing as a little legalized wiretapping. It's as impossible, they say, as a little pregnancy.

Middle Ground

The middle ground, advocated by the Americans for Democratic Action, seeks to resolve the question this way:

Legalize wire tapping only in espionage and sabotage cases and nothing else; give the right to okay wiretaps only to a very few judges, like the Supreme Court jurists, after the Attorney General, in writing, has demonstrated substantial reason to believe espionage or sabotage has been or will be attempted; and expressly outlaw all other wiretapping, providing stern penal sentences and rigid enforcement of the law.

As the controversy goes on, three things are crystal clear:

- Wiretapping is a dirty business, even its proponents admit that.
- Wiretapping, although now illegal, continues unabated with even those sworn to uphold the law violating it promiscuously. The FBI, incidentally, even has a school where wiretapping, although illegal, is taught.
- Wiretapping won't catch smart spies. That's the opinion of Elizabeth Bentley, the self-confessed Communist spy. She says legalized wire taps would probably not have worked "in the case of my Soviet agents, because we were so frightened of telephones, we never said anything over them."

Peoria: The Story Of A Sick Cit

Caterpillar Plant Dominates Area—And 10,000 Are Idle

(Last of two articles)

By FRED ROSS

THE CATERPILLAR tractor plant—one of the largest in Illinois—sprawls over such a vast territory in East Peoria, Ill., that to be seen in its entirety it has to be viewed from the air.

Its peak employment in late 1952 was 30,000, but now it is down to 20,000. It is the industrial barometer of the entire Peoria area—at this time tragically affecting the economic health of the community.

At the peak period, the working force of the Peoria area was 60,000, according to officers of Local 974 of the CIO Auto Workers, which represents the Caterpillar production workers.

Figures Concealed

There are only a half-dozen other large plants in the area. They include the La-Tourneau-Westinghouse factory, which like Caterpillar makes earth-moving implements, Keystone Wire Co., three Pabst breweries, the Hiram Walker Distillery, the ABC washing machine factory, the Commercial Solvent plant and the Herschel Mfg. Co.

"It is difficult to assess joblessness in the Peoria area because of the attitude of industry and the State (Republican) government in concealing the figures," said Pres. T. C. Jackson of Local 974.

With well over 10,000 workers furloughed, Peoria is an industrially sick community—a community where the laid-off workers live on scanty unemployment and relief checks and face the future with near-desperation and fear. Interviews with several workers—and merchants—reflected despair.

The landlady had just brought a half-gallon of milk for the year-old baby of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Hamer, who was laid off last Dec. 1 at the Caterpillar plant.

Hardship struck the family even before Hamer was furloughed. He was twice down graded from his job as hand trucker at the plant where he had worked two years.

The Hamers were married only five days when he went to work at the factory, and a glance around their modest four-room home showed that they had not been able to accumulate many substantial furnishings during his employment.

"We get by," Hamer said when asked how the family lived. "I haven't applied for unemployment compensation because I have been working part time for a tree service that keeps clear the right of way of power lines.

"Two weeks ago I didn't work at all, last week I worked four hours and brought home about $6 and I worked one day this week and will get about $12.

"I don't have much credit left, the power company is threatening to turn off the light if I don't pay the bill, and I owe several weeks' rent to the landlady, Mrs. Lily Irrera, who just brought milk for the baby. She has been very kind."

Hired From South

Thomas Ogle, War War II veteran, was one of the thousands hired by the company in Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Missouri and Kentucky. In fact, local union officials said, the company did all its hiring in these states during the past two years through newspaper ads.

Many of these workers have returned to their homes after quitting rather than lose 50c an hour through downgrading.

"I quit last November rather than be a sitting duck," said Ogle, who came to the Caterpillar plant 29 months ago from Maryville, Tenn., after reading ads in the Maryville Times and the Knoxville News-Sentinel and Journal.

He explained that scores of his fellow workers were being laid off, and he knew his turn soon would come.

"I figured I'd better try to get a job elsewhere before other furloughed workers get all the available jobs in the community," Ogle said. "Besides I had been downgraded twice from $1.94 to $1.61 an hour."

After failing to get a job at several places, Ogle, who is the father of five children and whose wife is now pregnant, got a part-time job which paid him $15 to $20 a week at a filling station with the expectation that it would become full time, a hope that was not realized.

"I had been drawing $37 every two weeks in relief orders, but it was cut to $25 when I got the part-time job," he said.

The need of the Ogle family again was driven home when he said the coal supply for heating their small apartment in a federal housing development was gone.

Since his layoff early in January, John Boucher, wounded Navy veteran of World War II, faced many difficult financial problems.

In the first place, he had not received his first unemployment check of $27 a week although he had immediately applied for it.

Before the layoff he had been using his veteran's disability checks to make monthly payments on his home which he built himself, but on which he owes $5300 for materials. Since the layoff Boucher has been able to make only half of the monthly payments.

A finance company presented Boucher with another financial headache, when it threatened to seize his car. Unlike many other laid-off workers, he was able to borrow enough money from a bank to satisfy the finance company's demands.

Merchants — particularly those whose establishments are on West Washington St. facing part of the sprawling Caterpillar plant—were feeling the effects of the lay-offs.

"My business in 1953 was a third below 1952," said Mrs. Verla Jefford, who has operated a restaurant on Washington St. for 14 years. "I had to lay off two employes, one a cook and the other a part-time waitress."

Another business woman who reported a decline—a third off in the last quarter of 1953 compared to the similar period in the previous year—was Mrs. Irrera, who befriended the Hamer family.

For a score of years she has sold newspapers, candy, cigarettes and cigars at a portable stand at a Washington St. plant gate.

A widow, Mrs. Irrera said she has to support two sons. One, Santo, 24, recently underwent an operation. The other, Nichola, 22, who is a Korean War veteran, has been unable to find work since his discharge from the Army last July.

Session Asked

The Illinois CIO Council has called on Republican Gov. William G. Stratton to call an immediate special session of the Legislature to meet problems created by rising unemployment.

"With thousands of workers laid off in nearly every major industry in the State, it is about time the Administration takes steps to alleviate suffering and hardship," said Council Pres. Joseph Germano.

Runaround

An unemployed Navy veteran would like to know what "you have to do to qualify for unemployment compensation?"

"I went to the unemployment compensation office in Peoria to find out why I had received no checks," reported John Boucher, who had been "furloughed" at the Caterpillar tractor plant. "A clerk told me, 'You have to qualify.' I answered that I had filled out the necessary three weeks earlier, but she kept repeating 'You have to qualify'."

UNION ZEAL of John Boucher, laid-off Caterpillar worker (second from left), remains unabated as he takes part in organizing office workers.

BUSINESS of Mrs. Verla Jefford, restaurant owner, has fallen a third.

Boss Complains

A Peoria employer charged that the local office of the Illinois Employment Service "is not interested in getting jobs for unemployed workers."

The businessman, who preferred not to be identified, reported he was greeted by a "surly attitude" when he called up the service to ask that job applicants be sent to his establishment.

Production Drop Now Equals '49

A BANK economist told the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report last week that the decline in the nation's economy has been "sharper" than outlined in Pres. Eisenhower's recent economic report.

Winfield W. Riefler, a Federal Reserve Bank economist, said the 10% decline in production in the last six months now is "equal to the full decline in the 1948-49 reaction"—the previous low in the nation's economy since World War II.

A Federal Reserve Board report, meantime, reported industrial production dropped by 1.57% in January. Steel production last week was at 74.3% of capacity.

New claims for unemployment insurance for the week ending Feb. 8 were 364,000. That was down about 100,000 from the peak in early January, but still 82% above a year ago. The total for continuing claims continued to rise, to 2,128,100.

Reuther Tells

Labor's Stake In Farm Prosperity

The importance for the city worker of a healthy farm economy was pointed out recently by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a letter to Chairmen Aiken (R. Vt.) and Hope (R. Kans.) of the Senate and House Agriculture Committees, respectively. His letter said in part:

CIO MEMBERS know that the American people are being sucked into a spiralling recession that is farm led and farm fed and that can only be checked and reversed by bold action.

Creeping unemployment that began in the farm implement plants early in 1953 has now increased to more than 50%, and over-all employment in the communities where these plants are located is now more than the 11% reported.

Notably, in the Quad Cities of Moline, East Moline, Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Ia., where normally 55,000 men and women are employed, today more than one out of every five are out of work.

In the 14 farm equipment plants in these four cities, more than 17,000 production and maintenance workers are normally employed. Today only half are on the payroll, many downgraded to jobs paying 40c an hour less than they were making a year ago.

Farm Market Fades

We know that the 16% drop in prices paid to farmers in the past two years and the $2.1 billion drop in net farm income, amounting to 14%, while the consumer price index rose from 112 to 114, have not only depressed the market for farm implements, automobiles and trucks, but likewise have shrunk the market for other products all across the industrial map.

And this shrinkage has, in turn, resulted in cutbacks, shutdowns, layoffs and short time that further shrink purchasing power for both manufactured goods and farm products.

We know that uncertainty and fear about future farm programs are making farmers postpone buying, even when they have the funds, as proved by a transfer, during 1953, of $500 million from farmers' checking accounts to saving accounts or bonds.

Fair Practices Group Fights Back As Layoffs Hit Peoria Negroes

"WE MUST MOVE, and without unnecessary delay, to open new avenues of employment for Negroes, and to retain and enlarge existing job opportunities for them."

That's what Harry Sephus told a meeting of the Peoria Community Equal Job Opportunity Committee, which consists of representatives of several labor, liberal, civic and church organizations.

Sephus is chairman of the PCEJOC and of the Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Committee of the big Local 974 of the CIO Auto Workers at the Caterpillar Tractor Co. plant.

Remove Job Barriers

Acting on Sephus' recommendations, PCEJOC "proceeded at once to secure job opportunities" for Negroes in public utilities; State, county and municipal offices, and business and industry. PCEJOC also decided "to attempt to remove existing barriers against Negroes in certain AFL unions."

Sephus pointed out that during World War II "the highest peak of Negro employment in the history of Peoria" was reached.

"One of the important factors in attaining this peak," he said, "was the Interracial Fellowship of Peoria, an organization which informed employers of rights of citizens to employment and security without regard to race, creed or color.

"The economic pendulum is now on the downswing. Over 8000 are without employment in this area, an overly large percentage of whom are Negroes. We have no organization that will go fearlessly and with full sincerity into the forefront as did the Interracial Fellowship in 1941 and 1942.

"It therefore becomes . . . the duty of this community committee to guard against the recurrence of the past evil days of unemployment and suffering: the fruit of racial bias and discrimination."

First Fired

The usual pattern of "last hired and first fired" is being applied to Negroes as unemployment grows, according to Elmer W. Henderson, director of the American Council of Human Rights.

Henderson, who recently returned to Washington after visiting a dozen states, reported that Negro workers in California seem to be particularly hard hit in both industrial and farming regions.

CIO Asks Aid For Workers As Tariff Cuts Affect U. S. Firms

FEDERAL AID for workers and industries affected by tariff reductions was urged by CIO Steelworkers Intl. Rep. Elmer F. Cope in testimony last week before the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

Cope assisted USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald when the latter served as the only labor member of the President's Foreign Economic Policy Commission which reported several weeks ago. The commission was headed by Clarence B. Randall, chairman of the board of the Inland Steel Co.

Testifying before a congressional group, Cope said any injury in the wake of lowered tariffs "would be the result of action taken by the federal government." He argued that the government "should assume the responsibility to assist those injured to adjust to a changing situation when required."

The congressional group was reminded that McDonald made a strong plea for provisions to aid dislocated workers, a plea that excited sympathies from the business members of the panel but which was voted down 6-1.

Cope said there were few figures available on the number of workers who might lose their jobs because of tariff cuts. Not until the Randall Commission faced the problem were some estimates obtained.

"Given a hypothetical reduction 50% in our present tariffs," Cope stated, "it seems likely, on the basis of the study, that not over 100,000 workers would even be threatened with the loss of their jobs."

HE SAID this represents .6% of the total labor force or one-sixth of the annual growth of the labor force over the past several years.

"No one is proposing a sudden lowering of tariffs by 50%," Cope continued. "Consequently the problem is not one of great magnitude when viewed in terms of the total labor force.

"Furthermore, product diversification and other adjustments on the part of the industries affected can be depended upon to reduce this figure considerably."

Cope contended that the commission, in voting down McDonald's proposal for adjustment procedures to care for readjustments resulting from increased imports, rendered "meaningless" most of the recommendations to tariff reductions.

IF FIRMS diversified their output to be less vulnerable to imports, aid in the form of federally-supported technical assistance should be given. Government funds should be made available for help if needed, Cope said.

Some workers would become unemployed and need aid to tide them over until they found other jobs, Cope said, suggesting special unemployment compensation for this group.

"This could be administered by our present federal-state machinery but financed by federal funds. Since present unemployment insurance benefits are inadequate to meet the temporary needs of these displaced workers, the benefits provided should be increased to an amount more nearly equalling their lost earnings," he said.

McCARTHYISM has done more to undermine the prestige of the United States in Europe than any other factor, Alfred Robens (left), member of the British Parliament, former Minister of Labor, and a veteran trade unionist, told a group of CIO officials and staff members at a luncheon in Washington. He is shown with CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, an old friend.

Sen. Welker Accused—

Carey Protests Smear Of Czech Anti-Reds

DEMOCRATIC Czechs who fled to this country when the Communists took over Czechoslovakia were virtually accused of being Communists by Sen. Welker (R. Ida.) at a secret hearing of the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey charged last week.

In a letter to Vice Pres. Nixon, the CIO leader declared that Welker permitted himself to become involved in the political quarrels of Czech refugees with the result that the Soviet Union now has a fine new source of propaganda material.

Carey wrote to Nixon as Vice President, as presiding officer of the Senate, "and because of the interest you have shown in international affairs."

INVOLVED are Hubert Ripka, minister of foreign trade in the last Czech government before the Reds seized power in Czechoslovakia, and Peter Zenkl, deputy prime minister in the Benes government. Both are widely known in their native land as anti-Communists and are members of the National Socialist party—the party of Benes and Masaryk.

Welker's broad intimation of communism was levelled at Ripka at a hearing on Feb. 2, at which he was the only subcommittee member present, Carey wrote. Ripka and Zenkl have been active in the Council of Free Czechoslovakia, which is "officially recognized by our government as representative of the anti-Communist Czechs who are struggling to liberate their country," he explained.

CAREY TOLD Nixon it was his understanding that despite the secret character of the hearing, several Czech emigres aided Welker in grilling Ripka.

"Our information," he continued, "is that Sen. Welker . . . literally accused Mr. Ripka of being a Communist and threatened to denounce him and the Council of Free Czechoslovakia as being subversive."

He expressed fear that Zenkl, due for a hearing later, may also be "prejudged on the basis of information supplied by political enemies."

U. S., British Cooperation Vital, MP Tells CIO Group

THE FUTURE of the world depends more on friendly relations between the United States and Great Britain than on any other single factor, Alfred M. Robens, Labor member of the British Parliament and formerly Minister of Labor, said last week.

Robens, a veteran British trade unionist, spoke briefly at a CIO luncheon in Washington marking the end of his three-month visit to this country. He and Mrs. Robens, who accompanied him, bought an auto and drove thousands of miles in territory most visitors from abroad never see.

"The United States is the leader of the world," he said, "and will remain so in our lifetimes — and perhaps for many lifetimes after.

"There are forces at work in both our countries which would be glad to see a break between them—the forces of unrestricted competition which want markets that can't keep both competitors. The two labor movements must see that they do not succeed."

He said that McCarthyism has taken a great toll of American prestige and respect throughout Europe, where the people fear it is a variety of fascism that will develop along the lines Hitlerism did in pre-war Germany.

Robens was Minister of Labor when the Labor Party held the reins of British government.

Buckmaster Urges Charter Check For Stronger UN

A STRONGER United Nations — "through voluntary agreement" or charter revision if necessary—was urged by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers before a Senate foreign affairs subcommittee.

Buckmaster called for a study by the UN General Assembly to determine the extent to which the UN's failure to function adequately has been due to charter defects.

He also recommended that the U. S. "initiate diplomatic discussions with the four other permanent members of the Security Council" to see which of the needed charter clarifications can be secured. Since any of the five permanent council members can veto amendments, Buckmaster said this was essential.

L. S. BUCKMASTER

BUCKMASTER stated that where the UN has failed to live up to its expectations the fault generally has not been caused by the charter itself but rather by the obstinate resistance of the Soviet Union to constructive policies of the UN. He added that if the principles outlined in the basic charter could be fully utilized through voluntary agreement there would be practically no need to revise the charter.

Shoe Union Elects Taylor

RUSSELL J. TAYLOR has been re-elected without opposition for a second two-year term as president of the CIO Shoe Workers.

This is the first time in USWA-CIO history that it was not necessary to hold a membership election for this office. He received 103 nominations out of a possible 128.

Taylor served in local USWA-CIO offices in St. Louis, Mo., and also was a member of the union's executive board, representing the St. Louis area. In 1947 he was appointed USWA-CIO's legislative representative, and in 1952 he was elected president.

Taylor will be installed and begin his second term May 3 when the union's executive board meets at Washington.

TWUA Ends Strike At Silk Mill

Signing of a first contract at Federal Silk Mills in Williamsport, Md., ended a 51-day strike by CIO Textile Workers last week. Standard items including seniority and grievance provisions, checkoff and maintenance of membership clauses are in the pact.

Canadian Labor Sets Plan To Help 500,000 Jobless

A FIVE-POINT program for meeting the problem of unemployment in Canada, where more than half a million persons are out of work, has been presented jointly to the Canadian government by the Canadian Congress of the Labour and Canadian Trades & Labour Congress.

A delegation led by CCL Pres. A. R. Mosher and TCL Pres. Percy R. Bengough, at a meeting with the federal cabinet, proposed changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, a national public assistance program, public works, a housing program and an increase in aid for underdeveloped countries.

On unemployment insurance, the two labor bodies suggested higher benefits, fewer waiting days, payment of benefits to those who are unemployed because of illness, and extension of benefits where they have become exhausted.

THE LABOR groups also urged a program of help for jobless workers who are not covered by unemployment insurance, in cooperation with provincial and metropolitan governments.

Recommendations on public works included a reminder that the government itself accepted that step as an offset to unemployment in its proposals to the Dominion-Provincial Conference on Reconstruction in 1945. The unionists asked that 1954 projects be started in all areas as soon as possible, and that those shelved be reactivated.

Removal of financing obstacles would permit construction of 135,000 dwellings a year, the industry's potential, instead of the record 100,000 erected last year, the labor delegation said. This would create 75,000 to 90,000 new jobs.

GREATER aid to underdeveloped countries, the group told government officials, would create new markets for the sale of Canadian products, as "our best customers are among the most highly developed countries."

"When unemployment reaches the proportions now being experienced in Canada, it has more than economic effects," the union brief pointed out. "It carries with it social problems and political potentials which cannot be ignored.

"Unemployed workers and their families must be relieved of their hardship and suffering. But equally important, we must create and maintain a stable Canada, economically, socially and politically."

Illinois CIO Backs Douglas As A Senator Who Fights

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.) has received the endorsement and support of 300,000 CIO members in Illinois for his re-election bid, with the vote of the State CIO Council executive board to back him.

Council Pres. Joseph Germano said "there is no question about our organization supporting Douglas for re-election."

The board stated after looking over the field of GOP candidates that "none of them could possibly match the ability and performance of Paul Douglas, nor would they stand up and fight for a truly liberal and progressive program for the country."

Douglas' record over six years in the Senate was praised and he was described as "one of the most distinguished, courageous and able men ever to serve. . ."

ON A TV PROGRAM last week Douglas said that Democrats prefer prosperity to a depression, "even if the Republicans stay in power forever." He denied that Democrats were "prophets of gloom" trying to talk the nation into a depression.

Warning that a business recession is under way, Douglas called for reduced taxes and a public works program if the country's economic health should take a turn for the worse.

PAUL H. DOUGLAS

Pat Greathouse, CIO Auto Workers regional director in Illinois and a vice president of the Council, told the board:

"With the slush funds of Texas oil millionaires, the isolationists and the smear campaign of Joe McCarthy and others working against Douglas, it is up to the CIO and like-minded groups to start now and never let up until election day in November."

Detroit CIO Urges Bold Action By City, State To Aid Jobless

A BOLD program to provide quick aid to Detroit's growing army of jobless—now numbering 121,000—was spelled out by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther before Mayor Cobo and the Motor City's municipal Common Council.

Remedies that could be provided by city, state and federal governments were detailed by Reuther, who is also head of the CIO Auto Workers.

He spoke in behalf of all CIO unions in the Detroit area and the Wayne County CIO Council.

Nationally, Reuther advocated tax relief to low-income groups rather than to corporations and families in the wealthy category; an increase in the federal minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and broader, better Social Security benefits.

On the state level, Reuther urged adoption of a resolution calling on the Michigan Legislature to raise unemployment insurance payments and lengthen their duration.

The city, he said, should speed up and expand public works programs.

Reuther urged that the Common Council support action by Congress and the Legislature declaring a moratorium on foreclosures and evictions and on installment debts for workers jobless through no fault of their own. Such action would protect the unemployed and stop the snowballing that foreclosures and repossessions create in our economy.

HE ADVOCATED creation of a task force from government agencies to place government contracts in the Detroit area as was done through CIO efforts in 1951 and 1952. Finally, Reuther called for active cooperation and support of industry leaders in the area, especially from the major auto companies.

Industry, working with various governments and labor and community groups, Reuther predicted, could "implement the kind of program and get the kind of results needed to meet our problem . . ."

Stressing the need for a municipal public works program, Reuther recalled the public statements of the Eisenhower Administration that it is prepared to move on public works when the need arises. Tell them in Washington that the need exists now in Detroit, advised Reuther.

He said Detroit needs more schools. "We need more housing, and . . . this is a time when we ought to declare a total war on our slums and on skid row."

AFTER noting the desire of the mayor and Council members to move quickly, Reuther said that "action by the State Legislature on unemployment compensation offers the avenue for the speediest action" and asked top priority on this issue.

At Lansing, the Legislature dawdled over raising unemployment benefits. The GOP majority reintroduced practically the same bill that Gov. G. Mennen Williams vetoed last year because it provided next to nothing in improvements. House Democrats sponsored a bill incorporating CIO suggestions.

This bill calls for benefits equal to from 65% to 85% of the worker's average weekly wage. The lower figure would be paid a worker without dependents, an additional 5% would be added for each dependent to a maximum of four.

Detroit Paper Hails Reuther's Fight To Aid Unemployed

Praise for CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's successful fight to get Detroit declared a distressed labor area was voiced in a Detroit Free Press editorial last week. An excerpt follows:

"The fact that Detroit's designation has been changed from one of moderate labor surplus is due in large part to the insistence of CIO President Walter Reuther.

"He has proved himself an able spokesman in behalf of the unemployed of this region, and Detroit should be grateful to him for his vigorous fight which brought national attention to Detroit's plight."

'Fear Of Abundance' Called Recession Factor By Reuther

INCREASING unemployment stemming from "fear of abundance" is a cause for growing concern, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week in delivering the annual Gaston Lecture at Georgetown Univ.

He urged the U. S. to adopt as a fifth freedom—"freedom from fear of abundance."

Reuther compared today's economic situation with that of 1929. "Then," he said, "we had Cadillac production and a Model T distribution machine. Now we have a high octane, jet production machine but not as good a distribution network."

Four essentials for mature collective bargaining were proposed by Reuther to aid the nation's economy. First, he said, there is no legislative substitute in a free society for voluntary morality and labor-mangement responsibility.

Second, he went on, labor and management must understand and act on the principle that the welfare of the whole community transcends the interest of any of its segments. Third, there must be recognition that collective bargaining should flow from economic facts and not from the exercise of economic power.

Lastly, Reuther said, there is a need for a single set of moral and economic standards in collective bargaining. With these and other democratic principles, he declared, "we can have both bread and freedom."

Charges Dropped In Reuther Case

Clarence Jacobs and Donald Ritchie, charged with trying to murder CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in 1948, were given their freedom in a Windsor, Ont., court last week when the State of Michigan withdrew its request for their extradition.

Crown Atty. Bruce MacDonald, acting as counsel for Michigan, asked for the withdrawal on the ground the case was prepared under a jurisdiction "where rules as to admissibility of statements" and "with respect to inducements" differ from those of Ontario. Ritchie had given Detroit police a statement naming Jacobs as the triggerman and implicating three others.

TWUA Protests Open Shop Drive In South Carolina

THE CIO Textile Workers warned the South Carolina Legislature that a proposed right-to-work bill would undermine the State's prosperity. The measure would ban the union shop and otherwise attempt to destroy unions.

"Firms don't move or won't move into the State because it does or doesn't have the so-called right-to-work bill," the union said in a brief submitted to the Senate Labor Committee of the Legislature.

"The main reason for firms moving their locations are the nearness to market, the availability of raw materials, shipping costs, and available labor. If they are moving to South Carolina on the assumption of having a plentiful supply of cheap labor, then it is not to the interests of the citizens of the State to have such a firm, because cheap wages invariably lead to under-priviledged citizens and a lower standard of living for all people. . .

"If the proponents of the bill were serious about the welfare of the workers and not interested in 'busting unions' they should have no objection to inserting a section in the bill calling for a least a 75c per hour minimum wage."

Pastor Protests

"If 100 men comprise labor and if one man takes up management, those 100 men must unite into one mind, one force, one unit—if they are to have equal bargaining power with the one man who represents management."

That was what D. C. Earl Cooper, pastor of Earle St. Baptist Church in Greenville, S. C., said in condemning the right-to-work bill being considered by the State Legislature.

Rabaut Suggests Jobless Use Ike's Report For Dough

BRAVE PHRASES from Pres. Eisenhower's economic report might be used instead of money by Detroit's jobless, suggested Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.).

Rabaut said he was called a "prophet of gloom and doom" when he cited ominous signs on Michigan's economic horizon. But, he continued, the Journal of Commerce backed up his figures next day.

"Then, the Johnny-come-lately Labor Dept.," Rabaut went on, delivered "long overdue announcement that Detroit is an area of substantial unemployment with 107,000 jobless workers as of mid-January. . ."

Rabaut questioned the value of federal help in procurement of defense contracts "in view of current and prospective defense orders." He said it should be tried now although help was a month late in coming.

"Certain optimistic, well chosen passages from the President's economic report were used in reply to my warning," Rabaut said. "Might I suggest that the Administration make available about 150,000 copies of the report to Detroit's jobless workers. They can present it to the groceryman, the landlord and the finance company in lieu of money."

Hearse Is Home For Family Of 8 After Dad Loses Job

WHEN James E. Craft had a steady job as a grinder, he and his wife, Elizabeth, lived with their kids and the two dogs on a farm at Lake Orion, near Detroit.

One day last September Craft was laid off. He hasn't been able to find work since. He did the best he could: he sold balloons and other novelties on the streets of Detroit.

But a lot of other people were out of work in Detroit, too. He couldn't make ends meet, and about four weeks ago the family was evicted.

Now they're living in, of all things, an old hearse: Mr. and Mrs. Craft, six of their children, Richard, 15; Carl, 2; Sandra, 10; Donna Mae, 13; Darlene, 11, and Sherry, 4, and the two dogs. Another son is in the Army, and still another is staying with friends in Detroit.

'It's better than breaking up the family," Craft declared.

He rejected the offer of Oakland County juvenile authorities to take the children, explaining, "They'd cry all the time."

The eight of them sleep on two pallets in the rear of the hearse. The vehicle is parked on Detroit side streets at night, with the father and mother spelling each other to see that the children don't kick off the blankets, or driving around slowly with the heater turned on when it is cold. (Picture on Page 1.)

Harriman Talks On N.Y. CIO Series

Another broadcast in the political education program of the New York State CIO Council will be given Feb. 25 with W. Averell Harriman as the speaker. The program will be carried over the ABC New York State radio network immediately following the CIO's John W. Vandercook broadcast on most stations. In Buffalo, it will be heard over WGBR at 7:15 p.m.

CIO-CSC Presentation—

Philip Murray Award Going To 2 Leaders In Psychiatry

THE MENNINGER Foundation of Topeka, Kans., world-famous center for research and training of personnel in psychiatry and related fields, will receive the 1953 Philip Murray Award of the National CIO Community Services Committee.

CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne, who is president of the CIO Communications Workers, announced the award which will be presented at a dinner meeting in the Schenley Hotel, Pittsburgh, on Mar. 3.

The award will be accepted on behalf of the foundation by Drs. Karl A. and William C. Menninger, brothers, who with their father, the late Dr. Charles F. Menninger, established the foundation.

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther and Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers will speak at the dinner as well as Beirne and Leo Perlis, CSC national director.

CSC established the award in 1946. Its purpose is to give recognition for achievement in the fields of social welfare, community organization, and overseas relief. The award's objective is to stimulate leadership in those fields in which CSC is active.

The award was named for the late Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, because he gave active support and leadership to every democratic and liberal move to improve the health and the welfare of the American people.

Beirne said that the committee members had voted unanimously to present the award to the foundation for its development of improved methods of treating and preventing mental diseases and for its work in research and training.

"THE MENNINGER Foundation, under the direction of the Menninger brothers, is making a great contribution to the understanding of the American people on the problem of mental illness," Beirne said.

"They have helped the mental health movement to point up the need for creating more facilities for the treatment and prevention of mental and emotional breakdowns."

The late Dr. Charles Menninger and his son, Dr. Karl Menninger, planned to develop a psychiatric clinic at Topeka to put into operation two principles. One principle was that physicians should practice in groups, and the other was that psychiatry was the most rapidly developing and important field in medicine.

They were joined by Dr. William Menninger, and established a hospital and clinic and then a school for the residential treatment of children with emotional and behavior problems.

Appreciation for the award was voiced by Dr. Karl Menninger. He wrote CSC "the CIO has honored us and Topeka beyond our deserts, but in recognizing the importance of the problem (of mental health), the CIO has done honor to itself."

Humanitarian

The Philip Murray Awards have been turned over by their recipients to a variety of humanitarian purposes.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) contributed the $10,000 award for 1951 to the Committee for the Nation's Health for publications on health.

The $10,000 award for 1948 received by the late Sen. Wagner (D. N. Y.) was used to establish the Wagner Scholarship Fund in Social Welfare.

Handicapped Bill Presented By 20 Senators

SEN. MURRAY (D. Mont.) and 19 co-sponsors have introduced a bill to establish a federal agency for the handicapped in the Labor Dept.

Pres. Paul A. Strachen of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped said the measure marks a comprehensive approach to the problems of millions of handicapped Americans.

The bill would set up in the agency an Advisory Council on Affairs of the Handicapped on which employers, labor, the handicapped and farmers would be represented.

ALSO PROPOSED was creation of an Offices of Services for the Blind in the agency to consolidate the efforts to aid the sightless now scattered in several federal agencies, and a Federal Interagency Committee on Rehabilitation and Employment of the Handicapped.

The bill provides a $60 monthly federal grant to totally disabled persons who cannot be rehabilitated. The measure called for establishing a number of funds and programs to aid the maimed, including an initial appropriation of $10 million for a Cooperative Enterprises for Handicapped revolving fund.

"We heartily congratulate these far-sighted statesmen in the Senate who have, in cosponsoring the Federal Agency for the Handicapped bill, performed a great service for the nation," Strachan said.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

TAX QUESTIONS: "My wife and I belong to the Workmen's Sick and Health Benefit Fund and pay $70 a year in dues. Is it possible to deduct this sum from my income tax?" —W. E., Long Island City, N. Y.

Answer: Any money paid for sickness insurance is deductible except the kind that pays weekly benefits to replace lost earnings. (Consider this point when selecting health insurance.) If the only benefit from your dues payment is medical care, the whole payment is deductible. If there are non-medical phases of the society's activities, then part would be deductible. The society's officers undoubtedly have obtained a ruling as to how much would be deductible, and can tell you.

Your Buying Questions Answered

CAR DEDUCTIONS: "I am crippled with arthritis and had been using taxis for transportation to work and the hospital. But that was expensive so I bought a car. How much can I claim as tax deduction?"

Answer: The costs of using the car to get medical treatment are deductible under medical expenses. You can deduct possibly eight or nine cents a mile for such use, depending on your total yearly cost (including depreciation and all costs), divided by the total number miles of use a year. You cannot deduct car expenses for traveling to work, but if you use the car on business you can.

TRAVEL EXPENSE: "I am a construction worker and my traveling expense runs high. But I have been told this is not deductible."—A. B., Fremont, O.

Answer: Up to recently such travel expenses have not been deductible. But under a new Internal Revenue ruling, they may be under special circumstances. The new ruling allows employes to deduct daily transportation expenses to a construction project where they are temporarily employed. It also held that when a company reimburses employes for such expenses, the reimbursement is not wages subject to withholding taxes. If in doubt, ask your local Internal Revenue office whether you fit into these circumstances.

VACUUM CLEANERS: "Have you ever heard of a vacuum cleaner called the Kirby? It sells for around $180. But it has an attachment for polishing or waxing floor; also one to polish silver, sharpen knives, etc.; one for demothing closets and shampooing rugs and upholstery, and by changing a small part, it can be used as a paint sprayer. It has many more things, and the regular attachments too.

"The way they get to demonstrate is, you get a phone call stating that your name has been picked for TV quiz and would you be home on such a night. In order to verify that, they will have a man call the same day and he will tell you all about the quiz. But when he calls he has the cleaner."—G. F., Yonkers, N. Y.

ANSWER: I have heard very little about the Kirby and cannot comment on the efficiency of the cleaner or the special attachments. It certainly is the most expensive combination I have encountered. You can buy a good easy-to-empty canister cleaner for $75 and even less. You can buy a separate floor polisher for as little as $35, and an electric drill with attachments for sharpening knives, etc., for as little as $20. The cost of all these appliances would only come to $130 or less, if you really want them all.

Government home economists recommend not buying a cleaner for the attachments. Dirt-removal capacity and convenience of use are more important. You can generally add attachments as you find you need them.

But what we particularly want to publicize is the deceptive method used to gain admittance to the house for the demonstration. Many canvassers have used similar tactics, such as claiming to be taking a survey.

A housewife should be careful about signing a contract for a purchase without first asking the local Better Bureau about the company's reputation, and without comparing values at local stores and catalogs when such high-pressure methods are used.

CWA Protests D. C. Report Inadequate On Pay Minimums

THE CIO Communications Workers have taken issue with recommendations setting a $32 weekly minimum wage for clerical and technical jobs in the District of Columbia.

CIO and AFL unions filed a minority report which charged the majority conference report "even reduced standards."

Approximately 25,000 women workers in the District will be affected by the new rate, to be set by a minimum wage and industrial safety board.

Labor, management and the public were represented on a conference panel studying the minimum rate. All labor members were signatories to the dissenting report. Representing CWA-CIO were Dir. Glenn E. Watts of Dist. 2; Pres. Josephine Piccolo of Local 2300, and D. C. Dir. John L. Monaghan.

The employe representatives pointed out that the conference in suggesting the $32 figure had ignored the law's requirements providing for a minimum wage "adequate to supply the necessary cost of living to women workers to maintain them in good health and to protect their morals."

The cost of a minimum budget for single women in Washington has risen from $36.83 to $42.48, a 15.3% increase, the report said.

Cincinnati Passes 1% Payroll Tax

Despite the vigorous opposition of Councilman Al Jordon, the Cincinnati City Council has voted seven to two for a 1% payroll tax. Jordon, who is a member of the executive board of the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council, pointed out that the tax will take more than $12 million annually from the pay checks of Cincinnati workers.

Expand U. S. Grants For New Hospitals, Says CIO

EXPANDED hospital facilities for the nation were urged by the CIO's Social Security Committee in a letter to Rep. Wolverton (R. N. J.) of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Joseph Curran, president of the CIO Maritime Union and head of the Social Security Committee, advocated increased federal aid for hospital construction as part of a comprehensive national health program. He termed the proposed $60 million over a three-year period for a new hospital building "a minimum program."

Curran cited the 1952 estimate of hospital construction need as 230,000 new general hospital beds, including the number for replacement of those in non-acceptable structures.

He urged Congress to consider the proper role hospital and other health facility construction should play in a rounded program of public works such as is now being discussed as a means of combatting business recession. No program, Curran said, deserves "more weight from the point of view of both individual and national welfare."

AND THE NEWS

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

A WEEK OR SO AGO, a CIO representative appeared before Congress to testify about the current unemployment among American farm workers, and he handed a picture of workers lined up at a soup kitchen to the Congressional Committeemen. Rep. Cooley (D.N.C.) commented that soup kitchens were his idea of un-American Activity.

I believe we all share his opinion that the American way of life is one which provides work and security for men and women, and not one which forces them to depend on charity for their sustenance. Yet as I travel about the country, I see more and more signs of the conditions that led us to the disaster of the Thirties. Men who want work are not able to find work.

At this moment, the men of our government should be working night and day, trying to find the ways and means to combat this situation. And there are many things our government has within its power that can help. But out of political partisanship, out of bitterness and greed, we can see no real program. It sometimes seems the men of this Administration are far more frightened of being called "New Dealers" than they are afraid of the terrible consequences of another economic collapse.

THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION appears dedicated to the idea that all you have to do to provide prosperity is to keep the corporations happy and wealthy. They seem to have a curious notion of how our economy works. They keep saying that production must be made more profitable, but they give little thought to the fact that consumption of those goods must also be made possible. It seems simple to CIO. We say if less people earn less money, they buy less, and the entire nation profits less.

CIO does have a program for rebuilding the purchasing power of the worker. CIO calls for an increase in individual income tax exemptions, from $600 to $1000. CIO has called for an increase in the minimum wage, particularly important at a time when unemployment is cutting into the national income. CIO has called for increases in the social security benefits earned by workers, and paid out by them out of the fruits of their labor. CIO has called for an adequate public works program that would take up some of the industrial slack that has hit the nation.

Yet the answer given CIO is that we are "Merchants of Fear." The representatives of big business tell us again and again that the conditions we see all around us don't exist. Nothing is wrong, they say.

We say there are things wrong. We say that smooth talk can't do any more to save the American way of life than name-calling and slander. What a shameful thing it is that on Lincoln's Birthday, and in his great name, so many political mud-slingers actually seemed to feel a sense of triumph that the common man was once again burdened with fear and insecurity.

There is a great cry for positive leadership, now, today. We must meet it. Our government must meet it. We must move against the economic enemy with the same vigor and single minded purpose with which we have struck at communism, fascism, and all other degrading forms of dictatorships.

Reuther Hits Complacency As Jobless Figures Climb

power," Reuther said, "the economic philosophy of this report and its sponsors is summed up in the handful of program recommendations in Part III . . . For after 75 pages of dodging and ducking, for those who have patience, the economic program for 1954 is presented.

"Unfortunately, even if you survive this week-visioned document, you won't find much to cheer about in the recommendations unless you're part of the upper income scale, say in the $10,000 or above class."

Reuther said he was most disturbed by "the underlying lack of a direction in this report." Where, he asked, is the imagination and real hope for a bigger and more prosperous America: "Certainly we will not get it by meek acceptance of 1954 projections which are lower than last year's achievements," Reuther said.

HE CHARGED that the authors and supporters of the report were the ones who really lack confidence in the future.

"We of CIO are full of hope for the future," said Reuther. "In our 19 years of existence, the real income of people has more than doubled. We have seen millions of jobs added. This is the kind of progress our people deserve and expect in the future."

He pledged that labor would continue to make its contribution toward these objectives. It looks, he added, to business and government to do their part, convinced that a prosperous and growing economy is not only possible but necessary.

Insurance Agents Picket In N. Y.

Some 1000 members of the CIO Insurance Workers picketed the home office of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in New York City for an hour last week in protest against the firm's union-busting tactics.

Because of company efforts to solicit resignations from the union, unfair labor practice charges have been filed against Metropolitan.

IUE Maps Strategy For Talks With GE And Westinghouse

COMPANY-WIDE conference boards of the CIO Electrical Workers representing more than 300,000 employes of General Electric, Westinghouse and other firms met in New York City last week to map contract bargaining plans.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey called for "an extraordinary meeting of the electrical machinery industry" to consider "the growing seriousness" of unemployment.

He also said a guaranteed annual wage would "provide assurance of regular income and mass layoffs."

THE BOARDS represent IUE-CIO members in the radio, television and parts industries as well as those at GE and Westinghouse plants. Negotiations with Westinghouse start Apr. 1, and with GE April 20.

Carey said that workers need a guaranteed annual wage as much as corporation executives who are paid by the year. He said that the nation needs "our sustained purchasing power . . . to keep an even keel."

Business would find that the guaranteed annual wage "promotes efficiency, regularity of production and a generally healthier situation at the bargaining table," he predicted.

The GE and the Westinghouse boards mapped their negotiating strategy around a 10-point program which they had approved at earlier meetings.

The guaranteed wage proposal, which headed the list, also included a severance pay arrangement, based on one week's pay for each year of service.

IUE-CIO also will ask for a substantial wage increase, corporation-wide minimums of $1.25 an hour, equal pay for equal work, re-institution of profit-sharing plans; further improvements in the pension, health and insurance programs and eight paid holidays.

OTHER bargaining aims are four weeks' vacation after 25 years' service, plus additional holidays for service ranging between five and 15 years, the same privileges for hourly workers as enjoyed by salaried employes, including at least five days' sick leave and paid leave for death in the immediate family.

The proposals also include a revision of the incentive system. GE also will be requested to grant the union shop, as Carey said, "to bring that corporation in line with the practices overwhelmingly adopted by the industry."

Senator's Son On New List Of Lobbyists

A NUMBER of former members of Congress and the son of Sen. Dworshak (R. Ida.) have listed themselves as lobbyists in Washington under the law requiring registration and spending on behalf of legislation.

Henry I. Dworshak reported he was a lobbyist for the American Mining Congress and interested in measures affecting mining such as taxation, public lands, stockpiling, etc. His father is a member of the Senate interior and insular committee which has jurisdiction over mining and chairman of its public lands subcommittee.

The son reported he got $900 in three months last year and spent $66.85.

FORMER SEN. KEM (R. Mo.) received $5000 from the American Merchant Marine Institute and $5000 from the American Metal Co., both of New York.

Robert Denham, controversial general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board whom Pres. Truman fired, got $1268 from the Continental Baking Co. and spent $180.

Former Rep. Manasco (D. Ala.) received $600 from National Business Publications and $2600 from the National Coal Association.

LPA Service Is Suspended

Suspension of Labor Press Associated news and feature service was announced "regretfully" last week by the agency's board of directors in Washington. CIO, AFL and railroad brotherhood papers has been represented in the non-profit LPA service, organized some five years ago.

LPA Pres. Ruben Levin, editor of Labor, rail union paper, said the suspension "was made necessary by a number of factors. Chief of these is that under existing or probable conditions of operation confronting LPA, it would be impossible to get the necessary financial backing from cooperating unions."

CWA Sets First Round Of Contract Parleys

AN EIGHT-point national bargaining program, with a company-paid hospital and surgical plan listed as the most important item, was announced by the CIO Communications Workers last week as the first round of negotiations with Bell System affiliates drew near.

The first 60-day notice of intention to open negotiations went out last week to the Western Electric Co. on behalf of some 2500 employes of its Haverhill and Lawrence, Mass., plants.

Thirteen additional notices were scheduled to go out in the following few days. They cover about 85,000 employes of other Western Electric plants, the Bell Laboratories, New Jersey Bell, Ohio Bell and the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. of Northern California.

THE EIGHT national bargaining points were drawn up at the 1953 CWA-CIO convention. Local bargaining units will add local demands which appear to be critical, with such proposals held to a minimum by convention direction.

In a letter to presidents of local unions, CWA-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said bargaining sessions will stress health and surgical protection "above all other items at every opportunity."

"THERE is a rapidly growing trend for company-paid hospitalization and surgical benefits," he wrote. "These benefits are being provided not only for the employe but also for his or her dependents . . . The trend is still mounting. The telephone industry is far behind other industries, particularly other public utilities, in this worth-while field."

The union also will seek pension improvements to yield a minimum of $100 a month aside from social security; a general wage increase; reduction of progression schedules; reclassification of certain clerical jobs; elimination of area differentials.

DeShetler Named Director Of CIO's Far West Region

APPOINTMENT of Irwin L. DeShetler as CIO regional director in five far western states was announced last week by John V. Riffe, CIO executive vice president and director of organization and councils.

DeShetler will serve as a Region 13 director covering California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona and Nevada, with regional headquarters shifted from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

DeShetler recently has served as CIO assistant organizational director in the five-state area. In the past several years, he has been active in CIO organization of fruit and vegetable packingshed workers and in U.S.-Mexican labor relations.

Before the streamlining of the CIO Organization Dept. last year, he was CIO regional director in Southern California. DeShetler once was president of the CIO Glass Workers.

IRWIN DESHETLER

In his new post, DeShetler succeeds Timothy Flynn, who has returned to the staff of the CIO Steelworkers.

Administration Housing Program Denounced As 'Inadequate' By CIO

THE EISENHOWER Administration's housing program "is so inadequate that it falls upon Congress itself to develop its own program" the CIO Executive Committee declared last week.

"CIO does not quarrel with much of the stated objectives," the committee said in commenting on the program proposed to Congress by Pres. Eisenhower. "But many of the actual legislative provisions do not carry out these objectives."

The committee renewed the CIO's call for a housing program "suited to the times and realistic in scope."

"Excessive caution and timidity in the housing field can prove to be the most reckless of all possible courses," it maintained.

"We will urge the Congress, therefore, to develop housing legislation with teeth to stimulate private and public housing for a prosperous housing year. America can have a prosperous housing industry and a prosperous economy. It is the height of folly to settle for a recession, mild or otherwise, when prosperity can be promoted by a well-balanced program of government aids."

EISENHOWER'S proposals were introduced in Congress in identical bills sponsored by Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.) of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee. They run 110 pages long.

The CIO Housing Committee, with other groups in the field, is making a detailed analysis of the legislation. Also being prepared is a detailed program to implement the construction of two million new dwelling units a year, the number strongly urged by the 1953 National CIO convention.

The measures before Congress would ease some down payment requirements, "liberalize" FHA mortagage terms, boost the FHA mortgage guarantee fund by $2 billion, provide incentives for renovating old dwellings, and set up a special financing plan to permit home ownership by slum dwellers.

The Executive Committee attacked the plan to permit slum dwellers to own homes as "meaningless and unworkable."

"The top price limit of $7000 per dwelling unit is not enough to permit construction of a decent house in the major cities where some of the most urgent need exists," it said.

"The nation needs a program which permits the average moderate income family to live in its own home, making moderate monthly payments resulting from long amortization, reasonable interest rates and no extra financing charges. Such homes could be provided on a large-scale basis at prices up to $10,000."

FAILURE of the Administration to move in this direction, the committee said, "reveals a refusal to face up both to the needs of the average family and to the dangerous unemployment situation."

The committee was critical of the bills to include 35,000 low-cost public housing units, proposals for which will be presented to the Appropriations Committees of Senate and House.

"The record of the Appropriations Committee," the CIO officials said, "provides no basis for hope that even this woefully inadequate program will receive favorable action."

Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.), rapped the whole Eisenhower program as "liberal in word but conservative in deed." He predicted that with "the glittering generalities" of the housing message "reduced to prosaic bill form . . . any housing legislation will be neither progressive nor dynamic."

ACTING to save jobs of U. S. workers, Rep. Cooley (D. N. C.) leads fight to block importing of Mexican farm labor by Administration.

Senate Skips Migrant Bill Hearing

A SNEAK MOVE by the Senate Agriculture Committee last week brought the Administration's controversial "go it alone" Mexican farm labor bill to the floor of the Senate without a hearing.

The action came after a vigorous fight by Rep. Cooley (D. N. C.), backed by Democratic Whip McCormick (Mass.), blocked GOP efforts to rush a similar House measure through the House Rules Committee to the floor before printed copies of the House hearing were available.

Rules Committeemen Madden (D. Ind.) and Colmer (D. Miss.) objected strongly to the railroading attempt and Chairman Allen (R. Ill.) postponed action indefinitely. The Senate Agriculture group then approved the measure, although it had held no hearings and had before it a CIO request to be heard.

It didn't wait to consider the House hearing proceedings.

Approval of the legislation—which would legalize the Administration's unilateral recruitment program objected to by Mexico and held to be illegal—was urged by Senate Agriculture Chairman Aiken (R. Vt.). He said, however, he hoped U. S. and Mexico would negotiate a bilateral agreement and make the measure unnecessary.

The committee's action, nevertheless, has the effect of threatening to wreck parleys now underway in Mexico City unless Mexico gives in to U. S. demands. The U. S. representatives, dominated by the big growers, have been insisting that Mexico give up even the inadequate labor standards of the old agreement.

This country broke off negotiations Jan. 15 but Pres. Eisenhower ordered them resumed in the face of the strong labor and consumer protests made at the House hearing. Up to the time of the Senate committee's action, the resumed negotiations were reported to be progressing "satisfactorily."

The Administration, forced to halt its unilateral program Feb. 5 after the Comptroller General ruled it could not legally use federal funds to finance it, has put strong pressure on Congress for quick action to legalize the program. Unless such a law is passed, the Labor Dept. can't pay the salaries of the employes who did the illegal recruiting.

Manion, Foe Of TVA, Is Forced Out

CLARENCE Manion was forced out last week as chairman of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

He turned in his resignation at the request of Sherman Adams, chief assistant to Pres. Eisenhower.

Manion was a leading advocate of the Bricker Amendment limiting the presidential treaty-making powers. He was fired while the Senate was voting on various substitutes for the Bricker proposal.

A former law dean of Notre Dame Univ., Manion backed the late Sen. Taft for the GOP nomination before the 1952 convention. He switched to Pres. Eisenhower and was named to head the special government commission last August.

His frequent absences from the commission headquarters in Washington drew severe criticism.

Manion made a number of lecture tours, attacking the Tennessee Valley Authority and recommending its sale to private utility interests. He also sought support for the Bricker Amendment, which is opposed by the President.

Some of Manion's critics hold him responsible for the prospective failure of his commission to meet the Mar. 1 deadline when it is required by law to report to Congress.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. House Labor Committee votes to defeat Bailey motion to table Taft-Hartley changes this session; will proceed with bill. (See Page 2.)

2. Senate Agriculture Committee votes out "go it alone" Mexican farm labor bill without hearings; action delayed in House. (See Page 12.)

3. Senate votes 45 to 42 to confirm Albert C. Beeson as member of the National Labor Relations Board. (See Page 2.)

4. House votes to recommit Ellsworth Bill to give away nation's forest holdings to big timber operators. (See Page 12.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What To Do
"Go it alone" Mexican farm labor program (H. J. Res. 355)	Authorizes unilateral program of recruiting Mexican "slave" labor for big farms of Southwest, thereby depressing general farm income and throwing U. S. workers out of jobs.	Senate and House Agriculture Coms. have both approved bill. Floor action has been delayed in House. Senate may act soon.	Write or wire your Representative and Senators urging rejection of measure and later support for larger appropriations to curb illegal immigration.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. completed hearings. House Labor Com. now drafting bill.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	House Ways & Means Com. now drafting bill.	Urge your Representative to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor.

Timber Grab Bill Defeated In The House

A MOVE by the big lumber interests to grab the choice timberlands of the national forests, national parks and federal wildlife refuges was beaten in the House last week after a CIO protest.

By a vote of 226 to 161 the House sent the bill by Rep. Ellsworth (R. Ore.) to give special rights to federal timber land to large timber operators back to the Interior Committee for further study.

Shortly before the vote, Robert Oliver, director of the CIO Legislative Committee, wired congressmen urging "vigorous opposition." He said the bill would permit "big timber monopolies to reach into federal forest lands and take public property on special privilege basis."

Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.), one of the leaders in the fight against the giveaway, told the House that "bill will not create one additional board foot of timber but will transfer title of well developed national forest lands to big lumber interests and thereby deprive small mills of even an opportunity to bid on national forest timber."

The CIO Woodworkers, representing workers in the logging and sawmill industries, also urged that the measure be "resoundingly defeated."

Fair Share Tax Cut Asked

Getting An Earful They look like tourists, but they're a hard-working group attending a legislative training institute in Washington for members of the CIO Rubber Workers. They are seen coming down the Capitol Hill steps, smiling, after one of a series of meetings with representatives and senators at which they got the inside dope on legislation and other issues of national importance. A Question Before SEC—

Banks Move To Gouge Utility Consumers Again

THERE'S A QUIET MOVE under way in Washington that may add pennies, dimes and dollars to your gas, light and other utility bills.

It's a proposal to weaken the powers of the Securities & Exchange Commission, boost the earnings of big investment banking houses which finance bond issues for private utilities, and thereby up the total on your utility bills.

On behalf of the interests of CIO members and their families as consumers, CIO has strongly protested any change in SEC's Rule U-50 which requires investment bankers to compete in bidding for the bonds of public utilities.

Rule U-50, the CIO noted, has worked satisfactorily since Congress ordered SEC to establish it in 1941 "for the protection of consumers."

Look beyond the immediate interests of the bankers and public utility executives, CIO warned the SEC. CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and his associate, David E. Feller, filed a statement with the regulatory body saying there was "no possible justification for the emasculation" of the rule.

Pointing out that the CIO was not "in the investment banking business and has no ambitions" to enter that field, the statement observed that CIO members as consumers would be affected by any change.

Utility rates are based on costs, the CIO said, "and utility costs can be tremendously inflated by 'inside' manipulation of public utility financing."

Such evils and abuses, the CIO continued, "in the past constituted a national problem."

Some of Wall Street's biggest investment banking firms are plugging hard for the change in Rule U-50, aided by Eisenhower SEC appointees who formerly had close ties with securities firms.

CIO's statement charged that these firms with "inside" connections have always opposed competitive bidding on securities issues, explaining:

"They know that the competitive bidding requirement takes them out of a preferred position . . . has reduced their profits in underwriting transactions from the excessive levels which previously prevailed. They know that the elimination of competitive bidding would bring back the good old days of higher profits for the big bankers with the right connection."

'Worse Taft-Hartley' Seen In House Bill

By AL ZACK

MEMBERS of the House Labor Committee are studying a long list of possible amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act—with strong probabilities that their product will be worse than the present anti-labor law.

It is known that members of the committee are being polled on a series of possible amendments. These amendments, when finally voted into a new bill, will be brought before the House.

It is believed that the House Bill will be more anti-union than the companion Smith Bill in the Senate, which has already received sharp criticism from all branches of the labor movement.

On the other hand, the Labor Committee's product will probably be somewhat less severe than a "staff committee print" worked up by the Labor Committee's technical staff, which reports to Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.).

THAT STAFF BILL takes merely a passing bow at the recommendations sent by Pres. Eisenhower to Congress in January. Instead, it sets forth a list of proposals that would deal America's free labor movement a severe body blow.

But those proposals, it is understood, went even further than McConnell was prepared to go. However, Labor Committee staff proposals indicate the nature of the drastic proposals which at least some Capitol Hill reactionaries are willing to accept.

In brief, the five most anti-labor proposals made by the committee staff would:

1. Forbid any and every sort of union security agreement, including a union shop or maintenance of membership.

The staff report exempts only the construction, maritime and entertainment industries, where union shops after seven days employment, could be negotiated. For all other industries, any sort of contract requiring union membership as a condition of employment would be outlawed.

2. Revamp the administration of the law. The committee staff proposal contains two alternative and contradictory proposals for administering the act, neither of which would be helpful to unions.

The first proposal was copied from one made by the late Sen. Taft in 1953, and calls for enlarging the NLRB and making it political in nature. CIO, at that time called the proposal "cumbersome and unworkable" and said it would "add chaos and delay to the board's already confused and dilatory procedures."

The other proposal would abolish the NLRB, place handling of representation cases in the Labor Dept. and unfair labor practice cases in the federal district courts.

Labor unions would be certain to suffer, for the courts are even slower than the snail-like pace of the NLRB; federal district judges are even more anti-union than the board members; the Justice Dept., bossed by Atty.-Gen. Brownell, would line up with employers, and unions could not stand the cost of processing cases through the courts where employers, bent on harassment, could afford costly and long-delayed litigation.

3. Allow federal injunctions of unlimited duration, instead of the present 80-day injunctions, in so-called national emergencies.

4. Establish three "states' rights" proposals in the law.

These would invite state legislatures to write new anti-labor laws governing the right to strike and picket and make these laws superior to the federal law. The committee staff proposal would also add the Eisenhower states' right section urging states to adopt compulsory arbitration statutes and it would give the states jurisdiction over labor matters in any plant where the NLRB refuses to take jurisdiction.

Under the first two proposals, a state could break any strike or prohibit any kind of picketing.

5. Provide for government-arranged strike votes to be conducted either 10 days before or 10 days after a strike begins.

The committee staff proposals also contain the completely undemocratic voting procedure called for in the Smith Bill. This provides that workers who do not vote in such elections, no matter what the reason, shall be considered to have voted against the union.

Other proposals made by the Labor Committee staff would:

- Restrict the employer's duty to bargain.
- Make check-off cards revocable at will.
- Further confuse the secondary boycott provisions.
- Increase governmental interference, under the guise of outlawing "featherbedding."
- Extend the employers' license to intimidate and coerce workers.
- Penalize workers who strike against unfair labor practices.
- Continue, in slightly changed form, the T-H provision that economic strikers can't vote in NLRB elections. Pres. Eisenhower has denounced this as a union-busting provision.
- Revise the ineffective non-Communist oath in an ineffective manner and extend it to employers.

The committee refused to hold open hearings on these far-reaching changes, some never discussed in committee hearings, despite an urgent plea from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther that interested parties have an opportunity to be heard.

T-H 'Another Giveaway'

"Another giveaway to the Repubican party's financial angels" is CIO's description of Administration proposals for revising the Taft-Hartley Act.

The CIO Executive Committee reaffirmed demands for T-H repeal and enactment of a fair and just labor relations law based on the principles of the Wagner Act. The GOP revisions, it said, would make Taft-Hartley "worse than it is."

"This is not the reform of Taft-Hartley promised by Pres. Eisenhower as a candidate," the CIO said. "The few improvements are sugar coating to disguise anti-labor restrictions."

The committee charged that the basic philosophy behind the revisions is that "the way to improve labor-management relations is by weakening unions." It objected to strike vote proposals, saying a pre-strike ballot is an attempt to "drive a wedge" between union leadership and the members, and a post-strike vote "seeks to break a strike."

Setback

Mississippi moved into the column of open shop states last week after Gov. Hugh White signed a "right to work" bill which organized labor branded a "sweatshop measure."

Union members watched quietly in the galleries as the House quickly knocked down four softening amendments to the Senate bill banning the closed and union shops. The Governor, who said he always wanted to "be fair with the working people," reported he was "satisfied it will not injure labor."

The bill is similar to the open shop law passed last year in Alabama and also to measures on the books in several other states.

NLRB Sets Bargaining Vote At Butte

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has scheduled an election for Mar. 22 to permit Butte, Mont., copper miners and smeltermen to choose between the CIO Steelworkers and the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers as their collective bargaining agent.

The election was scheduled when Mine-Mill was forced from its untenable opposition to a single-unit election for both the miners and the smelter employes of the Anaconda Copper Mining Co.

The separate USA-CIO locals several weeks ago voted overwhelmingly to bolt from Mine-Mill because of its Communist leadership and rejoin the main stream of the American labor movement.

Mine-Mill had refused earlier to agree to an NLRB election because of the one vote for both units.

NLRB VOTES also have been scheduled this week in two Colorado communities where Mine-Mill locals had voted to shift to USA-CIO.

One election was planned for employes of the Empire Zinc Co., Gilman, Colo., where the vote within the Mine-Mill local was 15 to 1 for joining the USA-CIO.

The other was for miners employed by the Reynolds Metals Corp. at Salida, Colo.

'Fair Share' Tax Cut Bill Presented

By WILLIAM MILLIS

THE FIGHT to give the typical American family a "fair share" of tax savings is moving front and center on the congressional stage.

A proposal to cut individual income taxes by increasing individual exemptions—by $200 this year from the present $600 level, and by another $200 next year—got wide support last week from conservative, middle-ground and liberal Democrate.

The measure was introduced only a few days after CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in a restatement of CIO's long-standing position, had urged such tax cuts as a means of increasing consumer spending and thus helping to stem the developing economic recession.

And the consumer tax cut bill was a direct challenge to Pres. Eisenhower, who has said that if economic indicators in March continue on the downgrade, he would institute a number of governmental countermeasures—possibly an individual income tax reduction.

Here is the tax situation in summary:

1. Three Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee—former Chairman George (Ga.), Kerr (Okla.) and Frear (Del.)—presented the bill to increase individual tax exemptions from the present $600 to $800 in 1954 and then to $1000 in 1955.

(If enacted, the tax savings "would mean an increase of about 8c an hour in take-home pay," estimated Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.). The dollars-and-cents differences on your paycheck for different income groups are detailed in the adjoining table.)

2. Some Republican senators tried to squelch the proposal as "inflationary." (Apparently tax savings for business firms and stockholders aren't inflationary.)

3. Sen. Douglas urged the President to shift the Administration's present "trickle-down" tax program (which gives $1.8 billion in tax savings to business, in the first year, $1.2 billion to stockholders and only $250 million to individuals) and to support a $200 increase in personal tax exemptions. Such a step, he said, would "present the recession from developing into a depression."

4. The House Ways & Means Committee—rushing to complete the tax bill—brushed aside Democratic proposals to increase the exemptions, while voting more favors for business.

5. The underlying need to bolster consumer income—after months of layoffs, short work weeks, falling production and unemployment now officially above the three-million mark—was illustrated in a report by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

Paralleling other economic guides, retail sales now are beginning to fall. They dropped in both December and January.

In presenting his tax bill, George emphasized:

"Whatever we do for corporations and whatever we do for the big business organizations may have an indirect effect on our economy, but what we do in this field, by leaving more take-home pay in the pockets of workers, will increase the purchasing power and will stimulate productivity in the United States.

"If we are courageous enough to take this forward-looking step, before our economy falls on its face, we can be of great service to the American people."

A similar point was made by Douglas in his letter to Eisenhower, in saying:

"The idea of giving tax relief only to business and investors as a stabilizing force is simply the old 'trickle down' theory of 'what's good for business is good for the country.'

"What is necessary is a 'trickle up' theory of 'what's good for the country is good for business.' If people have money to buy, business will have markets and persons will have jobs."

The Republican reaction was demonstrated in the case of Sen. Flanders (Vt.). Before the George Bill was introduced, Flanders supported measures to stimulate consumer spending, including higher tax exemptions. After it was introduced, Flanders declaimed it would be inflationary.

Whatever the Republican objections, Democratic Leader Johnson (Tex.) predicted that the present Congress will increase personal income tax exemptions, and probably along lines of the George Bill.

In the House tax-writing committee, Republican members brushed aside Rep. Cooper's (D. Tenn.) plea to give consumers a "fair share" of tax relief. Cooper asked reconsideration of an earlier committee vote against increasing individual exemptions.

The same committee earlier voted to continue the 27.5% depletion allowance granted oil and gas firms—one of the biggest tax loopholes.

The House group backtracked partially from its earlier giveaway to corporation stockholders. Originally, it had voted a three-year program of tax deductions of up to 15% for dividend receivers. Now it has knocked off the third stage, leaving a 5% credit for this year and 10% for next year.

CIO Backed In Plea To Up Consumer Income

CIO'S VIGOROUS case for expanding real consumer income as the keystone of a full employment economy received independent endorsement as the Joint Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report concluded its hearings.

The support came from Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, chairman the President's Council of Economic Advisers under the Truman Administration.

Nourse warned that the present recession "is much more fundamental than mere inventory trimming," which is how the Eisenhower Administration describes it. And he said there are not now "adequate grounds" for expecting an upturn later in the year.

"Sound economic strategy for economic stabilization and recovery in 1954," Nourse testified in criticism of the GOP's "trickle down" tax program to aid big business first, "would give maintenance of consumer buying priority over stimulus to plant expansion and modernization or the enlargement of profit incentives.

"Tax relief to consumers would be more efficacious in our present economic situation than relief to producers and most efficacious if concentrated in the lower income brackets where spending pressure for necessaries of life is greatest."

What Higher Exemptions Mean On Pay Check . . .

Increased individual income tax exemptions, as proposed in the George Bill, would give real tax relief to low and middle-income family groups.

The following table, prepared by the CIO Research & Education Dept., is based on a typical family with two children or a total of four tax exemptions, and compares present taxes with the two-step reduction proposed by Sen. George:

Income per week before deductions and exemptions	Taxes saved when exemption raised from $600 to $800 per dependent		Taxes saved when exemption raised from $600 to $1000 per dependent
	Week	Hour	Week	Hour
$60	$1.57	4c	$1.57	4c
$70	3.00	7½c	3.37	8½c
$80	3.00	7½c	5.17	13c
$90	3.00	7½c	6.15	15c
$100	3.00	7½c	6.15	15c

UAW Challenges GM On Short Work Weeks

THE CIO AUTO Workers have demanded that General Motors readjust its work force to provide a full week for regular employes, now that "the bloom is off the boom."

The UAW-CIO lodged protests against GM short work weeks and "payless paydays." Dir. John W. Livingston of the UAW's GM Dept. wrote to Pres. Harlowe Curtice of the big motor firm reminding the latter of his optimistic speeches on a prosperous 1954 and the GM billion-dollar expansion program.

"Even as you uttered these statements," Livingston wrote, "thousands of your employes were working short weeks and finding their take-home pay drastically cut."

Despite widespread short time for regular help, said Livingston, GM is continuing to hire new workers and has initiated second shifts on some plants, thus causing a "sharing of misery."

LIVINGSTON cited the following specific examples of GM's more-help, less-work policies:

At Flint, Mich., a second shift was added at the Chevrolet plant and at Fisher Body Plant No. 2 on Jan. 11, although production workers at both plants worked only one 40-hour week since Nov. 9 and suffered two payless pay days in the same period.

In Janesville, Wis.; St. Louis, Mo.; and Van Nuys, Calif., GM workers averaged only 32 hours a week over an extended period.

Chevrolet and Fisher production workers in Kansas City, Mo., have averaged less than 32 hours weekly since Nov. 9.

At Tarrytown, N. Y., Chevrolet and Fisher workers have received only two full pay checks since mid-October and have had two payless pay days.

In Norwood, Ohio; Oakland, Calif.; Baltimore, Md., and Atlanta, Ga., the picture, Livingston said, "is about as dim."

(CIO Electrical Workers urge quick action on layoffs, Page 9.)

Critical Areas

Three more major industrial centers have been added by the Labor Dept. to the list of critical areas with "substantial" unemployment.

They are the Quad Cities area of Illinois and Iowa; South Bend, Ind.; and Battle Creek, Mich. Also named were La Crosse, Wisc.; Hudson, N. Y.; and Welch, W. Va. There now are 59 critical unemployment centers, where 6% or more of the labor force is unemployed.

Price Index Near Peak For 3-Years

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index climbed sharply last week to near a three-year peak. The index went up 9c to $7.20—the highest since March, 1951.

Mitchell Urges Governors Back Jobless Pay Boosts

ALL STATE governors have been asked by Sec. of Labor Mitchell to support overdue reforms in their unemployment compensation benefit programs.

In personal letters, Mitchell last week told the governors that higher and longer benefits are needed. He suggested the states provide 26 weeks of benefit payments uniformly.

Mitchell pointed out that a majority of the Federal Council on Employment Security has recommended that in each state the maximum weekly benefit should be at least equal to 60%-67% of that state's average weekly wage.

The Labor Secretary's letter retraced the broad outlines of Pres. Eisenhower's recent recommendations on unemployment compensation as "matters' for state rather than for federal action." The areas of interest for Congress would be changes in standards respecting the size of employers and qualifications for experience-rating tax reductions.

A prediction that "we are not going from boom to bust" was voiced by Mitchell.

He told a GOP audience in Flint, Mich., that unemployment will stop rising after "the next two months." Then we will rest at that level, he said. "This is part of a necessary adjustment that we could only postpone, not avoid," Mitchell added.

Bell System Ups Earnings —And Wants Higher Rates

BELL SYSTEM, Goodyear and Union Carbide hung up new profit records in 1953, according to corporate statements revealed last week.

Gross revenues of $4.4 billion for the Bell System, up almost $400 million over 1952, still aren't enough for Pres. Cleo F. Craig of American Telephone & Telegraph Co., who promised his firms would push for higher phone rates.

Consolidated net income of the telephone holding company came to $478.5 million in 1953, compared with $406.6 million in 1952.

Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. scored over $1 billion in sales for the third successive year with net income of $49.3 million against $39 million in 1952.

Union Carbide & Carbon Corp. joined the super-select group of corporations with billion-dollar sales volume in 1953 for the first time, with a net income of $102 million.

Despite International Harvester's repeated cry of poverty, the firm's financial report for the 1953 fiscal year showed a gross profit of $88,203,417 and a net profit of $52,029,417 after taxes.

Another Coffee Price Hike Due

The price of coffee probably will rise another 10c to 15c a pound, to about $1.40 retail, before it settles down, Horacio Cintra-Leite, president of the Pan-American Coffee Bureau, said last week in Chicago.

A Time For Sanity

Meeting in secret, the House Labor Committee is now voting on the most anti-labor proposals ever before Congress. Details of the draft (outlined on Page 2) prove to be far worse than anything Taft or Hartley ever devised.

We can only hope that the members of the committee will prove themselves more sane and sensible than the Republican-appointed staff members who concocted this evil dish.

If the United States, freedom's beacon in the continuing struggle against dictators and oppressors, were to adopt this bust-the-unions measure, it would be handing the Communists a ready-made propaganda club. For you can't have freedom without free unions. And you can't have free union under the Labor Committee staff proposal to make Taft-Hartley far, far worse.

'Fair Share' On Taxes

The fundamental policy of the GOP Administration—to take care of business and let the people get the crumbs—has been challenged seriously as the question of tax reductions moves forward in Congress.

The House Ways & Means Committee has voted a $1.8 billion tax bonanza to big business and another $1.2 billion savings to stockholders. But the Senate has been presented with a tax bill which would mean real savings through increases in individual exemptions. Such real increases in take-home pay—as much as 8c an hour—would be a real boon to millions of American workers.

The question on taxes is whether the American people get a "fair share" of tax reductions. How that question is answered will be of major consequence in this election year.

The Army's Retreat

A year ago, a Washington cynic predicted that the Eisenhower Administration would start to fight Sen. McCarthy only when it's too late to lick him.

That prediction seemed to take on added status when Sec. of the Army Stevens backed down before the bluster of the junior Senator from Wisconsin. The incident reminds us of the days of the Bataan retreat—and we can only hope that the armed forces of this democracy will not become the permanent captive of a blustering demagogue.

Obviously, the armed forces must be the servant, not the master, of the civilian government. But that wasn't the issue here. The issue was whether the executive branch of government was to become the tame pet of one Senator from the extreme right. And Sec. Stevens caved in.

CIO Textile Workers, who know Stevens as an anti-union textile industrialist, have criticized that "craven surrender" and urged that he resign. Certainly, some step to reassert the dignity of the federal government is badly needed.

What's Ezra's Job?

Sec. of Agriculture Benson, in the words of the National Farmers Union, is busy trying to stir up "a political civil war between farmers and their customers." His latest effort was to move into the pending railroad wage negotiations on the side of management and against the union's wage proposals.

The brotherhoods are justified in their protest to Pres. Eisenhower. Benson—in view of the farm price situation—should try to do something for the farmers, not try to do something to workers.

The Old Expert Needs New Bifocals

In Other Words—

Tribute To The ILO

Tribute to the work of the International Labor Organization was paid by Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) in Congress. Ives headed the U. S. delegation to the 1953 International Labor Conference. Part of his remarks follow:

By IRVING IVES

I AM SURE that the ILO's importance and potential value to the U. S. are no more than slightly recognized in this country; at any rate, I myself in the past have had only a vague conception of its function and activities and an even more limited appreciation of its possibilities with respect to ourselves.

The basic purpose of the ILO has been to raise the standards of wages, hours, working conditions and related matters throughout the world. Obviously, because our own standards of this type are already so high, any general improvement in these standards among the other nations is almost certain to affect us advantageously from the standpoint of competition, both in our own and the world markets.

To the extent that this effort has already succeeded, we as a nation should have been benefited, although, because of the chaotic economic and social conditions occasioned by the last war and by Soviet Russia's subsequent damnable attitude, it is difficult to ascertain exactly where such benefit may have occurred.

U. S. Was A Late Comer

The fact remains that, as a member of the ILO, we are in a position to profit by participating in its programs and activities, and especially by contributing to its aims and plans.

Unfortunately for us, we were delinquent in joining it, having been a member only since 1934. Our refusal to ratify the Treaty of Versailles or even to join the League of Nations, under which in 1919 the ILO was created, was largely responsible for our delay in becoming a member of it.

One thing with which I was particularly impressed was the character or quality of membership of the several delegations. Not infrequently a Minister of Labor served as one of his government's delegates; labor delegates were often top ranking representatives of the labor movements in their countries; and often the employer delegates were leading industrialists in their respective nations. I do not emphasize these facts in criticism of our U. S. delegation. We had a good delegation; I believe it was representative.

But I do emphasize the fact that always efforts should be made to see that labor, management and our government send delegates to the ILO conference who are thoroughly representative of their particular groups in our country and are able to act with sufficient understanding and dispatch when swift action is required; they should be able to speak with independence and authority for the groups they represent.

I firmly believe that the ILO, with a membership of 66 nations and representatives not only of government, but also of the vast cross-sections of populations which consist of workers and employers, can exercise an influence on the world economy and world society, which no other international organization—not even the United Nations—is in a position to exercise.

It remains for us Americans to determine whether we shall choose to play the role in the field of world worker-employer problems which by tradition, experience, and accomplishment we should be qualified to play to an unusual degree and with great benefit to ourselves and to the world.

What It Can Do

I only wish that the vast majority of those in government, in management, and in labor could visualize the ILO for what it is and, most of all, for what it can do—and, I might add, for what it may do if we do not accept our responsibility to it. If such an understanding were to exist among the American people, I should feel less disturbed about the future.

I desire to pay a personal tribute to David A. Morse, who has been performing a remarkable service for our country and the world in the effective and inspiring manner in which, as its Director-General and Secretary-General, he has been directing the work of the ILO.

But, above all else, I departed from Geneva firm in the conviction that the ILO's potential for good, both for the U. S. and for the rest of the free world, is almost without limit.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE LESSONS to learn here is to avoid labeling congressmen in rigid categories. The latest example involves Sen. Walter F. George (D., Ga.), who tossed a time bomb into Republican ranks by proposing higher personal exemptions for low-paid people burdened with income taxes.

The Eisenhower corporation presidents and Wall St. lawyers didn't think Sen. George would do this to them. They were planning tax "relief" solely for corporations and stockholders of corporations.

Franklin D. Roosevelt tried to "purge" George from the Senate in the Democratic primary of 1938.

He isn't a liberal in any contemporary American sense of the word. He doesn't do anything to control Gov. Talmadge of his state, who is planning to secede from the public school system if the Supreme Court rules against race segregation. His votes on various issues could not possibly have displeased Coca-Cola and the Georgia Power Co., two important business influences in his state.

Yet suddenly he proposes that personal tax exemptions be raised from $600 to $800 this year and to $1000 in 1955. He would give tax "relief" to the vast majority of wage earners and small-salaried people rather than just to corporations and stockholders.

A sudden attack of unexpected liberalism? A feeling, developed in a lifetime in public office, that the people have rights that deserve respect? A belated discovery that the American system requires widespread purchasing power, and that it isn't good even for business for all tax "relief" to go to a handful of toppaid people?

Whatever the reason, George's outstanding reputation as a conservative makes his suggestion all the more difficult for the Republicans to resist. His influence makes his ideas mean more than similar proposals filed by almost any other senator you could name.

In short, it looks as if Walter F. George, conservative, is about to do the people a favor.

Trouble

The Wall Street Journal says the business dip worries GOP officials more than they are admitting.

Trouble is, they believe the Republican party is the party of depression.

Example Of The 'Big Lie'

Here is the way a "big lie" gets established—in this case the big lie to the effect that the term "McCarthyism" was invented by subversives, Communists and people loosely associated by accusation with subversives or Communists.

The China Lobby character, Alfred Kohlberg, in a magazine article claimed that Owen Lattimore first used the word "McCarthyism" on May 3, 1950, and that the Communist newspaper, the Daily Worker, picked it up next day.

A letter printed in the New York Times on Jan. 21 said that the term was "first provided" by Lattimore on May 3, 1950, and echoed on May 4 by the Daily Worker.

The only things wrong with this tale are: (1) Lattimore's alleged "invention" of the word is meaningless, because Lattimore up to now is simply a scholarly victim of McCarthy and Sen. McCarran, indicted for perjury but convicted of nothing; (2) the dates and alleged facts are wrong.

Max Lerner, a very definite non-Communist, says in the New York Post that he used the term "McCarthyism" on Apr. 5, 1950. The word was used in the Apr. 17, 1950, edition of the New Republic, a non-Communist magazine. I shouldn't be surprised if I myself, along about April of 1950, after McCarthy had revealed his style of operation, wrote something about "McCarthyism." I was thinking it, whether or not I got the word into print.

It will be interesting, in the American struggle with the "big lie" technique, to see how often Kohlberg's phony magazine "facts" and the lying letter to the New York Times are reprinted and quoted as "documented" evidence that nobody but a Communist refers to McCarthyism as a peculiar type of political terrorism including both exaggeration and blackmail.

The State Of The Capital

A Negro named Paul Phillips turned down a high-ranking job in the Eisenhower Administration because he couldn't tolerate the racial discrimination rampant in this enlightened capital of our democracy.

Phillips runs the Urban League in Grand Rapids, Mich. He was offered appointment as special assistant in Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby's Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. (Mrs. Hobby is a Texan, and it isn't sure how much she has learned in her post, but she offered Phillips the job.)

Phillips courteously refused, citing as one reason "evident progress, though slow" in his Grand Rapids responsibilities. Then he added a "very personal" reason.

In the opinion of his wife and himself, "it would be unfair and unwise to ask my family, and especially our 7-year-old son, to live in and attempt to adjust to the rigid pattern of racial segregation that exists in Washington."

A Fighting Irishman—

O'Connor Challenges McCarthy On Free Speech Fundamentals

By RAY DAVIDSON

(Editor of International Oil Worker, OWIU-CIO official publication.)

WHEN JOE McCARTHY hailed Harvey O'Connor before his Senate investigating committee last summer, he started a fight which may very well wind up with the Senator on the mat.

O'Connor, former publicity director for the CIO Oil Workers and veteran labor writer, refused to answer any of the Senator's questions on the grounds that such questioning by a Congressional committee constituted an abridgment of freedom of the press and speech, as guaranteed by the First Amendment. O'Connor pointedly declined, although invited by McCarthy, to take refuge in the Fifth Amendment.

As a result of his defiance, O'Connor was cited for contempt of Congress by a Senate resolution and later was indicted by a Washington federal grand jury.

O'Connor did not take this lying down. He immediately set out, largely at his own expense, to tell as many people as possible about the dispute between him and McCarthy.

Since being indicted, O'Connor has spoken to scores of college, church, labor, civil liberties and luncheon club meetings.

He Tells His Own Story

For a while he confined these appearances to the East Coast area relatively near his home in Little Compton, R. I. But late in January he started a grueling tour of western states, starting in Chicago and continuing to Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco; Austin, Fort Worth and Dallas, Texas; and Kansas City.

In each city he is speaking before any and every group which will listen—and it is surprising which group sometimes listens! In Denver, for example, he appeared before half a dozen organization meetings, but apparently his most effective speech was at a regular luncheon meeting of the Capital Kiwanis Club.

His remarks there were put on tape and rebroadcast at an early evening hour by one of the city's leading radio stations. Four other radio stations granted him free time for interview programs—and that all happened after Robert E. Lee was confirmed for FCC!

The publisher of The Denver Post, a newspaper with tremenduous influence in several mountain states, listened to O'Connor's talk, conversed with him personally, then went back to his office and told the editor of the Post editorial page to do a job. Next day's Post carried an editorial which unqualifiedly praised O'Connor for his one-man crusade to test the First Amendment.

Fundamental Freedoms

O'Connor bases his entire plea on fundamentals of the Bill of Rights. He declines to argue fine legal points, saying, "That's for the lawyers and the courts to work out. I'm for standing for what I believe and I don't have to ask a lawyer what I should believe."

In a voice sometimes shaking with rage but always dignified, O'Connor asserts again and again that "it's none of Congress' opinion what my political beliefs are." Then he always adds, "But I'm always willing to tell any friendly questioner that I am not, nor have I ever been, a member of the Communist party.

"It's a bit humiliating even to have to say that," he adds wistfully. I've been a writer for 40 years, most of that time writing on subjects involving politics. How in the world could I have concealed my politics in the millions of words I have written?"

FIGHTING for American civil liberties against a Senate contempt citation is Harvey O'Connor (right), former publicity director for the CIO Oil Workers, chatting with OWIU-CIO Executive Council Member M. Phyl Poulson in Salt Lake City on a lecture tour.

O'Connor believes that the greatest threat to American civil freedom today is the behavior, not of the wicked, but of the innocent, and and the fearful.

"The Bible says that the wicked flee where no man pursueth," says O'Connor. "But now we have the strange situation in which the fearful, and the innocent, flee where no man pursueth."

His theme is that more and more everyday citizens should resist the improper and intimidating tactics of congressional investigators.

A Minor Victory Already

"If I'm finally found guilty of contempt," he notes, "my prison sentence will be a minimum of one month or a maximum of 12 months. When was freedom ever bought so cheaply?"

O'Connor believes he already has been instrumental in winning a minor victory against McCarthy. Since he refused to testify on First Amendment grounds, two other witnesses before McCarthy have refused on the same grounds.

Of course the ever-recurring question O'Connor meets in his travel is: "Why were you called before the committee." In answer, O'Connor quotes from the official transcript of the hearing, in which McCarthy says:

"Mr. O'Connor. you have been subpoenaed here today to answer questions in regard to the writings which were purchased by the old Acheson State Dept." McCarthy refers to several books, including an official history of the Oil Workers Intl. Union (CIO) which were found in overseas State Dept. libraries.

So, says O'Connor, his crime is that the State Dept., when Dean Acheson was secretary, chose to buy some of his books. O'Connor had nothing to do with their selection—and they must have been bought second-hand, because all of them except the history have been sold out by the publishers since 1945. The Oil Workers published the history and have checked their files to see if the State Dept. bought any. They have found no record, although there were several sales to book dealers who could have been acting as agents for the State Dept.

"My crime," says O'Connor, "was that the 'Old Acheson State Dept.' bought some of my books. I'm just a pawn in McCarthy's attempts to smear Acheson. But now he's making remarks about the 'Old Dulles State Dept.' and I predict that within a year he will be saying that Eisenhower sold out East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia to the Red Army in 1945.

"He's destroying the confidence of the American people in the Roosevelt Administration, the Truman Administration and now in the Eisenhower Administration. The Kremlin must be laughing with glee. What better service could be rendered to the Communists than to destroy the confidence of the people in our government—regardless of which political party is in power!"

O'Connor Praised For 'One-Man Stand'

A Denver Post editorial praised Harvey O'Connor's "courageous one-man stand for American civil liberties," taken when he declined to answer Sen. McCarthy's queries on First (free speech and press) Amendment grounds.

"It is an important case that could effect any American citizen," the editorial said.

"O'Connor may lose, and he knows it. But he is ready to serve a jail sentence if he loses, and he figures even so it is worth the fight for a matter of principle.

"You've got to admire a man with such strength of conviction. Not many of us either would or could make such a stand for the sake of what we believe in."

LEGISLATIVE ISSUES were explained to URW-CIO training institute by Rep. Johnson (D. Wisc.), speaking, as (left to right) Pres. Magne Repaal of Eau Claire local, who campaigned for him, and Rep. Hays (D. O.) listen.

PUBLIC POWER giveaway was discussed by Leland Olds, former Federal Power Commission chairman now with Public Affairs Institute, at a luncheon meeting. These sessions of institutes brought 75 URW members to Washington for intensive briefing on national issues by congressmen, senators and CIO staff members.

'GOP Is Still Operating As Opposition,' Holifield Tells URW Legislative Institute

THE REPUBLICANS have not learned in 20 years of opposition how to be a constructive force for the common good, Rep. Holifield (D. Calif.) told a CIO Rubber Workers legislative training institute in Washington last week.

"Instead of proposing a positive program of their own," he said, "they are still the Republican opposition. They are still criticizing the New Deal and the Fair Deal. They are still complaining about the Truman Administration instead of proving that anything can be done in the Eisenhower Administration."

The URW-CIO held three consecutive institutes in the national capital to familiarize members from all parts of the country with major legislation and policy developments. Each drew about 25 members to four-day sessions with programs arranged by URW Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker and Education Dir. Joe Glazer. The "students" visited, conferred and dined with congressmen.

Don't Be Fooled

Holifield spoke to the second group, which included URW members from 11 states. The workers also met with Sens. Neely (W. Va.), Murray and Mansfield (Mont.), Kennedy (Mass.), Burke (O.) and Kefauver (Tenn.), all Democrats.

The California Democrat warned his URW audience not to be "fooled" by Pres. Eisenhower's messages and statements, because he "is not running the Eisenhower Administration."

"Tom Dewey and Herbert Brownell and a few others are running the show downtown," he declared. "Who is calling the signals for the Republican team on Capitol Hill is anybody's guess, but you can be sure of one thing. It isn't Gen. Eisenhower."

He declared Eisenhower cannot escape responsibility for the smearing of the Democrats by some of the top Administration figures, and asserted "Deweyism is only McCarthyism in spats."

Holifield said that "in greater or lesser degree the whole apparatus of the federal government is being organized for Republican advantage." He urged the "students" to take back to their members "a crusading conviction that will prod them into intelligent political action in the forthcoming elections."

Others heard or visited by the URW delegates included Sens. Lehman and Sparkman (D. Ala.); Reps. Johnson (D. Wisc.), Rogers (D. Colo.), Metcalf (D. Mont.) and Canfield (R. N.J.); Merton Bernstein, administrative assistant to Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.); Esther Murray of the CIO-PAC and H. H. Bookbinder, director of National CIO legislative research.

THE LOW-DOWN: Rep. Hays (D. O.) gives it to three members of URW Local 26, Cumberland, Md., in one of many conferences between legislators and workers. Hays (left) spells it out in detail as (left to right) G. S. Dunlap, G. B. Young and Ralph S. Beard listen attentively.

Labor Dept. Conference—

CIO Presses For Higher Jobless Benefits

THE CIO has asked for an investigation of the "crazy quilt" pattern of state workmen's compensation laws.

Under the "crazy quilt" pattern, a worker gets twice as much for the loss of an arm in New York State as in Texas.

The request for an investgation was presented to Labor Sec. Mitchell by a subcommittee of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health.

Subcommittee members are Michael J. Quill, committee chairman, who is president of the CIO Transport Workers; Jerome Pollack, CIO Auto Workers social security consultant; Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council, and Harry Read, committee secretary, who is also executive assistant to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Clayman was unable to be present when the committee met with Mitchell.

CIO proposed that Pres. Eisenhower name an inquiry board, with the advice of Mitchell, consisting of representatives of labor, management and the public.

Mitchell said he realized "the seriousness" of the problem. He added "an exposure of the facts is the first step," and that the matter is the "responsibility" of his department about which "we should do something."

He made the statement after Pollack pointed out that since 1940 all other social security benefits have increased with the exception of workmen's compensation, which is now at about half of the rate of other benefits.

HE SAID he would place workmen's compensation on "a critical list." Pollack declared an investigation should cover the "inadequacy of the benefits in relation to the needs of the injured worker and his family."

The medical care provisions are limited in 17 states and are cut off before recovery of the worker, there are no federal standards for compensation, which averages about $30 a week, and the rehabilitation clauses are insufficient, Pollack said.

In Illinois, he added, only 13% of the wage loss is paid, and there is not a state which pays more than a third of the loss of earnings.

A Question For State Lawmakers

"Are you listening, Mr. State Legislator? . . . are you listening?"

That's the question asked by the Ohio CIO Council newsletter, in telling the story of a CIO Utility Worker who about a year ago lost the use of his hands in an accident.

Members of his family have to wash, shave and feed him. Workmen's compensation pays him $32.20 a week, with which he is supposed to take care of his wife and five children.

His fellow members of the UWUA pass a cigar box and pick up from $140 to $150 a month to help his family make ends meet. Recently the UWUA-CIO members learned that the family's washing machine had worn out, and raised money to buy a new one.

"The bitter moral of this story is—why, oh why, doesn't our State pay a living benefit to those unfortunate injured and maimed on the job?" the Ohio CIO asked. "Why must our utility friend be forced to rely on the charity of his fellow workers?"

CIO And AFL Get Behind Highway Safety Campaign

THE CIO and AFL have pledged support of a nationwide safety program to cut the nation's highway death toll.

The White House Conference on Highway Safety, which met in Washington, adopted an eight-point program of the 100-man labor committee.

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, who is chairman of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health, was co-chairman of the labor meeting.

"The overwhelming majority of those killed on the streets and highways each year are wage earners or members of their families," a labor committee resolution said. "To be successful, traffic safety programs must be carried into the homes and the workshops where the people spend most of their active lives."

THE COMMITTEE called the "failure" of some governors "to provide representation of labor as such on the delegations to this conference, as requested by the White House, a disservice to the purposes of this conference."

Other CIO members participating in the labor meeting, in addition to Quill, were Pres. John Green of the Railroad Workers, Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the Oil Workers, Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler of the Utility Workers, Vice Pres. Harry Block of the Electrical Workers, George Brown of the Woodworkers, Safety Dir. Frank Burke of the Steelworkers, Dir. Pat Greathouse of the Auto Workers Reg. 4, and Harry Read, committee secretary.

Stronger Michigan Safety Law Urged

A stronger safety code, a $1 hourly minimum wage and merger of all state agencies dealing with employers and workers is proposed by Michigan's Labor Commissioner John Reid in his annual report.

Reid said that Michigan's safety laws, adopted in 1909, are outdated. He added that the department's budget has been so cut that inspectors can visit less than a third of the state's 11,000 manufacturing plants each year.

CIO Issues New Guide On Better Union Leaflets

A HANDY loose-leaf notebook telling how to "Build the Union with Good Mimeographing" has just been issued by the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

Inside the 10 by 11½ in. stiff black covers is all the information you need to do a bang-up leaflet, shop paper or poster, including a number of cartoons that may be traced on a stencil.

The cartoons cover such subjects as collective bargaining, contracts, education, entertainment, strikes, wages and other topics you may want to illustrate. There is also a section giving suggestions for union officers on how to reach the rank and file.

Copies of this useful notebook may be obtained from the Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C. The price is $3 each.

INADEQUACIES of state workmen's compensation laws were denounced by the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health at a conference with Labor Sec. Mitchell. From left: Michael J. Quill, committee chairman; Mitchell; Harry Read, committee secretary, and Jerome Pollack, UAW social security consultant.

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

INSISTENCE by CIO delegates forced discussion of unemployment compensation problems last week during the 20th national conference on labor legislation in Washington.

A resolution urging higher and longer jobless benefits was brought before the conference, sponsored by the Labor Dept., only after CIO representatives called attention to the lack of mention of unemployment compensation laws on the carefully prepared conference agenda.

The conference adopted a resolution urging that the federal minimum wage be raised "as soon as possible" from 75c to $1.25 an hour. Legislative Rep. Paul Sifton of the CIO Auto Workers introduced the resolution.

AFL and a handful of independent union representatives joined with CIO in bringing the benefits issue to conference attention. Even after a number of speakers conceded that unemployment was the paramount problem in their states, some conference leaders attempted to tiptoe around the issue before referring the matter to committee for action.

SOME state labor commissioners and representatives of their divisions, who sounded like spokesmen for a bankers' lobby, tried briefly to block discussion by shunting the matter to a statistical panel.

Joint labor action, however, brought out an unexpectedly strong resolution calling for better federal standards of unemployment compensation benefits. The program of Pres. Eisenhower and Labor Sec. Mitchell won endorsement in its application to jobless pay.

The resolution recalled that unemployment compensation as first drafted paid from 60% to 66% of lost wages but that the rise in wages and living costs in the past dozen years made present payments woefully inadequate. The duration of such benefits in many states was termed unrealistic.

Present legislation was also criticized since 3.5 million workers are excluded from coverage because they work for small firms. Higher federal standards binding on the states were urged to pay not less than 66% of average weekly wages in the state for not less than 26 weeks.

LABOR GROUPS also supported a resolution condemning the bill of Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.) which would further reduce federal government participation in the federal-state program of unemployment compensation by making funds for state agencies available without review by Congress or the U. S. Labor Dept.

The Reed Bill, the resolution said, would fail to meet the emergency needs of distressed states because it provides for loans rather than for grants and because payments are based on other factors than the unemployment rate.

At a luncheon meeting for the CIO delegates, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, called upon the group to work towards better labor legislation in the state legislatures.

Buying Power Is Answer To Farm Crisis, Says Vic Reuther

AMERICA'S sliding farm income is not only a major domestic problem but an international problem as well, Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president, declared last week at the National Farm Institute in Des Moines, Ia.

Reuther said nothing could better serve the Communist cause than for America to suffer a farm recession, an uncontrolled burst of unemployment, and with the two added together, another disastrous depression.

Reuther, who until recently was CIO's European representative, said the opportunity for the American farmer to find a profitable export market for his product depends, exactly as in the case of the domestic market, on the economic state of the people in that market.

"Some people seem to believe," Reuther said, "that the way to sell more agricultural products to low and middle-income (American) families is through a reduction in farm prices that in turn would reduce many farmers to insolvency. This is not the CIO view.

"We have no sympathy for any program which threatens to undermine the well-being of the family-size farm while corporation-type agricultural enterprises grow larger and more prosperous.

"As CIO views the problem, it involves raising the buying power of millions of families without tearing down the living standards of others in the process," Reuther said.

Discussing the European situation, the CIO aide pointed out that the "needs of the people of Europe cannot be met by an enterprise system so tragically out of joint with modern times."

"SO LONG as poverty continues as the standard way of life for the people of Europe, you may not look to them to contribute anything worthwhile in the export market for your farm products," Reuther declared.

He said that Point Four programs are not enough to cope with "the pressing human and political crisis" in the world's under-developed countries.

New programs to help these people develop new resources were advocated by Reuther as "an investment in the fundamental groundwork that will make peace possible."

He said that World War II cost the U. S. $30 billion a month for each of its 44 months, or "almost as much in one month as we have spent in nine years of economic aid."

Labor's World—

ICFTU Considers Boycott Of Slave Labor Products

A SURVEY intended to determine a practical program for worldwide action by organized free labor against the purchase and distribution of goods produced by forced labor has been undertaken by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek has sent a detailed questionnaire to the ICFTU's 98 affiliated organizations, representing 54 million workers in 74 countries, asking which of several proposed methods they favor for an action program. The methods suggested include refusal to transport, unload, handle or process the products of slave labor, or organization of a buyers' boycott.

THE ICFTU headquarters staff in Brussels, Belgium, will analyze the answers and report to the Executive Board, which will decide the final policy.

A United Nations-Intl. Labor Organization report last year disclosed that forced labor "of substantial scope" was found in the countries of the Soviet bloc, in South Africa and in the Portuguese colonies.

Forced labor, it said, was being used in agriculture, forestry, fishing and mining in Soviet Russia; in agriculture, industry and mining in Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria; in mining in South Africa, and on sugar plantations in Angola, etc.

The UN-ILO investigation into slave labor resulted from ICFTU pressure on the UN. As a result of the probers' report, the UN General Asembly last December voted 40 to 5, with the Communist bloc opposed, to give priority consideration to the problem.

OEEC

The Organization for European Economic Cooperation, in its fifth annual report issued last week, declared that further expansion of production is necessary if Europe's living standards are to be improved and her economic position strengthened.

The increase in production between the summer of 1951 and the fall of 1952, the OEEC found, was not satisfactory.

Norway

The general council of the Norwegian Federation of Labor has voted to give affiliates a free hand in seeking wage increases during forthcoming negotiations, although pointing out that the economic situation does not justify a general raise. Last year, because of economic conditions, it urged affiliates not to demand boosts.

West Africa

James C. Bury, until recently secretary of the Greater Vancouver (B.C.) & Lower Mainland Labor Council of the Canadian Congress of Labor, has arrived in Nairobi, Kenya, West Africa, to serve as a representative of the ICFTU.

Bury is a member of the CIO Packinghouse Workers with a wide acquaintance among U. S. unionists.

New Soviet Drive Against Jews Feared

Concern that Communist Russia may intensify its anti-Semitic campaign was expressed last week by the American Jewish Committee.

The AJC cited a "consolidation" of power by Soviet leaders including Premier Malenkov, who organized the major anti-Jewish drive in the final months of the Stalin regime, and the return to a position of power of Semyon D. Ignatiev, minister of state security in Moscow when "the false accusations against the Jewish doctors were contrived as part of the Kremlin's anti-Semitic policy."

CHAIRMAN Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., of the National Mediation Board addressed the Conference on Collective Bargaining and Arbitration last week at Notre Dame Univ. Among speakers on Taft-Hartley panel was A. W. Brussell, counsel for CIO unions in Chicago.

Mansfield Asks Point 4 Inquiry

A "thorough, responsible and constructive" investigation of the Point 4 program to be sure it is "making friends, not enemies," for the U. S. was called for last week by Sen. Mansfield (D. Mont.).

COOPERATION between Jewish and Arab workers in Israel is growing through the ties of trade unionism fostered by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation. These are workers at the port of Jaffa.

Jews And Arabs Join In New Israel Publishing Venture

A JOINT Jewish-Arab publishing house has been established, despite mounting tensions, by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, and the Association of Arab Teachers.

Moshe Bitan, executive board member of Histadrut and its official representative in this country, said the publishing venture in Tel Aviv was one of many examples of cooperation between Jewish and Arab workers.

The Histadrut publishing house, Am Oved, will manage the organization which will print textbooks, selections from Arab literature and popular books on social questions. The need for textbooks in Arabic is great.

Bitan reported that Arab workers and farm laborers have joined labor bodies in over 60 cities and villages, with more than 16,000 signed up last year.

"Organization in the same trade union has brought closer understanding between Jewish and Arab workers," Bitan said, "and has proved a potent force in blocking the inroads of communism."

"THE DUAL ENEMIES of the Israel labor movement in its fight to bring the benefits of union organization to the Arab workers," Bitan noted, "have been the wealthy Arab overlords and the Communists.

"Fortunately the influence of the Arab Workers Congress, which combines diehard nationalism with Communist slogans, is now on the decline and is being suplanted by bona fide trade unionism."

'More Guns, Less Butter—' CIO Proposes Restudy Of New Look Foreign Policy

A CAREFUL re-examination of the "overwhelming shift" in U. S. foreign policy from economic to military aid was called for last week by the CIO Executive Committee in a statement on international affairs.

The need for a new look at the changed emphasis is particularly necessary, the committee held, insofar as the shift to "more guns and less butter" affects such western European countries as Italy and France.

"The experience of the U. S. in other parts of the world," the committee noted, "is a clear indication that communism cannot be stopped by arms alone."

The Executive Committee declared the continuing strength of communism in Italy cannot go unnoticed in the free world. In provincial voting and in union elections at the plant level—in "the absence of an aggressive democratic program of social reform"—the Reds are showing they can win "the allegiance of people who are hungry and desperate," it pointed out.

"The colossus of communism in Italy cannot be stopped," the committee said, "unless the people to whom it appeals can be offered something more than an ultimate promise of improvement in their way of life.

The Executive Committee vigorously defended the personnel of the U. S. Foreign Service from attacks by "the neo-isolationists and their hate-mongering fellow travellers."

The Foreign Service is made up of men and women who have done the yeoman work of American diplomacy—unheralded and often at tremendous personal sacrifice," the statement said.

"Yet in recent years, they have been subjected to vilification and abuse, their patriotism questioned, and their role as the nation's observers abroad placed in jeopardy. These attacks have shattered morale and resulted in a tendency toward conformity in reporting more suitable to a totalitarian civil service than to that of a democratic state.

"The administration must realize that the success of American foreign policy depends in large part upon the people who are asked to conduct it. The Foreign Service should be actively protected against these vicious attacks if it is to remain a strong instrumentality of the national interest abroad."

The statement declared the Big Four conference in Berlin "once again demonstrated the intransigence and unwillingness of the Soviet Union" to cooperate in resolving issues, and showed the Russians "determined, instead, to weaken and divide the free world."

It expressed CIO satisfaction that the U. S., British and French representatives "stood their ground united in the face of every effort by the Soviets, subtle or overt, to split them."

Satisfaction also was expressed at resumption of negotiations with Mexico for a new contract covering the importation of Mexican workers—negotiations that followed CIO protests against unilateral action by the U. S. government.

IUE Calls For Quick Action To Halt Growing Unemployment

STEPS TO HALT growing unemployment — which has zoomed as high as 70% in some plants in the radio, television and parts industry—were urged by three CIO Electrical Workers conference boards.

Some 250 delegates representing some 300,000 workers at General Electric, Westinghouse and radio, television and parts plants met in New York City.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey charged there is unemployment in the GE and Westhouse plants because the companies ignored "all warnings against overproduction and over-extended inventories."

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said the two firms are "fully to blame, along with the Eisenhower Administration's big business policies, which they helped to shape, for the current economic crisis."

THE BOARDS met to shape negotiating strategy. They also planned to send IUE-CIO delegations to Washington this week to call for congressional action on a program for full employment.

Unemployment is even greater in the radio, TV and parts industry than at the GE and Westinghouse plants.

"In a sample involving more than 50,000 workers," the radio, TV and parts industry board reported, "nearly 25% of the working force have been laid off. In some shops these lay-offs range up to 70% of the total number of workers.

"In many cases, additional lay-offs are expected before a turn for the better will take place."

The board's legislative and economic program called for several steps "to solve the problems which beset this industry."

The board urged increasing purchasing power by raising the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour by law and negotiations.

They also asked for boosting personal income tax exemption to $1000, social security pensions to $200 a month, and improved unemployment insurance, with additional amounts for dependents and longer duration of benefits.

Another plank called for "fairer distribution of government contracts" through widening the base of prime contract distribution and requiring that large prime contractors subcontract percentages of their work especially in areas of unemployment.

"We feel strongly that the new proposed tax program which would permit employers to write 66% of new plant and equipment in five years would be government sponsorship of the runaway plant movement," the board said.

THE BOARD also recommended that contracts provide that employers agree not to change the scene of their operations for at least three years, severance pay of at least one week's pay for each year's service when plants are closed, and transfer of employment rights, seniority and the same wages to new plants.

A drive was urged to organize into IUE-CIO plants that are unorganized, or that hold contracts with the independent United Electrical Workers and the AFL Electrical Workers.

CIO Councils In Action

THE TENNESSEE CIO-PAC will hold a statewide working conference without guest speakers Mar. 7 in Nashville. The meeting will consider PAC recommendations on candidates for Governor and the U. S. Senate.

- More and more city and state PAC organizations are getting ready for this year's elections. The Georgia CIO Council already has sent to its locals a leaflet on "How To Help Your Members To Register." "The first step in the battle of 1954 is that every CIO member and working person becomes a registered voter," said Jim Moore, Council vice-president and State PAC chairman.
- "The Voters Protective League of Alabama has been formed by the 'Ike voting' Dixiecrats," the Alabama CIO Council charged. It said that Roger Snyder, a Dixiecrat of long standing, filed incorporation papers for the league. The Council accused Snyder of forming the league to encourage candidates to run for the State and Jefferson County Democratic Committees who will work to knock out the party loyalty pledge.
- The Greater Bridgeport CIO Council called on Gov. Lodge to convene a special session of the Connecticut Legislature to deal with unemployment problems. The Council said the Legislature should improve the unemployment compensation law, enact a State public works program, raise the State minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, and revise taxes to provide relief for the unemployed and low and middle-income workers.

Harold Senior, administrative officer of the Connecticut CIO Council, pointed out that since the Bridgeport CIO Council called for the special session, "the unemployment situation in the State has become even worse" and cited rising unemployment benefit claims to prove his point.

- The Evansville and the Indiana CIO Councils cooperated in presenting at Evansville mock negotiations to show what difficulties a union encounters under the Taft-Hartley Act in a period of unemployment. It was the idea of Joe Kinch, education director of the State Council.

Jobless Get PAC 'Work'

The Columbus CIO Council has put laid-off CIO members to "work," checking on the registration of the more than 30,000 fellow members in the area. The work is being supervised by Gregory J. Stebbins, the Council's financial secretary-treasurer, and Leo Houston, a member of Timken Local 2173, CIO Steelworkers.

Action Delayed On Holderman

The Judiciary Committee of the New Jersey State Senate has unanimously voted to report favorably the nomination of Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council to be Commissioner of Labor and Industry in the cabinet of Gov. Robert H. Meyner.

The action was taken after a private hearing at which Holderman was questioned. The recommendation will not go up for confirmation until Mar. 22, when the Legislature returns from a recess.

North And South—

Georgia Layoffs Going Up; Michigan Benefits At Issue

THE NUMBER of jobless in Georgia is higher than at the peak in 1949 and greater than at any time since 1939.

Marion Williamson, employment security director for the state, said partial employment is running three to four times higher than any period since 1939. Benefit payments are running almost $2 million a week as against less than a million several months ago.

A Columbus, Ga., clergyman said from his pulpit that there are 7000 unemployed in that city.

A FLAT statement that the clergyman was a "liar" came from Ted Forbes, executive director of the Cotton Textile Manufacturers of Georgia, who doubles as chairman of the state's unemployment advisory commission. Williamson then announced officially that 4000 are drawing unemployment checks in Columbus.

The CIO Textile Workers conducted a survey that reveals unemployment and short work weeks are climbing in the South along with the North.

A roundup of TWUA-CIO regional sources "flatly refutes the claim of Northern employers that Southern mills are enjoying a boom and that the only thing that prevents them from sharing in it are union wages and fringe benefits."

The area around Gaston County, N. C., termed by TWUA "the lowest-paid textile center in the U. S." has non-union mills averaging only three to four days a week.

CITING the toll of the 220,000 unemployed in Michigan, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has asked the chairmen of both houses of the Legislature to hold public hearings before revising unemployment compensation laws.

In full-page ads in all Michigan daily papers, the CIO Auto Workers explained union opposition to a bill reported to have the inside track with the Republican-dominated Legislature.

Reuther asked for an opportunity to appear before the committees to explain the position of the Michigan CIO Council and the UAW-CIO.

"The level and duration of unemployment compensation benefits are not only a matter of vital concern to all Michigan workers but are also of the greatest importance to farmers, businessmen and professional men and women, all of whom are dependent for their incomes and markets on the purchasing power in the hands of workers," Reuther said.

GROWING unemployment and slumping farm prices were major discussion topics at the Northern Michigan CIO area conference.

The GOP's "cheap politics" were scored by Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan CIO Council.

Republican smears, Hopkins said, are a cover-up for bad voting records and a lack of policy during the unemployment crisis. He cited the all-wrong voting record of Rep. Thompson.

Philadelphia CIO Fights Hasty City Charter Change

THE PHILADELPHIA CIO Council has taken a vigorous stand against proposals to present 14 amendments of the city's Home Rule Charter to the voters at the May 18 primary.

"We deplore the 'blunderbuss' approach of the political leaders who are demanding immediate action on the 14 proposed amendments," Council Pres. Joseph T. Kelley told the Philadelphia City Council.

He said that the amendments would "substantially change the whole form of our city government and effect sweeping, fundamental changes in the basic law under which it operated."

Kelley pointed out that the CIO Council "from the outset has championed the Charter (adopted in 1952) as an effective instrument for securing good government for Philadelphia."

Kelley called on the City Council to adopt an ordinance establishing a bipartisan commitee of 11 members to make a detailed study of problems which have arisen under the Charter.

CIO Supports Red Cross Appeal

CIO SUPPORT for the 1954 Red Cross campaign was pledged by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The drive opens Mar. 1 for a month with a goal of $85 million and 30 million adult members.

Reuther's statement follows:

On behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I most sincerely endorse the annual fund appeal of the American Red Cross.

I am confident that CIO members throughout America will respond to the current campaign with the same generosity which has marked previous drives.

Organized labor well recognizes the tremendous demand on American Red Cross services and resources in these uneasy times. Red Cross assistance to men in our armed services must be continued and the victims of disaster and misfortune at home, like those who knew the fury of last summer's devastating tornadoes, must have the emergency aid that Red Cross alone is equipped to provide.

Through the CIO Community Services Committee, the men and women of CIO do much to promote such programs of aid and assistance. During the coming year, I am certain that our members will continue to cooperate with the Red Cross, thus helping insure the success of the Red Cross program.

You And Your Money—

Disability Benefits Give Edge To Lehman's Old Age Plan

THE DOLLARS-AND-CENTS differences between the Lehman-Dingell Bill and the Reed Bill, both of which would improve the social security system and increase benefits to the aged, have been spelled out by the CIO Executive Committee and a recent study by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The Lehman-Dingell Bill, which has the support of a large bloc of liberal senators, has been strongly endorsed by the CIO. The Reed Bill embodies the recommendations made to Congress by Pres. Eisenhower.

Both measures would bolster the present system and continue the "insurance" basis under which it has operated since enactment. The Lehman-Dingell Bill, however, would yield much broader improvements than the measure sponsored by the Republican Administration.

The CIO Executive Committee conceded the Administration's program for social security revision was "good as far as it goes" but reiterated support of the Lehman-Dingell Bill.

This bill, the Committee said, would come much closer to establishing adequate Old Age and Survivors' Insurance benefits and would add new programs.

Curtis Drive Fails

The aid of the CIO in beating off attacks on the nation's social security system during the past year was noted. An aroused public opinion, the Committee said has refused to be fooled by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce plan aimed at holding down benefits and shifting taxes from the wealthy.

"The biased effort of Congressman Curtis and his reactionary staff to discredit the established . . . program has backfired. And the Eisenhower Administration, instead of going along with such efforts, has recommended extending OASI. It has apparently been convinced also of the importance of safeguarding future benefit rights by protecting the trust fund," said the Committee.

A table prepared by the CIO department showing proposed increases in benefit levels under the two bills, posed against payments under the present law, appears below.

Key Difference On Disability

The major difference between the bills lies in their approach to two of the major problems that bedevil many workers during their years on the job—long-term disability and sickness or short-term disability.

The Lehman-Dingell Bill would provide protection equal to pension benefits to individuals and families when the wage-earner, before reaching the retirement age of 65, has been unable to work for more than six months. The Reed Bill, on the other hand, provides for no disability benefits, but merely freezes the rights of the disabled worker in Old Age and Survivors Insurance so they are not lost or cut.

For shorter spells— up to 26 weeks—during which the wage-earner is temporarily sick or disabled, the Lehman-Dingell Bill proposes a new program to replace part of the lost wages with payments up to $45 a week. The Administration-approved bill provides nothing.

96% Hokum

Federal old age insurance is "96% charity" and the recipients should give that much of it back to the government, Dr. Frank G. Dickinson, economist for the American Medical Association, blandly told the Health and Accident Underwriters Conference in Chicago.

"Rarely if ever," he proclaimed, "have people devised a better legal way for the old to rob the young."

Old Age Bills In Comparison

Here is an approximation of social security benefits payable to old-age pension recipients under the present law, the Lehman-Dingell Bill endorsed by the CIO, and the Reed Bill approved by Pres. Eisenhower. It was prepared by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Benefits are calculated on the basis of the worker's "average monthly wage," so no simple general statement on them is possible because total earnings in covered employment, length of time worked, and changes in earnings during the period covered must all be taken into consideration.

Under both pending bills, primary benefits of those now on the pension rolls would be increased by amounts ranging from $5 to $14 a month.

As at present, one-half is added for an aged widow. A younger widow with children under 18 gets 75% of the benefit shown for herself, plus 50% for each child up to the family maximum. The family maximum in turn is limited by the dollar amounts involved and by 80% of the average monthly wage.

	Present Law	Lehman-Dingell Bill	Reed Bill (favored by Eisenhower)
Method of figuring average monthly wage	Average of covered earnings in all years after 1937 or 1951, whichever is higher.	Average based on 10 best years with choice of dropping those before 1954.	Present method but 4 years with lowest earnings can be dropped.
Amount of earnings that can be credited in one year	$3600 (monthly average is $300)	$6000 (monthly average is $500)	$4200 (monthly average is $350)
Method of figuring primary benefit amount	55% of first $100 of average monthly wage, plus 15% of rest, which can't be more than $200.	55% of first $100 of average monthly wage, plus 20% of the rest up to $400. Add ½% for each year of coverage, and 2% for each year worked after 65.	55% of first $110 of average monthly wage, plus 20% of the rest up to $240.
Dollar Maximum (1 person)	$ 85	$135	$108.50
Dollar Maximum (family)	168.50	200	190
Minimum	25	35	30

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

THE BIG NEWS this month is the break in the price of the of the new synthetic fibers—Orlon, Dacron, some types of nylon, Acrilon and others. Many articles made of these fibers are already down in price or on the verge, even nylon carpeting, as this department predicted a year ago.

Buying Calendar

Some stores already offer Dacron shirts for as little as $5 compared to the $12 tag of last year when production was limited and manufacturers and retailers were exploiting the novelty of the new fabrics. Nylon dresses are being offered for as little as $8.50; dresses of orlon-and-nylon blends for $12.50. But unless the synthetics fit a particular need for you, as shown below, they still may not be as good value as cottons or rayons.

Many other important items have been reduced in recent weeks, but not the basic living expenses of food and rent which are still edging upward. Leading mills have just slashed prices of sheets 15-20%. Temporarily at least, sheets are now at the lowest price levels in years.

Some auto equipment has come down, and even tags on some cars. Even the cost of building a moderate-priced house has dropped a little. Men's denim work clothes are lower priced now, including dungarees, overalls and matched sets. So are the boys' denims.

This is a period when some prices are falling, some rising. You'll get most for your money in taking advantage of the opportunities, like the reduction on sheets, while remaining careful about investing in commodities still overpriced, and switching where possible to lower-cost equivalents, more especially in foods.

The big problem is still the high rents now being charged in many cities, and the higher cost of operating an owned home. The petroleum companies have reduced the price of gasoline but have raised fuel oil (twice this winter in some areas). Judging from past performances, we can expect that when warm weather arrives they will increase the price of gasoline and reduce fuel oil.

Here are specific buying opportunities and tips:

SYNTHETIC FIBER ARTICLES: For certain uses, articles of the new synthetic fibers can help you, especially at the new lower prices. Orlon especially has come down in price, now that the duPont company which owns Orlon, Dacron and nylon faces a little competition from increased production of Acrilon and Dynel, lower-priced fibers similar to Orlon for many purposes.

Don't buy synthetic simply because they have been so widely promoted. Their advantages are longer wear (Dacron is strongest of all), resistance to abrasion and easy launderability. They generally don't pick up dirt as readily as the older fibers (cotton, wool and rayon) and relinquish it easier when washed. However, these advantages still don't always justify their higher price for all purposes.

For example, you can buy a nylon dress for a little girl for $4, or a cotton one for $2. The nylon will be easier to iron and will probably wear longer. For school wear the nylon might have an advantage. But for occasional dress-up wear, the easier launderability would be less important, and the advantages of wear resistance even less so.

CARS: The drop in used-car prices (down 42% in 1953) may be followed by price cuts on some new models this summer. Last month Nash lowered several previously-announced 1954 list prices—the first manufacturer to do so. Nash eliminated the heater and radio from its Rambler series, then shaved prices up to $210, and also lowered the list on other models.

Prices of batteries have just been reduced due to lower costs of materials. If your battery is winter-heavy and no longer holds a full charge, this is an opportunity to replace it at less cost.

HOUSES: Realtors predict a drop of 5% in tags on used houses this year. The cost of building a new house also has declined. A house that cost $10,000 to build in 1950, and went up to $11,700 by last year, is now down to $11,500.

FOOD: Beef remains the best buy in meat, especially chuck and round steaks. Lamb and veal prices are down seasonably, but pork is costly.

Ship Unions Save Funds For U. S. Marine Hospitals

THE CONFERENCE of American Maritime Unions has won the first round in the battle to save the Marine Hospitals, but the fight is not over.

The conference was set up recently by 13 CIO, AFL and independent unions. One of its aims was to prevent the elimination of the hospitals, as proposed by Budget Dir. Dodge several months ago.

In an apparent retreat from its earlier position, the Eisenhower Administration presented a budget which called for only $80,000 less for the operation of the hospitals than last year's budget provided.

For more than 150 years the hospitals have been providing medical care for merchant seamen.

"This ($80,000 cut) would not have any great effect on the lowering of standards and facilities of the hospital and medical care for merchant seamen," said Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee.

Haddock urged maritime union members to write their Senators and Representatives to prevent further cuts in the hospital budget.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

A YEAR HAS PASSED since Allan Haywood was laid to rest, but no span of time can take from our hearts the gay and courageous spirit which he gave so generously.

Allan Haywood finally went home to sleep in the little coal-mining town of Taylorville, Ill. In the long years of service he gave to labor's cause, he rarely had time to rest with his family, to sit and talk and laugh with his neighbors. He had to "Roll the Union On."

In body and spirit, Allan Haywood was "Mr. CIO." The story of every union has at least one chapter in which he played some important role in bringing organization to the unorganized, in bringing hope where there had been despair, and in bringing a decent way of life where there had been shame and poverty.

With his great and good friend, Philip Murray, he shared a righteous determination to see justice done for the workers. These two great men shared a devotion to the sometimes painful struggle for freedom that was unexcelled by any of the patriots in our country's history. They accepted without question the long nights and bitter days of strife and sacrifice. Yet in neither of these men could you find a drop of bitterness.

LIKE PHILIP MURRAY, Allan Haywood gave freely of his life itself. Doctors had long since given up warning him; for though he knew that each effort, each trip, each speech, was shortening his days on earth, he moved with the sure vigor of a man who had overcome all fear. In his pain, he had the capacity to make us laugh. In his physical weariness, he had the ability to send us to work filled with courage and hope.

And now he sleeps at home.

Around his resting place there are coal miners whose life has become a bit easier out of his labors. There are steelworkers and auto workers and rubber workers and textile workers and electrical workers—yes, there are all the workers of this land who have something better in their lives, a little bit more of God's sunshine in their homes, proper clothing so their children can walk in simple pride to school, decent food and medical care, better conditions in their plants and mills and factories, because of the tremendous energies of Allan Haywood.

He was a proud man in standing against the forces of greed and selfishness, but he was a humble man in his deep understanding of the union and how much he, himself, depended on the sacrifices of the men and women who had gone before.

He once said: "Men and women have died for the union so you and I could enjoy it and perpetuate it . . . If Mother Jones could rise up from her grave in Illinois she would say to every one of you, 'Come on, boys and girls, don't desecrate our memory. Make your union strong, make it and build it to be unselfish, to give to others, because the nobility of CIO is helping those who need it most . . .'"

We needed Alan Haywood's help, and he gave it to us. He loved life so well that he was willing to give up his own so that we might enjoy it more abundantly. Now—we must "Roll the Union On!"

Hopes Climbing For Merger Of Unions In Oil Industry

MEMBERS of Temporary Ratifying Committee set up by Philadelphia oil union convention (seated from left): Doyess Boyett, Ponca City, Okla., secretary; J. T. Lambert, New Orleans; Daniel C. Carey, Springfield, Mass., vice chairman; O. A. Knight, Denver, committee chairman and CIO Oil Workers president; R. M. Gordon, Salt Lake City; (standing, from left) OWIU Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick and OWIU Vice Pres. B. J. Schafer, both of Denver; Maynard M. Sands, Independence, Mo., of Central States Petroleum Union; and Adam Sadowski, Bayonne, N. J.

HOPES ARE HIGH that one large union may be formed within the next few months through a merger of the many unions now operating in the oil and related industries.

Representatives of 31 unions representing 212,440 employes of oil, chemical and related industries met recently in Philadelphia to work out a plan for uniting into a single international industrial union to bargain with the rich and powerful oil industry.

The convention wrote a constitution to govern the union, to be called Oil and Chemical Workers Intl. Union, and adopted a resolution of procedure setting forth the processes by which merger will be brought about.

Both the constitution and the procedural resolution are subject to ratification by each individual union which desires to enter the merger. When a sufficient number have ratified, a convention will be called to actually consummate the merger and set the enlarged union in operation.

Handling the details of securing the necessary ratifications is a temporary ratifying committee of nine persons, three from the CIO Oil Workers and six from various independent oil unions. OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight is chairman of the committee, Daniel C. Carey of the New England Petroleum Labor Organization is vice chairman, and Doyess Boyett of the Independent Oil Workers of Oklahoma is secretary.

OWIU-CIO was the largest single union participating in the Philadelphia convention.

The Philadelphia convention was called by a group of 10 independent union leaders, headed by Maynard M. Sands of Independence, Mo., president of Central States Petroleum Union, second largest in the industry.

Sands opened the convention as temporary chairman and later was unanimously elected permanent chairman.

The merger proposal has caused much speculation as to whether the new union would affiliate with the CIO, with the AFL, or remain unaffiliated. It was agreed by all delegates that this question could not be decided in advance of the actual merger. It was agreed that the decision as to which of these three possible courses to take would be decided by the membership after the merger is brought about and the enlarged union is in actual operation.

Retail Union Gets $250,000 In Damage Suit Against Ward's

DAMAGES totaling $250,000 have been awarded to the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers in their suit against Montgomery, Ward & Co. by a Chicago court.

Judge Joseph B. Hermes ruled that the mail order house also must pay $77,000 in attorney's fees for its attempt to destroy the union during World War II. The quarter-million dollar award was actually made to the United Mail Order, Warehouse and Retail Employes, predecessor of RWDSU-CIO. Neither union now represents Montgomery Ward workers.

THE UNION became collective bargaining agent for the firm's employes in 1942 but the company refused to bargain or recognize the union. Sewell Avery, board chairman of Montgomery Ward, defied a War Labor Board order to bargain and was carried bodily from his office by soldiers, attracting national attention to the dispute.

The firm then signed a union contract but refused to renew it after 1943 and filed a $1 million suit against the union's paper. This suit was dismissed by the Illinois Supreme Court in 1948.

Judge Hermes ruled that the company's tactics helped reduce union membership from 4000 to 70 in 10 years.

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on the CBS television program "Man of the Week" Sunday, Mar. 14. The program is aired at 3:30 p.m. Eastern standard time.

Textile Skips Reopening

NORTHERN cotton and rayon mill employes represented by the CIO Textile Workers will forego wage demands because of the industry's "depressed economic conditions."

TWUA-CIO's cotton-rayon policy committee voted in Boston to pass up the wage question for its 90,000 members in 160 New England plants.

Victor J. Canzano, director of TWUA's cotton-rayon division, said that present earnings are not adequate to provide the buying power needed for a good economy. But, he said, the policy group was "well aware of the vast unemployment and depressed economic conditions of the industry."

IUE Wins At Holdout GE Service Shop

A HOLDOUT against many organizing drives for 40 years, a General Electric service shop in Philadelphia has voted for the CIO Electrical Workers.

The East Erie Ave. operation balloted IUE-CIO 139; no union 89. There were 238 eligible to vote. There was heavy company opposition to the campaign, with an open house and turkey meal paid for by GE.

Another IUE victory was chalked up at the Dage electric plant, Beech Grove, Ind., where the vote was 53 for the union, 29 against. The firm tried the captive audience technique almost on election eve but it backfired.

THE IUE picked off another shop held by the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers by winning a National Labor Relations Board election at the Keystone Watch Case Div. of the Riverside Metals Co., Riverside, N. J., by a tally of 190 to 2.

New company-paid health and insurance programs have been worked out by IUE and the Package Machinery Co. of East Longmeadow, Mass., paid for out of the 5c insurance item set up in recent negotiations.

Ike Urged By Gas, Coke To Nip Recession

A PLEA that the Administration adopt a policy for immediately increasing the purchasing power of the great mass of low-income consumers was wired to Pres. Eisenhower last week by the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

"Increasing unemployment in the plants in which we have collective bargaining contracts," the telegram said, "confirms economists' analyses of a deepening recession in the American economy."

The union suggested boosting purchasing power by increasing unemployment compensation benefits, raising the minimum wage, and setting the personal income tax exemption at $1000.

The wire was signed by Pres. Elwood D. Swisher, Vice Pres. Joe Joy, Sec.-Treas. Cecil Martin and members of the international executive board.

UAW Aircraft Conference Set

The fifth annual National Aircraft Conference of the CIO Auto Workers will be held Mar. 22-24 in the Statler Hotel, Washington.

GCEOC Gets Approval Of Panama Bill

A BILL increasing cash relief payments to retired non-citizen workers for the Panama Canal Zone government, pushed through Congress by the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, was signed last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

At the same time, the President vetoed another bill, supported by the GCEOC, which would have permitted guards in federal prisons to sue for unpaid wages earned by working Saturday afternoons between 1931 and 1943.

GCEOC-CIO Local 900 in Panama claims the legislation affecting retired Zone workers as a major milestone. Payments have been upped to $1.50 a month for each year of service with a maximum of $45 a month. A 1937 law set $1 a month as the standard with a $25 maximum. Approximately 4000 Zone employes now retired will get an additional $50,000 a month.

The GCEOC opposed the Administration's wage proposals submitted to the House post office and civil service committees and reaffirmed its support of an $800 pay increase for federal workers.

Splits With Ike—

Mitchell Upholds Effective FEPC

By MILTON PLUMB

DIFFERING WITH Pres. Eisenhower who has opposed enforceable fair practices legislation, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell last week came out strongly in favor of the Ives-Humphrey-Lehman Bill which carries full enforcement authority.

"Action by the federal government is needed if the problem (of discrimination in employment) is effectively to be met," Mitchell told the Senate Civil Rights subcommittee.

In a letter made public as hearings opened after a month's postponement, Mitchell declared flatly that he favors federal fair employment practices legislation.

SPECIFICALLY, he said that he backs "the provisions of S. 692," the bill introduced by Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) and 19 other senators. This measure would establish a federal commission to police against employment discrimination because of race, religion, national origin or ancestry.

Eisenhower has opposed enforceable federal legislation to solve job discrimination problems, saying he favors voluntary state and local action instead.

Mitchell wrote that he "particularly" agreed with bill's emphasis on the use of the processes of education, persuasion, conciliation and mediation but he added:

"Equality of opportunity regardless of race or color or creed is a moral and political right and the denial of such is repugnant to our ideals of freedom."

The fair employment commission created by the Ives bill would have power to issue cease and desist orders.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will testify before the subcommittee this week.

Last week, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Reps. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) and Powell (D. N.Y.) testified in favor of the bill. Humphrey, a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, warned that "discrimination is bad international relations" and is hurting the U. S. abroad.

POWELL said that the U. S. must show foreign peoples, particularly in the Far East, that "we are practicing here what we are preaching abroad."

Calling discrimination "economically unsound," Roosevelt charged that it cost the American people $30 billion a year in purchasing power. He said that although a national policy against discrimination in employment has been developing through efforts of the judicial and executive branches, Congress "has been reluctant to contribute."

Long Steel Strike Ends

A GENERAL 6c an hour wage increase has ended a 23-week strike by CIO Steelworkers against the Nicholson File Co. in three cities.

Dir. Martin J. Walsh of USA-CIO Dist. 1 announced the settlement terms. He said the wage raise is effective in the company's plants in Providence, R. I., Anderson, Ind., and Philadelphia, Pa. Workers at the Philadelphia plant won an additional 4c to wipe out geographical differentials.

Walsh noted that the Philadelphia employes had received wage gains of 29c to correct inequities since the Steelworkers won bargaining rights from UE in 1952.

'Forced Listening' On Transit Protested

THE CIO has urged the Federal Communications Commission to refuse to authorize "transit radio"—the beaming of FM broadcasts at transit riders who are forced to listen for the duration of their trip.

In a statement filed with FCC, the CIO vigorously opposed the authorization which the Commission proposed adopting.

The CIO's statement, filed by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, noted the CIO had two main interests in the matter:

1. As an organization "dedicated to the maintenance and extension of our democratic and civil liberties," the CIO has a "deep public interest in the prevention of transitcasting which we believe would seriously infringe democratic rights and civil liberties."

2. A substantial portion of CIO's six million workers "are required to use vehicles operated by public utilities as a means of getting to and from work" and they would "be subjected to involuntary listening to programs broadcast by transitcasting.

GOLDBERG'S statement said CIO believed authorization of transitcasting "raises constitutional questions of free speech under the First Amendment and the right to liberty under the Fifth Amendment."

Pointing out that few users of public transit vehicles have a choice of transportation, Goldberg charged that "the riding public in effect becomes a 'captive audience'."

The riding public must be protected against an infringement of its basic freedom "to decide to whom and to what he shall listen," Goldberg declared. He called this "just as sacred a right as his right to speak and communicate his ideas freely."

THE CIO, Goldberg continued, "is greatly concerned by the spread of the 'captive audience' in American life. We know first hand from our experiences with certain anti-union employers just how dangerous the 'captive audience' can be in our efforts to organize workers.

"Such employers require their employes to listen to propaganda against unionism on company time and property. Workers dare not voice objections to listening in face of the disciplinary powers vested in the employer."

CIO Ban On Segregation Is Reaffirmed

THE LONG-standing policy of the National CIO against segregated facilities in all CIO offices, union halls, etc., was restated last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In a letter to all CIO regional directors and industrial union councils, he recalled correspondence sent them in April 1950 by CIO General Council Arthur J. Goldberg with the expressed approval of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Goldberg's letter stated the CIO position that any statute, ordinance or lease "which requires CIO organizations or bodies to practice segregation in any form" is unenforceable.

REUTHER WROTE that the original statement "represents the continuing policy of the CIO and is as applicable today as it was at the time of its issuance."

"It continues to have the full support of all CIO officers," he said.

"Furthermore, this CIO position and policy against segregated facilities in CIO offices and halls applies with equal force and effect to all functions held under the auspices of CIO organizations or bodies.

"I am confident that I can depend upon all CIO regional directors and the officers of all CIO industrial union councils and committees to see to it that the CIO policy against segregation in CIO offices, halls and functions is enforced."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. House Labor Committee received draft of violently anti-labor Taft-Hartley amendments restoring the open shop. (See Page 2.)

2. "Fair share" tax cut bill presented to Congress, aiding workers and consumers by upping personal income tax exemptions. (See Page 3.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
"Go it alone" Mexican farm labor program (H. J. Res. 355)	Authorizes unilateral program of recruiting Mexican "slave" labor for big farms of Southwest, thereby depressing general farm income and throwing U. S. workers out of jobs.	Senate and House Agriculture Coms. have both approved bill; cleared by House Rules Com. for floor action.	Write or wire your Representative and Senators urging rejection of measure and later support for larger appropriations to curb illegal immigration.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. completed hearings. House Labor Com. now considering anti-labor bill.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	House Ways & Means Com. now drafting bill.	Urge your Representative to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 next year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Would enable U. S. to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Repreesntative urging favorable action.

House Group Votes To Scuttle NLRB

APPROVAL BY the House Labor Committee of a Taft-Hartley amendment which would strip the NLRB of its power to handle unfair labor practice charges and turn these cases over to the federal courts was condemned last week by CIO.

The committee voted 14 to 13 to approve the proposal while one pro-labor member was absent. The next day, a move to reconsider lost on a 14-14 tie vote.

Before the vote to reconsider was taken, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the committee urging it to reject the change. He called it "legislation by bias and whim" which would hurt unions and cause workers individual hardship and injustice.

Reuther said that the amendment would "clog our court system with a mountain of work at a time when court dockets are notoriously behind schedule" and "tie into great lengths of red tape the prompt settlement of wrongs and charges of unfair labor practices."

IN ADDITION, the provision permitting prosecution of such cases by private parties would let rich and powerful employers harass unions with expensive and long drawn-out litigation, the CIO warned.

Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) said that stripping the NLRB of this major function "pretty near puts them out of business." It would take from the board all powers except the handling of representation elections, he pointed out.

Under the committee proposal each federal attorney's office would investigate complaints of unfair labor practices and bring them before the federal courts for prosecution. Judges in these courts are generally regarded by labor attorneys as being more anti-labor than the NLRB.

THE PROPOSAL voted by the committee was not recommended by Pres. Eisenhower, and no hearing has been held on it.

Charging that the committee's action would "play directly into the hands of Communists and other foes of free democratic trade unionism in America," Reuther said that "it is inconceivable that members of the House Education and Labor Committee would permit themselves to play this sort of handmaiden role for the friends of the Kremlin."

CIO Plans Appeal On Strike Curb

STRIKES called under reopening sections of union contracts have, in effect, been banned by federal court order.

CIO plans to take the newest assault on labor to the U. S. Supreme Court, according to Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg.

The Eighth Circuit court of appeals, embracing many of the midwestern states, has held that employes have no right to reinstatement after a strike during the term of a contract. In the eyes of the National Labor Relations Board this would reduce reopening clauses to mere scraps of paper.

THE APPEALS court maintained its position despite the fact that the union, Local 3 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Des Moines, had given the 60-day strike notice which is required by Sec. 8(d) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

This decision virtually writes a no-strike clause into every union contract. It gives a literal interpretation to Sec. 8-(d)4's requirement that the union continue observing the contract "for a period of 60 days after such notice is given or until the expiration of the contract, whichever occurs later."

Although other language in Sec. 8(d) denies re-employment rights only to "any employee who engages in a strike in the 60-day period," the court feels that this provision should be read consistently with the section's other language. It therefore denies re-employment rights to anyone who strikes during the contract term.

The NLRB has always taken the position that a literal interpretation of Sec. 8(d) leads to the absurd result of preventing any contract modifications. The board read Sec. 8(d)4's phrase as applying only to the case where the 60-day notice period overlaps the contract's end.

'Act On Job Crisis, Don't Make T-H Worse,' IUE Group Tells Congress

By FRED ROSS

MORE THAN 225 delegates of the CIO Electrical Workers last week came to Washington with two things on their minds.

One was growing unemployment. The other was the Eisenhower Administration's plan to make the Taft-Hartley Act worse.

The delegates represented some 400,000 IUE-CIO members in 24 states. During a day-long session with their congressmen they received this advice from IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey:

"If congressmen see that the workers are concerned over this plan to weaken and break their unions (by making Taft-Hartley worse), many of them will vote against the Administration proposals.

"Let us remember that this is an election year and the entire House and one-third of the Senate face the voters this coming November."

CAREY, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said that the message to the congressmen should be "simple and direct. We believe that in a free society we need strong unions. The present proposals before Congress would weaken rather than strengthen labor organizations and in that way jeopardize the free and democratic way of life of this great nation."

Delegates were furnished with fact sheets on their congressmen, broken down by states. Congressmen were listed by three categories: Friendly to labor, unfriendly to labor, and position uncertain.

Carey suggested that the delegates "see as many of the unfriendly congressmen in your state as possible—as these are the people that we have to convince if we are to be successful."

"In particular, visit those unfriendly congressmen who come from districts where there is a significant labor vote," he emphasized.

IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett advised the delegates what to do about the other problem: growing unemployment.

He urged them to make known to their congressmen their desire to have the tax exemption boosted to $1000 by next year, and the minimum wage upped to at least $1.25 an hour.

He also called on the delegates to press for a public works program and enactment of a strong FEPC bill.

THREE Democratic members of the Senate Labor Committee—which is considering the Smith Bill to worsen the Taft-Hartley Act—addressed the delegates. They were Sens. Lehman (N. Y.), Neely (W. Va.) and Kennedy (Mass.).

They were critical of the bill, and they all deplored Senate confirmation of the appointment of Albert C. Beeson, California industrialist, to the National Labor Relations Board. Lehman feared that the appointment would tend to be destructive of the impartial character of the board.

Lehman said he certainly was against the Smith Bill proposal to have the government conduct a strike vote because "it would intrude in the internal administration of unions." He also said he was opposed to turning over some of the federal labor powers to the states because that would "nullify" the Taft-Hartley law.

The proposal, Lehman said, would, under the guise of protecting the health and welfare power of the states, grant them "the right to rewrite the Taft-Hartley Act."

What's Happening To Jobs—

Here in brief are some developments in the country's employment picture last week:

Nash-Kelvinator in Milwaukee and Kenosha, Wisc., laid off 1900 workers. General Motors plants in Baltimore, Md., cut back employment by 500 people, about 15% of the force. A 16% cut was effective a month ago.

Detroit auto plants recalled 9800 workers; 5300 of them at Plymouth and 4500 at Hudson.

At Denver, the Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp. slashed from 2000 to 2500 men from the payroll because of a lack of orders. This was the heaviest cut in the firm's history since the deepest depression days.

Steel production throughout the country was scheduled for the lowest rate of the year, according to American Iron & Steel Institute. Mills were set to run at 70.5% of capacity against 73.6% the week before.

Record Earnings Reported By 3 Big Electrical Firms

GENERAL Electric, Westinghouse and RCA, the giants of the electrical fields, rolled up record profits last year, their corporate statements revealed.

For GE, net earnings were $165.7 million on record sales of $3.1 billion. That represented a 9% increase over the $151.7 million profits of 1952. It equalled $5.75 a share against $5.26 a year ago.

Net earnings for Westinghouse rose 8% over a year ago, $74.3 million in 1953 compared with $68.5 mililon in 1952. Sales reached a record high of $1.5 billion and per-share earnings went up 30c to $4.53.

RCA's net profits were $35 million, equivalent to $2.27 a share. That compared with $32.3 million or $2.10 a share in the previous year. Sales zoomed 22% to a new high of $853 million.

On sales of $276.7 million last year, Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. showed a profit of $36.7 million. This compares with $260 million in sales and approximately the same profit margin in 1952.

The clothing firm of Hart, Schaffner & Marx earned $4.07 per share last year compared with $2.96 a share in 1952. Net sales were $68.8 million compared with $62.2 million a year ago and 1953 profits were $1.4 million.

CIO Urges 'Top Priority' For Civil Rights

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO RENEWED its long-time campaign for effective civil rights legislation last week as Pres. Walter P. Reuther told Senators it should have "top priority on the unfinished business list of democratic America."

Reuther, together with a number of other witnesses, called for congressional passage of S. 692, which was introduced by Sens. Ives (R. N.Y.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Lehman (D. N.Y.) and 16 other Senators from both parties.

It would provide a fair employment practices set-up with enforcement powers to help end discrimination practices throughout the nation's industry.

"Equal job opportunity is not a 'fringe problem', but a matter of human decency and simple justice. Our support for it springs from a sense of moral responsibility and the realization that denial of rights to any minority jeopardizes all our own rights," Reuther told the Senators.

The hearing took place in the Old Supreme Court room of the Capitol, where in 1862 Abraham Lincoln presented his Emancipation Proclamation that ended slavery in America.

Action Is Doubtful

Present were Sen. Ives, chairman of the Civil Rights Subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee, and Sen. Lehman.

Because the hearings had been postponed for several weeks, there is little likelihood of any real action on FEPC at this session. Caught between lack of initiative on the part of the Republican leadership and a filibuster threat from die-hard Dixiecrats, the bill has been gathering more than its share of dust in the Senate.

Reuther noted that the Senate's Rule 22, which gives the green light to filibuster actions in the upper branch of Congress, "is the graveyard of anti-discrimination legislation."

But, he said, the CIO is going to keep coming back to press for this legislation because it is "right."

Ives suggested that there are educational benefits resulting from the long drawn out legislative fight. Reuther agreed, but stressed that more than education is needed.

Lehman asked if Reuther agreed that it would be "mistake" to support a bill (S. 1.), introduced by conservative Sen. Dirksen (R. Ill.). That bill provides only for voluntary and educational action.

'Traffic Cop' Needed

The CIO president agreed entirely.

"Take a look at the traffic safety campaigns," Reuther told the Senators. "We have lots of education and propaganda—on radio and TV, in the papers, and in the schools.

"All that education is good. But you also need the cop on the motorcycle to give out a few tickets for reckless driving. Education plus the cop help to do the job."

The CIO president was one of several witnesses before the committee. Others included Andrew Biemiller of the AFL, who endorsed the "principles and purposes of the bill;" Mrs. Irene Gaines of the National Association of Colored Women, Inc., and Henry Kohn of Chicago, a member of the Illinois Commission on Human Relations.

Kohn argued that passage of a federal FEPC is needed to bolster local and state action. He recalled that Chicago passed a law in 1951 providing for employment of taxi drivers without discrimination.

"None of the feared consequences came to pass," he said. "Patrons raised no objections, the accident rate was normal, integration with other employes was readily accomplished."

The same warning that education is not enough to end discrimination was sounded by Lehman in later testimony. He said that education was insufficient because some state laws encourage discrimination.

HEAD THE LIST—In strong plea for effective civil rights, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther tells Senate Labor subcommittee FEPC should have "top priority." Reuther testified for both CIO and CIO Auto Workers. Photos show hearing scenes; with him at right is William Oliver, co-director with Reuther of the UAW Fair Practices Dept.

No Change

Pres. Eisenhower last week reiterated his opposition to a Fair Employment Practices law.

He told a news conference that he did not consider Labor Sec. Mitchell disloyal when he recently came out strongly in favor of the Ives-Humphrey-Lehman FEPC Bill.

Protest

Executive Sec. Walter White of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People saw "political motives" in the month-long postponement of Senate civil rights hearings from January.

"The fact is that there is a great deal of education going on," Lehman said, "but most of it, the most compelling and preponderant part of it, is in the direction completely opposite to that in which we must go."

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO supported the bill "because we have found that since passage of a similar law in New Jersey, none of the fears expressed by the foes of such legislation have come to pass. At the same time the New Jersey law has played a leading role in ensuring equal opportunity in employment to all."

Buttressing Reuther's oral testimony was a long document which he filed on behalf of the CIO, and the CIO Auto Workers.

'Filibuster Alley'

Millions of supporters of FEPC, he said, are disgusted "with the endless repetition of a solemn political Virginia Reel—wherein speeches are made, planks are inserted in platforms or left out of platforms and pencilled into campaign speeches, bills are introduced and re-introduced, hearings are postponed and finally held with the expenditure of great time, effort, money and the re-assembly of well-known facts about justice on the job front."

And at the end, Reuther continued, "all action is boxed in by the dead end of Filibuster Alley, while hope of FEPC is strangled by the anti-democratic action of a filibustering minority."

The CIO president reminded Senators that Vice Pres. Nixon—at the end of his winter round-the-world trip — had said that "every act of racial discrimination or prejudice in the United States hurts America as much as an espionage agent who turns over a weapon to a foreign enemy."

Worst Areas Untouched

Pres. Eisenhower, he recalled, had urged a fight for FEPC in the various states and cities, and had promised that he would spur state governors to action.

Supporters of FEPC, Reuther commented, "have made the circle trip from Washington to state capitals to city halls, and back again" — yet the "worst areas" are still left "untouched."

The remedy, he reiterated, is action for an effective federal FEPC.

Six Reasons For Action—

Rising Layoffs Make Need For FEPC More Acute

Civil rights legislation by Congress is urgently needed now for six major reasons, CIO Pres. Walter Reuther told Senators—because:

1. The spread between the incomes of white and non-white families is widening again.
2. Action of five states and 30 cities in writing FEPC laws since 1947 "has sharpened the contrasts, the double standards and the feeling of wrong and bitterness."
3. Unemployment is likely to increase, "making the need for FEPC more acute."
4. State and city efforts for civil rights laws have been largely defeated by combines in state legislatures, "local prejudice, false propaganda and fear of inter-state and inter-city competition."
5. Our loss of "moral standing and leadership" among the United Nations is growing as a result of continued discrimination in America.
6. White dominion "is dead or dying everywhere in the world—not only in Africa but also here in the U.S.A."

"FEPC is morally right; it is economically right. Both nationally and internationally, it is a political necessity," he said.

Big Employer Backs Effective FEP

A STRONG plea for a federal fair employment practices commission has been given by a Philadelphia clothing manufacturer whose nearly 3000 employes are members of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Samuel H. Daroff, head of H. Daroff & Sons, Inc., told the Senate Labor subcommittee that a policy of "employment on merit" works fine among his firm's employes.

Since 1952 he has been chairman of Pennsylvania's Commission on Industrial Relations. Based on that group's findings Daroff is convinced the majority would benefit from elimination of discriminatory practices as well as minority groups.

"AS A MANUFACTURER and businessman," Daroff said, "I can well understand why the average employer looks with distaste upon any form of legislation dealing with this important subject.

"However, we, as manufacturers, looked with equal distaste upon other forms of legislation including child labor laws, workmen's compensation laws and social security laws, in fact, any law which imposes duties and places restrictions is not palatable.

"Yet such laws are very often needed if for no other reason than to educate the large masses to the importance of maintaining standards of employment practices which would permit every individual an equal opportunity to do the kind of work which he is best able to perform."

Daroff said his firm's experience showed it paid to hire persons solely on the basis of merit and ability and without regard to their color, religion or nationality background.

"We have found that there never have been tensions among our workers by reason of their differences in color and religion; nor have we ever encountered any of the disastrous results sometimes anticipated by the opponents of such legislation," Daroff declared.

Reuther's Formula—

'Get Up Early, Stay Up Late To Defeat Commies'

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has a formula for defeating Communists.

"You've got to get up early and stay up late. You've got to be more tireless than they are," he told the Massachusetts Commission Investigating Communism in Boston.

"And you've got to prove what they're trying to prevent—that democracy works at all levels of human association."

Pres. J. William Belanger of the State CIO Council told the commission that "the CIO record dealing with communism should be very helpful."

Speaking later at Ford Hall Forum in Boston, Reuther declared the guaranteed annual wage is labor's answer to growing unemployment and the possibility of a recession or depression.

"We are ready to press for putting the wage earner on a yearly rather than an hourly wage," he said. "Executives are paid by the year, why shouldn't workers be?"

Opposition could be expected to the plan from management, Reuther predicted, but added that eventually they would make good use of it.

Question

What ever happened to the argument—which some more responsible Republicans used to voice in the GOP's happily-irresponsible days before the 1952 election—that the way to deal with McCarthyism was to elect Gen. Eisenhower as President?

Belated Words

Not one to get there fustest with the mostest in politics—despite his record in the military field—the President last week belatedly voiced his opinions on the latest activities of Sen. McCarthy.

Eisenhower got to the heart of what's wrong with McCarthyism when, in his lengthy statement at last week's press conference, he warned:

"In opposing communism, we are defeating ourselves if either by design or through carelessness we use methods which do not conform to the American sense of justice and fair play."

And the President's request for Congress to adopt "codes of fair leadership" in its necessary investigations echoes a proposal long supported by CIO (and spelled out by Sens. Morse and Lehman elsewhere on this page).

So far there are no signs that the President's belated and limited words will have any effect on the power-mad politics of McCarthy. And, neither, are there any real indications that the Republican National Committee led by Leonard Hall has any plan to shift from its wild cries of "treason" with which it hopes to ride to victory in November.

End The Numbers Game

And while the President is concerned about "justice and fairness" in the midst of preventing Communist subversion, he might—as head of the Republican party—stop the GOP's "numbers game" about alleged "Communists-in-government."

That GOP war-cry was punctured completely by Philip Young, Civil Service Commission chairman. Of 2427 "risks" of various types dropped from federal payrolls, he testified, only 383 involved some kind of "subversive" charge. Then he added this "does not mean there were 383 persons fired because they were Communists . . . or subversives."

In other words, the GOP has been engaged in a complete hoax—a fraud against the American people.

Top Priority

There's an issue the 83rd Congress is trying to skip, just as have all recent sessions, and that's the need for guaranteeing the right of all Americans to live and work in freedom and equality.

Congress is trying to dodge, but the economic situation, as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther testified, is giving more urgency to the need for effective fair practices legislation. The old rule of "last hired and first fired" still governs Negroes and workers from other minority groups. Civil rights, as Reuther said, "should have top priority on the unfinished-business list of democratic America."

Keep Up The Good Work

Last week the CIO Community Services Committee presented its annual Philip Murray Award—now a memorial to CIO's late president—to the Menninger Foundation, pioneers in mental health. The citation is well deserved. And it's another sign of the alert and able work of CIO-CSC.

In Other Words—

The Case For Congressional Fair Play

The recent dispute between Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and Army Sec. Stevens over the treatment of a witness has brought renewed demands for a set of rules to insure fair play for those called before congressional committees. A code of procedures was submitted by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) and supported by Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.). Excerpts from their statements follow:

By WAYNE L. MORSE

OUR CONSTITUTIONAL fathers recognized that when in waging a successful revolution against the British Crown they opposed inquisitions and star chamber proceedings.

The time has come to end, by action of the Congress, inquisitions and star chamber proceedings in congressional investigations. The people of the United States have the right to demand it, and, in my judgment, they are demanding it.

This body knows that I have held to the notion for quite some time that the rights of the American people are being abused in these investigations. Their rights are abused when witnesses called before Senate investigators are not guaranteed, as a matter of right, a mandatory code of procedure that shall govern the operation of the investigation.

I care not whether it be the McCarthy committee or any other committee. I think every American citizen is entitled to the same protection before any other committee that I say he must be given before the McCarthy committee.

The problem is becoming increasingly serious. The resolution I am introducing is a comprehensive Code of Fair Committee Procedure for the Congress.

The Right To Appeal

The resolution provides for the following basic rights for witnesses:

The right to counsel (and) representation by counsel does not mean that all the counsel can do is sit in the hearing room and remain quiet.

I would guarantee the right to have a stenographic record of testimony taken, the right to file a brief . . . and the right in the case of a contempt citation to appeal to the courts for a review of this question as to whether or not the procedural rights of the defendant were in any way violated.

By HERBERT H. LEHMAN

I THINK THE ANSWER to the present evils is not the withholding of appropriations from legally constituted investigatory committees, but rather the establishment of a mandatory fair set of committee rules and procedures.

Congress has the power to order investigations and to give committees certain rights which in its wisdom it sees fit to give them. Does not that more than ever indicate that the Congress of the U. S. has a solemn duty to make certain that investigations which are authorized are conducted in a fair manner?

I wish to present this (point) because it is very important. It is the necessity of having executive hearings really executive and secret. I have in mind, in connection with the McCarthy subcommittee, particularly the investigation of the so-called Fort Monmouth situation.

Closed Hearing Or Not?

These hearings were executive. They were held in the presence of one Senator. I believe that that Senator was the chairman of the subcommittee. They were executive hearings, secret hearings. The press, radio and television representatives, and the public were not permitted to attend those hearings. They were actually secret hearings.

Nevertheless, the chairman of the subcommittee came out of the hearings every day, met the press and gave to the press his account and version of what had transpired at the hearings, and of what the witnesses had said at the hearings. The newspapers carried the statements of the chairman of the subcommittee with great headlines, leading the public to believe that what was said by the chairman of the committee after a secret hearing actually represented the developments at the hearing.

I wish to emphasize my abhorrence of the tactics which have been followed along that line. Great damage has been done in many instances by bringing to the people of the country an entirely erroneous impression of what had actually transpired at the hearing.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THIS OBSERVER wrote a minority report several weeks ago, when a number of columnists and editorialists hailed Pres. Eisenhower's shower of messages to Congress as evidence that he was finally "on top of his job."

He wasn't on top of his job then, and he isn't now, because he either doesn't know how or doesn't dare to tackle Sen. McCarthy and assert his own party and executive leadership.

His program is going to pot on Capitol Hill because, observing his hesitations and fumblings, a huge group of Republican senators and representatives are getting the habit of defying him.

Eisenhower Vs. The GOP

His own Senate floor leader, Knowland of California, deserted him to vote for the proposed George constitutional amendment that would have radically weakened the Chief Executive's traditional direction of foreign policy.

His Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, who gave a brilliant performance at the Berlin conference, was shockingly heckled by Senate Republicans for agreeing to meet the Chinese Reds in Geneva to talk about a Korean and Indo-Chinese settlement.

A Record Of Defiance

The House Labor Committee approved a Taft-Hartley amendment to destroy the National Labor Relations Board, which Eisenhower did not ask for and, on the record of what he has said about "union-busting," he would have to veto. Republican members showed no awe at the prospect.

The President is being defied on excess taxes by Republicans on the House Ways and Means Committee. He hasn't dared make specific recommendations for amending the McCarran-Walter Immigration Law, although he said last year it was faulty.

He exerts no influence with the Republican Senate and House Campaign Committees, who insist in open contempt of his expressed wishes, that the phoney "Communists in government" issue must play a "big part" in the congressional campaign. The professionals on Capitol Hill want to use "both Ike and Joe" as campaign talking points, and they treat Eisenhower's mild protests as the naive chatter of a figurehead President.

All of this is not happenstance. It does not all arise from the struggle with McCarthy. The President's weakness in handling that central struggle merely symbolizes what is wrong.

Eisenhower can't seem to grasp the fact that McCarthy isn't fundamentally chasing Communists or trying to "expose" Executive Dept. "coddlers of Communists." Joe is bidding for domination of the Republican party.

The White House, by careful leaks for a solid week, built anticipation about the "importance" of the President's first news conference following the McCarthy-Stevens-Gen. Zwicker-Maj. Peress fight. Eisenhower then read such a milk-and-water statement about "fair play" and the desirability for "courtesy" from Congress to Executive Dept. officials, civilian and military, that reporters went away bewildered.

Too Many Agree With McCarthy

One syndicated columnist stood outside on Pennsylvania Ave. literally shouting, "but it doesn't say anything. What does it mean?"

The instantaneous reply by McCarthy was so savage and violent, so brutal in its open mockery of the President that it wouldn't have made sense except that McCarthy's real purpose—to dominate the GOP—is understood by practically everyone here except, apparently, Eisenhower.

What political innocence lets the President solemnly insist that he will never "talk personalities," that he is sure Congress will reflect the people's desire for "fair play," that McCarthy will be curbed by rules changes instituted by Bill Knowland and his Senate peers?

Too many Republican senators agree with McCarthy. Too many others are afraid of him. Too many Democrats fear they will get licked—as Tydings and Benton were licked—if McCarthy floods their states with Texas oil money and handpicked candidates. Too many of both groups think McCarthy has the President's number.

Eisenhower plays into McCarthy's hands by letting himself be used as the transmission belt for fake GOP claim that "1456" or "2200" security risks have been fired. He plays into McCarthy's hands by apologizing for the Army's handling of the Peress case.

A Course For The President

The way for the President to handle McCarthy is to get on radio and television and denounce him by name as a shameless political racketeer, a cancer unfortunately nourished in the Republican body that has to be cut away by clean surgery.

The way to handle McCarthy's abuse of the Executive Dept. is to issue a White House order saying that no one except a department or agency head shall be allowed to answer a McCarthy summons—to do exactly what the pathetic Army Sec. Stevens said he would do before he was brainwashed and terrorized into abject surrender.

If Eisenhower will not smash McCarthy, his own leadership is dead, his foreign policy is dead, his Administration will be dead, and Sen. Joe will be de facto boss of the pallid remains.

The Capitol Hill Scene—

There's A New Tea Party Brewing Over GOP 'Stamp Tax' Move

By MILTON PLUMB

A STAMP TAX to most Americans is a hated concept. The last time it happened—in 1765—our forefathers simply refused to pay. Patrick Henry shouted, "If this be treason, make the most of it," and other Americans later held a famous Tea Party in Boston.

Parliament repealed the Stamp Tax within a year, but all historians agree it was one of the causes of the American Revolution.

Today, however, another "stamp tax" is well on its way to becoming law. The proposal has full Administration backing and has already been voted out of the House Post Office Committee.

This has happened while another tax-writing committee has been drafting legislation to carry out the Administration's aim of giving tax cuts of billions to stockholders and corporations. The bill approved by the Post Office group would make all of us pick up a big part of the tab.

It would do this by increasing the rates per ounce for first class mail from 3c to 4c and for air mail from 6c to 7c. Both of these classes of mail are already making over $100 million a year in profits for the government.

The Cost Of Press Subsidy

Since the increase is not needed to cover a deficit in the kinds of mail to which it would apply, its purpose is only to bring added revenue. It is clearly a form of stamp tax—one which bears heaviest on consumers generally rather than on those best able to pay.

Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield and the Administration are seeking the increase on grounds that it is needed to balance the Post Office budget. There will be a deficit there this year of $430 million.

Actually, all of this deficit is caused by the low rates charged for second and third class mail. This is a subsidy the Post Office pays to publishers of magazines and newspapers, direct mail advertisers and others.

The loss on second class mail, which consists of magazines and newspapers, was $240 million last year. The bill would increase the rates for this class of mail slightly, but the publishers would still get an annual subsidy of more than $200 million.

Most of this goes to the great national circulation magazines. Taxpayers are contributing, for example, about $8 million a year to Life magazine, $6 million to Saturday Evening Post, $3.5 million to Readers Digest, $1.7 million to the Chicago Tribune.

Opposition

Seven of the 11 Democrats on the House Post Office Committee last week joined one Republican in a minority report blasting the Administration's proposed hike in postal rates as an "unconscionable burden . . . contrary to the public interest." They called it a "radical departure from the concept of public service which is the keystone of our postal establishment."

Third class mail—advertising circulars and other printed matter and merchandise weighing less than eight ounces—added $192 million to the postal deficit last year. This subsidy to the advertising and direct mail business would be cut only by about $20 million under the bill.

On the other hand, the increase on first class and air mail of about $174 million will boost the profit being made on these two classes to around $328 million annually. Second and third class mail, however, would still be operating at a $394 million annual loss.

Thus, first class users are being asked to pay a "stamp tax" solely to subsidize the other mail users. It is a direct consumers' sales tax on postage. It hits the lowest income groups the hardest.

The well-organized and influential business interests which are the chief users of second and third class mail have blocked major increases in these classes.

They justify this "free ride" by using an argument that applies properly only to fraternal, religious and educational publications which need such subsidies to survive. The subsidy, they say, provides a service to all the nation.

Business Doesn't Lose

Congress long ago accepted the concept that the post office is a service in the national interest. Thus, until recently, the government attempted to provide mail service to outlying communities on a basis approximately equal to that provided in cities.

Under the Eisenhower Administration, however, long-established post offices in rural communities have been, and are being, eliminated on grounds that receipts do not equal their operating costs.

The GOP theory that the post office is a business primarily has been used to eliminate public services—which don't pay for themselves.

It hasn't, however, as the pending bill indicates, led the GOP to cut down service subsidies to business.

Book Review—

Myths On Immigration Punctured

FIVE MYTHS which "account for some of our undemocratic immigration policies" are exploded in a new pamphlet by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) which makes an eloquent plea for improved legislation.

The first of the myths, the Senator says, is that America would be flooded with immigrants were it not for rigid laws. He points out that the highest average annual immigration, in ratio to our total population, was only slightly more than 1% in the peak decade of 1840 to 1850.

Humphrey's answer to the myth that immigration threatens our living standards is that during the great period of immigration, from 1870 to 1930, while our population increased about three times, the number of jobs increased about four times.

He cites the authoritative anthropologists, Margaret Mead and Ralph L. Beals and the American Anthropological Association, for scientific evidence which "indicates that all peoples are inherently capable of acquiring or adapting to our civilization." This is in answer to the myth that "certain races or nationalities are undesirable."

Probably one of the oldest myths, Humphrey says, is that "there isn't room for many more people here." He quotes Rep. Harrison Gray Otis of Massachusetts as saying in 1797: "When this country was new it might have been a good policy to admit all. But it is so no longer."

Humphrey says that actually there is plenty of room in America and cites a population of 51 persons per square mile as compared with 480 in Great Britain and 807 in Belgium to prove it.

The bulk of the pamphlet deals with inequities in the nation's present immigration law, the McCarran-Walter Act, and calls for passage of new legislation based on recommendations of the President's Commission on Immigration which was introduced in the first session of the 83rd Congress.

"It is essential," Humphrey says, "that so fundamental and significant an area of American life and law as immigration be revised so that bigotry may give way to knowledge, and expediency to the justice of humanitarianism." E. L.

World Metal Unions Call For International Fight For Jobs

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A CALL for action by free trade unions, governments and employers to "counterattack the growing threat of depression" in much of the free world was sounded last week by the central committee of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation at a meeting in Washington.

The meeting drew about 75 members and technicians from 13 nations, some of them distinguished in the public life of their own countries.

The sessions were preceded by a meeting of the IMF's economic conference, which heard reports indicating that unemployment is growing in virtually all industrialized nations of the West except the Scandinavian countries and Great Britain.

"We hold that the proper goals of social, political and economic policy are to guarantee full employment, to insure steady progress toward higher living standards, and security and dignity to all," the call to action declared.

"PROGRESS toward these goals is the only basis upon which free democratic institutions can be safeguarded effectively against the spread of totalitarian tyranny.

"Full employment can only be built on a solid foundation of adequate consumer purchasing power—of steadily rising living standards and greater economic security for the lower income groups. Rising unemployment in the world today is the storm signal that attests to the lack of sufficient consumer purchasing power in our economy."

The manifesto declared that the needs of the people, internal threats to economic stability and the external threat of tyranny "all challenge management and government to broaden their vision, to accept their responsibility and to move vigorously" toward economic stability and expansion, full employment and human progress.

"THE REAL DANGER of depression does not rise out of objective economic factors," it warned.

"It springs from the complacency and lack of vision of those in management and government who oppose prompt and adequate corrective measures. Complacency and inaction serve the interest of Communist propaganda.

"Indifference and defeatism, in the face of the threat of depression and mass unemployment, would weaken the free world and strengthen the Kremlin in the cold war. Mass unemployment and economic instability among the free nations can create the economic and moral climate in which Soviet imperialism might expand its acts of aggression and thus greatly increase the danger of a third world war."

THE IMF URGED its affiliates and other free unions to accelerate organizing campaigns and to demand bargaining concessions in the form of higher wages, guaranteed annual wage plans, social insurance benefits and a greater share in the wealth created by increased productivity.

It also urged them to enlist the support of other groups behind an action program to combat unemployment "and secure for free men and women everywhere their legitimate hopes for bread, peace and freedom."

The manifesto asked employers "to make a clean break with the prejudices and dogmatisms of the past and to awaken to an awareness of the indivisibility of freedom and human progress."

It urged them to broaden markets by steps to boost consumption, to bargain with unions in good faith, to support government policies aimed at economic stability, and to reject a policy of maximum short term profits in favor of a "more socially responsible one."

Governments were urged to enact legislation stimulating economic activity and increasing consumer purchasing power.

The central committee—the equivalent of an executive board—also voted unanimously to continue aid to French and Italian affiliates in their grim battles to raise worker living standards and win workers away from communism.

The action was based on reports showing that the free unions have been carrying the fight to the factory gates in key industrial areas of the two countries. One of the results is that the Communist-dominated unions, despite their larger size, are no longer able to call the workers on strike as they please.

THE COMMITTEE also passed a resolution protesting anti-union terrorism behind the Iron Curtain, and sending fraternal greetings and encouragement to oppressed workers there. In addition, it heard numerous reports, and discussed a wide range of administrative matters. The 1953 world congress was set for the second week of November in Switzerland.

Victor G. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers presided at central committee meetings, and Pres. A. J. Hayes of the AFL Machinists at the economic conference sessions. Other UAW representatives were Pres. Walter P. Reuther, UAW Research Dir. Nate Weinberg; Jack Conway, aide to Walter Reuther, and Don Montgomery, head of the UAW Washington office.

The Steelworkers were represented by Pres. David J. McDonald, Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, Intl. Rep. Elmer Cope and Thomas Murray, assistant to Abel. Andrew J. Pettis, national legislative representative, was the Shipbuilders' delegate.

Oldtimer

The Intl. Metalworkers Federation, one of the oldest and strongest of the worldwide trade secretariats, represents more than seven million organized workers in every phase of the metal industries. Its headquarters are in Berne, Switzerland, and it is associated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Its CIO affiliates are the Steelworkers, Auto Workers and Shipbuilders. Delegates from 13 nations attended the meetings of the IMF economic conference and central committee in Washington, for which U. S. member-unions were hosts.

Guests

Most of the delegates to the Intl. Metalworkers Federation meetings in Washington concluded their visit to the U. S. with a flight to Cleveland and Detroit, where they inspected auto factories, and thence to New York as guests of the CIO Auto Workers. They also visited UAW national headquarters.

CARE Urges Surplus Food Grants Abroad

A SOLUTION to the troublesome problem of surplus foods in the United States which would feed some of the hungry in other parts of the world and build American prestige abroad has been advanced by CARE, the non-profit, nonsectarian relief organization.

Basically, the plan entails legislation which would permit the federal government to enlist the aid of private relief organizations in getting the more than $6 billion worth of surplus food in this country into the hands of hungry people whose poverty keeps them so close to the starvation level that death is never far off.

One result, CARE maintained, would be to create eventual markets for U. S. farmers.

The proposal to use surplus U. S. food to feed the hungry as a matter of national policy is essentially that which the CIO frequently has urged in the past.

"CARE HAS BEEN increasingly concerned over the dual problem of the world's hungry people and the mounting store of farm surpluses in the U. S.," the relief organization said.

"We feel that it is wrong from a humanitarian and spiritual standpoint not to use this food to help the millions throughout the world who live at, or near, starvation levels. Moreover, we are sure it is unwise from the standpoint of national policy.

"In the current struggle to bulwark the forces of democracy, our most potent weapon is man's will to defend his freedom. Empty stomachs are fertile mass breeding grounds for communism. There is little use in spending billions on military pacts if the people of the countries with which we seek to ally ourselves feel they have little in their own lives worth defending."

SEVERAL BASIC considerations influence the use of American surpluses to ease world hunger, CARE said. One is that the program must not interfere with normal U. S. export markets for food or depress agricultural prices in the recipient nation.

Another is the possibility of selling some of the surpluses for local currency which could be used to develop self-help projects.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
One World—Two Problems

On the basis of its own experience, CARE claimed the first consideration can be met "by channelling surpluses to refugees and other blocks of depressed persons" who consume such a meagre share of local or imported agricultural products that they are "virtually isolated from regular commercial markets."

The "real obstacle," it said, rises from the inability of dollar-short nations to handle costs within the U. S.

AN "IMAGINATIVE private agency approach," it held, can cut costs and yield the U. S. maximum benefits. CARE suggested that:

1. The House pass the Senate-approved Schoeppel Bill, authorizing a $500 million appropriation to buy surplus farm products and sell them for non-dollar currency independent of military programs, with an amendment permitting the President to use private agencies like CARE.

2. Congress extend the Famine Relief Act of 1953, increasing its authorization for transfers of food products from $100 million to $500 million, and amending it to utilize the services of private, non-profit agencies.

3. Congress amend the Mutual Security Act by authorizing appropriation of up to $50 million to pay ocean freight, processing and administrative charges on voluntary relief shipments of surplus food made available under the Agricultural Act of 1949.

CSC Murray Award—

CIO Praised For Mental Health Work

"A BETTER COMMUNITY FOR ALL."—That goal of the CIO Community Services Committee was on the banner at the annual Philip Murray Award dinner last week at Pittsburgh's Hotel Schenley (photo at left). CIO-CSC presented the 1953 Murray award and a contribution of $5000 to Dr. William C. Menninger, for work of Menninger Foundation in psychiatric care. Participants (from left, in the photo at right) were: CIO-CSC Dir. Leo Perlis, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, Dr. Menninger, and CIO-CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne, also president of the Communications Workers. Reuther urged drive for more adequate mental health programs.

By ED LASHMAN

THE GOALS and achievements of CIO over the years were hailed as major contributions to mental health by Dr. William C. Menninger in his address accepting the fifth annual Philip Murray Award of the CIO Community Services Committee.

Menninger also paid tribute to "CIO's courageous fight against discrimination which is one of the curses of American life."

He spoke in accepting a bronze plaque and a $5000 check for the Menninger Foundation of Topeka, Kans., on behalf of himself, his brother, Dr. Karl A. Menninger and their late father, Dr. C. F. Menninger.

Not A Skeleton

Menninger gave a special thanks to the CIO and CSC for having given recognition to the field of psychiatry.

"Too many people still regard mental illness in the family as a skeleton in the closet," he said.

"By taking cognizance of the problem of mental health through this public ceremony, you are doing much to help people lose their sense of shame about mental illness and take advantage of the skills that can help them lead happier lives."

More than 500 persons crowded the ballroom of the Schenley Hotel in Pittsburgh, to applaud as CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne, who is also president of the Communications Workers, made the presentation for "outstanding leadership" in the field of mental health.

"The Menninger Foundation is located in Topeka, Kans.," Beirne said, "but its beneficiary is the world."

The Menninger Clinic, conceived with the idea of collecting many specialists in the psychiatric field in one place, was later broadened into the Menninger Foundation for the purpose of research, education, treatment and prevention in psychiatric and related fields.

Beirne noted that CIO-CSC had not only given public recognition and support to individuals and organizations working to help men and women develop "sound minds in sound bodies," but had also helped create a program of "citizen participation and self-determination that is truly a rich chapter in the life of the American labor movement."

McDonald's Proposals

CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald warned that a "materialistic concept of man must lead to destruction of individual freedom," but emphasized the importance of economic security to mental and emotional well-being.

The key to such security in "a period of declining economic activity" he indicated is for business and industry to face up to the challenge of increasing consumer purchasing power when government spending decreases.

McDonald outlined a four-point program for an "economy of abundance": wage increases and price reductions to match increased productivity; increasing consumer purchasing power by $5 billion through increasing income personal exemptions to $800; a guaranteed annual wage "which is not a dole but a true 'right-to-work' plan;" and adequate medical and hospital care for all citizens plus "freedom from want for those whose years of work have entitled them to enjoy the fruits of their labor."

The problem of "tremendous progress in the physical sciences contrasted with a failure to make comparable progress in the human and social sciences," was singled out by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

"Mental health can't be achieved," Reuther said, "in a world of poverty and hunger and ignorance. It is possible only if we get away from shaping our communities in the image of our fears and hatreds and create them instead in the image of our hopes and aspirations.

"The H-bomb has created a great moral vacuum of fear and insecurity. The problem and the challenge we face is to fill that vacuum with positive human values lest it be filled with the negative values of fear and hatred and bigotry."

Pointing out that emotional problems go hand in hand with economic problems, Reuther cited the fact that in the past three months the crime rate in Detroit has increased 56% "and it has paralleled the increase in unemployment."

A Human Crusade

He called for a "great human crusade dedicated to moral values, to human values and to human dignity which will conquer poverty and disease and all mankind's ancient enemies."

"We of the CIO," Reuther said, "want to help in the fight against mental illness and broaden our opportunities of serving not only our own members but the whole community of which we are a part so that together we can build a brave new world, a better tomorrow fashioned in the image of peace, human freedom, human dignity, social justice and human brotherhood."

Top Problem

"Mental illness is the nation's number one health problem," Dr. William C. Menninger told guests at the 5th annual CIO-CSC dinner. And then he cited the statistics to back up his point.

Mental ills account for: one-third the cost of all U. S. sickness, $1.2 billion in tax funds to support mental hospitals, 51% of all U. S. hospital beds, a $1.75 billion annual wage loss. Yet, he pointed out, there are only 7000 doctors working in a field affecting 700,000 people seriously enough to require hospitalization.

Definition

When Dr. William C. Menninger sought to define mental health in his address at the CIO Community Services Committee dinner, he turned to a quotation from CIO's late Pres. Philip Murray.

Menninger told the group Murray might have been giving a definition of mental health when he described CIO-CSC as an organization of "high principles whose ultimate purpose is the betterment of society by providing a little of the sunshine God in His infinite wisdom decreed people should have."

CSC Units Urged To Draft Aid For Laid-Off Workers

CIO COMMUNITY services committees across the country are mobilizing to meet the challenge of growing unemployment among CIO members.

Few things will weld a man to his union like the knowledge that it is trying to get him work and meet his basic and family needs, CIO-CSC Rep. John Carney told a recent CIO regional councils conference.

Carney outlined a course of action for CIO-CSC in areas where heavy unemployment is causing problems.

FIRST STEP advocated by Carney was a small meeting of community services committees of the CIO council and local unions in the area. The extent of unemployment and measurements in terms of men and length of layoffs should be learned.

"There is no need to study the problem to death," Carney added. "There is a need for the CSC to get an over-all view of the situation. Action must be based on the facts and not on rumor or hearsay."

The conclusions dictate the next steps. If the situation seems critical or even tends towards that direction, CSC should go into action. Union membership should be contacted by every media with information on the CSC program.

UNION counsellors should be available at stated times to discuss problems with unemployed members. Unemployment compensation claims must be expedited and protected. In some cases, Carney reported, CSC has helped bring officials of the unemployment claims office to the union hall to help process claims.

Where local administrative practices are out of line, CSC should collect the facts, build a case on specific instances and bring every pressure to prevent abuses and irregular action. As a general practice, all disallowed claims should be appealed.

Where there are delays or checks are disallowed, Carney said that supplementary help might be needed. Helping unemployed members get food, shelter, clothing and medical care is the job of CSC.

PLAQUE and $5000 award check of the Community Services Committee is accepted by Dr. William C. Menninger (left) from CSC Chairman Joseph A. Beirne as both smile approval.

CIO Case Upheld As NLRB Sets New Craft Election Rules

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board in an important decision last week adopted, at least in part, CIO's position that craft groups can not be carved indiscriminately from existing bargaining units.

CIO spokesmen generally were pleased with the more rigid standards established by the Board for splintering away small groups. Two new rules were established governing units of craft employes and certain departmental units of employes who traditionally have had separate bargaining.

The decision was handed down as the result of a dispute between several AFL unions over representation of either all production and maintenance workers or of separate craft segments of the work force at American Potash & Chemical Co., Trona, Calif. The CIO, industry and management groups were invited by the Board to submit briefs last October for guidance in the decision.

The 3-1 ruling by the NLRB will now automatically permit craft groups in an industry to be separated from the main bargaining unit where a true craft group wants it and the union is one that traditionally represents that craft.

The Board also will give separate representation to "certain departmental groups which by tradition and practice have acquired craft-like characteristics."

Four industries are excluded from the ruling. These are basic steel, aluminum, logging and wet milling (part of the paper making industry) which have been immune from craft raiding since the National Tube doctrine was proclaimed in 1948.

CIO had asked for extension of the National Tube policy which, briefly, denies craft severance in integrated industries where there is a history of plantwide or industrywide bargaining, and where there is community of interest between all workers in a plant.

The Board has been permitting some craft severance but the American Potash decision removes all doubt as to where fragmentizing will be allowed.

The majority decision said "we are cognizant of the disruptive economic and social conditions that can and sometimes do occur as the result of craft existence in industrial plants, as where, for example, a small cohesive craft group, by striking, closes down a large industrial plant employing thousands of workers."

The decision directed elections at the Trona plant, granting petitions of the AFL Electricians to carve out a unit and the AFL Operating Engineers to sever a group in the power division providing they win in balloting. The AFL Machinists were denied three separate units.

Bricker's Curb On President Is Rejected

THE CONSTITUTIONAL powers of the President to conduct the nation's foreign affairs was reaffirmed in a series of close Senate votes in which the Bricker Amendment and other moves to curb the treaty-making powers of the White House were defeated.

The votes of Democratic members of the Senate majority gave Pres. Eisenhower the margin of victory—in one case, only a one-vote margin—in the roll calls which ended a month of legislative debate.

However, the issue was revived last week when Sen. Lennon (D. N. C.), one of the non-voting senators, moved for reconsideration. Lennon said he was in no hurry for immediate action on the motion.

The votes came on these issues:

1. The Bricker Amendment: As modified by the Ohio Republican from his earlier proposals, it provided that no treaty or executive agreement could become effective as U. S. internal law without approval by both houses of Congress.

The proposal was defeated by a vote of 50 to 42, with two-thirds approval required for a proposed constitutional amendment. Despite the strong objections of Eisenhower, 29 Republicans joined 13 Democrats in favoring the amendment. Opposed were 32 Democrats, 17 Republicans and Wayne Morse, the Senate's lone independent.

2. The George Amendment: A substitute for the Bricker Amendment, this proposal would have declared that no treaty or agreement which conflicts with the Constitution would be effective (a point already emphasized by the courts). It also provided for congressional legislation to make a treaty effective in the U. S.

Senate GOP Majority Leader Knowland (Calif.) switched to support of the George proposal, which came within one vote of receiving the required majority. The vote was 60 to 31, with Sen. Kilgore (D. W. Va.) casting the deciding "no" vote.

Chairman Wiley (R. Wisc.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, one leader of the fight against the Bricker Amendment, called the outcome a "great bipartisan victory for the Administration and for the President." Bricker, however, said he'll bring the measure up again in the next session.

GCEOC Says GOP Ignores Lower Ranks In Pay Plan

ADMINISTRATION proposals for a pay increase to federal workers drew criticism last week from the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Like so many other recommendations of the GOP, a GCEOC-CIO spokesman said, it takes care of those at the top and ignores those at the lower levels.

"Another give-away to those who already have it" was the way he described the plan to raise wages for those in top civil service grades and bypass those at the bottom of the ladder.

The GCEOC-CIO scoffed at the $150-200 "average" increase which proponents of Pres. Eisenhower's proposal said government workers would get.

The union pointed out that a Grade 15 employe now getting a minimum of $10,800 a year would be given an $800 salary boost, but nothing in the way of a pay raise is contemplated for Grade 1 and 2 workers who get minimums of $2500 and $2750 respectively.

The CIO group advocates an across-the-board increase for all federal workers which Philip Young, Eisenhower-appointed Civil Service Commission chairman, opposed in testifying before a Senate committee.

Besides the pay feature, the Administration proposes contributory group life, medical and hospital insurance and an unemployment compensation system.

Big 4 Meat Packers Get Pay Demand

JOINT CIO-AFL demands for a wage increase were made on the meat packing industry's Big Four last week.

CIO Packinghouse Workers and the AFL Meat Cutters will exercise wage reopening provisions of their contracts with Armour, Swift, Wilson and Cudahy. Announcement was made by Pres. Ralph Helstein of UPWA-CIO and Pres. Earl Jimerson of the AFL union. The two unions represent 120,000 workers in the four firms.

The contracts expire Aug. 11 and Sept. 1. Wage negotiations with the major packers customarily set the pattern for the entire industry.

Last year the two unions signed a mutual assistance pact and worked closely during contract bargaining talks. Gains registered then included a 5c general wage increase and company-paid hospitalization and surgical benefit insurance with full family coverage.

McLeod Gets His Wings Clipped

R. W. Scott McLeod, the State Dept.'s all-powerful security chief, has had some of his powers removed in a recent departmental reorganization.

McLeod lost past authority over personnel, continues as head of the department's Bureau of Inspection, Security & Consular Affairs. Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.) said he was "very, very concerned" by the shift.

REGIONAL CONFERENCE of CIO Councils of Regions 10 and 11 in St. Louis was attended by over 150 delegates from nine states. Conferring are CIO Reg. Dir. Delmont Garst, Pres. Wilda McCamant and Secy. Lorene Burdt of Wichita IUC, and Conference Chairman Carl A. McPeak.

CIO Councils In Action

"THE RECENT ACTION of the House-Senate District subcommittee is a real demonstration of the need for home rule in Washington," according to Pres. Glenn Watts of the District of Columbia CIO Council.

The subcommittee turned down the proposal of the Citizens' Advisory Committee on Public Works for a $40 million federal loan to help a suggested program for badly-needed public works. The joint congressional group insisted on a number of taxes, including an additional sales tax on restaurant meals and grocery purchases, and an increase in the real estate levy.

The CIO Council earlier had gone on record for the citizens' committee proposals, which called for a series of taxes less burdensome than those demanded by the subcommittee.

- Some 330 persons were present at the fifth annual Colorado CIO Education Conference at Denver to set a new attendance record. The four-day conference concluded with a banquet at which the principal speaker was Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs of the CIO Rubber Workers.

Workshops were held on political action and legislative issues, steward training and grievance procedure, labor laws, collective bargaining goals, fair employment practices and parliamentary procedure. Wayne Price and William T. Butler are president and secretary-treasurer of the Council respectively.

- Pres. Norman Bully of the Greater Flint, Mich., CIO Council urged the city's council to enact an ordinance requiring inspection of sub-standard houses once they become vacant. Numerous deaths have resulted from fires in unsafe dwellings. And to make sure that it does an effective job at the polls, the Flint Council is going to buy a $3000 card system to keep tabs on the registration of CIO members.
- The Evansville, Ind., CIO Council is cooperating with the Evansville United Labor Council in calling for a special session of the State Legislature to improve unemployment compensation benefits. The united council also urged Congress to raise the income tax exemption to at least $700, boost the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and extend coverage, and increase social security benefits and enlarge coverage.
- The Fostoria, O., CIO Council called for the formation of widely representative community council to "serve as the rallying point for concerted community approach to civic affairs."
- Some 100 CIO members received diplomas for completing courses in workmen's compensation, health and safety, and stewards' training at a school held by the 10th Congressional District CIO-PAC, Chicago.

Ohio And California CIO Act To Improve Jobless Benefits

TWO STATE CIO Councils last week acted to gain improved unemployment compensation:

- The Ohio Council decided to begin an initiative petition aimed at obtaining improvements in the State unemployment compensation law.
- The California Council called on Gov. Goodwin J. Knight to take the lead in raising the weekly maximum unemployment benefit from $25 to $40 a week when a special session of the Legislature meets.

Pres. James P. Griffin of the Ohio CIO said two factors caused the Council to authorize a referendum.

One reason, he said, was the worsening employment picture in the State where more than 100,000 persons are now drawing unemployment benefits. The action also was prompted by "the consistent failure of the Legislature to head the pleadings and warnings of organized labor."

Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol of the California CIO wrote the Governor the maximum weekly benefit could be boosted to $40 "without risking a deficit in the fund providing for a 2.3% payroll tax minimum, instead of the present zero percentage payroll tax minimum enjoyed by 30,000 privileged corporations in the State."

CAUTIOUS OPTIMISM for the nation's economic future was expressed by CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, right, at a dinner in Lorain, O. Mayor John C. Jaworski of Lorain is shown delivering a welcoming address and James Parobek, program chairman, is at center.

Hopeful For Future—

McDonald Talk Hits 'Level-Off' Economics

A CAUTIOUSLY optimistic view of the nation's economic future, coupled with a warning against acceptance of any "leveling off" of production, has been voiced by Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers.

"Think big, think strong, think of a greater America," McDonald said at a dinner recently in Lorain, O. Some 500 persons attended the dinner, which was sponsored by the local Junior Chamber of Commerce.

McDonald said that on his recent tour of the nation's steel centers, "I found a state of fear had engulfed the hearts of the American working people—fear of depression, fear of hunger."

The Steelworkers president said: "I look upon this as unfortunate. There is and always will be an expanded market for all the goods America can produce."

FOF EXAMPLE, McDonald said, the nation's steadily growing population within a few years will require construction of new basic steel production facilities equal to 20 mills the size of the present Lorain plant of U. S. Steel Corp. Such an estimate, he noted, had been voiced by Ben Fairless, U. S. Steel chairman of the board, who accompanied McDonald on recent tours of Big Steel plants.

McDonald criticized any acceptance of a "leveling off" of the economy at or near present levels, warning that such policies would prove disastrous. And he supported measures to expand production and consumer buying power.

Lorain's Mayor John Jaworski spoke at the dinner meeting, while other speakers included Frank N. Hoffman, acting director of USA-CIO Dist. 28; John Caniff, assistant to USA-CIO Sec.Treas. I. W. Abel; and Steve Caruso, Local 1104 president.

$1.25 Wage Minimum Gets Backing

SPARKED by labor representatives, the 20th national conference on labor legislation adopted resolutions going far beyond anything contemplated when the non-controversial agenda was drawn.

Governors' delegates from state labor departments and organized labor from 41 states and territories attended the sessions in Washington. Highlights of the conference decisions:

- Urged raising of the federal minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour.
- Denounced the open shop "right to work" bills in states as curbs on the "rights of employers and employes to establish working conditions of employment through free collective bargaining."
- Opposed weakening of the unemployment compensation program and called for $18 million to strengthen it and re-establish weekly reporting systems.
- Advocated longer and higher jobless pay benefits to workers, with payments up to 66% of average weekly wages in the state for not less than 26 weeks.
- Recommended improvement of workmen's compensation legislation and payments.

Warren Is Confirmed

By a voice vote and without opposition, the Senate last week confirmed the nomination of Chief Justice Earl Warren.

Tax Exemption Hike Backed

Two steps intended to help end the present recession have been advocated by the CIO Chemical Workers executive board.

Raising of income tax exemption from $600 to $1000 was urged to boost purchasing power. This, rather than the "trickle down" theory of aiding employers, was recommended by Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of UGCCW-CIO.

The housing bill introduced by Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) was endorsed to meet the needs of "each segment of our economy."

Pollyannish Economic Report Condemned By Douglas

HARSH criticism of the overly optimistic report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers was voiced by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.).

They took their stand in a minority dissent from the report of the Joint Senate-House Committee on the Economic Report. With other minority members they called for immediate action to restore purchasing power and jobs.

To accomplish this they urged a drastic cut in all excise taxes on necessities to increase the real purchasing power of the consumers' dollars and spur consumption of goods. They also backed an increase in personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $800.

The two lawmakers estimated that such an increase would release an extra $4.5 billion in purchasing power or an average of $160 per family per year. They contended the Administration program gives 33 times as much tax benefit to higher income groups.

DOUGLAS and Bolling advocated creation of a public agency under the President to coordinate and direct public works programs and planning.

Lack of "courage and candor" required in facing economic conditions led to three mistakes, the legislators said. These, they said, included a failure to correctly analyze the facts of the rapid recession in 1953; the prevalence of a "pollyannish prosperity is just around the corner" attitude which ignores present difficulties and talks about some long-run economic paradise; and lack of a bold program for dealing with immediate problems.

Democrats on the 14-member joint congressional committee held the view that the Administration has retreated from the goals of the 1946 Employment Act by accepting a contracting economy instead of planning for an expanding economy required to absorb some 600,000 new workers each year, besides providing jobs for those rendered unemployed by improved production techniques.

A KEY section of the report which may turn out to be its most significant part was a staff analysis that unless people and business spend more than at present the U. S. will not have maximum employment over the next 18 months.

The analysis assumed unemployment rates at about 2-2.5 million, the January level, on a seasonally adjusted basis. Then it went to other assumptions based on current evidence and found a demand for only $360 billion compared with the $373 billion it will take to prevent unemployment from increasing.

"I'll never admit we're having a 'recession' . . . unless they put me under oath!"

Relief Rolls Are Climbing In N. Y.

Climbing unemployment may force New York City to ask additional funds for the Welfare Dept. to meet direct relief needs.

The city's present relief case load totals 254,302 persons, up by 4300 in a month. Welfare Commissioner Henry L. McCarthy said if relief cases continue to rise, an extra appropriation will become necessary.

TWUA Raps GOP For 'Waiting Out' Slump

IMMEDIATE steps to offset the employment slump in the textile industry were urged on Pres. Eisenhower by CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve.

Bolstered by TWUA-CIO's Executive Council, Rieve said it would be "suicidal" for the President to wait until March or April before taking action to relieve the economic downturn.

THE UNION head charged that textile employment has shrunk from 1.3 million in 1948 to 950,000 today, a drop of 368,000. Of those working, the union estimated 350,000 or more than 33% are employed only part time.

"Not since the depression years of 1932 and 1938 has textile employment fallen under a million," Rieve said. "It should be borne in mind that since those years our population has increased almost 50% and the per capita purchasing power of our people has tripled. There is no question about it—the textile industry is already in a full-fledged depression."

Rieve pointed out that TWUA has already proposed a number of measures, such as extension of unemployment compensation eligibility in distressed areas, higher income taxes and a federal minimum wage of $1.25 an hour.

"We have also urged stockpiling of certain textiles and a more vigorous federal research program to develop new uses." Rieve added.

The present danger, he noted, calls for even more vigorous action.

The President has talked of using our agricultural surpluses to feed the citizens of underdeveloped countries," he went on. "It seems to me that just as in large areas of the world the people do not have enough to eat, they also do not have enough to wear. Surely it would be better for us to clothe them than to suffer the human and economic waste of unemployment in America."

RIEVE also criticized employers who sought a solution to the textile slump in lower wages.

"Wage cuts will only make a bad matter worse," he said. "They are more contagious than the common cold. In trying to cut wages the employers are contributing to the source of their own difficulties — inadequate buying power. Such action would lead us back even faster to another depression like that in 1932."

Jobless Pay Boosts Get More Support

Five more Michigan communities have adopted resolutions calling on the State Legislature's labor committees to support Pres. Eisenhower's recommendations on unemployment compensation.

Battle Creek, Pontiac, Centerline, St. Clair Shores and Roseville have taken such action, according to CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther in telegrams to the committee members.

Reuther, who is also CIO president, noted that action to spur improved jobless pay legislation was adopted by the State's Unemployment Security Commission, the National Conference on State Labor Legislation and others.

Senators Urge Giving Food Surplus To Jobless Families

DISTRESSED areas would find it easier to obtain food surpluses for relief distribution under legislation introduced last week by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

Joining Hill in sponsorship of the measure were Democratic Sens. Fulbright (Ark.) and Clements (Ky.). The surpluses have been built up under the government's farm price support program.

The present method supplies farm surpluses without charge for school lunches, aged and needy persons and relief and charitable organizations. About 200,000 needy persons in 11 states were helped this way last month, according to the Agriculture Dept.

Hill said about $186 million in unused customs receipts could be used to finance the program that would distribute federal stocks of beef, butter, cheese, powdered milk, vegetable oils and other foods in excess of market requirements. He proposed that the food be disbursed in every area marked "distress" by the Labor Dept. with checkups every two months to determine eligibility.

You And Your Money—

GOP 'Accomplishments' Or Not, Price Index Keeps On Climbing

THE ECONOMIC paradox of record living costs, declining farm prices and rising unemployment is continuing—all promises of the Eisenhower Administration to the contrary.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics last week estimated that its consumer price index now is at an all-time high, after climbing in January to 115.2 of the 1947-49 average.

Sharp increases in coffee and pork prices—as much as 3% for coffee—pushed the mid-January price index to within a fraction of the all-time high of last October. And continuing rises for those commodities, BLS said, probably have brought the present index figure (which won't be available officially for another month) up to an all-time peak.

THE PURCHASING value of the consumer's dollar, according to the National Industrial Conference Board, fell 2.3% in January. It was 54.7c, as compared with 56c a year ago.

Covering a later reporting period, the Agriculture Dept. said that prices received by farmers for crops and livestock fell by .4% in the month ending Feb. 15. The index of prices received by farmers is going down; the index of prices paid by farmers is going up.

Both the consumer and farm price developments contrast sharply with the claimed "accomplishments" of the Republican Administration.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index.

Period	Index

In a national broadcast just two months ago, as Congress returned, Pres. Eisenhower claimed that "the fantastic paradox of farm prices, on a toboggan slide, while living costs soared skyward, has ceased."

THE PRESIDENT also claimed that "the cheapening by inflation of every dollar you earn, every savings account and insurance policy you own, and every pension payment you receive has been halted."

The latest climb in the BLS price index came after fractional drops (see adjoining table) in the last two months of 1953. As a result, the quarterly average on which the escalator wage clause affecting contracts of the CIO Auto Workers in the auto, aircraft and farm implement industries declined, resulting in a 1c hourly pay cut. That was half of the 2c increase received under the UAW escalator clause of Dec. 1.

In comment, UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"With prices and layoffs increasing simultaneously, the campaign promise to restore the sound dollar looks hollow. We are seeking the effect of the big business Administration's running our economy to benefit the privileged few at the expense of the many."

Shakedown Of Coffee Drinkers Hit

DEMANDS for "action to end a multimillion dollar shakedown" of U. S. coffee consumers are getting increasing support in Congress.

Developments last week were:

1. The Agriculture Dept. trimmed its estimate of the 1954 coffee crop by 36.7 million pounds, warned that even this slight dip would have an "abnormal" effect on boosting retail coffee prices even higher.

2. The Senate's special subcommittee investigating coffee prices is studying "outside reports" that the coffee market has been cornered. (A market is cornered when traders, individually or by combine, get a stranglehold on supplies and can dictate prices.)

The House last week voted $10,000 for the Census Bureau to investigate "the true facts on the stocks of coffee in the U. S."

Rep. Sullivan (D. Mo.), who sponsored the proposal, said "if we are going to prevent a speculative price increase resulting from hoarding on the part of some big operators or manipulation, we have got to know how much there is in the country."

CHAIRMAN BEALL (R. Md.) of the subcommittee said "it has been reported to us that there is a corner. We intend to investigate and find out if that is true."

The lawmaker pointed out that there now is an "ample supply" of coffee in the U. S. And the most recent price increases, he noted, were on coffee shipped before the 1953 frost in Brazil—which is the chief excuse for recent price boosts.

A bill placing trading on the New York Coffee & Sugar Exchange under regulation of the U. S. Commodity Exchange Authority has been voted by the Senate and now is pending in a House committee.

If such regulation had been enacted when first recommended in 1950, some of the recent price boosts might have been avoided, Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.) said.

He recalled the detailed coffee investigation by the Senate Agriculture Committee, when Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) was its chairman. That report pointed out that "speculators, exporters and importers were in the main the ones who profited by the rise in coffee prices" in 1949—just as they are at the present time. But none of the recommendations "to protect the American consumer from the coffee traders," as Metcalf noted, were adopted.

2500 Delegates Due At UAW Education Parley

PROBLEMS facing the 1.5 million members of the CIO Auto Workers will be discussed at the union's international education conference at Chicago Apr. 8-11.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther will present the union's program and strategy for the coming year to more than 2500 delegates to the conference which will be held in the Civic Opera House.

Some 500 distinguished guests from public life in the U. S. and Canada also will participate in the meeting.

Guest speakers will include Paul Hoffman, chairman of the board of the Studebaker Corp., whose subject will be "What is Really American and What is Un-American?" He is former head of the Ford Foundation and former director of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Brendan Sexton, UAW education director, said the conference is a non-partisan union-wide discussion forum at which rank-and-file union leaders—free from the pressure of politics and legislation—can discuss problems facing the union members.

The UAW's annual wage proposal and its program on unemployment will be submitted to the delegates. The delegates also will get a report on the affect of automatic factories on employment, and a preview of how atomic energy will affect the auto, aircraft and agricultural implement industries.

We're Earning Less

Americans are getting poorer. The Commerce Dept. last week reported that personal incomes in the U. S. dropped to an annual rate of $282.5 billion in January. That's two billion less than in December.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

WHETHER YOU BUY meat for dinner, shoes, or a washing machine, you'll buy more for your money according to the degree in which you can successfully answer these three questions:

What to buy . . . Where to buy . . . When to buy . . .

There are certain tested techniques for buying that in actual cases on record have saved families 10 to 40% on purchases. They help answer the three vital shopping questions. Use them every time you shop.

Basic Guides To Buying

Shopping Principle No. One, Compare Values: Shop the stores as the professional purchasing agent for a big company does his buying. He keeps a record of the sources apt to offer best values in the items he requires. He is always ready to consider new sources that might have something better or a lower price. When he gets ready to buy, he'll call for samples and prices from several sources and compare the quality on the basis of established specifications.

To compare values fully you not only compare prices. You must also compare:

The Quality. Read the labels and tags to determine what each item offers in utility value, construction, quality of fabric. If the item does not have an informative label describing the quality specifications, insist the store give you the information.

The Design. Not only price and quality but also the styling of an item determine its value. A saucepan may be made of triple-coated porcelain enamel and priced lower than any other pan of that quality, but if its bottom is round and its sides slope, it is not a good value. It will waste fuel and cook your food unevenly.

Shopping Principle No. Two, Select Basic Styles: The simpler the styling of an item, the larger the proportion of its cost that has gone into the actual materials or construction, and not into decorations. You'll save by buying basic styles not only for this reason but also because simpler things have less tendency to become "dated" and have greater usefulness and wearability.

Shopping Principle No. Three, Buy on the Basis of Intended Use: Buy a fancy grade of canned tomatoes for table use, but buy a cheaper grade for cooking. The two are equally nutritious. The more expensive quality has uniform, rich appearance. It looks good on the table, but it's no better in the pot.

Shopping Principle No. Four, Buy on the Basis of Grade Labels: The U. S. Dept. of Agriculture has set up quality designations for many canned fruits and vegetables, and also for meats, butter. For fruits and vegetables, the grades are A, B, and C. Canners are not required to show these grades on the labels, but some do.

Shopping Principle No. Five, Stick to the Middle Price Lines: Salespeople are told to "trade you up" to a higher price line; that's the art of selling. But here is the art of buying. In a period of high prices it is frequently better to stick to the medium-priced lines than either the low-end or high-priced merchandise.

Shopping Principle No. Six, Shop the Private Brands: Retailers' "own" brands give you more for your money than the nationally-advertised brands. By following this one principle you can save 15 to 50% on the cost of advertised brands.

Shopping Principle No. Seven, Buy Bulk Quantities, Larger Sizes: Buy in bulk quantities—depending on your family's needs—especially groceries, toiletries, cleaning materials. Consumer cooperative stores and many independent markets frequently arrange a special price on case lots.

Shopping Principle No. Eight, Grasp the Buying Opportunity: Know your needs in advance and watch for buying opportunities, rather than merely waiting until the need arrives and you must buy a winter coat, a bar of soap, sheets, or Christmas presents—and you must pay the full price at the first store you come to.

Shopping Principle No. Nine, Pool Your Buying: If you could buy in wholesale lots, you'd save. One family can't but several can pool purchases and reduce costs significantly.

Shopping Principle No. Ten, Don't Buy on Credit: You'll find best values in stores that sell for cash or do most of their business on a cash basis.

FTC Charges Monopoly

EIGHT major ice cream companies and 55 subsidiaries last week were charged by the Federal Trade Commission with unfair methods of competition.

FTC said that these firms "are alleged to do 40% of the nation's ice cream business" and that if they continue to engage in the unfair practices the business will be further concentrated in the hands of the few major companies.

The major concerns are the National Dairy Products Corp., the Borden Co., the Carnation Co., Fairmont Foods Co., Pet Milk Co., Beatrice Foods, Foremost Ice Cream Co. and Arden Farms.

THE COMMISSION said that the companies offered unfair inducements to take business away from other firms.

FTC said the firms made available to retailers cabinets and refrigerator units suitable for the storage, display and sale of ice cream.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

HARRISBURG, PA.—My assistants and myself met with the United Shoe Workers Organizing Committee, headed by veteran CIO Organizer Walter Harris. We had an opportunity to discuss the present situation and develop plans for the future.

A great proportion of the shoe industry has concentrated in Eastern Pennsylvania, with a number of runaway plants from New England and New York. These runaway plants and managements have fought CIO with the usual trickery, using every method they know to defeat organization of their employes. It is a tribute to Brother Harris and his staff that so much progress has been made.

A solid foundation is being laid for the successful organization of unorganized shoe workers. There has been a genuine trade union campaign of leadership displayed by the staff of the Shoe Workers Organizing Committee. They are building sound trade unionists through the example they set.

It was a pleasure to have Pres. Russell Taylor of the Shoe Workers present at these meetings. He helped greatly in setting the plans through which our campaign can be intensified. The combination of a fine leadership in the union, and a fine leadership in the field staff, cannot help but bring benefits to the workers.

FROM PENNSYLVANIA, I traveled to New York, where another of our regional conferences of council officials had been set. I met with delegates from Regions 1 and 2. As we have in three other regional conferences, CIO's program for 1954 was put before the responsible local leadership of CIO for their study and for their actions.

In three vital fields—legislative action, PAC, and community relations, CIO has evolved a complete course of action that is of the greatest importance for the continued welfare of our membership. We do not fool ourselves by saying that we have set an easy task for the coming year. We have set a hard program, a night and day program, a program that calls for our utmost in effort. I am always encouraged, in these trying days, by the quality and number of leaders we have in CIO, in the field, in the councils, in the local unions.

We have no secret weapon with which we hope to accomplish our aims. We stand up before the nation as united workers, standing firm in the cause of trade union brotherhood. That is our strength, and we have only ourselves to blame if we fail to use it.

CIO's Textile Workers scored a three to one victory at the Forstmann Woolen Co., Garfield and Passaic, N. J., plants.

CIO's Electrical Workers scored major victories at the Irrisistor Co., Bradford, Pa.; Keystone Watch Co., Riverside, N. J.; Guger Enfield Co., Springfield, Mass.; General Electric Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; and Dage Electric, Beech Grove, Ind.

The Furniture Workers, CIO, scored at the Belz Mfg. Co., Memphis, Tenn.; Chickasaw Broom Mfg. Co., Memphis, Tenn.; and Eastern Venetian Blind Co., Baltimore, Md. (a plant of nearly 1000 workers).

The CIO's Oil Workers report victories at the Allied Mills Corp., Portsmouth, Va.; Petroleum Terminal Co., Spokane, Wash.; and Sidney Roofing & Paper Co. Ltd., Alberta, Canada.

The Auto Workers report wins at the McQuay Co., Faribault, Minn. and Cummings Diesel Co., Hibbing, Minn.

CIO's Paper Workers smashed an attempted raid at the Zellerbach Paper Co. in California, and at the Fandange Mills, Millburn, N. J.

CIO also reported victories at the Eagle Pencil Co., New York, and Concord Foods, Concordville, Pa.

Judge Loses Move To Stage Own Election In Butte Mines

ATTEMPTS by a Montana state judge to supercede the National Labor Relations Board with a local group to conduct a representation election between the CIO Steelworkers and the Communist-dominated Mine-Mill union at Butte have been blocked.

An NLRB lawyer went into federal district court to obtain a restraining order halting the appointees of Judge John B. McClernan from conducting an election to determine a bargaining agent for Butte's miners. Then the judge himself was disqualified from acting further under Montana law.

Appointees to the judge's proposed Butte Labor Relations Board included a truant officer, a courthouse bailiff and an attorney for the employers' group.

The court had directed an election Mar. 1 in the Silver Bow County Courthouse despite the fact that the NLRB already had set Mar. 22 for a showdown vote between USA-CIO and Mine-Mill, which was expelled from CIO in 1950.

In large newspaper ads, the Butte Miners Union and the Anaconda Mill & Smeltermen Union, both affiliated with USA-CIO, said:

"National labor law in the U. S. is still made by the Congress in Washington, D. C., and not by anybody in Montana. . . No civil court, no judge, no corporation can hold a legal election for Anaconda Copper Mining Co. workers."

The USA-CIO bargaining program at Butte includes a 25% general wage increase to give workers six days' pay for five days' work as well as numerous other provisions, among them a guaranteed annual wage, ore conservation program and a strong grievance procedure.

Gold On Trial For Perjury In T-H Affidavit

THE GOVERNMENT charged that Pres. Ben Gold of the Fur and Leather Workers Union was a Moscow-trained Communist when he signed a Taft-Hartley Law affidavit in 1950 denying his Red ties.

The fur and leather union, like Mine-Mill and others, was tried, found guilty and expelled from CIO because of the Communist domination exerted by their leaders.

A U. S. prosecutor told a federal jury in Washington that the government would seek to prove that Gold was a Communist Party member continuously since 1921.

Gold is on trial for swearing falsely that he was not a Communist and did not support violent overthrow of the American government when he took the T-H oath.

IN 1930 and 1931, the government said, Gold attended a course for professional revolutionaries at the Lenin Institute in Moscow. Here, said the U. S. attorney, Gold was taught the techniques of street fighting, demolition and the use of firearms and codes.

The courses were based on the assumption that the techniques taught "would become necessary in the overthrow of the U. S. government."

Gold claimed he quit the Communist Party to sign the affidavit, but a government witness insisted members "can't resign" and must be "thrown out." Another witness tetified to seeing Gold at innumerable party functions, including its national convention in New York City.

Niagara Power Grab By Utilities Protested

MAXIMUM use of all possible power resources of the northeastern states was advocated by Pres. Elwood D. Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers before the Northeast Electric Consumers Conference in Albany, N. Y.

The conference was pledged to promote the highest volume of hydroelectric power at the lowest possible cost to consumers in the northeastern states.

Swisher listed the power objectives as "St. Lawrence first and then Niagara and then the Connecticut River and we must not neglect Passamaquoddy."

HE CHARGED that there was "a coalition of forces organized to steal the public resources available in the Niagara River for the benefit primarily of five utility companies."

Swisher said these firms are organizing "every Fascist-minded group in America behind their campaign" which they are financing from the rates charged their electric consumers.

"Here we have the method and technique of making the consumers pay the cost of a campaign against their own interest. Here we have the system of tax exemption making the public treasury pay for a propaganda campaign for the interests of the private utilities," Swisher said.

CONFERENCE delegates were given data on the conflict of principle between public construction and operation of the Niagara project and the cost to consumers if the five-firm power grab goes through.

Field Rep. Stephen G. McMullen of the UGCCW-CIO was one of the panel members at the conference. Sponsors included the CIO Electrical, Textile, Chemical and Stone Workers Unions.

Inadequate

The U. S. has an electric power shortage because private power companies consistently underestimate the nation's needs, according to Chairman Gordon Clapp of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Clapp said the current battle of public versus privately-owned power systems has diverted attention from the "vital issue" of "adequacy of power for our country's needs, irrespective of ownership."

UPA Gains In New Pacts

A 12c PACKAGE was won by the CIO Paperworkers in a contract settlement with New London (Conn.) Mills.

With 8.5c covering general wage and adjustment increases, the balance was made up in an additional paid holiday for a total of seven and an improved Blue Cross insurance program.

Vacation pay allowance was set at 48 hours, according to UPA-CIO Area Dir. George Pescatore. Better grievance machinery also was agreed upon.

A contract signed at the Union Envelope Co. provides a 5c an hour general increase plus adjustment boosts ranging to 10c an hour.

TWU Gains 13c Package

A FIRST contract between the CIO Transport Workers and the New Orleans Cold Storage Co. has won a 13c package for approximately 45 workers.

A wage increase of 10c is provided, according to TWU Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber.

In Chester, Pa., mechanical workers for the Southern Pennsylvania Bus Co. won the five-day week without loss of take-home pay. The changeover will be in two steps and represents a 39c hourly increase.

Local 241 in New York City gained a 10c package under a wage and pension reopening clause in the TWU contract with Columbia Univ. The same local also got 10c an hour for workers at Jewish Theological Seminary. Also on the academic front, Barnard College maintenance workers got a 5c-7c wage increase.

ILGWU To Sign No-Raiding Pact

The executive board of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers last week authorized ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky to sign the CIO-AFL no-raiding agreement.

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on the CBS television program "Man of the Week" Sunday, Mar. 14. The program is aired at 3:30 p.m. Eastern standard time.

UAW Gets First Detroit Area-Wide Pension Plan

SIGNING of the first Detroit area-wide pension agreement for production and other workers in several types of industry has taken place between the CIO Auto Workers and six firms.

UAW-CIO East Side Dirs. Norman Matthews and Michael F. Lacey and West Side Dirs. Edward Cote and Joseph McCusker said additional firms can be brought into the plan with approval of a joint board of administration. Union and company representatives have expressed hope the plan will be further extended.

The plan—similar to a UAW pension pact in the Toledo area—permits transfer of pension credits among participating firms. Workers who quit or are discharged from a shop have up to 18 months to find work in another member shop before losing their credits. If laid off, they have up to three years.

An employe with 20 years of service credits in the plan has vested rights which he cannot lose even if he leaves the pool permanently. Full past service credits for seniority are granted under the plan.

Pension benefits are $1.75 a month to a maximum of $52.50 monthly exclusive of Social Security. The maximum pension with Social Security is $137.50 a month. Special benefits are paid those who are permanently and totally disabled before they reach retirement age.

Companies participating in the plan are: Anderson Steel Treating Co.; Hydraulic Power Service Co.; Industrial City Boring Co.; Kermath Mfg. Co.; Michigan Steel Tube Products Co. and Wettlaufer Engineering Co.

Grass Roots Drive Gains For Fair Tax Cut Bill

SUPPORT of CIO members for the Democratic-sponsored bill to raise income tax exemptions was reported from all parts of the country last week as the Eisenhower Administration's opposition to treating people like big business hardened.

A grass roots campaign to line up congressional support for the measure introduced by Sens. George (Ga.), Kerr (Okla.) and Frear (Del.), all Democrats, was gaining strength, with the National CIO urging its affiliates to participate actively in the drive.

The bill would raise individual income tax exemptions, now $600, to $800 in 1954 and $1000 in 1955. It would mean about $3 a week more this year in the weekly pay envelope of the average worker with a wife and two children, and twice that next year.

Introduction of the bill, which is in line with long-standing CIO policy, confused Republican political and administration leaders badly.

The politicians recognized the lure of an income tax cut for the great mass of voters in an election year—especially in view of the bonanzas lined up for the wealthy—and the difficulty of persuading Republicans in Congress to vote against it.

Other Republicans, who blithely approved legislation giving tax savings of $1.8 billion—in the first year alone—to business and an additional $1.2 billion to stockholders while giving individuals a begrudged $250 million, reacted with characteristic anguish.

Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey, in a statement reported approved by Pres. Eisenhower, declared that the country under present conditions could not afford a cut such as George and his supporters propose, and that the Administration will fight it. If such a bill is passed, he proclaimed, he would urge the President to veto—a course the politicians conceded would be dangerous to GOP chances in the November elections.

THE CIO Legislative Dept. in calling for support for the George Bill, distributed leaflets urging CIO members to tell their congressmen they want a tax law that will help all the people, not just a few, and insisting that they vote not only in favor of higher income exemptions, but against the proposed GOP windfall for corporations and wealthy stockholders.

In a message to a CIO Electrical Workers legislative meeting in Washington, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther urged "immediate and continuing attention" to correct the "gross inequity" created by the Republicans' projected tax relief for the wealthy.

He called on the delegates to ask their representatives to vote to send the measure back to committee with instructions to substitute for it the increase in personal income tax exemptions proposed by George.

The Republicans have done so much for the wealthy that the House Ways and Means Committee balked last week at giving further tax relief. It voted to continue the corporate income tax rate at the present 52% for another year.

House Group Reverses Ike On Excise Cuts

ONE HOUR after Pres. Eisenhower told a news conference that he opposed cuts in federal excise taxes, the House Ways and Means Committee began voting on a program of lower levies that ended in a reduction of nearly $1 billion a year in Uncle Sam's income.

Despite the fact the President opposed the bill sponsored by Chairman Reed (R. N.Y.), the committee approved cuts from 20% to 10% in the impost rates on jewelry, furs, cosmetics, luggage, women's handbags, admission tickets, club dues, photographic equipment, light bulbs and tubes, pens and mechanical pencils, and cigaret lighters.

It also voted a 10% cut in the 15% rates on travel tickets, telegrams and local phone calls, and in the 25% rates on long distance phone calls.

Then it gave the President something he had asked for—continuation beyond the Apr. 1 expiration date of the same old rates on liquor, beer, wine, gasoline, cigarets and autos.

SIGN OF VICTORY is this poster in the W. T. Grant Co. window at Port Arthur, Texas, where a contract with CIO Local Industrial Union 1814 has broken the solid front of chain stores against CIO organization. Tight picket lines continue at Woolworth and McLellan stores in the four-month recognition battle.

CIO Urges Veto Of Farm Labor Bill

THE CIO has called on President Eisenhower to withhold approval of the bill authorizing the Administration's "go it alone" Mexican farm labor recruitment program which was passed by both the House and Senate last week.

In a telegram, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther urged the President to expedite pending negotiations with Mexico on a new agreement. He said approval should be delayed "so that a new U. S.-Mexican agreement can be executed between good neighbors in a spirit of fairness and equity on the merits of the situation."

The measure cleared the House by voice vote after a motion by Rep. Shelley (D. Calif.) to send it back to the House Agriculture Committee was defeated on a roll-call vote of 251 to 154.

THE SENATE approved the measure 59 to 22 after shouting down a motion by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) to recommit on a voice vote. Only one Republican, Sen. Cooper (Ky.), voted against the measure in the Senate.

The action, which opponents charged was an affront to Mexico and a threat to the security and economy of the U. S., came although U. S.-Mexican negotiators were reported near agreement on a new bilateral program.

REP. COOLEY (D. S. C.), who led the fight against the measure in the House, referred to this situation and said that the only reason for passage at this time was to use the bill as a "blackjack" to force Mexico to come to terms.

Earlier, Robert Oliver, director of the CIO Legislative Committee, wired Congress that approval of the bill would be "especially inexcusable in light of growing unemployment among American workers."

Welcome

Some kind of political history has been made.

CIO's Legislative Dept. has been keeping congressional voting records for seven years. Last week, for the first time in those seven years, Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.) cast his first "right" vote in balloting on the Mexican wetback issue.

The crusty 78-year-old Hoffman hastened to explain he was against CIO's position but voted as he did because a "wrong" vote would hurt U. S.-Mexico relations.

Velde Group Gets Another Big Grant

THE HOUSE has voted another $275,000 for the House Un-American Activities Committee, boosting its total to an all-time record of $575,000. That is $75,000 more than any committee has ever been given for a two-year session of Congress.

Only one member, Rep. Wier (D. Minn.), voted against the request. He explained that he favored expanding the FBI to take over the job of hunting down subversives.

Although he voted to approve fund request, Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.) criticized the committee for its methods. He later introduced a bill to set up a Joint Committee on Internal Security to take over investigations in the field of subversive activities.

REP. RHODES (D. Pa.) pointed out that "the most effective weapon against Communist growth was the enactment of a program of social reform inaugurated by Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt." He urged giving the committee double its $275,000 request with the additional funds earmarked specifically for a probe of fascist front groups.

"Many tons of propaganda are pouring out of well financed reactionary front organizations," he said. "These fronts are spreading hate and confusion when unity and reason are most essential to our survival as a free nation."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. House Labor Committee votes to strip NLRB of unfair labor practice functions and place them in the generally anti-labor federal courts. (See Page 2.)

2. House and Senate pass and send to the White House a bill authorizing the "go it alone" Mexican farm labor recruitment program. (See Page 12.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
"Go it alone" Mexican farm labor program (H. J. Res. 355)	Authorizes unilateral program of recruiting Mexican "slave" labor for big farms of Southwest, thereby depressing general farm income and throwing U. S. workers out of jobs.	Senate and House both passed bill last week.	Urge Pres. Eisenhower to withhold his approval and instead to expedite negotiations on a new agreement with Mexico.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. completed hearings. House Labor Com. now considering anti-labor bill.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	House Ways & Means Com. now drafting bill.	Urge your Representative to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway	Would enable U. S. to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

Shift In Schenectady—

Biggest GE Local Swinging To IUE

WORKERS in the key plant of the General Electric chain at Schenectady, N. Y., are taking steps to return to CIO through pending moves for affiliation with the Intl. Union of Electrical Workers.

Officers of the 20,000-member Local 301 of the United Electrical Workers last week began circulation of a petition to join the IUE-CIO. Early this week, a formal membership vote was scheduled.

Informal voting late last week showed overwhelming support for the return to CIO. First shift workers jammed departmental meetings which drew 8000. Only 123 opposed a change in affiliation on a show of hands vote. Some 14,000 workers from all shifts have signed IUE petitions.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey hailed the developments at Schenectady as marking the end for UE—expelled from CIO in 1949 on the charge that it had "slavishly adhered" to the Communist line.

Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, said a switch by the big Local 301 would "sound the death knell of the UE, which for more than four years has been an isolated, dwindling body cut off from the main stream of the American labor movement."

More than 90% of the 514 shop stewards of Local 301 who attended meetings to discuss the shift in affiliation signed a petition to join IUE. Sentiment for a changeover was even stronger on the Local 301 Executive Board with 37 out of 38 members signing the petition.

An exchange of correspondence between Carey and Business Agent Leo Jandreau of Local 301 was released. Carey pointed out that by uniting Local 301's membership with the 78,000 GE workers already represented by IUE, "we will give them the strength of 98,000 workers joined together with a single objective. This will constitute the vast majority of the company's factory workers."

GE is estimated to have about 125,000 production and maintenance employes.

Jandreau in his reply conceded that the split among GE workers had made bargaining difficult. He said he and the officers of the local would recommend the acceptance of the affiliation program to the members.

Carey and Jandreau both stated that the way was open for other GE plants whose workers are UE members to join the CIO affiliate.

IUE's Westinghouse and GE conference boards last month extended a similar invitation, saying:

"We welcome as we have welcomed in the past the affiliation with the IUE-CIO of any groups or individuals who have shaken off the Communist-controlled UE and who sincerely wish to build a clean, democratic, militant and anti-communist union in our industry."

Spurred by the officers' actions, thousands of rank and file members of Local 301 last week were reported signing petitions paving the way for re-entry into the CIO.

CIO Pres. Walter R. Reuther congratulated Local 301 on its pending change in affiliation. He said "your organizational strength and collective bargaining power will be enormously increased and your solidarity with six million other CIO members will end your isolation from the rest of the American labor movement."

Schenectady is the main plant of the GE chain and Local 301 is the UE's largest unit, representing almost half of the workers for whom UE bargains.

Since IUE was chartered by CIO in 1949, it has challenged UE in a series of National Labor Relations Board elections for bargaining representation covering the Schenectady plant. In recent months there have been growing signs that the membership in Local 301 and other UE affiliates were becoming dissatisfied with the Communist orientation of the union's top leadership.

Reuther Raps Lower Taxes At Top As House Cuts Most Excise Rates

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO last week asked every member of Congress to vote against the Eisenhower Administration's program of tax relief for the wealthy.

"Plans to concentrate tax relief this year in favor of business and investors simply make no economic sense," Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote all representatives and senators.

A similar stand was taken by House Democrats as the Ways and Means Committee reported out the general tax revision bill. The committee minority issued a report charging the measure shows "a singular purpose" of benefitting a few taxpayers "to the almost complete exclusion of the average taxpayer."

Reuther declared the Administration's program of lower taxes on dividends and liberalized depreciation allowances "flies in the face of what is obviously the great problem of the American economy . . . namely, the need for more and better markets, expanded consumption."

THE BILL on which the House will act this week would cut federal revenue by nearly $3 billion dollars and give most of it to a comparative handful of individuals and corporations at the top of the economic heap.

It would do this in two steps. The first would accept as valid the fiction that dividends on stock holdings are unique in being taxed twice—once as corporate income and again as income of the shareholder—and would revise the levy on dividend-income radically downward.

The second would switch depreciation allowances so that the cost of equipment, etc., could be written off for tax purposes at a percentage rate twice as great as is now allowed.

ABOUT $2.75 BILLION of these savings would go to the 335,000 families who own all but a small fraction of publicly-held stock. The remainder among the country's 52 million families would split the rest—about $25 million.

"Can anyone seriously contend that the pressing need today is for more productive capacity?" Reuther asked the congressmen, referring to the thinking behind the Administration's proposals.

"Can we ignore the fact that capacity in nearly every basic industry is adequate or far in excess of current demand?"

He cited the auto, steel, clothing, textile and other industries, and noted that government statistics show corporations hold "record quantities" of liquid assets available for investment.

"It is almost painfully clear that what American business needs most now is more customers and not some new and special incentives to invest," he wrote.

"We urge you to support, instead, the proposal to increase the purchasing power of the great majority of American families by raising the present personal income tax exemption from $600 to $800 this year and to $1000 in 1955.

"This is a tax proposal in keeping with economic reality today. It can go a long way toward expanding purchasing power and restoring the country to full employment."

Tax Plans In Contrast

GOP Proposals

- Grant a tax credit of 5% on income from dividends on stock.
- Enact higher depreciation allowance on plant and equipment, permitting speedier write-offs for tax purposes.

(These two proposals would cut tax revenues by about $3 billion, give around $2.75 billion of it to 335,000 families owning the bulk of publicly-held stock.)

- Permit individual income tax cuts which became effective Jan. 1 to stand.
- Reenact corporate income tax rates due to expire Apr. 30.
- Reduce excise taxes on most items to 10% including rates on travel tickets, telephone calls and telegrams, and continue old, high rates on liquor, beer, wine, gasoline, cigarets and automobiles and parts.

CIO Proposals

- Increase income tax exemptions from the present $600 to $800 this year and $1000 in 1955 as a needed stimulant to consumer purchasing power.
- Close existing loopholes, gaps and concessions, and enforce present laws more strictly, to increase revenue by an estimated $7.4 to $7.9 billion.
- Allow excise taxes due to expire on Apr. 1 to die as scheduled, and cut other excise and sales taxes sharply—expecially levies on alcoholic beverages, so as to block bootlegging, and on autos, to stimulate buyer demand.
- Reenact corporate income tax rates due to expire Apr. 1.
- Permit individual tax cuts which became effective Jan. 1 to stand.

A BILL reducing federal excise taxes to a flat 10% on all but a few significant articles was passed by the House last week despite the Administration's opposition.

The new lower rates, approved by a roll call vote of 411 to 3, become effective Apr. 1 and were estimated to cut federal revenue by $912 million.

The House-voted excise tax cut, however, was not as much as the reduction which would have resulted if the Korean war-boost in excise rates had been allowed to expire Apr. 1 unchanged. The House actually salvaged $155 million of such revenue in the new bill.

The measure was passed after the Democrats had forced cuts to the 10% level in rates the House Ways and Means Committee had earmarked for smaller reductions, notably those on telephone calls, telegrams and transportation tickets.

The Democrats also succeeded in getting a one-year limit set on the rates that were left at the present higher levels, and which the CIO had maintained should have been cut as scheduled in order to create badly-needed consumer buying power. The higher prevailing rates maintained were those on liquor, wine, beer, cigarets, motor vehicles and parts, gasoline and deisel fuel for road use.

Sen. Hendrickson Quits N. J. Race

Sen. Hendrickson (R. N. J.) last week withdrew as a candidate for re-election, leaving three candidates in the race. The candidate for the Democratic nomination is Rep. Howell (D. N. J.). Republican aspirants are former Rep. Clifford P. Case and former State Treas. Walter T. Margetts, Jr.

FEPC Bill Gets Committee Okay

The Senate Labor Committee, with only one member recorded in opposition, last week approved the Ives-Humphrey-Lehman Bill to establish a fair employment practices commission with enforcement powers.

In spite of the overwhelming support within the committee, the action appeared to be little more than a gesture. Pres. Eisenhower recently reiterated his opposition to such legislation, and the bill has virtually no chance of being enacted in the face of a Southern filibuster.

Funds Asked By Riffe For Texas Strikers

AN APPEAL for funds to aid CIO retail strikers in Port Arthur, Tex., has gone out to all CIO international unions from Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

Riffe said members of CIO Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814 have waged "a valiant fight against almost incredible odds" for several months. He asked that checks be made payable to CIO-LIU 1814 and sent to him for application to their strike fund.

In his letter Riffe noted that the strike has been carried on against more than 20 stores, hotels, restaurants and drive-ins. The strikers believe fervently in trade unionism, he added.

THE MAJORITY organized themselves before any staff people were assigned to the area. They were forced on strike by a concerted campaign of union-busting and repression almost without parallel, Riffe said. He added:

"Every smear tactic has been used against these strikers and CIO. We have defended ourselves well and the spirit of these people has never wavered. CIO has assisted the strikers financially as have a number of our international unions and a number of local unions.

"The lines are holding firm, the morale is good, but these people need help desperately. Their previous earnings never put them in position to withstand a long strike. These are $18 a week store clerks, restaurant help who earned $15 a week or hotel employes whose wages were miserably small."

Wage Goals Set By URW Group

Representatives of 325 CIO Rubber Workers locals met in Cleveland late last week to draft an economic program for presentation to the rubber and allied industries this year. URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said the wage policy group meets annually.

More Funds Asked For Jobless Aid

THE LABOR Dept. last week punctured optimistic hopes that both unemployment and the "psychological recession" will fade with the first blooming flowers of spring.

The department predicted that climbing unemployment will continue for some months, well into the fiscal year beginning next July 1, and it asked an extra $40 million to help pay for operations of an expanded unemployment compensation system.

The expectations of the government's employment experts were disclosed by Labor Sec. Mitchell in testimony before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

WHILE VOICING Administration hopes that there will "continue to be a high level economy" in the next fiscal year, Mitchell added the warning that "there will be some increase in unemployment."

Mitchell didn't say how much of an increase he expects, but he asked for an extra $40 million for the federal grants to states for administrative operations of state unemployment agencies. (Such federal grants were cut sharply by the first session of the present Congress, forcing closing of many state unemployment offices just before the present wave of layoffs began.)

A new government estimate on present unemployment is due this week from the Commerce Dept. The latest figure, as of mid-January, is nearly 3.1 million. The new figure will cover mid-February.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Last week Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) estimated that more than five million Americans workers now are either "jobless, laid off or working part time."

A partial estimate from the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept. last week showed a 300,000 drop in non-farm employment between mid-January and mid-February. The continued loss of jobs, came in manufacturing where the downtrend started last fall.

IN DETROIT, for example almost one out of every 10 workers now is idle. Unemployment in the Detroit area now totals 140,000 or 9.3% of the labor force, according to the Michigan Employment Security Commission. Since mid-January the total has gone up 33,000. The statewide jobless total is 214,000 or 7.7% of the labor force.

In New York City, according to state figures, unemployment now totals 191,000. That is some 70,000 above a year ago. And the state total is 324,000.

$6.5 Billion Proposed For Public Works

LEGISLATION calling for a $6.5 billion joint federal-local public works program modeled on Public Works Administration lines but keyed to the 1946 Full Employment Act has been introduced by Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.).

"With unemployment up over the three million mark, the time to argue whether it's a recession or an 'adjustment' is passed," Kelley, a member of the House Labor Committee, declared. "There's no sense in waiting until the April reports on February unemployment. The time to act is now."

Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) joined in sponsoring the bill.

Kelley explained that in his own district, thousands of furloughed workers in the coal mines, rubber factories, electrical plants and other installations in a heavily-industrialized county are "tired of waiting for prosperity around the corner and need jobs now."

Kelley's bill would authorize federal grants of up to $3 billion to states or their subdivisions to cover 45% of the cost of individual projects. The state or local sponsoring agency would have to provide the other 55%.

N. Y. CIO Conference Urges Action To Safeguard Jobs

THE NEW YORK City Council held an emergency unemployment conference and adopted a program to offset boomeranging layoffs. New York City CIO leaders warned there is a serious local unemployment situation. Some 250 representatives of 500,000 CIO members and 32 international unions found nothing wrong with the American economy that an increase in U. S. citizens' purchasing power would not cure.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., lamented the state and federal policy of "drift" and called for immediate action to stimulate consumer confidence and demand.

He warned unless the unemployment situation is remedied promptly, it could develop into a "descending spiral of increasing intensity."

Speakers reported registered unemployment alone in the city is 191,000 and latest figures for the nation exceeds three million. Relief rolls, they said, climbed from 250,000 to 262,000 in the last three months.

EMPLOYMENT in the textile industry is down to the 1932 low point, with mills employing 50,000 persons closing in the last two years, and appears to be dropping lower.

In the electrical, radio and television industries, there have been heavy layoffs and cuts in niture factories in the area have dropped seriously because shops ran away to cheaper labor markets.

Climbing

New York City relief rolls are increasing weekly at the rate of 1000 persons.

That amounts to a 2% rise, said Henry L. McCarthy, welfare commissioner. He said his department "probably" would need to get from the State an additional $6 million to carry it through July 1.

THE CONFERENCE called for boosting the state and federal minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, increasing unemployment insurance to 65% of the average weekly pay for 39 weeks, with additional allowance for dependents, and expanding and increasing social security coverage.

Also urged were a federal income tax exemption of $800, a public housing program of 200,000 units a year, federal aid to states for public improvements and free food and clothing to the needy.

THE CIO called on the Senate last week to reject the "very harmful" Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill and enact instead a series of improvements in the federal-state unemployment insurance system.

Testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey emphasized that the bill must be considered in terms of current economic trends. He pointed out that unemployment insurance claims — representing only part of the unemployment total—are nearly double a year ago. They now total about 2.2 million a week.

"The House passed this bill during a period of very high employment, when the number of persons looking for jobs was a very low figure for a peacetime period," Carey said. "All the greater responsibility is therefore placed upon your committee and the Senate to scrutinize the ominous provisions of this bill in the light of a downward economic trend."

CAREY, who is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, listed these four major objections to the Reed Bill:

1. "It would result in holding down and cutting unemployment benefits at the very time that their improvement is most needed.

2. "It would force states, as a condition of receiving federal loans, to raise the employers' tax rates in a period of growing unemployment.

3. "It would refuse outright grants to states heavily afflicted by unemployment, but would set up a plan which, in future years of slight unemployment, would make grants to all states automatically regardless of need.

4. "It would undermine leadership in maintaining and improving unemployment insurance in the very type of periods that such leadership is most needed."

Carey said that "a positive program is the crying need of the nation with recession under way."

CHAIRMAN Millikin (R. Col.) questioned Carey about his charge that representatives of big corporations "who are Republicans" are trying to wreck the unemployment insurance program in Michigan.

This is not a partisan issue," Carey replied. "My point is that influential members of his own party are working at the state level to kill off the recommendations of Pres. Eisenhower."

The CIO leader said such a program should include substantial liberalization of unemployment benefits, immediate federal aid to states with high unemployment levels so that they can provide adequate benefits, and the provision of adequate funds for effective administration of the state employment security agencies.

HE URGED that benefits be "liberalized substantially" in regard to the amount, duration, eligibility requirements, disqualifications and coverage.

Earlier, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired the committee protesting against the "short notice and inadequate time for testimony" at the Reed Bill hearings.

General Motors Sets Sales Record

General Motors, the world's largest manufacturer, last year set the highest dollar sales record of any company and earned the third highest net income in its history.

By ringing up the grand total of $10,027,985,482, GM sold the equivalent of $62 worth of goods for every man, woman and child in the U. S. Profits totaled $598,119,478, equal to $6.71 a common share.

Signs On The Economic Horizon . . .

PRODUCTION: Steel production last week dropped to the lowest scheduled rate of the year, 68.9% of capacity, while electricity output—a key economic guide—edged up after hitting a two-month low. The Federal Reserve Board's production index, which has fallen 10% since last July, failed to show the usual seasonal 2% increase in February, according to preliminary reports.

AUTO: Studebaker shut down completely its passenger car production line at South Bend, Ind., for one week, idling about 11,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers. In Detroit, Chrysler recalled some 5300 workers at its Plymouth and body division plants.

PRICES: The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of average wholesale prices is going up slightly, increased by .1% in the week ending March 2. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, going up sharply hit $7.25, a rise of 24c in five weeks.

WHOLESALE SALES: Sales by wholesalers decreased to $8 billion in January, according to the Commerce Dept., and were $32 million under the same month of 1953. Sales of durable goods, such as autos, were off 5%.

RETAIL SALES: Retail inventories actually increased slightly during January, as store sales fell off. They were $12.3 billion, as against $16.4 billion the month before, and in February the drop continued.

LABOR INCOME: Wage and salary payments since last July have dropped at an annual rate of $6.3 billion. In January alone, the decline—reflecting layoffs and shorter hours—was $1.4 billion. Such savings as workers received from recent income tax cuts were more than offset by a $1.04 drop in total weekly earnings and climbing living costs.

FARM INCOME: The Agriculture Dept. reported that farmers' net income dropped by 9% during the past year.

Shadow Over America

Unemployment is getting worse.

This is not a prophecy from what the Republicans used to call "the gloom and doom" boys.

For growing unemployment is a fact, confirmed by facts and figures:

- Dept. of Labor figures show a 300,000 rise in non-agricultural unemployment for the month ending mid-February.
- Dept. of Commerce figures for Feb. 15—more comprehensive than Labor's—will be out any day now. They will probably show a rise of at least half a million from Jan. 15 figure of 3,087,000 jobless.
- New applications for unemployment compensation are rising.
- Steel production is running at a rate far below last year's figures.
- Auto companies say they don't know what 1954 production will be; but nobody guesses it will reach the 1953 level, and it may be far below.

In view of these facts, it is time for the government to do something about unemployment beyond the mincing little steps it has taken so far. Pres. Eisenhower says he will wait for the March unemployment figures, which won't be ready until mid-April, before placing the full power of government into a war against joblessness.

We don't think there should be that long wait. Millions of workers are facing hardship now. Millions of others are worried about their future.

They have the right to expect that their government will move quickly against this man-made recession, which should never have happened and which still can be quickly overcome.

Welcome to CIO!

The decision of members and leaders of the big local union at General Electric in Schenectady, N. Y., to desert the dying Communist-dominated UE and to join the ranks of the CIO Electrical Workers, is heartening news.

In turning against the Communist-dominated leadership of the national UE, these workers have shown they are fed up with ineffectual unionism—unionism more dedicated to Soviet foreign policy than to the honest needs of American workers.

Their decision is another step in the long, difficult but uninterrupted march by the IUE-CIO, under the leadership of Pres. James B. Carey, to build a strong, militant and democratic industrial union in the electrical field.

Congratulations are in order to the Schenectady workers for their wise decision; and equal congratulations to the IUE-CIO for its perseverance in fighting for the cause of democracy.

Bravo, Murrow

During World War II, there was always a thrill when Edward R. Murrow opened his CBS broadcasts from bomb-scarred England with the terse line: "This . . . is London." He told the story of Hitler-menaced British democracy as nobody else could.

By the same token, Murrow deserves all the plaudits he is getting for his "See It Now" TV show—which said, in effect, "This . . . is Joe McCarthy."

It was television at its best, performing in the service of the American public.

'And For You Sir—Baloney'

In Other Words—

Slander's Sword Is Double-Edged

McCarthyism as the GOP's "success formula" was assailed by Adlai E. Stevenson, 1952 Democratic presidential nominee, in an address before the Southeastern Democratic Conference in Miami Beach, Fla. A digest of his remarks follow:

By ADLAI E. STEVENSON

WE ARE WITNESSING the bitter harvest of the seeds of slander, defamation and disunion planted in the soil of democracy.

I do not propose to respond in kind to the calculated campaign of deceit to which we have been exposed of late, nor to the attacks on all Democrats as traitors, Communists and murderers of our sons.

Those of us—and they are most of us—who are more Americans than we are Democrats or Republicans, count some things more important than the winning or losing of elections.

Adlai Stevenson

There is a peace still to be won, an economy which needs some attention, some freedom to be secured, an atom to be controlled — all through the delicate, senstitive and indispensable processes of democracy—processes which demand at the least that people's vision be clear, that they be told the truth, and that they respect one another.

It is wicked and subversive for public officials to try deliberately to replace reason with passion, to substitute hatred for honest difference; to fulfill campaign promises by practicing deception; and to hide discord among Republicans by sowing the dragon's teeth of dissension among Americans.

The loyalty and patriotism of a whole political party, of one-half of the Nation has been indicted.

Twenty years of bipartisan effort, highly intelligent and highly successful, has been called "20 years of treason" under the auspices of the Republican National Committee.

That such things are said under the official sponsorship of the Republican Party in celebration of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln adds desecration to defamation. This is the first time that politicians, Republican politicians at that, have sought to split the Union in Lincoln's honor.

The infection of bitterness and hatred spreads all too quickly in these anxious days from one area of our life to another. And those who live by the sword of slander also may perish by it, for now it is also being used against distinguished Republicans.

We have just seen a sorry example of this in the baseless charges hurled against our honored Chief Justice. And now, too, the highest officials of the Pentagon are charged with "coddling Communists" and "shielding treason."

Gen. Zwicker, one of our great army's finest officers, is denounced by Sen. McCarthy as "stupid, arrogant, witless," as "unfit to be an officer" and a disgrace to the uniform. For what? For obeying orders. This to a man who has been decorated 13 times for gallantry and brilliance; a hero of the Battle of the Bulge. And this from a man whom the Republican National Committee sends around the country to sow slander and disunion in the memory of Lincoln.

The President's Responsibility

When demagoguery and deceit become a national political movement, we Americans are in trouble; not just Democrats, but all of us.

And why, you ask, have the demagogues triumphed so often? The answer is inescapable; because a group of political plungers has persuaded the President that McCarthyism is the best Republican formula for political success.

Had the Eisenhower Administration chosen to act in defense of itself and of the Nation which it must govern, it would have had the grateful and dedicated support of all but a tiny and deluded minority of our people.

Yet, clear as the issue is, and unmistakable as the support is, the Administration appears to be impotent. Why? Because the party which created the Administration is hopelessly, dismally, fatally torn and rent within itself.

The Stevens incident illustrates what preceding events have made memorably plain: A political party divided against itself, half McCarthy and half Eisenhower, cannot produce national unity or govern with confidence and purpose. And it demonstrates that, so long as it attempts to share power with its enemies, it will inexorably lose power to them.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. EISENHOWER acted, at his news conference, more angry at Adlai E. Stevenson than he did at Sen. McThing. Yet this observer is ready to eat a little crow out of what I have written in the past.

It seems barely possible that Mr. Eisenhower is ready to become President of the United States, which includes becoming leader of the Republican party.

Eating A Little Crow

This column is being written before Vice-Pres. Nixon as designated spokesman of the GOP, makes his "reply" to Stevenson. Gov. Stevenson, by the time these words see print, may have issued a "reply" to Nixon's reply.

I don't know why Mr. Eisenhower got so angry at Stevenson that, when he was asked about the "new look" in defense policies the President flushed and literally stamped his foot and insisted that he wasn't going to "demagogue" about it.

There are a good many people worried about our tax and defense policies who aren't "demagoguing" about their anxieties. It ill becomes Mr. Eisenhower, who in 1952 allowed his hand to be uplifted in a campaign appearance by Sen. Jenner and who cut from a Wisconsin speech some phrases in praise of Gen. Marshall, to talk about other politicians as "demagogues."

Claim To Leadership

Still it should be stated frankly and without reservation that Mr. Eisenhower handled a news conference with complete self-command, that he used the conference to blast McThing, and that he skillfully asserted—for the first time publicly—a genuine claim to lead his own GOP.

It isn't easy to convey the atmosphere of a presidential press conference, but the temper at this one was somehow different from any other at which Mr. Eisenhower had presided.

People came expecting to be bored to death, in contrast to the excitement and anticipation which had been frustrated just a week earlier.

Suddenly the President began making a series of answers to question which became, despite his delicacy and reservation, a series of blows at McCarthy.

Agrees With Flanders

He deliberately answered in the affirmative a question asking whether he agreed with a floor speech by Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) calling McCarthy a "divisive force." (Flanders actually called McCarthy, in effect, the Democrats' "secret weapon," but Eisenhower for once didn't run away from the idea of "talking personalities.")

He said that he had concurred in the Republican decision to place Nixon, rather than McCarthy, as the GOP spokesman to "answer" Stevenson. He added, in response to another question, that he did not think the great radio and TV networks were bound to give equal time to McCarthy as well as to the Republicans' official spokesman. Could the networks and the Federal Communications Commission need better advice?

To state the thing bluntly, Mr. Eisenhower suddenly began using the enormous sounding-board of the White House and the presidential press conference to issue a declaration of independence from the Wisconsin Senator. He even showed a capacity to joke with reporters as Roosevelt used to do.

A declaration of independence from McCarthy isn't the same as a really sound and progressive program of presidential leadership.

Eisenhower, whose experience was wholly in the military field, was sold a bill of goods a few years ago by some smart businessmen and publicists who decided to use his shining name for political purposes.

He was sold the idea that he ought to be a Republican and "save the country" from the alleged extravagances of the New Dealers and Fair Dealers.

Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, no rabid Republican, was sold a similar bill of goods in 1869 when he ran to "save the country" from the Southern seceders and their Northern friends. The thieves who backed him nearly ruined his personal reputation.

The Staff Needs A Program

Eisenhower still needs to produce a personal program that comprehends something more than calling the Tennessee Valley Authority a prime example of "creeping Socialism."

This columnist will eat crow about Mr. Eisenhower whenever it seems required. I am happy to repeat that he aimed some unmistakable blows at McCarthy.

It is still a little puzzling that he seemed so indignant at Gov. Stevenson. And as for what Nixon says, we'll wait to see.

Housing Needs Unanswered By GOP Program, CIO Testifies

THE CIO said last week that no new private housing would be built as a result of any new sections in the Administration's widely-touted housing legislation proposals.

CIO Housing Dir. Ben Fischer and Washington Rep. John Edelman of the CIO Textile Workers told the House Banking & Currency Committee that the GOP-sponsored measure significantly omits an adequate low-rent public housing program.

Despite a "generally excellent" report by the President's Committee on Housing, the bill now under study provides no "really new, hopeful or substantial solutions" to America's housing needs, Fischer said. Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the CIO Steelworkers served as a member of the presidential committee.

JOINING in criticism of the proposals were the AFL, which forecast higher rents and price tags on existing dwellings without building new ones, and the Veterans Administration.

A spokesman for Americans for Democratic Action said the Administration bill "takes the enterprise out of private enterprise by shifting risks from builders to the government."

Later in the week, Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.) accused the Administration of lacking courage and honesty in not including public housing in its housing program.

Maybank's anger was fired up by the fact that the President has recommended building 35,000 public housing units over the next four years but such a provision was not contained in the Administration's bill. He offered an amendment calling for construction of 135,000 units a year.

FISCHER said the only "significant" new item in the legislation, a 40-year term, 100% loan program, was without "practical meaning" when analyzed.

"In its present form," he said, "this new section of law, if enacted, would not provide for adequate standard new housing because it is restricted to a price of no more than $7000, a figure so low as to negate the proposal."

The higher interest rate, "dressed up" as a service charge, was described as a crippling feature. Actual charges to the consumer were estimated at 5.5% by Fischer, "thus forcing the lowest income group to pay the highest interest rates under the federal housing program."

The investment area is the one in which the government must primarily operate to fill the role it can usefully and immediately perform in behalf of consumers and producers, said Fischer.

CIO advocates a public housing program, along the lines recommended by the late Sen. Taft, for the hundreds of thousands of families at the lower end of the income ladder who cannot be served by private housing. Fischer added that CIO is disturbed by the bill's failure to return to the Taft program of 135,000 public housing units a year with a permissible rate of 200,000.

Edelman told the committee that the very small subsidy required by a public housing program for the low income groups, when properly analyzed, adds up to less spending than is now drained from the public purse by the continued existence of slums and slum conditions.

"The 35,000 units of low rent public housing as suggested by the Administration for this year's program, we insist, is utterly inadequate," Edelman said. "Urban blight cannot be checked without a substantial public housing program, equal to at least 10% of the total new housing starts for that year.

"CIO takes the position that a minimum of two million new housing units of all types are needed every year for the next 10 years. This gives us the figure of 200,000 low rent public housing dwellings a year."

He registered "bitter protest" against Congress' action in assigning, every year, the decision of how many housing units shall be built to a "notoriously hostile subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee." They meet behind closed doors, he said, and the members refuse to study the considerable data which justifies a housing program of the dimensions urged by CIO.

The subcommittee, he charged, "insulates itself so that the emotional stench and impact of the monstrous and tragic conditions . . . in the slums of America do not disturb what we believe to be an inexplicable obduracy in refusing to face facts and human needs."

Too Much

The American Bankers Association—whose membership is understood not to include slum dwellers—is afraid the Administration's housing program may result in too much housing.

In contrast to CIO and other critics of the program's inadequacies, John A. Reilly, an ABA spokesman, cautioned that it might go "beyond that necessary to satisfy a real need for homes or of the available credit means from private enterprise sources to safely finance such programs."

Akron CIO, AFL In Joint Drive For Public Housing

AKRON labor will sponsor a referendum to revive low-rent housing as a result of a trip to Washington.

This became known when Leo Dugan, executive secretary of the Summit County CIO Council, and Robert Shuff, legislative representative of the AFL Trades Council of Summit County, appeared before the House Appropriations Committee.

They came to Washington with mayors of three Akron area communities to urge the committee to put up funds to support Pres. Eisenhower's proposal to build 35,000 public housing units a year for the next four years. The National CIO has urged that 200,000 units be built every year.

Dugan and Shuff were joined in their plea by three mayors: Leo Berg, Akron; Robert Carson, Barberton, and Elmer Wolf, Cuyahoga Falls. The Akron Chamber of Commerce, which in 1952 took part in defeating a referendum for public housing, supported the request.

The five-man statement pointed out that a 1953 survey by the United Community Council of Summit County "revealed a total of 450 families in the low-income level, living in undesirable, substandard housing."

PLEA for more federal low-rent housing was made at Washington by this group of Akron area municipal, labor and business officials. They are (from left): Mayor Elmer Wolf, Cuyahoga Falls; Ray Myers, Mayor Leo Berg, Akron; Leo Dugan, CIO Council; Rep. Ayres (R. O.); Robert Shuff, AFL; Mayor Robert Carson, Barberton; Edward Erickson; John Brittain, Akron Chamber of Commerce, and Leo Goodman, who acted as a adviser to the group at request of the CIO Rubber Workers.

On 'The Richest Hill On Earth'—

Butte Miners Push For CIO Election Victory

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

THE DEMANDS of thousands of Montana copper miners to return to CIO and the free American labor movement reach a decision next week on Butte Hill.

For five days, from Mar. 22 through Mar. 26, miners and smelter workers in Butte and nearby Anaconda will vote in a National Labor Relations Board representation election.

The choice will be between the CIO Steelworkers — to which two big Butte locals now are affiliated—and the crumbling Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

And the issues, CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe told a series of campaign meetings in Butte early last week, are these:

1. Strong, effective unionism as USA-CIO affiliates.

2. A drive to boost up the wages and improve the conditions of Anaconda Copper Co. workers.

3. An end to collaboration of the Communist-line Mine-Mill officials with the company which leaves Butte area workers at the end of the line. (See adjoining column for story on Riffe's address.)

Covers 8000 Workers

Involved are some 6000 members of Butte Miners' Union No. 1, Local 6001, USA-CIO, and another 2500 in the nearby Anaconda Mill and Smeltermen's Union, Local 6002, USA-CIO.

The strong CIO campaign, led by Steelworkers Intl. Rep. Nick Zonarich, is being waged in historic mine-union country, of which copper-rich, mile-high Butte is the center.

Butte Miners Union No. 1 is the oldest local of miners in the West and is known as the "parent organization" of unionism of the hard-rock mining industry.

First organized in 1883, it took the lead in calling together the then isolated miners' organizations to form the historic Western Federation of Miners, which later gave way to Mine-Mill. Since expulsion from CIO in 1949 Mine-Mill has lost upwards of 150 locals and 100,000 members.

A CIO victory in the strategic Butte-Anaconda area, a "keystone" in the mining country, will undoubtedly lead to future Steelworkers' gains in other Western states, and even into Canada, Zonarich said.

"When the miners and smeltermen in Butte and Anaconda knock out the commie-led Mine-Mill, thousands of others throughout the West will follow them," Zonarich said "Mine-Mill, already reeling, will be virtually wiped out, and the miners and smeltermen will have completed a great service to their country and their union."

CIO SUPPORTERS like these crowded a hall in Butte to hear Mine-Mill described as "bankrupt" by CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, himself a former miner.

Superior

The chrome ore mine at Nye, Mont., less than 200 miles from Butte, is the only mine in the state at which miners' have the protection of a collar-to-collar provision. They work under a CIO Steelworkers contract.

'Collar-to-collar' means that miners are paid from the time they enter the mine, until they leave it. Without such a provision, miners frequently spend nine or 10 hours underground while being paid for only eight.

Every mine at which the Steelworkers have a contract enjoys a collar-to-collar provision. Not a single mine under Mine-Mill contract in Montana has a collar-to-collar provision.

All of the mines in Butte, and the smelter in Anaconda are properties of the Anaconda Copper Co., giant corporation which controls the fabulously wealthy "richest hill on earth" on which Butte is built.

The USA-CIO found wages low, working conditions poor, and a high rate of accident and occupational illness plaguing the workers. Without a union strong enough to achieve them, much less enforce them, there were no adequate safety measures to protect workers.

Strong Union Program

The USA-CIO met this sorry situation with a driving, 16-point program which called for a 25% general wage increase, and a forceful safety program which would put an end to bad blasting practices, eliminate disease-causing smoke and dust, and establish effective union safety inspection committees.

The blighting anti-labor influence of Anaconda Copper is felt on the state level, and Montana is without an adequate workmen's compensation act. A key section of the USA-CIO program calls for a determined fight for legislation for a decent compensation act, including rehabilitation provisions.

Another central demand is for a collar-to-collar pay provision in the next miners' contract. The guaranteed annual wage, strong grievance procedures, paid pension plans, health program, sickness insurance, improved holiday and vacation provisions, veterans benefits and an ore-conservation program also are important sections of the steelworker's program.

"The CIO is an organization that gets things done for the workers, and the miners and smeltermen of Butte and Anaconda know that," Zonarich said. "We are confident they will dump the ineffective, weak, subversive Mine-Mill once and for all, and return to the American labor movement."

JOHN V. RIFFE, CIO executive vice-president and director of organization, last week talked to more than 1000 workers in two mass meetings of miners and smeltermen at Butte and Anaconda, climaxing a three-months' organizing drive by the CIO Steelworkers.

"I know what it is to be a miner," Riffe told the workers. "I know what you're thinking about when you go down deep into those mines. There is no life anywhere across this country harder than a miner's life."

Riffe told the workers of his own experiences, of entering the mines at the age of 14, and of the long and often bitter struggle of miners to organize unions. "The miners lifted themselves up to where they could hold up their heads and say to everybody, 'I'm proud to be a miner,'" Riffe said.

"Workers and their wives and their children here are suffering because of a weak and discredited organization which can do nothing for them—and because somebody wants to keep this so-called labor organization in power," the CIO leader said, referring to Mine-Mill.

Company Aids Reds

"The company wants to keep Mine-Mill in power," Riffe charged. "Then when you get into negotiations, the company will be dealing with a weak and vulnerable union."

Riffe characterized Mine-Mill as "a political party, subject to the dictatorship of a foreign power."

"We are not going to yield to a dictatorship," he said firmly.

Referring to a Mine-Mill accusation that the CIO program in Butte and Anaconda was "pie in the sky" and "yachts and Cadillacs for the workers," Riffe said: "You're told by a bankrupt organization that these things in this program are dreams. Pension, medical plans, health insurance, collar-to-collar pay—these things are not dreams. They are realistic, already won by the CIO in other areas. They can and will be won here.

"We know that there's more here for the workers and their families. We know you are entitled to more. As our slogan says, 'In CIO—there's more in '54.'"

'Mine-Mill Backed Reds —That's Enough For Me'

THE COMMIE-led Mine-Mill union in Butte was condemned when a former firm supporter led a walkout of miners from a meeting which took half of the gathering with him.

The disillusioned miner was Jim Hartzell, rank-and-file miner who works in one of the Butte mines. He told the CIO Steelworkers:

"I was pretty sold on Mine-Mill. I was chairman of the grievance committee and several other important committees. As a reward for all this, Mine-Mill made me a delegate to an Anaconda Council meeting.

"At that meeting, Jack Clark, president of IUMMSW, said we should encourage the sale of our copper and other minerals to Russia and Red China in order that we could have jobs. That was enough for me. I resigned my chairmanships, and refused to run for a union office I had been nominated for.

"I told the miners about how Mine-Mill wanted us to send our stuff to the Iron Curtain countries, and said 'I'm going to walk out of this hall and out of Mine-Mill and never come back and any of you guys that agree with me can join me.' To my surprise about 50 miners—more than half of the meeting, got up and left with me.

"We all joined CIO after that. I personally found out that all the things CIO was saying about Mine-Mill being Commie-dominated was true. I'm for CIO a 100% now, and so are all my friends."

DIRTY AND WET—that's copper mining. These miners going off shift have showered and changed from digging clothes in their "dry room." Behind them is a "gallows frame," which supports wheels for cables that lift ore-filled buckets to the surface.

Award To UN Groups—

Philip Murray Honored At N.Y. Ceremony

DEVOTION to humanity was theme of talks honoring late Philip Murray at dedication of Murray Information Room at New York offices of American Assn. for the United Nations. At left, former Sen. Frank Graham of North Carolina joins Mrs. FDR and union leaders praising work of deceased CIO head. Center: Murray's portrait dominates AAUN library room; shelves contain volumes on UN and international affairs. Right: Part of the audience at dedication ceremony. The room was made possible by a grant from the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation.

"ANDREW CARNEGIE was the builder of America's steel industry empire. And Philip Murray helped transform that empire of steel into the commonwealth of steel."

The words were those of Frank Graham, former liberal Senator from North Carolina, now an official of the United Nations. The occasion: dedication of the Philip Murray Room at the New York headquarters of the American Association for the United Nations.

Before a group of nearly 200 people from labor and the international field, a handsome portrait of the late president of the CIO and the United Steelworkers was unveiled by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The picture hangs in the Information Room of the association, at 345 E. 46th Street, New York—just across from UN headquarters.

Endowment of the room was made possible by a $15,000 contribution to the Association from the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation. Mrs. Roosevelt is on the public advisory board of the Foundation and chairman of the board of governors of the UN association.

The room is described as "a lasting memorial to the late Philip Murray, a great American and a great leader of men, who believed and proclaimed that human rights should be the inalienable and sacred possession of each person, regardless of race, creed, or color or national origin."

Presiding at the dignified unveiling ceremony was Emil Rieve, head of the CIO Textile Workers Union and chairman of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation. He said the memorial room "perpetuates Philip Murray's interest in the United Nations and world brotherhood."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey talked of Murray's "bedrock of integrity and soundness of logic" and his interest in promoting links among the democratic peoples of the world.

Vice-Pres. James Thimmes of the Steelworkers brought greetings from USA-CIO Pres. David McDonald. He cited Murray's hope for the success of the United Nations as an outgrowth of the man's deep humanitarian instincts.

Mrs. Roosevelt, introduced by Rieve as "a gracious lady," spoke feelingly of the close personal ties between Murray and FDR.

"Philip Murray believed that the defense of human relationships was the basis for our democracy," she said, "and he stood up for his beliefs."

Oscar De Lima, chairman of the board of the AAUN, expressed the organization's thanks to the Murray Foundation, and paid tribute to Murray's interest "in all causes that serve the people of the world."

The gift to the AAUN was voted by the Murray Foundation last year. It is expected that other Foundation gifts will be announced in the next few months.

CIO Radio Show Gains Applause Of Public

CIO'S RADIO program has entered its second six months—with solid indications from around the nation that the nightly ABC newscast featuring John W. Vandercook has won a sizeable and growing audience.

Unsolicited mail coming to the CIO and Vandercook expresses appreciation for his hard-hitting comments about reactionaries and foes of civil liberties—and his penetrating observations on every phase of the news at home and abroad.

And the "commercials" have proven to be a definite hit with a lot of listeners. Those announcements talk about the CIO, its views on important matters of the day, and the significance of the union label of the CIO Clothing Workers and other unions.

Veteran radio experts say they've rarely seen so much praise for commercial announcements, and for Frank Hardin, the popular announcer on the CIO show.

Perhaps it's because the CIO commercials are designed, in the manner of Adlai Stevenson's campaign speeches, to "talk sense to the American people"—in this case about trade unions, their practices and ideals.

Officials of the Henry J. Kaufman advertising agency of Washington, which handles the CIO account, say that they've received many comments about the show from business and advertising sources.

Letters Voice Praise

Perhaps it's the mail that best tells the story of the reception among the public. Some of it, of course, is critical—of the CIO, the commentator and the viewpoints.

But the large bulk is distinctly complimentary. Many of the people who write say they never understood CIO's attitudes and policies before hearing them on the commercials. Many praise the CIO for sponsoring a liberal voice, like John Vandercook, on radio during this year of intense political feeling.

Here are excerpts from some typical letters:

- "I should like you and your sponsor, the CIO, to know how much we appreicate the broadcasts . . It's heartening to find an honest, liberal analysis of the day's news," says a man in Kansas.
- "I think the CIO program is both dignified and inspiring, and I am not a member of any union," says a lady in New York.
- "Clearest explanations of the background of stories I've ever heard," says a Pennsylvania newspaperman.
- "Brilliant commentary . . . I like the commercials, too," writes a man from Texas.
- "I'll be sure my auto products are union made and that any new suit I buy has the Amalgamated label," writes a gentleman from New Mexico.
- "Best news show on the air," says a gas station man in Georgia to a CIO field representative.
- "The only commercials I don't turn off," writes a man from San Francisco.

CIO union members seem to like the show, too. Anonymous questionnaires distributed at several CIO council conventions show a high proportion who say they like it.

Numerous CIO union officials cite many instances of receiving congratulations from leading figures in their community for the service CIO is performing in bringing these news and interpretation programs into their homes.

At present, the CIO radio show is being heard over 155 stations of the ABC network. Station outlets blanket most of the highly-populated areas of the nation. Ohio, for instance, hears the CIO show on 11 stations; Pennsylvania on 10; Michigan, New York, North Carolina on seven; Alabama and Georgia on six; and half a dozen key states have five stations broadcasting the Vandercook show.

Audience measurement rating services show the CIO program gaining steadily in terms of listening audience. That's true in big cities like Chicago, New York, Pittsburgh and Detroit—and in smaller areas like Seattle, Albany or Dallas.

'Don't Have Horns'

Sponsor magazine, a trade publication in the radio-TV field, took a look at the CIO's show last January—and came up with the conclusion that the radio program is being well used to convince the general public that "unions don't have horns."

"The program is aimed primarily at the general public, rather than the CIO's own membership," the magazine said. "It wants to dispel the idea held by some that 'all unions do is go on strike'—by informing people of the functions and services of the union and how it aids the community."

One radio station manager, Sponsor magazine recalled, didn't want to carry the program at the outset. "This same manager has since said that he is 'proud of airing the show, due to favorable reaction,'" the publication said.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY.—Here's a typical view of John W. Vandercook, delivering his nightly broadcast on ABC Radio under CIO sponsorship. Newscasts now are in their second six months, winning a growing audience.

Quote

Typical of John W. Vandercook's comments on the day's news is this quote from a broadcast about Army Sec. Steven's capitulation to Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.):

"There is no worse mischief (Sen. McCarthy) has done than his patronizing remark to Stevens that he was no doubt ill-advised by 'holdovers from the past Administration.' Every ranking officer in our services is a 'holdover from the past Administration.' And what of it? So was Mr. Eisenhower."

A Biography Of Political Contrasts—

Old 'Fighting Bob' Is A Story Of Hope

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

ANYONE interested in public affairs who reads the fascinating two-volume biography of the senior Robert M. La Follette will be looking for clues to the mystery of how a state which sent to Congress one of America's finest and most courageous defenders of the rights of the people also elected, 21 years later, a man with the medieval outlook of Joe McCarthy.

The early part of the La Follette biography was written by his wife, Belle, who worked on it until a few days before her death in 1931. Mrs. La Follette brought the story of her husband's life from his birth in 1855 and his early years on a farm up to 1910 and service in the U. S. Senate.

From then until his death in 1925, the story is carried on by Fola La Follette, first-born of the four La Follette children.

History Of His Times

La Follette's life story, like that of all great statesmen, is a history of his time. The biography is a monumental work of 1305 pages which took years of careful labor.

Countless letters, notes, texts of speeches, laws and bills were gone over, and material from them woven into the narrative of "Fighting Bob's" eventful career in Wisconsin and in Washington against special privilege for the rich and powerful.

The appearance of this biography now, when the never-ending struggle to protect the basic rights of the people seems to be at such low ebb, is most timely. It is an inspiring story that should be a source of encouragement to those in public life trying to follow in his tradition.

It is good that the La Follettes were a congenial family and wrote letters to each other and to friends constantly. For it is from these letters, written fresh after and during the stirring events related, that the biography gets its vivid "I was there" tone.

We see through the concerned eyes of members of a closely-knit, friendly family events that sometimes rise to a high dramatic pitch—particularly during the World War I period, when La Follette and other progressives were opposing Pres. Wilson's preparedness program.

Tension On The Floor

There is the breath-taking episode, for instance, during the filibuster which La Follette led against the bill to arm merchant ships. Rumors spread in the Senate that a violent attack was going to be made on La Follette. The Senate was in a state of near-riot, and La Follette in the midst of the uproar asked his son, Bob, Jr., to bring him his little black bag in which he carried a revolver.

Without telling his father, Bob, Jr., took the gun out of the bag, fearful that La Follette in his excitement might draw it. Later, frozen with fear, Bob watched as Sen. Ollie James threateningly stalked his father with a gun under his coattails, and Bob thought with horror that it looked as though he'd sent his father unarmed to his death.

Then Sen. Harry Lane (Ore.) got a rat-tail file from his office and took his stand close to the Wisconsin Senator, ready to stab James if he drew his gun to fire on La Follette. The crisis passed without bloodshed, although feeling against La Follette ran high in the Senate, and the press throughout the country attacked his for many months.

Still Labor's Policies

Examining La Follette's policies as a whole throughout his long career, it's interesting to note how many of them were the same or similar to the policies for which labor today is still fighting.

The Wisconsin Senator fought stubbornly for the conservation of public resources. He opposed the coal and oil bill of the day which, under guise of permitting mining on public lands, would ultimately permit title to public lands to pass to big corporations.

He fought the Esch-Cummins Railroad Law guaranteeing high profits and forbidding strikes. He sought abolition of injunctions in labor disputes and advocated legislation recognizing labor and farm organization "for the purpose of collective bargaining in industry, trade and commerce."

He supported a tax program levied in proportion to ability to pay. He battled for many months to free seamen from virtual slavery by forcing passage of the famous La Follette's Seamen's Act.

Backed Civil Rights

And he fought for repeal of the Espionage and Sedition Act and sought to restore constitutional liberties wiped out during World War I.

(The same record of devotion to civil liberties was built up by Young Bob La Follette, who succeeded his father in the Senate in 1925.

(The extensive and thorough investigations of the La Follette Civil Liberties Investigating Committee, which exposed industrial espionage and union-breaking by many big corporations, remain as an enduring monument to him.

(After his death in 1953, the National CIO convention honored him as "a great liberal son of a great liberal father" who "fought valiantly for the cause of humanitarianism in the Senate . . .")

Career Began Early

Old "Fighting Bob's" politicial career began when he was only 24. Over the opposition of Republican party bosses in Dane County, he was elected district attorney. In 1884, he was elected to the House, serving six years. Then came three notable terms as Wisconsin's governor and, in 1906, advancement to the Senate.

Presidents as well as men in Congress were stung by La Follette's eloquent tongue, for he never hesitated to oppose them when he felt their policies were against the people's interests.

He took on practically every President in office during his public life when he thought they were wrong, and upheld them regardless of party when he felt they were right.

His conflict with Woodrow Wilson over his war policies was a battle of the giants that was all the more spectacular because the two men earlier had often agreed. But La Follette felt that Wilson's attitudes had changed.

The account of the bitter struggle between these two outstanding figures of the day is exciting reading. Even more tense is the story of the wild campaign of slander that fell upon La Follette at the height of the war, when he was called a traitor.

Rollin Kirby of the New York World drew a series of anti-La Follette cartoons, one showing the mailed fist of Germany pinning an iron cross on La Follette's breast. Many years later, he wrote a deep apology in which he said:

"Time has brought a better sense of values to me and I have come to see that what seemed to me at the time as the action of a willful, unpatriotic man was, on the contrary, a brave fight against an overwhelming tide of chauvinism and war hysteria. Few men have had to pay such a high price as Sen. La Follette for their convictions. It is with profound regret and humiliation that I remember that I added my tiny bit to his burden."

Shortly before his death, La Follette said to his son, Bob:

"I am at peace with all the world but there is a lot of work I could still do. I don't know how the people will feel toward me, but I shall take to the grave my love for them which has sustained me through life."

Among the papers on his desk at the Capitol, these words scribbled on a pad just before his last illness were found:

"I would be remembered as one who in the world's darkest hour kept a clean conscience and stood to the end for the ideals of American democracy."

"FIGHTING BOB" La FOLLETTE, CAMPAIGNING FOR PRESIDENT IN 1924
There's quite a contrast with a certain present Senator from Wisconsin.

When The People Are Confused—

The record of the constant struggle of the late Sen. Robert M. La Follette to advance the rights of the people reads strangely today in the light of the current activities of Wisconsin's present Senator, Joseph McCarthy (R.).

McCarthy defeated La Follette's son, Robert M. La Follette, Jr., in 1946. The younger La Follette had served since 1925, when he succeeded his father on the latter's death.

The sad reversal in the political roles played by the contrasting Wisconsin Senators is often commented upon, but there really is no mystery about how it could happen. His biography reveals that the same forces which now back McCarthy were as powerful in the senior La Follette's day as they are now—in some ways more so.

A tremendous faith in the people was the cornerstone of La Follette's political philosophy. If he were alive today, he would be the last to blame the people of Wisconsin for electing an enemy of democracy like McCarthy. He'd say that it was because the people were confused, that the propaganda of selfish politicians had fooled them. He always believed that if the progressive forces campaigned hard enough to get the facts to the people, they would vote right.

Call The Roll

The late Sen. Robert M. La Follette used to make a practice of reading the congressional roll call in speeches he made on the Chautauqua circuit and during election campaigns, according to his biography.

The effect often was startling. On one occasion an unhappy candidate for reelection was on the platform when La Follette read his voting record. He was forced to listen red-faced to the boos and hisses that greeted his wrong votes.

Labor's World—

'Soviet Cynicism' Stalled Berlin Talks, Says ICFTU

FAILURE of the recent Berlin Conference to reach an agreement on Austria constituted a "most flagrant example of Soviet cynicism," the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions said in a statement expressing the "profound disappointment" of free workers with the outcome of the four-power parley.

Only Soviet insistence on indefinite maintenance of occupation forces in Austria blocked a treaty, Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek said. Germany, he added, must remain divided because "the Soviets do not dare to permit really free elections."

The ICFTU spokesman welcomed the decision to hold a conference on the problems of Korea and Indochina, "insofar as this represents a genuine effort to eliminate what are undoubtedly constant threats to world peace."

ICFTU VIEWS on uniting Germany and concluding a treaty for Austria, given the four foreign ministers at the opening of the conference, were welcomed in a reply from Sec. of State Dulles.

The sustained efforts of himself, Foreign Minister Bidault of France and Foreign Minister Eden of the United Kingdom were directed toward the same objectives the ICFTU urged, he wrote.

"That they were not accomplished is due to the intransigence of the Soviet Union and fundamentally its fear of freedom," said Dulles. "It is a source of satisfaction to me to know that these basic policies are supported by the ICFTU, representing as it does 54 million trade unionists throughout the free world.

"It is equally gratifying to know that these millions of workers are aware of the true reason why the hope of the German people for peaceful unification continues to be thwarted and the hope of the Austrian people for a peace treaty remains unfilled."

Italy

Communists in Castel-Franco Emilia, one of their Italian strongholds, have literally priced 62 workers out of the party.

CIO Kits Aid Italian Union Organizing

Organizing campaigns by free Italian unions in the metal industries are being pushed with the help of supplies and equipment given by the CIO through the Free World Labor Fund.

Affiliates of the Confederazione Italiana Sindicati Lavoratori (CISL and the Unione Italiana del Lavoro (UIL) are using the materials in their campaigns to improve the lot of metal workers and release them from Communist domination. The kits, distributed by CARE, contain a typewriter, duplicating machine, stapler, replacement parts, and accessories, and a year's supply of ink, paper, and staples.

They withdrew, as one explained, because "membership was a luxury I could not afford."

He said he did "well" if he earned $270 cash a year, but in 1953 "they took more than $40 from me." He helped pay for everything from party newspaper printing bills and funerals to providing bail for jailed comrades and presents for party officials, he added, maintaining "they were always asking for something, but never gave anything."

Old Age Foe Won't Run Again

Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), chairman of a House committee that studied social security revisions and came up with recommendations closely resembling U. S. Chamber of Commerce proposals, will not run for reelection.

The fifth ranking GOP member of the House Ways & Means Committee, his announcement was in the nature of a surprise, since a few weeks earlier he had denied rumors he intended to retire.

New Mexico Labor Pact Set As Congress Keeps Heat On

NEGOTIATIONS FOR a new U. S.-Mexico migrant labor agreement have been concluded in an "atmosphere of cordiality and mutual respect," spokesmen for both governments announced last week.

The agreement was reached while Congress was passing "blackjack" legislation requested by the Administration to set up a "go it alone" recruitment program over Mexico's protests.

Opponents charged that the measure was intended solely to make Mexico accept U. S. demands for changes in the old agreement which expired Jan. 15.

The signing of the agreement without prior enactment of the "go it alone" bill was a major victory for labor, church and consumer groups. Archbishop Robert E. Lucey of San Antonio joined opponents to warn that the Administration's attempt to "blackjack" Mexico was a serious threat to the Good Neighbor Policy.

SHORTLY AFTER that date, the U. S. broke off negotiations and actually attempted unilateral recruitment of Mexican workers on this side of the border. This was brought to a halt when the Comptroller General ruled it illegal. In the short time it was in effect, the unilateral program caused riots along the border and widespread resentment in Mexico.

The Administration nevertheless attempted to rush legislation to legalize its "go it alone" program through Congress. The CIO protested vigorously and urged that negotiations be resumed with Mexico. This was ordered shortly thereafter by Pres. Eisenhower.

Although the resumed negotiations were reported proceeding "satisfactorily," Republican leaders in both Houses of Congress went ahead to push through the bill authorizing the U. S. Labor Dept. to hire Mexican braceros on this side of the border for work on the big corporation farms of the Southwest.

The new pact changes the former agreement to open a recruiting station at Mexicali and reactivate stations at Monterrey and Chihuahua in response to U. S. requests for recruiting posts near the border. Mexico formerly insisted recruitment be carried on in the interior.

The bill stirred intense anger in Mexico. The Mexico City newspaper, Novedades, declared flatly: "The Republican Party has always used the policy of the big stick."

CIO Pres. Reuther then wired Pres. Eisenhower urging him not to sign the bill into law, pending the conclusion of negotiations. Thus far, the President has withheld his signature.

Meanwhile, Reuther backed up his earlier testimony that underpaid Mexican labor is causing widespread unemployment among U. S. farm workers. He sent the President two sets of petitions signed by more than 3000 citizens in the Imperial and Salt River Valleys stating their availability for work at fair wages and under fair conditions.

"The hardship and anxiety dramatized by these petitions seems to us to emphasize the need for working out a fair bilateral agreement between the Republics of the U. S. and Mexico with proper protection for the citizens of both countries," Reuther said.

The House last week passed and sent to the Senate a bill to spend $478,000 to finance U.S. recruitment of Mexicans until June 30, the end of the fiscal year. A much higher sum has been asked to maintain this subsidy for big corporation farms next year.

Kefauver Gets PAC Aid In Primary Race

SOME 500 delegates to the Tennessee CIO-PAC conference at Nashville last week unanimously voted to support Sen. Kefauver in the Democratic primary.

Rep. Sutton will oppose Kefauver in the primary, with the possibility of another candidate yet to announce. Attendance marked a new record for a Tennessee PAC meeting or convention.

"Crime leaders and racketeers, oil interests and utility trusts will pour money into the State to defeat Kefauver," warned CIO Reg. Dir. Paul Christopher.

The conference also supported the re-election of Gov. Frank Clement, who is being opposed by former Gov. Gordon Browning in the Democratic primary.

The meeting adopted a broad program to increase participation of women in politics; a resolution condemning the Eisenhower Administration's position on the Tennessee Valley Authority, and another urging support for the "oil for education" bill.

Leonard Evans, Maryville Steelworker, was re-elected State PAC chairman.

McCarthy Takes A Powder In Libel Suit Against Benton

WITHOUT giving any immediate reason for his action, Sen Joseph R. McCarthy (R. Wis.) withdrew his $2 million libel and slander suit against former Sen. William Benton (D. Conn.).

Benton, who had accused McCarthy of "fraud and deceit," said that the law suit was politically inspired from the first and was "never a genuine legal suit" to recover damages.

"He could never have won it because I told the truth about him and he knew it," Benton said.

McCarthy's suit, filed in March, 1952, charged that Benton, then a member of the Senate, libeled McCarthy in trying to have him expelled from the Senate.

BENTON TOLD a Senate elections subcommittee the Wisconsin junior Senator had committed perjury, fraud and calculated deceit of the American people in pressing his charges that Communists had infiltrated the government. The suit was filed after Benton waived his Senate immunity.

WILLIAM BENTON

"Senator McCarthy refused to face examination under courtroom conditions," Benton said. "I can understand why. In 1951, I demonstrated to the Senate that McCarthy had been guilty of fraud and deceit. I proved it by citing 10 cases."

'Man Of Steel' Tells Story Of USA Pres. McDonald

"MAN OF STEEL," a biography of Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO United Steelworkers of America, has been announced for publication Mar. 21 by the North American Book Co.

The book was written by Edwin H. Beachler and George Kelly, Pittsburgh newspapermen, and carries an introduction by Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York City.

The book reports, according to the advance announcement, the "51-year-old union president is thoroughly steeped in the traditions of the labor movement, but has come to some conclusions about wage negotiations and bargaining techniques that have not always been accepted."

The volume tells about McDonald's early working life in the steel mills, his long association with the late Philip Murray, and his views on a number of important issues in the realm of labor, national and international affairs.

In the introduction, Mayor Wagner comments that "this book foretells for steel an era of good will, good relations, good wages, good conditions and yes, good profits, for the steelworkers and the steel industry under the able leadership of Dave McDonald and his counterparts on the industry side."

You And Your Money—

'Dairy Dividends' For Needy Urged To Ease Farm Surplus

A NATIONAL Dairy Diet Dividend Act to "improve the nation's health standards," and "use America's dairy abundance" to aid underprivileged families was introduced in the Senate last week by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

The Humphrey Bill, which was also sponsored by Sens. Long (D. La.), Morse (Ind. Oreg.), Mansfield (D. Mont.) and Kerr (D. Okla.), calls for issuance of "Dairy Diet Dividend Certificates" to individuals eligible for public assistance benefits.

The certificates would enable them to buy, at discount prices, the minimum monthly amount of dairy products required to satisfy the nutritional needs of a proper diet, Humphrey explained. He said the benefits would extend to some 12 million people.

"For the past year I have insisted that the soundest answer to our dairy problem was stimulating outlets for milk, not cutting prices to farmers," the Minnesota Democrat said. "Instead of giving away dairy products outright, my bill would raise the purchasing power of our less fortunate citizens for the minimum essentials of a correct diet of dairy products to a level equal with the average per capita income in this country."

ANOTHER plan to aid needy families through subsidized sales of surpluses came with the introduction of a bill by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) and 19 other senators. Kerr's plan, reminiscent of the food stamp plan of the 1930's, calls for issuance of $10 certificates monthly to public assistance recipients with which they could buy surplus products at prevailing prices.

Humphrey pointed out if his bill only enabled welfare recipients to get one extra quart of milk and a half pound of butter a week, "it would mean a new outlet for 624 million quarts of milk and 312 million pounds of butter a year." He noted these amounts would "more than wipe out any so-called dairy surplus and make it unnecessary for heavy government purchases and storage of such commodities."

"Sec. Benson says there would be no surplus if the American people consumed the amount of milk and butter they should have in their diets," Humphrey noted. "Why not make it possible for them to do so?"

The same eligibility standards would apply for "Dairy Diet Dividend Certificates" under terms of the measure as now apply for old age assistance, aid to dependent children, aid to the blind, aid to permanently and totally disabled, federal old age and survivors insurance, unemployment compensation, or public assistance rolls of any state or subdivision. Existing federal, state and county welfare departments would carry out the program.

Benson Charged With Flim-Flam On Costs

A charge that the Agriculture Dept. and Sec. Benson have engaged in "misrepresentation" of costs of the farm price support program has been voiced by Sen. Ellender (D. La.).

Ellender said that misleading figures have been issued in an effort to "paint the picture as black as the blackest ink," in an effort to put over the Administration's plans to weaken farm price supports.

For example, Benson recently claimed before the Senate Agriculture Committee that the program cost more than $16 billion in the 1932-53 period. In January, he had estimated the cost at $7.5 billion. The latter figure, covering operations of the Commodity Credit Corp., is correct; the whopping $16 billion covers all Agriculture Dept. operations over the 21 years.

Niagara Power Bill Backed By ACWA

PROMPT enactment of the Lehman-Roosevelt Bill to develop the great resources of Niagara Falls "in the public interest" was called for last week by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers.

In a letter to Chairman Martin (R. Pa.) of the Senate Public Works Committee, Potofsky urged rejection of the Case, Capehart and Ives measures on the grounds that they would hand over exploitation of Niagara to private interests without regard to the public.

Speaking for the ACWA-CIO's 385,000 members, Potofsky noted that the Lehman-Roosevelt proposal provides safeguards to insure power preference to governmental agencies, domestic and rural users and to cooperatives both in New York and adjacent states.

"Moreover," Potofsky said, "the bill looks toward progressive reduction of utility rates."

The committee, Potofsky reminded Martin, "bears the momentous responsibility of deciding whether the Niagara's vast resources shall be dedicated to the welfare of all the people or to the special interest of a few utility companies."

LEHMAN TOLD the committee he proposes that New York State own, construct and operate the generating stations but that the safeguards specified by Congress would be effective. He attacked other measures because they turned the river's potential over to private firms or to New York State exclusively.

Earlier, a Senate probe of the power monopoly in the Pacific Northwest was called for by Albert C. Ullman in a letter to Sen. Langer (R. N. D.), chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee investigating anti-trust violations.

Ullman is president of the Idaho-Oregon-Washington Hells Canyon Association and a member of the executive committee of the National Hells Canyon Association.

ULLMAN URGED the Senate subcommittee to investigate actions of Interior Sec. McKay which he called "contrary to the anti-monopoly clauses of the Bonneville Act in at least five respects."

The public power leader also said that private power companies have signed 20-year contracts with the Bonneville Power Administration which give "a $10 to $20 million 'windfall' to private utilities."

Hospital Fund Voted By House

The House passed an authorization bill providing $182 million in the next three years in federal aid for construction of nonprofit diagnostic centers, hospitals for the chronically ill, rehabilitation centers and nursing homes.

Actual appropriations for the new building program must come later in separate legislation. The current budget carries a $62 million item to get the program started.

Jersey CIO Hits Inaction Of Legislature

MORE THAN 400 delegates have been summoned to a conference in Trenton on March 29 by the New Jersey CIO Council to exchange views on pending State legislation.

The conference call denounced the "delay, indecision and reaction" of the Republican-controlled Legislature.

"Despite the overwhelming election last November of Democratic Gov. Robert B. Meyner," it said, the Legislature has continued "with only slight modification, its obstructionist tactics."

"Not a single major bill had been passed when the Legislature recessed on Feb. 19 for a month-long vacation until Mar. 22," it said.

The council called for enactment by the Legislature of a bill to end the one-week waiting period for unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits.

South St. Paul Women Active In PAC Drive

Members of the women's auxiliary No. 6 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers are lending a hand with political action work in South St. Paul, Minn. They have been helping with registration work at the county courthouse. Also under way is a drive for new members.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

TO BUY MORE for your money, you need to know not only the how of shopping as outlined in the Ten Shopping Principles, in last week's article. You need to know where and when to buy; which stores specialize in certain items at a lower price than others; which are potential sources for savings.

Department stores and many of the so-called specialty shops are not cheap at their regular prices. But if you know your way around the sales you can find real savings. But you have to be a selective shopper. Some sales offer only jerry-built goods not worth the original prices, or novelties of dubious value even when marked down. Sometimes stores exaggerate claims of former value; such sales offer no better buys than a store down the street may provide at its regular charges.

Shopping The Sales

Not long ago, two department stores advertised in the same New York newspaper the same day the identical dress; a silk print with a floaty peplum and draped hipline. One store advertised it at $16.95, with no claim of sale price. The other store's ad, several pages back, proclaimed: "Sale! . . . $16.95. Regularly at $24.95."

Pays To Be Skeptical

It does pay to be skeptical. But from an intimate knowledge of how stores operate, I can tell you it doesn't pay to scoff at sales. Even if you won't save as much as some ads glibly promise, you can buy for less if you're a well-informed opportunist.

Some types of store, of course, set higher prices on comparable goods than others. The woman who shops on Wilshire Blvd. in Los Angeles or on upper Fifth Ave. in New York naturally pays for the fluent service and more exclusive styles. The profit of these stores runs as high as 50%.

Go downtown and you find the crowds in the stores thicker and the sales-people more harried, but you still get free delivery, charge accounts, fairly liberal returns. In the latter type of store the margin is a shade under 40%. Chains and specialty stores that offer little or no service bring their portion of the selling price down 35% or less.

You'll find deeper price cuts at clearances than at other types of sales. They're mainly of fashion merchandise. Fashions are too perishable to hold in stock long, and stores will give reductions up to 50% if need be to clear them, with the price cuts averaging 20% to 25%.

The special purchase type of sale doesn't offer as great savings as the clearance but is more frequent, provides wider selection, and occurs during the season, rather than at the end. Special purchase sales normally offer average savings of 15% to 20%.

The Smallest Reductions

Annual events like the twice-a-year sales on branded lines of men's shirts, women's shoes, slips, and hosiery, offer the smallest reductions (averaging 10% to 15%) but are considered by store people to be the most reliable sales. It's standard merchandise; it sells at one price all year; at the end of the sale it returns to the regular price. Besides department stores, chain stores and specialty shops are sources for this type of sale.

Sometimes stores bring in additional merchandise to round out clearance stocks. Store officials admit this new merchandise does not represent as great savings as the things reduced from their own stocks, and when fresh goods are included the store is expected by local Better Business Bureaus to tell the public that, too.

(The above report is digested from The Consumer's Guide to Better Buying by Sidney Margolius, on sale at newsstands. A Signet Book, 35c.)

'Beware The Busher' With His Fancy Cards, Car Buyers Told

"Would you take $1400 for your automobile in trade on a _____?"

If you find a card like that stuck on your auto windshield—and chances are you might, come spring and the auto industry's sales drive—you're about to be taken on a bumpy ride by a "busher."

Best thing to do is to ignore the "bait" and trade only with a reputable auto dealer, says the national Association of Better Business Bureaus in a leaflet titled "Beware the Busher."

The BBB described "the busher" as "a parasite among automobile dealers. He's out to get your dollar—and he doesn't care how." And it warned:

"IF YOU SHOULD be sucker enough to fall for his "bait," he'll push you around with all kinds of excuses and alibis to pressure you into taking a much lower trade-in allowance.

"Or he'll deliberately mark-up the price of his car and its accessories. You're the victim either way!"

The BBB reported the rising volume of consumer complaints against "bushers" are beginning to worry the majority of auto dealers. During 1953, BBB local units handled 91,668 inquiries and complaints about auto sales practices.

The Better Business group offers several suggestions. The best is "don't fall for the dealer's bait." Others are, complain to the car dealer involved, to municipal authorities or to your Better Business Bureau.

AND THE NEWS

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

THE MINERS and smelter workers of Butte, Mont., are coming to the climax of their campaign to achieve genuine trade union representation. Under the leadership of the United Steelworkers of America-CIO, these thousands of men are moving hard to free themselves of the control of the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter organization.

For many years the courageous local leadership in Butte has carried on a fight to win benefits in spite of their so-called national leaders, and in spite of a tough company management which has exploited the weakness of Mine-Mill for its own advantage.

I had the opportunity to talk with these workers at a Sunday mass meeting, and again on Monday, in their local high school—a talk that was broadcast throughout the surrounding area.

Because the company controls the local press, and because of Butte's remoteness, large numbers of these mine and smelter workers have no real sources of news from the outside world—but they have the realization of the issues. They know that a Communist dominated organization cannot do a job for the workers. And they know that the United Steelworkers of America, through its hard-hitting democratic trade unionism, is offering them the opportunity to gather their entire strength for the struggle to win the security and dignity that should come through the labor movement.

MY STAY in Butte made it impossible for me to attend the dedication of the Philip Murray Memorial Information Room at the Association for the United Nations, in New York.

I believe the Phillip Murray Foundation, under the chairmanship of Pres. Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers made a wise decision to undertake this project. It is truly in keeping with the spirit of Philip Murray. His humanity knew no boundaries, nor was it reserved for any race or creed or color of man. It is fitting that such a project should be launched to keep alive the memory of one who did so much to bring unity among the workers of his nation and all the world. Philip Murray believed deeply in the strength that united action brings not only to workers, but to all the peoples of the earth.

BEFORE TRAVELING to Butte I attended an historic meeting of the Canadian Congress of Labor. This historic occasion was the first formal liaison set up between the CCL and CIO. From now on, we will exchange observers, who will attend each other's executive meetings.

The leaders of CCL had high praise for the help and guidance given them by CIO. In my discussions with CCL officials we understood that we had many problems in common that would call for joint action before a solution could be achieved. The two organizations are in whole-hearted sympathy with the aims of each other, and a high degree of cooperative action has been pledged.

Canada is going through a great period of industrialization and organizational problems are increasing. The CCL is moving hard and fast to meet these problems and should win the grateful approval of all trade unionists for its efforts.

IUE Executive Board Sets Sights On Raises, Other Contract Gains

AN ALL-OUT campaign for wage and other contractual gains will be waged this year by the CIO Electrical Workers.

That decision was made at a New York City meeting of the executive board of the union, which shortly will open contract discussion with the two "giants" of the electrical equipment industry—Westinghouse on Apr. 1 and General Electric on Apr. 20.

Other chains with which the 400,000-member union has contractual relations include the General Motors Electrical Div., Radio Corp. of America, Sylvania, Philco, Emerson and DuMont.

High on the list of campaign goals is the guaranteed annual wage. IUE-CIO also called for a substantial wage increase to improve living standards and reward workers for increased productivity which gave the industry tremendous profits in 1953.

The board noted that the end of the excess profits tax in January means a profit increase of at least $80 million for GE and $22 million for Westinghouse.

It also observed that GE and Westinghouse appeared to be working together in withholding payroll data requested by IUE-CIO for the guaranteed annual wage negotiations.

THE UNION also called for corporation-wide hiring minimums of $1.25 an hour, equal pay for equal work to protect women workers, and the same profit sharing for workers as is accorded management personnel.

Other planks in the IUE-CIO campaign platform are pension, health and welfare improvements, at least nine paid holidays with no strings attached, improved sick and funeral leave, better incentive pay, improved conditions for salaried workers, and the union shop where not now prevailing.

The IUE board noted that government figures for February possibly will show four million jobless workers, and demanded an increase in income tax exemptions and the minimum wage rate, and a public works program to relieve unemployment.

It unanimously adopted the report of IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey criticizing the Republican party "for a deep-seated crisis which is likely to end in the dominance of McCarthy or a McCarthy-Dewey alliance."

Carey, who also is CIO secretary-treasurer, accused the Eisenhower Administration of "backtracking on the promise of a higher minimum wage and on Taft-Hartley." He also attacked the GOP for proposing a government-conducted strike vote and for its social security proposals which, he said, would delay benefits for most persons for many years.

House Labor Unit Defeats Industry Bargaining Ban

THE HOUSE Labor Committee continued its drafting of a bill amending the Taft-Hartley Act by voting:

- To reject, 17 to 7, the amendment by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.) to outlaw industrywide bargaining and ban industrywide strikes and lockouts.
- To approve, 21 to 4, a revision sponsored by Rep. Metcalf (D. Mont.) to clarify the unfair labor practice section by specifying that employers must bargain only with "recognized or certified" unions.
- To turn down, 18 to 6, a proposal by Rep. Smith (R. Kan.) to outlaw the union shop.

Meanwhile, the Senate Labor Committee began consideration of its own bill for Taft-Hartley revisions.

Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) said that Republican members have agreed to back a plan requiring union strike votes by secret paper ballots. Pres. Eisenhower has called for government-supervised votes.

The New Jersey Republican also said that his committee is planning a broad inquiry into union welfare and retirement programs, similar to one already initiated by the House Labor Committee.

TRIAL EXAMINERS for the National Labor Relations Board should be political appointees, says Philip Ray Rodgers, an Eisenhower appointed NLRB member.

Rodgers suggested that if examiners were appointed by the President it might help enhance public acceptance and support of the board. It might also make their recommendations more palatable to labor and management, he thought.

A system similar to that of naming federal judges was proposed by Rodgers although he didn't say whether the appointments of examiners should be for life. He said no greater political influence would attend examiners' appointments than those involved in the present system of naming federal judges.

Bill To Prevent Food Poisoning Approved

The House Interstate Commerce Committee last week approved a bill to prevent people from being poisoned by pesticides left on food. The proposal would give the Food and Drug Administration new authority to restrict the use of insecticides on farm products marketed as food until they have been found safe.

IUE On TV

The CIO Electrical Workers have filmed for television the recent meeting of the IUE-CIO's General Electric Conference Board at New York City. The movie will be shown over television stations in all communities where there are GE plants.

Carey Sees 'Rough, Tough' Bargaining

THE OUTLOOK for industrial relations this year is "rough, tough and nasty," Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers told a Fordham Univ. conference in New York City.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, added that labor has reason to believe that Congress and the National Labor Relations Board are unsympathetic to its problems.

Contract Wage Floor No Ceiling, High Court Says

THE U. S. SUPREME Court took a unanimous slap at employers who regard the minimum wage in government contract bids as a guaranteed pay ceiling.

Chief Justice Earl Warren declared that wage specifications are there to protect workers from substandard earnings, not to benefit contractors. The court ruled on a case involving a flood control project along the Chemung River in Elmira, N. Y.

In accordance with the law, the call for bids said hourly wages of $1 and 50c would have to be paid carpenters and laborers, respectively. The contractor found he had to pay $1.25 to carpenters and 62.5c to laborers, and sued to recover the difference.

But Warren said the wording of the law "cannot convert the contractor's obligation to pay not less than the minimum into a government representation that the contractor will not have to pay more."

TWUA Gets Hike

CIO Textile Workers at the Ruberoid Co. plant in Millis, Mass., received wage gains of 3c-8c an hour in a new three-year contract. The firm took over full payment of a pension system which was formerly contributory.

Annual Wage Pact Won By Brewers

THE CIO Brewery Workers have won the guaranteed annual wage for the driver-salesmen of the Louisville, Ky., Coca-Cola Bottling Co.

The union said it was the first guaranteed annual wage obtained in the soft drink industry, and that the plant is one of the largest Coca-Cola bottling establishments in the U. S.

The wage provision incorporates the base rate and commissions for the year in the guarantee, and also provides for payment of a 5% yearly bonus.

The agreement also provides route security for the driver-salesmen, based on individual security. Also won were good vacation and paid holiday provisions, and insurance—the latter a departure from the company's past practice.

GCEOC Gets Wage Talks

REPRESENTATIVES of Local 7, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, last week planned to meet with the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission to discuss working conditions.

The local represents several hundred workers who collect refuse and maintain the water and sewer systems in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties, Md., adjacent to Washington.

The local had called a meeting to plan a strike vote, but tabled the proposal on the advice of Martin Wagner, assistant to the GCEOC chairman, upon the receipt of a letter from WSSC saying it was willing to meet with union representatives.

CIO Backs Fair Play Code For Congressional Probes

CIO SUPPORT for a code of fair procedures to guide congressional committees was pledged last week, with a warning that no set of rules would be a "panacea."

Thomas E. Harris, CIO assistant general counsel, told the House Legislative Procedure subcommittee that CIO endorsed the resolution by Rep. Hugh D. Scott, Jr. (R. Pa.) "in general." He said it could "help to bring about substantial improvements in committee procedures" but other efforts are necessary.

"If the bare adoption of a code were regarded as solving the problem, adoption might do more harm than good," Harris declared. "For there is no final cure save the election of congressmen who have respect for individual rights, a sense of fair play, and enough self-restraint to curtail congressional investigations to their proper fields."

Harris said that any code of fair procedures to curb congressional excesses and secure fair play to individuals is limited by the very nature of the investigations themselves.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"Yeah, We Really Ought To Do Something About It"

Some congressional probes, he charged, have "had no legitimate purpose, but have been started, or carried on, simply to advance the political futures of participating congressmen through sensational publicity."

"The cure for abuses of these investigations," he said, "is to stop the investigations. The houses of Congress should be far more restrictive in authorizing investigations by special investigating committees than they have in the past."

A FURTHER weakness of codes of procedure, Harris said, is that their enforcement must rest largely in the hands of the congressional committees and their effectiveness therefore depends principally "upon the sense of fairness and self-restraint of the committees themselves."

"This is not too reassuring as to the effectiveness of the proposed code, as some of the committees which have heretofore been guilty of questionable procedures already have procedural codes of their own which look pretty good on paper," he continued.

Harris suggested that the Scott resolution be modified to:

1. Require the assent of a majority of a committee or subcommittee to the calling of an unwilling witness.

2. Provide that subpoenas must be served at least one week in advance of the date set for hearing to allow witnesses adequate time for preparation.

3. Make transcripts of testimony available to witnesses without charge.

4. Provide that, when the committee knows in advance that defamatory testimony is to be given at a hearing, the person adversely affected shall be given notice sufficiently in advance so that he can be present at the hearing and reply at that time.

5. Establish the right of maligned persons to call witnesses who will appear on his behalf either voluntarily or under subpoena, subject to the concurrence of the majority of the committee.

Conceding that congressional committees "would never get anywhere if they had to proceed as slowly and meticulously to the proof of an issue as do the courts," Harris said this is one reason why they should stop trying to deal with those issues that can only properly be resolved in the courts.

Statehood Bills Are Combined

The Senate voted last week to add statehood for Alaska to the pending bill granting it to Hawaii—a day after Pres. Eisenhower had urged separate consideration for the two territories.

The vote, on a motion by Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.), was 46 to 43. Three Republicans — Sens. Butler (Md.), Langer (N.D.) and Malone (Nev.)—joined with 42 Democrats and Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) to assure passage.

NEW MITCHELL AIDE.—J. Mitchell Wilkins (left), new assistant secretary of labor for international affairs, and Labor Sec. Mitchell hold a press conference at which Wilkins' nomination to the post by Pres. Eisenhower was announced.

Beirne Hits Butler Bill As Peril To Unions

LABOR UNIONS "would be convicted first and tried after" under the terms of the Butler Bill, according to Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers.

The measure would be a "partial abrogation" of civil rights, Beirne warned in a statement filed with the task force of the Senate subcommitte on internal security.

The bill filed by Sen. Butler (R. Md.) has as its stated purpose the hampering of communism in unions but instead would have the effect of crippling unions, according to Beirne. He added:

"The only effective way to combat Communism in the labor movement is through the efforts of honest, loyal, vigilant trade unionists who are sensitive to the danger. It is clear that the legislation now under consideration would operate to frustrate the efforts of loyal trade unionists."

"The prime consideration," the CWA-CIO head went on, "should be to assure that the rights of loyal Americans are preserved and not chiseled away. Yet under the Butler Bill, organized labor would be prostrate before the onslaught of Communist infiltration."

BEIRNE charged the measure would provide that any person could claim that a union was dominated by Communists, whether officers or not. This would lead to an investigation of the charges while simultaneously issuing a complaint against the union, suspending it from action as sole bargaining agent on certification by the National Labor Relations Board.

"The charge has not been proven. The labor union has not been convicted. It has not had an American trial," Beirne noted, but while the question of its guilt or innocence remains undetermined, it has been deprived of all its rights, and all of its members have lost the right to bargain as a group."

Flanders Uses Scalpel On McCarthy

A CONSERVATIVE New Englander, Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.), charged that Joe McCarthy is shooting in the wrong direction.

Flanders told the Senate last week that the red-hunting campaign of McCarthy is diverting the nation's attention from the "dangerous problems" faced abroad. Pointing to the Communist danger in Europe, Asia and South America, Flanders questioned McCarthy's role in the "age-long war."

"He dons his war paint," Flanders said, "he goes into his war dance, he emits his war whoops.

"He goes forth to battle and proudly returns with the scalp of a pink Army dentist. We may assume that this represents the depth and seriousness of Communist penetration in this country at this time."

Flanders called upon McCarthy to "right about face" and "view the larger scene and the real danger."

"Let him not work to conceal the mortal danger in which our country finds itself from the external enemies of mankind. The dangerous attack is from without, not within," Flanders advised.

Brownell Hits Any Curb On Wiretapping

ATTY. GEN. Brownell wants authority to use wire-tapping only on his own say-so.

Last week he asked the House Judiciary subcommittee to strike out a section of proposed legislation calling for a court order before phones can be tapped.

Chairman Keating (R. N.Y.) reported Brownell's views are shared by FBI Dir. J. Edgar Hoover. Brownell contended that going into court to secure permission to use a wire-tap would slow down investigations and increase the possibility of leaks.

The subcommittee had already approved a bill which would authorize the use of evidence collected by wire-tapping in tracking down spies and saboteurs so long as it was obtained with a federal court order. The measure was called back for more study after Brownell's objections.

Two Humphreys In The News—

What A Difference The Name Makes!

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY
Don't confuse Minnesota's fighting Senator . . .

IT SEEMS ONLY yesterday that life—public life, that is—was relatively simple, what with but one Humphrey in the nation's headlines.

Then the Republicans made a comeback. Life changed. No longer was it comparatively serene and uncomplicated, for the Original Humphrey, for the headline writers, indeed for the public. Chaos became rampant, confusion burgeoned, for another Humphrey emerged on the national scene.

Thus a plaintive protest welled up recently when the Original Humphrey, Hubert by name and a (Democratic) Senator from Minnesota by occupation, took the floor and pleaded that his fellow solons, the copyreaders, the public in general and his constituency in particular not hold him guilty for the sins of the Other and unrelated Humphrey—George by name, Secretary of the Treasury by occupation and a Republican by predilection.

"I have been," said the Senator, "a bit bewitched, bothered and bewildered by some headlines about Humphrey. I am not too happy about picking up my daily paper and reading 'Humphrey Raises Interest Rates', 'Humphrey Against Tax Reduction', and 'Humphrey Finds No Urgency in Action to Stop Recession'.

"And I am sure the public must often be confused when it further reads other headlines, in smaller print to be sure, saying 'Humphrey Protests Boosts in Interest Rates', 'Humphrey Favors Tax Reduction,' and 'Humphrey Urges Action To Halt Recession.'

"I am sure it is increasingly necessary to make one thing clear. There's no relationship between Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and Sec. of the Treasury George Humphrey."

"Just for the record once more," he reiterated, "THIS Humphrey is FOR tax reductions; THIS Humphrey is FOR action now to stop the recession.

"If you read otherwise, it is the OTHER Humphrey they are talking about.

"This Humphrey has to run for office, and go out and face the people; the OTHER Humphrey does not. I can't help but wonder. Can this be the Republican Party's new secret weapon to try and unseat THIS Humphrey next fall?"

Tax Give-Away Rammed Through House

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE REPUBLICAN'S unhomogenized tax bill—cream on the top for the big boys and skim milk for the rest of us—was rammed through the House late last week.

By a close margin, the House rejected Democratic moves to give increased income tax exemptions to low and middle income families—a proposal aimed at increasing consumer purchasing power and guarding against depression.

This proposal, to boost exemptions from the present $600 to $700, went down by a roll call vote of 210 to 204. The tally was mostly on party lines, 193 Democrats and 10 Republicans voting for the higher exemption, 201 Republicans and nine Democrats against it.

ON A FINAL roll call vote of 339 to 80, the House approved the GOP program that will give about $2.75 billion in assorted tax relief to the 335,000 families which own the bulk of the country's publicly-held stock, and about $250 million to the rest of the nation. The count was 208 Republicans and 131 Democrats for passage; five Republicans, 74 Democrats and one independent against.

The give-away bill, which now goes to the Senate, will drastically cut income tax rates on dividends paid on stock and permit faster depreciation allowances on plants and equipment, benefits which will be reaped almost exclusively by the wealthiest families and by big corporations.

It also contains a series of "disaster" clauses containing small benefits for families hit by certain hardships—larger deductions for medical expenses, special consideration for widows and widowers who have to pay for care of small children, and special treatment for beneficiaries of private and fraternal pension plans, and for those who are retired.

The battle over a fair tax law now shifts to the Senate, and the George Bill to increase exemptions by $200 this year and another $200 next year.

The Question

Whatever tax laws come out of Congress will determine whether "the Administration's heart belongs to daddy or to daddy's boss," the Ohio CIO Council said last week.

"What we shall see decided is whether tax relief is to go to all the people or to a privileged few," the council said in urging all CIO members and other Ohioans to ask their congressmen to apply the principle of fair play in their consideration of tax reductions.

Action in the House came after a cross-fire debate between Pres. Eisenhower and Democratic congressional leaders over the two big issues of (1) GOP special tax favors for stock shareholders and (2) Democratic moves to give a real tax savings to low and middle-income families through increasing personal tax exemptions.

The President, in a radio-TV address to the nation, said higher exemptions would imperil revenue necessary for national defense.

The Democrats blasted the GOP tax measure as a "trickle down" bill which would benefit "the few" and deny aid to "the many," a formula which the Hoover Administration tried and found wanting in the 1929 depression.

The President went into some detail in defending his proposal, which was accepted by the House Ways and Means Committee, to give tax relief to the 335,000 families who own the bulk of the country's stock by lowering rates on their dividends.

He cited this as a provision "of particular interest to those among you who have made or want to make investments to help meet the expenses of a growing family or of old age."

THE PRESIDENT also hit at proposals to boost the income tax exemption from $600 to $800 this year and $1000 in 1954, as Sen. George (D. Ga.) has proposed. An increase by $100 would cost $2.5 billion in revenue, he said, and a boost to $1000 would cost $8 billion.

"The $1000 exemption would excuse one tax-payer in every three from all federal income taxes," he claimed. "The share of that one-third would have to be paid by the other two-thirds.

"I think this is wrong. I am for everyone paying his full share . . . The good American doesn't ask for favored position or treatment . . . I must and will oppose such an unsound tax proposal . . .

"Every dollar spent by the government must be paid for either by taxes or by more borrowing with greater debt. To make large additional savings in the cost of government at this moment means seriously weakening our national defense."

The Democrats blasted Eisenhower's stand in a radio-TV program on which their spokesmen were George, House Minority Leader Rayburn and Rep. Cooper (D. Tenn.), ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee.

"The truth of the matter is," Rayburn said, "that if you are one of those millions of Americans who earn less than $5000 a year, the Republican tax program offers you little or no relief at all."

George recounted the decline in the exemption from $3000 for a single person and $4000 for a married person, from 1913 to 1916, down to the present $600. Every time it has been cut, he said, Congress has acted with the intention of restoring it to the original level.

IN TERMS of the 1939 dollar, when the exemption was last at $1000 for a single person, the present $600 "is equivalent to only $300 for the purchase of shelter, food and clothing—the bare necessities for all taxpayers," the Georgian said.

Cooper analyzed stock holdings to show that only a favored few at the top of the economic pile would benefit from the GOP program. Under it, he said, a taxpayer with a wife and two children who has an income of $4000 from wages will pay a tax of $240, but if the income is from dividends on stocks, he will pay only $110.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) also joined in the attack on the Eisenhower speech, declaring it merely "follows the give-away pattern that has become the hallmark of the Administration."

(The House roll call vote on the tax bill will be printed in the next issue of The CIO News.)

Dim-Out

Television networks were accused of imposing a "virtual dim-out" on the Democrats' answer to Pres. Eisenhower's tax speech.

Democratic National Chairman Stephen Mitchell said only five TV stations carried the Dumont network broadcast and only two the National Broadcasting Co. rebroadcast, compared to an estimated 100 stations showing the President. Failure to give the Democrats "equal time" raises "serious questions about the fairness and impartiality" of the industry, he charged.

What Eisenhower Failed To Say—

Big Boys Get 95% Of GOP Tax Benefits, Rest Of Us Only 5%, Reuther Protests

Comment by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther on Pres. Eisenhower's speech last week follows:

SEC. OF THE Treasury Humphrey has performed a great disservice to both the President and the nation in proposing a tax program based upon the discredited trickle-down theory of Andrew Mellon.

Unemployment has tripled in the last five months because millions of American families lack the purchasing power needed to buy the products of our farms and factories. Tax legislation can be an important stimulant in expanding the purchasing power of the American people.

Unfortunately, the President failed to tell the American people that 95% of the tax cuts in the Administration's tax proposal would go to corporations and wealthy families, and only 5% of the total tax reduction would go to the great majority of American families with incomes under $5000 a year.

The Administration's tax proposal will increase the standards of luxury of families who already have more than they need, but will fail to increase the standards of living of millions of families who have too little. This is not only unfair and inequitable, it is dangerous at a time when industrial production and farm income have dropped sharply, and unemployment continues to grow.

The way to create jobs is to create customers, and the way to create customers is to increase purchasing power. Raising personal exemptions will put billions of high-velocity purchasing-power dollars in the hands of middle and low income families. This is the most powerful and positive anti-depression weapon available to the government at this time.

CIO Officers Meet In N.Y.

The CIO Executive Committee and Executive Board will meet at the Textile Workers headquarters in New York City on Monday and Tuesday, Mar. 22 and 23, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther announced last week.

Big Jobless Climb—

CIO Urges U.S. Halt Depression Rush

GOVERNMENT action now "to halt this dangerous rush toward full-blown depression" was demanded by CIO last week, as new unemployment figures shot even higher.

The latest Commerce Dept. figures, covering the month ending in mid-February, showed:

- Unemployment increased by 584,000 workers to a total (under a new and wider survey) of 3,671,000.
- Each month the increase in unemployment is getting bigger, despite frequent Administration claims that it is "leveling off."
- The job layoff climb now is at a much faster rate than in the last period of economic recession. In the five months since last October, unemployment has tripled; in the same 1948-49 period, it doubled (see story below).

And the layoff trend continued into March, judging by the Labor Dept.'s weekly report on new unemployment compensation claims (which cover only a part of unemployed workers).

In the week ending Mar. 6, new benefit claims were 318,872. That was 10.7% above the previous week and the highest for that period since World War II.

STREET SCENE—Here's part of a 500-man soup line in Portland, Ore., center of lumber industry where seasonal unemployment has been heavy. Line is near Blanchett House, voluntary relief center. (Photo courtesy of The CIO Woodworker.)

Considerable confusion was caused by the two sets of Commerce Dept. figures. The "old" survey showed an unemployment increase of 1,026,000 to a total of 3,385,000. That survey is being dropped in favor of the "new" sample covering more industrial areas.

The new jobless figures "are a disgrace to America," said Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy and Textile Workers president.

He called on Pres. Eisenhower and Administration leaders in Congress to "substitute action for words and promises and prediction," saying:

"It is essential that the government stop whistling in the dark about the economic problems facing every American, and get to work—now—to halt this dangerous rush toward full-blown depression.

"There is no consolation for the unemployed workers—now, by even conservative government count, numbering almost four million — that the statisticians guessed wrong, or underestimated the extent of joblessness.

There is no joy in the fact that the cheap words of cheap politicians about 'gloom and doom boys' have been buried in the avalanche of unemployment facts.

"How long must we wait for government action to cope with the need of restoring full employment? How many more meaningless statements from ivory tower economists will we need to read or hear about 'readjustments' or 'spring pick-ups' or 'long range automatic natural economic forces'?

"American workers, employed or unemployed, want action, not words; a sense of reality, not wishful thinking or romantic sentimentality.

"Congress and the Administration should get to work in order that the people may have jobs. A first step should be to increase the personal tax exemption from $600 to $800 a year to build buying power.

"We need a greatly expanded unemployment insurance program now; we need improved social security — now; we need high minimum wages—now; we need a real housing program—now; we need a public works program—now."

Layoffs Climb Faster Than In '49 Dip

Unemployment has tripled in the last five months, from fall to midwinter, climbing at a much faster rate than in the same period of the 1948-49 recession when the jobless total doubled. Here are the comparative monthly unemployment figures:

This Recession . . .		. . . The Last One
October '53	1,162,000	October '48	1,642,000
February '54	3,671,000	February '49	3,221,000
5-Month Climb	2,509,000	5-Month Climb	1,579,000

Here are the month-by-month figures since last October on employment:

Month	Total Unemployment	Monthly Increase	Total Civilian Employment
1953
October	1,162,000	.....	62,200,000
November	1,428,000	266,000	61,925,000
December	1,850,000	422,000	60,764,000
1954
January (Old)	2,360,000
(New)	3,087,000	510,000	59,753,000
February (Old)	3,385,000
(New)	3,671,000	584,000	60,051,000

(Note: The two sets of figures for the last two months are based on separate Census Bureau samples. Both surveys cover 25,000 households. The old survey is limited to 68 areas, while the new covers 230 areas.)

Local 301 Switch Aids IUE As GE Wage Talks Near

THE BARGAINING position of the CIO Electrical Workers with the General Electric Co. was further strengthened last week as Local 301 at the firm's main plant in Schenectady, N. Y., was chartered in IUE-CIO.

In a series of fast-moving events Local 301, largest in the electrical industry, repudiated the Communist-ruled UE and formally voted to rejoin the CIO.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey welcomed the 20,000 members of the local into "one united democratic organization."

"We feel certain," Carey said, "that not only will we always remain united in the future but that our unity will expand and intensify as other UE locals follow the path of Local 301 into the IUE-CIO."

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, indicated the IUE would move for an immediate election under National Labor Relations Board auspices. This, he said, would give Local 301 an opportunity to become a "completely integrated autonomous part of IUE."

HE EXPRESSED hope that UE and the company would consent to an immediate election. Carey scored the "delaying and disruptive" court action filed by UE to halt the transfer of affiliation.

Two meetings last week formally confirmed the polls taken within the plant earlier. At one session the vote was unanimous to secede from UE. At the other, only 14 votes were cast against the action. Earlier, more than 12,000 signed petitions calling for a shift to IUE-CIO.

Local 301, Carey said, would join with the 78,000 other GE workers represented by IUE to face the company in negotiations which open next month.

Roll Call

The action-packed meetings at which Local 301 left the UE to join IUE-CIO were covered by tape recorder and sound camera.

The standing vote at one meeting was unanimous. In fact, UE Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak was caught in the surge of rising unionists. The developed films will show him standing to be counted in "favor" of affiliation with IUE-CIO.

The IUE head called the Schenectady vote "a tremendous repudiation of UE's Communist leaders, Organizational Dir. James Matles and Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak." He added that the vote also repudiated UE for "its ineffectiveness as a trade union, its inertia as a collective bargaining agent and its isolation from the mainstream of the American labor movement."

Carey earlier had called on UE Pres. Albert Fitzgerald, Matles and Emspak to resign their positions and "leave the labor movement forthwith."

At last week's formal secession meetings Matles and Emspak were permitted to speak by the membership of Local 301. They subjected Carey to vicious personal attack and were bitterly critical of Business Agent Leo Jandreau and the local officers who led the move to IUE-CIO.

JANDREAU replied there was nothing illegal in the affiliation switch, pointing to the in-plant poll which is traditional with Local 301.

Follow-up action against other GE units began almost immediately after Local 301's dramatic switch. The local sent a group to the GE plant in Rome, N. Y., where UE is the bargaining agent, to distribute IUE leaflets at the plant gates.

Layoffs Climb In Youngstown As Steel Production Declines

TWIN burdens of layoffs and shorter work weeks are hitting members of the CIO Steelworkers in Youngstown, O., one of the nation's major steel production centers, as steel output dropped to the lowest rate of the year.

Press dispatches reported 12% of the 65,000 steel workers in the Youngstown district have been laid off, while another 17% are working less than 40 hours a week.

The figures were developed by a USA-CIO Dist. 26 survey. Exact figures were 7950 workers laid off and 11,172 working short hours.

Steel production last week was at a scheduled rate of 67.8% of capacity, down from 69.3% the previous week. A year ago, the steel industry was operating at more than theoretical capacity.

At Philadelphia, CIO Auto Workers Local 813 reported that almost half of the 10,000 workers at the Budd Co. plant have been laid off. Layoffs total 4700 seniority-classified workers in the auto supply plant.

The nation's factory production now has dropped for seven straight months, and failed to show the usual February pickup, according to the Federal Reserve Board. The output drop last month was 1.6%, to a level of 10.2% below last spring's record.

Facts Will Win— And PAC Has 'Em

PRINTED MATERIAL for the campaigns ahead is starting to roll from the CIO Political Action Committee.

'54 Facts on Social Security, a 40-page booklet, has just made its appearance. Similar in format to the '52 Facts series that was so popular, it is available at 3c a copy from CIO-PAC, 1346 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Also available in quantity without charge is a leaflet, "Speak Up for Prosperity," which outlines the CIO's anti-depression program. Ready within a few days will be a 24 by 36-inch poster with the message, "Register today so you can vote for a better tomorrow." The posters will sell for 10c each.

For the Privileged: Relief

The House of Representatives, in a hairline decision, has voted tax relief to those who need it least—America's giant corporations and top-income families.

By a six-vote margin, the House refused to give tax relief to all the people by increasing everyone's personal tax exemption. Instead, the majority in the House bought the package of economic nonsense which Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey had earlier sold to Pres. Eisenhower.

Thus a measure which would have given our faltering economy a much-needed shot in the arm has been temporarily defeated. Instead of more consumer purchasing power, the House has now arranged for already hard-pressed consumers to shoulder an even greater share of the tax burden.

Now the scene of battle shifts to the Senate, where there will be one more opportunity for defeating a tax bill conceived in the image of Andrew Mellon and dedicated to the theory that "them that has, ought to get more."

The Senators will have a clear choice. They can vote for the President's measure, which grants 95% of its tax relief to corporations and wealthy families, and only 5% to that vast majority of Americans in the under-$5000-a-year income group.

Or the Senate can vote for an equitable tax relief bill, one which gives every income taxpayer an equal break. That's the road the CIO has advocated, and will continue to advocate. For not only is it fair, but it is economically smart. It will increase living standards, increase customers and increase employment.

All CIO members can help win this battle. They can do it with letters, wires and phone calls to their Senators. There isn't much time left.

Still Giving Away

The rumpus about Joe McCarthy, growing unemployment, the fight for fair tax cuts—all have obscured the fact that the Republican give-away program is moving steadily forward.

The current CIO Economic Outlook, reviewing congressional activity on federal electric power problems, shows a steady trend toward handing over of our natural resources to private interests:

- Small farmers, whose rural electrical cooperatives grew like mushrooms during the Roosevelt-Truman period, are facing dictation on power rates from profit-hungry private corporations.
- Private parks and grazing reserves are being eyed hungrily by numerous pressure groups who care little about the country's future resources as they grab for dam sites and grazing land on federal preserves.
- The Senate has voted a little-publicized but scandalous bill to remove many gas utility firms from regulation by the Federal Power Commission—and the fact emerges that the law firm of Ohio's Sen. Bricker, who led the fight for cutting FPC jurisdiction, had heavy retainers from a big gas firm directly affected by the Senate's action.

Could it be time for a change—in the give-away policy or the men in Congress who support that policy?

When?

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey posed a good question in his Speech to the Pennsylvania CIO Council—one we all would like to see answered.

"I know when Eisenhower was elected and when he was inaugurated," Carey said. "What I'd like to know is: when is he going to become President?"

In Other Words—

Reds Tighten Grip On Guatemala

The increasing grip of the Communists on the government of Guatemala was dramatized by that country's walkout from the Conference of American States at Caracas. The effect of communism on the Guatemalan labor movement is considered in an article, excerpts from which are below, by Robert J. Alexander. It appeared in the Inter-American Labor Bulletin, publication of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT).

By ROBERT J. ALEXANDER

RECENT EVENTS in Guatemala have demonstrated the power which the Communists have in the labor movement, thanks to the influence they have with the government, in spite of widespread dislike for the Stalinists in the rank and file of many unions.

The Confederacion General de Trabajadores de Guatemala (CGTG), which met in January, is completely Communist-controlled, and this fact was reflected in the meetings. There were representatives present from Communist-controlled international organizations. The meeting received a special message of greeting from the Soviet "trade union."

The leaders of the CGTG announced that the organization had grown considerably during the previous two years. Most trade unions belong to it, the only important group outside being a regional federation in Quetzaltenango, second city of the republic, which has steadfastly maintained its independence.

Reds Move Against Peasants

The Communists are using the CGTG as their weapon for penetrating the peasantry. The congress agreed to follow the pattern of allowing unions of small peasants who have received land under the agrarian reform to remain in the CGTG, instead of passing over to the peasants' organization, the Confederacion Nacional Campesina.

The reason for the Communists' concern is that their control over the CGTG is absolute, while their hold on the CNC is tenuous at best. The CNC has officially protested to the National Agrarian Dept., which administers the agrarian reform, that the department has shown undue favoritism to the CGTG and the Communist party.

The Communists are likely to find some difficulty in absorbing the CNC—or in destroying it if they choose that alternative. It has wide support among the peasants and there is no question of the loyalty of its leaders to the Guatemalan revolution and agrarian reform.

The Communists will certainly need the government's full support to undermine the CNC. Such support they have received in the urban unions. Until the administration of Pres. Arbenz many unions had been able to remain outside Communist control. However, the Arbenz government threw its influence on the side of a type of "trade union unity" which meant in effect submitting the labor movement to Communist control.

Government support for the Communists was shown in January when leaders of the Union Nacional de Trabajadores Libres were arrested.

The UNTL had been organized some months before as a center for anti-Communist elements in the union movement. Its leadership was made up of working men who played an active part in the revolution, but had become disgusted with growing Communist influence in a movement which the Communists had had very little part in starting.

A Threatening Challenge

The UNTL had had some success in getting the support of elements in the labor movement opposed to the Communists. Several unions had agreed to affiliate, and it had established contact with other groups. It threatened to become a real challenge to the Communists.

The leaders were taken to a local police headquarters. They were held for several days during which they were frequently moved from one place to another in Guatemala City. During this period they were submitted to the most brutal tortures.

The attempt was made to get them to admit implication in the "plot" the government was at that time publicizing. Having no connection with any plot, they denied any complicity.

Thus while strengthening the Communists' control of the unions, the government is using all of its power to destroy those within the labor movement who are attempting to challenge the (Communists') power in the labor unions.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

THE SENATORIAL FIGHT to cut the powers of the President in making treaties or executive agreements with foreign countries is dying hard. It may soon be revived.

The original Bricker Amendment would have prevented treaties from becoming domestic law without approval of the full Congress. It died when Pres. Eisenhower, as did Pres. Truman before him, opposed it on the grounds that it would have seriously undermined the Presidential power to carry on the nation's foreign affairs.

The Fight Over Treaty Powers

A compromise amendment introduced by Sen. George (D., Ga.) would have given Congress control over executive agreements. It failed to get the Senate's necessary two-thirds vote, but it failed by only one vote.

Now a demand has been made that the George vote be reconsidered. The switch of a few votes might mean its adoption. But it might also mean a new Senate fight which might seriously hold up the work of the Senate, already behind schedule.

(Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations committee wants a 16-member commission to study the President's treaty making powers. Wiley, an opponent of the Bricker Amendment, introduced a joint resolution setting up a bipartisan commission which would report its findings next March.)

GOP Is In Tight Spot

Republican leadership is in a tight spot. President Eisenhower doesn't like the George amendment any more than he did the Bricker Amendment. Yet of the 60 votes cast for the George Amendment, 32, or more than half, were cast by Republicans. Among them was Sen. Knowland (Calif.), Republican Senate leader, who thus voted against the President's wishes.

Reconsideration will reopen an old sore. It will subject Republican party discipline to a new strain. Will the Republican party leadership risk reopening the issue or will it prefer to call it a day and get on with its program which is already falling behind schedule?

On the other hand, it is clear that a majority of the Senate wants some kind of legislation which would reduce presidential power in the treaty-making and executive agreement field.

Many supporters of the much stronger Bricker Amendment are strong nationalists who don't want to see the United States get any deeper into international affairs than it now is. Some of them are basically isolationists. They don't like the United Nations and might even take the United States out of the organization if they had the chance. They wanted the Bricker Amendment, despite the President, but most of them went along with the George Amendment because that was the best they could get.

The George Amendment got its heavy support in the Senate because there are a good many Senators who feel that recent Presidents have used executive agreements to by-pass the Senate. They think that some of these agreements should have been full-fledged treaties requiring Senate approval. For this reason there is much real sentiment that the Senate should get more control over executive agreements than it now has.

Some Curb Is In Prospect

In fact, some of the Senators who voted against the George Amendment voted against it only because they felt it wasn't strong enough. A satisfactory amendment on control over executive agreements would probably easily obtain the required two-thirds vote.

On the basis of the vote on the George Amendment, it would appear certain that some kind of curb on presidential power over executive agreements is in the making.

Chrysler Job Recall Proves False Alarm, UAW Protests

THE CIO AUTO Workers last week called on the Chrysler Corp. to compensate some 1300 former Plymouth employes for the expenses they incurred in answering a job summons that proved a false alarm.

The protest was registered by Emil Mazey, UAW secretary-treasurer, in a letter to L. L. Colbert, Chrysler president.

The company sent out the call to return to work, to employes who had been laid off, on Mar. 8. On Mar. 12, after many of the furloughed workers had quit temporary jobs and some had travelled hundreds of miles from their homes in the South, the increase in production was cancelled.

"Hundreds of these workers are destitute and are without means of returning to their homes," Mazey wrote.

"This shocking disregard for the rights and problems of American workers will not win new friends and customers for the Chrysler Corp. Neither will it help establish decent and proper labor relations.

"We bring this matter to your attention in the hopes that the Chrysler management will take necessary steps to discipline the people responsible for this stupidity. We demand a complete explanation for this blunder.

"We demand that the Chrysler Corp. compensate all workers who responded to the call to return to work and then found no job available, for all expenses they incurred, such as transportation, lodging, meals, etc."

Economic Outlook Says—

GOP Reversal Of Power Policy Means Scarce, Costly Electricity

THE FEDERAL power program, which broke the bottleneck of scarce and costly electric power during the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, is in the process of liquidation by the Republicans, according to the CIO Economic Outlook.

"If the Eisenhower Administration is successful in dismantling the federal power program," the CIO Dept. of Education and Research warns in the current issue of its publication, "the American people will be confronted with an inadequate supply of high-cost electric power."

A blueprint for getting the government out of the power business and giving it to private enterprise was outlined by former Pres. Hoover in April 1953, the Outlook recalls.

It called for an end to congressional appropriations for steam and hydroelectric plants "solely for power," on the ground that if they are justified, private enterprise will build them; no appropriations for new multiple purpose projects unless the electric power is first leased, and a reorganization of "this whole federal venture" under a temporary commission.

The blueprint has been followed pretty closely, the Outlook maintains. The first session of the 83d Congress killed a TVA steam plant, refused to authorize new hydro dams, and slowed down work on dams under construction. The Dept. of the Interior has reversed past policies, moving to give away the best dam sites and to negotiate long-term sales contracts with private industry over the protests of REA cooperatives.

"The consequences of the Eisenhower-Hoover liquidation policy, if permitted to go on, will be both economic and political," the Outlook warns. They include:

1. "Restoration of overwhelming control over electric power resources to the private, monopoly companies which have always sought high profits from a scarcity of power, refusing to expand until customers are lined up and waiting for energy. This will handicap economic development and increase the difficulty of maintaining an expanding economy.

2. "A freeze on the development of the great electro-process industries, which produce such defense-vital materials as titanium, aluminum, magnesium, and phosphate fertilizer needed to conserve our basic soil resources.

3. "Increased cost of extracting and using lower grade metal ores, including iron. (It will take 70 to 80 kilowatt hours of electricity to extract and concentrate a ton of Lake Superior low grade iron ore, compared to three KWH average use on usable high grade ore, according to the President's Materials Policy Commission.)

4. "An end to great regional developments like the Bonneville area in Oregon and the Tennessee Valley—which are already grinding to a stop—because the basic, revenue-providing power sites are being given away to private corporations.

5. "Increasing electric rates for homes and farms, a consequent freeze in electric power use, a slower growth in the appliance industries and a loss in living standards."

More Power Urgently Needed

Assistant Sec. of the Interior Aandahl has publicly declared that federal power rates are going up, it points out.

The Republican program of scarcity and reliance on high-cost monopoly enterprise was undertaken, the Outlook recalls, in spite of the warning of the President's Materials Policy Commission that electric energy must rise 260% between 1950 and 1975 if an expanding economy is to be maintained.

Both government and private industry must do their best, the commission said, if the goal is to be attained.

The Outlook says the Republicans and the private power companies are trying to confuse the entire issue with cries of "creeping socialism."

"Socialism isn't the issue," it insists. "Neither is any other 'ism.'

"The issue before the American people is clear and simple: Are we going to have an adequate and growing supply of electric power at the lowest possible cost?

"The practical result of the Republican policy is likewise clear: If the Eisenhower Administration is successful in dismantling the federal government's power program that was built up over the past 25 years, the American people will be confronted with an inadequate supply of high-cost electric power."

Help To Industry

What public power can mean to industry is dramatically pointed up by the difference in power bills under public and private ownership.

A manufacturing plant in Lawrence, Mass., with 500 kilowatt demand and using 200,000 KWH annually, would pay $20,000 more a year for its power under private ownership than it would in Memphis, Tenn., in the TVA area.

CONTRAST between household electric costs in areas served by privately-owned and publicly-owned utility systems is shown in this chart. In the top group, all cities are served by privately-owned corporations. In the bottom group, all the cities are served by municipally-owned systems but Spokane and San Francisco.

Looking To November—

Green Prepares For Battle In Rhode Island

MOMENTS OF HISTORY—Although he comes from the smallest state, Sen. Green (D. R. I.) has had one of the biggest parts in U. S. politics. The Democratic Party chose him to preside (picture at left) over a session of its 1952 convention, and his advice helped shape New and Fair Deal foreign policy as at this meeting (center) in 1943 with Pres. and Mrs. Roosevelt, Vice Pres. Barkley and Sec. of State Cordell Hull. Showing educational leadership, he plans Harry S. Truman Library (right) with Sen. Symington, Rep. McCormack and ex-President.

(Sixth in a series about outstanding Senators and their 1954 campaigns.)

By MILTON PLUMB

NEW ENGLAND'S tradition of devotion to learning, democracy and freedom has never been more ably represented in the Senate than it has during the last 18 years by scholarly, humanitarian and courageous Theodore F. Green (D. R. I.).

No one in Washington runs him even a close second for designation as "the nation's most cultured Senator." He's always an outstanding guest at worthwhile educational, artistic or cultural activities in the nation's capital, and as often as not he's presiding over them.

The acknowledged leader of Rhode Island Democrats, Green hasn't yet definitely decided he'll run for re-election. Most likely, however, he'll oppose Bayard Ewing, the probable GOP nominee, in the Senate race this November.

If that's the line-up, Green almost certainly will face a campaign of vilification similar to the one which Ewing, an industrialist, unsuccessfully conducted against Sen. Pastore (D. R. I.) in 1952. Out-of-state money will back Green's opponent.

Rhode Islanders, overwhelmingly behind Green for over two decades, call Ewing a "bedroom resident" because his business interests lie outside the state. Democrats point out that one Ewing family enterprise, the Alexander Smith Copper Co., recently revealed plans to move from New England to Mississippi by seeking a government tax write-off for the purpose.

Formula

A consistent defender of civil liberties, Sen. Green has worked tirelessly to curb the filibuster, yet at the same time preserve freedom of speech and minority rights.

He gives this formula for political success: "Take up the rights of the common people."

A Long Record

Probably no man in Congress has won as many distinctions in so wide a range of activities as has the senior Senator from the nation's smallest state. Yet even today, he acts much more like a modest, unassuming scholar than either the eminently successful businessman or renowned public servant he has also become.

His life-long devotion to education and the arts won him innumerable honors. He was elected a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences in 1903 and long served as trustee of Brown Univ.

Since 1908, he's been trustee and secretary of the Providence Public Library. More recently, as chairman of a joint congressional committee, he shaped policies for the greatest library in the world, the Library of Congress.

Green began as a highly successful lawyer and then entered business to become one of the recognized U. S. leaders in fields as varied as banking, railroading, real estate enterprises, and the textile industry. Once, as receiver, he ran all the railroads in Rhode Island.

What has always distinguished Green throughout his long career, however, is his deep concern for the welfare of labor and the common people. He was the first arbiter appointed by the American Arbitration Association and in his first assignment, long before the enactment of the Wagner Act, was instrumental in settling a Pawtucket strike.

When he entered politics in 1906, he won election to a one-year term in the Rhode Island House of Representatives. Even though a newcomer, he succeeded in getting laws enacted to punish bribery of voters, as well as the first law in any state, prohibiting exclusion of servicemen in uniform from places of entertainment.

A One-Man Battle

For the next 25 years, he fought a tireless—and often practically a one-man—battle to unseat the Republican machine which then dominated Rhode Island politics. There was no Democratic newspaper—not even a weekly—in the entire state. Green spent all his spare time making "soapbox" speeches in order to get the Democratic message across.

He ran for Congress in 1920 and for governor in 1912, 1928 and 1930, losing each time, although in the latter year it appeared that he had been elected until some late returns counted him out by a narrow margin.

After a quarter century's campaigning, Green's efforts finally met with success in 1932, when he was elected to the State House. He promptly pushed through the general assembly more laws benefiting labor than any other governor in the history of Rhode Island, and completely reorganized the state government.

Gets It, Too

The late Pres. Roosevelt summarized Sen. Green's services to Rhode Island when the two visited the Newport (R. I.) Naval Base in 1940. A reporter from the Providence Journal inquired what the senator had asked during their visit.

"Just what he asks me always," the President replied. "Too much and too often for Rhode Island—and he usually gets it."

His legislative program included minimum wage legislation, a child labor act which is one of the best in the country, a prevailing wage law for public works, bridge and road construction, far-reaching amendments to the workmen's compensation act, and an unemployment compensation and old-age benefit law.

Despite bitter opposition to his reorganization plans, Green was able by entirely democratic and parliamentary means to modernize Rhode Island's government. Some 40 state commissions and boards were eliminated. The then politically partisan state supreme court was abolished and replaced with a completely new—and impartial—group of justices.

A new Department of Labor was established and a special law pushed through creating a new division for women and children.

His reforms proved lasting. Nearly all have been preserved to the present time. Moreover, the outstanding administration he gave the state during his two terms as governor changed the state into a Democratic stronghold. Since he left the State House to come to the Senate in 1937, it has been occupied by a Republican governor only one term.

As a Senator, Green is one of the leaders of the liberal bloc that backed the New and Fair Deals.

A member of the powerful Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he has been sent on many foreign missions, and probably has made more speeches before congresses of the American Republics than any other American.

Green is also a member of the important Rules and Democratic Policy Committees, which together determine the fate of much legislation. His influence in Washington is almost unprecedented for a Senator from one of the smaller states, and he has served both Rhode Island and the nation well.

ROUGH RIDER—Rugged health and courage help Sen. Green on hazardous inspection trips for Congress. He's zoomed in dive bombers, made dangerous breeches-buoy transfers at sea, and (above) been shaken up in Army tanks like any G.I. at Defense Dept. war games.

FRIEND OF LABOR—Credited with having enacted more beneficial labor legislation than any other R. I. governor, Green has kept in close touch with labor in the Senate. Here he meets with delegates to a CIO Textile Workers legislative institute in Washington a few years ago.

Pennsylvania CIO Meets—

Reuther, McDonald Demand Layoff Action

By AL ZACK

MORE THAN 1200 delegates attending the 17th annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council last week roared their approval as top CIO leaders outlined programs which would improve economic conditions.

Both CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald, warned that the Administration can no longer stand idly by as the nation's economic machinery slows down.

Reuther recalled the "name-calling contest" being indulged in by Administration spokesmen, who have called Reuther "an egg-head." "I'd rather be an egg-head than an empty head," said Reuther, adding, "it seems to me time they stopped calling names, got off their rusty bottoms and got to work doing something."

McDonald told the delegates, meeting in Pittsburgh, that in "my humble judgment, the post-war recession predicted in 1946 is now upon us."

THE STEELWORKERS president said he "was not getting hysterical" but knew, from his first-hand observations on trips from coast-to-coast, that apprehension and fear of depression were growing in America.

Both the CIO leaders called for prompt action by the government to end the economic downturn, increase employment and restore prosperity.

Reuther, dealing at length with the need for increased purchasing power, warned that "unemployment breeds unemployment." He pledged the CIO to "keep fighting until every American has a job at decent wages."

McDonald likewise emphasized the need for wage increases to spur consumer spending, saying, "the great unions of the CIO are going to press for higher wages so workers can have their proper share of industry's profits."

"These earthlings are quit primitive. They don't even have a universal guaranteed annual wage."

The CIO president roundly condemned the Administration tax policy charging Treasury Sec. Humphrey "hoodwinked" Pres. Eisenhower into supporting a tax program favoring the rich at the expense of the poor.

Branding the Presidential program as the "outworn Andy Mellon trickle-down theory," Reuther said the Administration proposed to give 95% of its tax relief to the corporations and the very wealthy.

"ONLY 5% of the tax would go to those families earning under $5000 a year, though this group comprises 80% of the nation's population," he noted.

McDonald, calling for increase unemployment compensation, challenged industry spokesmen to join with labor in petitioning legislatures for increased jobless benefits. Such insurance, he said, would provide a needed prop under a sliding economy.

"It the time has come," McDonald said, "when industry can not provide full employment under an eight-hour day, then it is time employers and labor unions began to work for the six-hour day with complete compensation."

THE DELEGATES, representing 808 affiliated CIO groups in the Keystone State, also heard CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe castigate newspaper columnists and others predicting the "death of the CIO."

Cautioning the delegates to ignore this "literary garbage," Riffe said the CIO was stronger than it had ever been. "Nothing is going to split us," he added, "we are going to stand together and work harder and harder for justice and human dignity."

Riffe called for an all-out campaign to organize the unorganized and the delegates immediately responded by unanimously adopting a resolution pledging full support to organizational campaigns of CIO unions.

ANOTHER major convention speaker, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) received a warm welcome from the convention. He warned that politics was "the people's business" and added:

"When they neglect their business, they are given the business and that's just what is happening in Washington today."

Humphrey recalled the Lincoln week speeches of "self-styled Republican orators" and noted that none of them recalled Lincoln's famous words about government for the people."

"I'M NOT here to apologize for the great programs of the New Deal and Fair Deal," he continued, "I'm here to proclaim them."

As the delegates shouted approval, Humphrey added, "I for one am not going to stand idly by while some peanut-sized politicians make fun of that great liberal patriot, Harry S. Truman."

In a series of convention resolutions dealing with state legislative topics, the delegates demanded broadened and strengthened workmen's compensation and unemployment insurance, and other gains.

Pres. Harry Boyer and Sec.-Treas. Harry Block were re-elected to two-year terms in elections which wound up in the three-day session.

Carey Raps Ike For Abdicating

CIO SEC.-TREAS. James B. Carey charged last week that President Eisenhower "has virtually abdicated his responsibilities and placed them in the hands of a group of men recruited from Big Business."

In a major speech to the Pennsylvania CIO Council convention, Carey said:

"Evidentally he (Pres. Eisenhower) believes that what is good for Big Business is good for America." CIO, he pointed out, believes just the opposite, that "what is good for America is good for all of us."

Carey charged the President, through errors of omission and of commission, has "created a mess the like of which has not been seen since those dismal days in the early Thirties when another Republican Administration led this nation into the worst depression in its history."

"I know when Eisenhower was elected and when he was inaugurated," Carey continued. "What I'd like to know is: when is he going to become President."

High Court Tosses Out Oil Give-Away Protests

TWO STATES, Alabama and Rhode Island, have lost their bid before the U. S. Supreme Court to file suits challenging last year's giveaway of the "tidelands" oil properties.

The high court's action last week means that these and 42 other States may never get to share in the fabulous undersea mineral wealth now the preserve of Texas, Louisiana, Florida and California.

By its unsigned 6-2 decision the court blocked the challenge of the petitioners and the actual legal merits of the case will never be argued before the tribunal. Chief Justice Earl Warren, former governor of California, disqualified himself and took no part in the hearings several weeks ago on the decision.

The majority opinion cited previous cases holding that "the power of Congress to dispose of any kind of property belonging to the U. S. 'is vested in Congress without limitation.'"

The tidelands give-away, first of the Administration payoffs for business political support, circumvented a 1947 court decision involving only California which held that the federal government has "paramount rights" to offshore lands.

Alabama and Rhode Island maintained that all the states, not just a handful, are entitled to share in the $62 million royalty fund that has been built up from underwater oil operations in the short time the ownership matter has been before Congress and the courts.

The court felt otherwise, saying "Congress not only has a legislative power over the public domain, but it also exercises the powers of the proprietor therein."

JUSTICES William O. Douglas and Hugo L. Black wrote separate dissenting opinions.

Douglas said the whole point of previous cases was that more than just property rights was involved. Beyond the low-water tide mark, Douglas said, property rights must be subordinated to political rights.

The marginal sea is not an oil well, he noted, but "it is a protective belt for the entire nation over which the U. S. must exercise exclusive and paramount authority."

Pamphlet Offered On Immigration

"The Stranger at Our Gate," a pamphlet by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), is now available at 10c each in bulk orders of 50 or more. Orders should be addressed to American Jewish Congress, Stephen Wise Congress House, 15 East 84th St., New York 28, N. Y.

Showdown Vote Due In Senate On GOP Move To Oust Chavez

A SHOWDOWN is expected this week on the 15-month-old effort by the Republicans to capture a controlling seat in the Senate by ousting a veteran New Dealer, Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.).

The issue was finally forced to a head after the Democrats who now have 48 members to the Republicans' 47—threatened to vote to discharge the special committee under Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.) unless it filed a long-overdue report on its "investigation" of the 1952 New Mexico election.

Barrett's staff spent nearly $250,000 of the taxpayers' money on what observers described as "a Roman holiday" trying to prove the charges of defeated GOP candidate Patrick J. Hurley that Chavez won reelection by "fraud." The Senate turned the committee down last session when it asked for additional funds, drawing wide criticism for near-record extravagance.

TO STAVE off Democratic action, the full Rules Committee voted to approve a report by Barrett and Sen. Potter (R. Mich.) recommending that the New Mexico Senate election be declared "no contest."

That would permit the state's Republican governor, who previously certified Chavez's election after a state recount, to appoint a successor from his own party. The governor, incidentally, was elected in the same election, but the GOP report did not question his right to office.

SEN. CHAVEZ
GOP wants to oust him.

The vote was along straight party lines, with five Republicans voting for approval and four Democratic members of the committee voting against. The full Senate now will get a chance to decide the issue.

In addition to the official state recount, Hurley's charge against Chavez were also looked into by a special grand jury and about 60 FBI agents. They dropped the case when they were unable to find proof of wrongdoing.

Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.), the one minority member of the investigating committee, said that the group found no evidence whatever to support any charge of fraud, misdoing or impropriety on the part of Chavez or his agents.

Four Speakers Listed For UAW Education Parley

FOUR outstanding Americans have accepted invitations to participate in the sixth international education conference of the CIO Auto Workers in Chicago Apr. 8-11.

Two of them, Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.), are candidates for reelection. Douglas will be questioned by a panel of newspapermen, and Humphrey will discuss "The Crisis in American Agriculture."

Auxiliary Bishop Bernard J. Sheil of Chicago will speak on the moral and ethical implications of trade unionism, and Paul Hoffman, chairman of the board of the Studebaker Corp., will speak on "What is and What Is Not Americanism."

NLRB Puts Curb On 'Hit-Run' Picketing

THE REPUBLICAN-dominated National Labor Relations Board ruled last week that workers who stage what is called "hit-and-run" strikes, or who refuse to cross picket lines in such walkouts, can be fired by their employers.

The ruling, which upset a trial examiner's recommendation, brought a prompt attack from the CIO Communications Workers, who have used the tactic with some success in dealing with recalcitrant employers.

It was handed down in a case involving members of the unaffiliated Order of Repeatermen and Tolltestboardmen who refused to go through a CWA picket line during a 1951 strike against the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. The board described the intermittent strike strategy as a "vice" and "a form of economic warfare beyond the pale of proper strike activities."

"THIS WAS a gratuitous slap at CWA on the part of the board," declared CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, "since they decided on the legality of a strike tactic used by CWA when CWA was not a party to the proceedings and was not given an opportunity for defense. This is completely contrary to our American principles of justice.

"By its action, the NLRB proves that it has become a tool for employers. Impartiality has departed from the NLRB.

"The fact that the company doesn't like the intermittent strike is no good reason for outlawing it. The hand of the Bell System is obvious in this decision, particularly since the NLRB chairman, Guy Farmer, used to be one of their lawyers.

"To nibble away at the right to strike by limiting the types of strikes in which union members can engage is thwarting Congress in its guarantee of this right."

BEIRNE called on congressional committees considering changes in the Taft-Hartley Act to "go into this matter to determine if the labor act needs amending to restore its original intent regarding the right of workers to strike."

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg described the ruling as "another in the expanding number of restrictions which the board has been imposing on the legitimate and traditional strike activities of unions."

"This is an additional instance of amending the Taft-Hartley Act by administrative decision," he said, "since Congress did not restrict such activity when it imposed restrictions on certain types of strikes. Increased industrial strife is invited by this decision, because a union cannot be sure any more that economic activity short of a full-blown strike will continue to enjoy protected status."

Voting with Farmer were Members Ivar Peterson and Philip Ray Rodgers. Member Abe Murdock, a Democrat, opposed the ruling on the ground that it violates the T-H guarantee of the right to strike.

Michigan Senate Passes FEPC Bill

The Michigan Senate has passed a bill to establish a Fair Employment Practices Committee by a vote of 20 to 11.

South Carolina Council Fights Open Shop Bill

SOME 125 delegates to the South Carolina CIO Council convention at Charleston prepared for an all-out fight against the open shop right-to-work bill now being considered by the Legislature.

Dir. Lorne Nelles of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee commended the Council for its work, particularly its efforts to prevent the passage of the bill.

"There is nothing in the fine relationship existing between the employers and our unions in this State to justify the passage of the so-called right-to-work bill," Nelles said.

He warned the measure would "undermine the welfare and security of everyone in the State" by tending to lower the workers' living standards.

Council officers came to the convention from the State Capitol at Columbia, where they fought the passage of the measure. Rank-and-file delegates spoke most frequently against the bill and the Taft-Hartley Act, and for organizing the unorganized, and increasing workmen's compensation benefits.

They moved to strengthen the Council by voting to hike capita payments by 1c to 3c.

Speakers included John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers; Dan Powell, southern PAC representative; James Bamford, TWUA's southern administrative director; and Paul R. Christopher, CIO Reg. 4 director.

L. B. Knox, TWUA, Rock Hill, was elected president; Lucy Manning, Clothing Workers, North Charleston, vice president; and C. W. Gwin, Communications Workers, Columbia, secretary-treasurer.

Jobless Pay Hike Called A 'Must'

Delegates to the South Carolina CIO convention resolved that unemployment compensation "must be expanded and strengthened" so that workers "may face the future without unreasonable fear of privation."

Other resolutions called for a return to the fundamental principles of the Wagner Act, federal and state laws setting the minimum hourly wage at $1.25, and organizing as the Council's "prime objective."

Virginia Puts More Teeth In Open Shop

THE VIRGINIA House has voted 61 to 38 to tighten the State's open shop right-to-work bill.

The Senate earlier approved the bill putting more "teeth" in the measure.

The new provisions were passed over the opposition of the Virginia CIO Council and the AFL, members of whom crowded the galleries to watch the House debate.

The intent of the law is to ban all union security in Virginia. Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., claimed that the law was not enforceable because it does not cover contracts between a contractor and a subcontractor.

The new provision provides that "any agreement, understanding or practice which is designed to cause or require any employer, whether or not a party thereto, to violate any provision of (the law) is hereby declared an illegal agreement, understanding or practice and contrary to public policy."

The provisions include an injunction feature, make violations a misdemeanor and carry a fine of up to $500 a day.

If You're Innocent, You're Still Guilty As 'Security' Risk

EVEN IF YOU'RE innocent, you're still guilty under the Republican Administration's security program.

Rep. Wheeler (D. Ga.) last week cited the case of a General Services Administration employe who was fired after he was arrested, then acquitted, on a gambling charge.

Wheeler said Ezekiel Johnson, Negro veteran of 15 years with the GSA, was picked up by police on a minor gambling complaint but was freed by the court. But to Johnson's surprise he was called before a board and dismissed from his job. Only the gambling charge was considered by the security panel.

Johnson said he wouldn't have minded so much if they had fired him for gambling. "But now my friends and neighbors think I must be a Communist," he said.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

THE ERIE CIO COUNCIL has opened a campaign to protest increases in gas rates ranging fom 17% to 160%. George Klemm, the Council's legislation chairman, called on CIO members to fill out protest forms supplied by the Council and the city solicitor.

Sports Stuff

The Michigan CIO Council was a co-sponsor of the championship playoffs in the Michigan Amateur Hockey Association league at Olympia Stadium, Detroit.

The league has teams operating in 10 cities. The Council was host to the teams at a dinner during the playoffs.

- The Wayne County, Mich., CIO Community Services Committee has assisted more than a score of Detroit area locals in setting up information centers to aid laid-off workers in getting unemployment compensation and other assistance. The committee and the Community Services Dept. of the CIO Auto Workers sponsored a condensed course on union counselling.
- Instructors who are experts in their fields were leading the series of union counselling classes being conducted by the Columbus, O., CIO Council Community Services Committee in cooperation with the Council of Social Agencies of Columbus and Franklin County.
- The New York State CIO Council demanded that the Legislature stay in session until it has raised unemployment insurance benefits. The Council's executive board also called a statewide CIO unemployment conference to be held in Albany next month. It estimated that at least 500,000 workers are jobless in the State and millions more are working part-time.
- The Henry County, Ind., CIO Council ran a full-page ad in the New Castle, Ind., Courier-Times to explain to the community the importance of electing legislators favoring an increase in unemployment compensation benefits.
- The Greater Los Angeles CIO Council participated in a labor-management arbitration conference at the school of law, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles. Speakers included Albert T. Lunceford and Robert R. Rissman, Council secretary-treasurer and counsel respectively, and James Carbray, CIO Steelworkers representative.
- The Columbus, O., CIO Council's program for expanded organization, education and PAC work, and other activities started with the naming of seven committees. George DeNucci, director of Reg. 4, is the chairman of the organizational committee.
- The Greater Los Angeles CIO Council has adopted a six-point community service program. It is directed at helping both aged and unemployed, training leaders and union counsellors, integrating the community services program, and improving public relations.

With Figures, GOP Apologists Can Do Almost Anything . . .

IN WYOMING, CIO members are keeping track of the shifting apologies of Republican politicians trying to explain away that State's growing unemployment.

First, the apologies ran, "unemployment is high, but it is not as high as in 1949."

Then, when unemployment passed that mark, the line became, "but unemployment is not as high as in 1947."

When the statistics passed that figure, the line shifted to: "but unemployment is not as high as in 1940."

Wyoming CIO leaders also noted that big corporations are helping to right the unemployment figures. As an example, they point out one mining corporation has placed 800 miners on a one-day week, for which they draw partial unemployment compensation, but aren't listed as unemployed.

Proof, CIO members say in Wyoming, that "figures don't lie but liars can figure."

Labor's World—

ILO To Continue Study Of Hungarian Anti-Unionism

THE GOVERNING Body of the Intl. Labor Organization has voted to make a further examination of charges that trade union rights are being violated in Hungary.

The decision was made on the basis of a report by the group's special committee on freedom of association. The report said that the committee's request to the Hungarian government for comment on the charges, which were filed by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in 1951, has failed to produce a reply.

The case of Hungary was one of 20 considered in the report. The Governing Body accepted recommendations to drop complaints against Japan, Italy, Cuba, Greece, Columbia, Burma, France in regard to some African territories, Switzerland, Mexico, India, Iran, and the United Kingdom in regard to British Guinea.

Gold Coast

The Gold Coast government henceforth will refuse jobs in major branches of the public service to active Communists, Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah has announced.

The move was made by the anti-Red leader as a result of "an increasing interest in our affairs" by foreign organizations which have sent from abroad large quantities of pamphlets and magazines—"all of it tendentious and some of it designed to stir up trouble."

Great Britain

Union membership in Great Britain's non self-governing territories, encouraged by the government since 1930, has grown from 83,000 in 1943 to more than 900,000 at the end of 1953, according to Sec. Ray Boyfield of the Organization Dept. of the British Trades Union Congress.

The TUC has played a major part in this post-war development, Boyfield said. It has helped the workers set up the form of labor organization best fitted to their requirements, has given cash grants for equipment, etc., and has sent delegations which gave aid and advice.

South Africa

One of the outstanding proponents of South Africa's "white supremacy" policy apparently has changed his mind. Prof. Gerhardt Gerdener of Stellenbosch Univ., one of the chief theoreticians of the Nationalist Party, recently declared that "the domination of the white race in the world is definitely over."

Contrast

Tiny Israel, where nearly 3% of the total labor force of 550,000 is out of work, isn't taking any chances of a depression developing.

Both the government and Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, have taken steps to create new employment possibilities. The government has earmarked $7.5 million for road-building and $1 million for further development of the Negev frontier region, in addition to $2.5 million for public works in the regular budget. Histadrut has made available $3.4 million to create new jobs in industry, agriculture and building.

Farm Labor Fund Voted

THE SENATE last week voted and the President signed a bill appropriating $542,000 to finance the Mexican contract labor program until June 30.

Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.) sought to have employers using the program pay the costs of medical examinations for their Mexican workers, but Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.) prevented this by objecting that the proposal amounted to new legislation in an appropriations bill.

'What Helps Farmers Helps Us'—

Reuther Backs Fair Price Plan As Step To Full Employment

"WHAT HELPS farmers helps us," CIO declared last week in urging Congress to pass legislation that "will strengthen the farm economy, restore confidence to farmers and improve the income of farm families."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said, in identical letters to Sen. George D. Aiken (R. Vt.) and Rep. Clifford R. Hope (R. Kan.), that farmers have an equal concern that steps be taken to restore full employment and sustained purchasing power for industrial and non-farm workers.

"For this reason I am addressing you as chairman of the committee most concerned with prosperity on the farm to urge your consideration of and support for measures designed to reverse the present recession and to set us back on the road to national prosperity," Reuther wrote.

"In no way can Congress more quickly strike an effective blow to reverse the present economic trend than by voting to increase the $600 personal exemption in the income tax law to $800 this year and to $1000 next year. Both farms and factories will immediately feel the effect of the increased purchasing power which this amendment will leave in the hands of the nation's consumers in cities and on farms."

CIO's STATEMENT was issued as Agriculture Sec. Benson got into hot water again with Congress for hinting he would "probably" ask Pres. Eisenhower to veto any bills continuing present high farm price supports.

Benson's statement was immediately challenged by Republicans and Democrats alike and farm bloc spokesmen said they believed they could marshal enough votes to defeat an Administration proposal to dump a policy of firm support prices.

Benson found an ally in Pres. Allan B. Kline of the American Farm Bureau Federation. Kline told the House Agriculture Committee he thought that the present price support system is unworkable and recommended adoption of the Administration's flexible plan. Several committee members told Kline he certainly didn't speak for the farmers in their district.

Reuther said that falling farm incomes and continued uncertainty about the future of farm prices not only "impose hardships" on farmers but also "create dangers for all of us in America."

"Full production and employment in the factories of this country contributed greatly to the improved income position of farmers through several of the post-war years," he added, "and we are sure you will agree that farmers, city workers and businessmen can hope to achieve durable prosperity only in a fully employed and expanding economy."

No Change

The Agriculture Dept. sees little chance that the cost-price squeeze on farmers will change "materially" this year. It reported that while farm product prices have inched upward since last fall's lows, prices paid for items used by farmers in production have also increased.

Packing, Sugar Unions From 3 Nations Hold Joint Meeting

UNIONS representing packinghouse and sugar workers in the United States, Mexico and Cuba held the first joint meeting in their history in Chicago recently, exchanging views on common problems and setting up the machinery for a closer relationship.

The meeting was held with the cooperation of the Intl. Union of Food & Drink Workers' Associations, the industry's trade secretariat, and the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers, the North American arm of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The visitors obtained a wide variety of trade information from the delegates and staff members of the U. S. unions, and were promised aid on specific problems where the U. S. unions can help.

They also toured the big modern packinghouse of Armour & Co., where they had a chance to talk with many Spanish-speaking workers. Pres. Ralph Helstein, who headed a CIO Packinghouse Workers delegation, and Pres. Earl Jimerson of the AFL Butcher Workmen presided jointly at a banquet.

"The opportunity presented for an exchange of views and ideas, as well as the discussion of problems," Helstein observed, "contributed, we hope, to a much closer fraternal relationship.

"The conference also provided methods for continued exchange of information between us and a closer collaboration on many problems.

"An obvious community of interest exists in the fact that many American companies have extensive operations throughout Latin America in our industries.

"THE IUFD, ORIT and the CIO International Committee are to be commended for their efforts that led to this conference. We look forward to a continuing and closer association between the groups of our respective countries."

Details were arranged by Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee, western hemisphere representative of the IUFD and assistant secretary of ORIT.

Present from Mexico were Gen. Sec. Manuel Alvarez Gonzalez, Sec.-Treas. Patrocinio M. Garcia and Legislative Sec. Tomas Flores Centeno of the National Meat Workers Federation, and Pres. Jose Maria Martinez of the Sugar Workers Union.

From Cuba came Pres. Antero Perez Sanchez, Organization Dir. Benigno Garcia, Francisco Gonzalez del Cristo and Lorenzo Rodriguez Llanos of the Packinghouse Workers Union. The AFL also was represented by R. E. James, president of its Beet Workers Council.

Report On 'Minute Women' Outfit Gains '53 Broun Award For Houston Reporter

A HOUSTON reporter, Ralph S. O'Leary, has won the CIO Newspaper Guild's 1953 Heywood Broun Award for the year's best journalistic work in the Broun spirit.

O'Leary was given the award —$500 and a citation—for a series of articles in The Houston Post exposing in detail the activities of the Houston chapter of the Minute Women of the U. S. A., Inc. The group, with extreme right-wing, McCarthyite leanings, exercised considerable influence on schools, and other civic institutions.

The articles disclosed a growing climate of fear in Houston which the Minute Women were helping to build through a new technique of "individual" chain telephone calls. Pressure was exerted on virtually every expression of liberal thought in the city.

The judges narrowed the entries to O'Leary's series and that of Ben H. Bagdikian of the Providence, R. I., Journal-Bulletin about Facts Forum, the radio and television presentation which gets most of its financial support from H. L. Hunt, described as "probably the richest man in America."

Honorable mention winners included the Chicago Daily News, the New York Post, William S. Gaines of the Greenville, S. C., News, Doug Collins of the Calgary, Alta., Canada, Herald and Frederick E. Woltman of the New York World-Telegram and the Sun.

The judges were Eric Sevareid of the Columbia Broadcasting System, A. H. Raskin, labor reporter for the New York Times, and Leo Lerner, editor of a group of Chicago community newspapers.

Grazing Bill Is Protested

THE CIO called on the Senate last week to send back to committee the bill by Sens. Aiken (R. Vt.) and Thye (R. Minn.) to give away property rights in the publicly-owned grazing lands to a few privileged cattle raisers.

Robert Oliver, director of the CIO Legislative Committee, wired members of the Senate urging their "active opposition" to the measures. He said the American people "are more and more outraged by these land-grab proposals."

"This is a special interest bill conferring private property rights in public lands on a small minority of privileged stockmen," Oliver said. "It also sets up inexcusable procedures for private arbitration to dispose of public property and cumbersome and unnecessary judicial review."

You And Your Money—

Consumers Face New Gouging As Senate Kills Gas Rate Curb

THE EISENHOWER Administration again helped its friends get their hands into the consumers' pockets last week when it passed a bill to exempt natural gas companies doing business within a state from federal regulation.

Opponents of the measure, including CIO, tried to halt the move, which will result in higher and unjustified rates for gas service, but without success.

The latest in a growing series of payoffs to utility-company supporters of the GOP Administration rolled through the Senate on a voice vote and on to the White House for signature.

The bill has had a curious history. It was reported to the Senate last July 30 by the Commerce Committee which never held hearings on the question. On the same day, the bill passed the House.

The effect of the bill will be to override a 1950 Supreme Court decision in a case that involved the East Ohio Gas Co. The court held that East Ohio, although it distributed gas inside Ohio only, received the gas from outside the state. Therefore, ruled the court, the gas was in interstate commerce and the company was subject to regulation by the Federal Power Commission.

SEN. BURKE (D. O.), for nine years the mayor of Cleveland, has tangled before with the East Ohio Gas Co. Attacking passage of the bill, he pointed to its history in the House where it was introduced only two days prior to passage. "The printed bill was not even before the committee on the date of the hearing," Burke said, urging that the measure should be scrutinized carefully by the Senate.

In his opposition, Burke warned that passage would provide a loophole extending even to the big interstate pipeline companies, enabling them also to dodge federal regulation on rates in their final sales to local distributing companies.

"All they would have to do would be to create wholly-owned subsidiaries to purchase the gas at the border of any state which they supply and complete that transaction within the state," Burke noted. He said passage of the bill would tack an extra $3 million on the bills of East Ohio's customers.

Similar jumps were foreseen for other gas customers throughout the country.

The Senate voted down 52-25 a motion by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) to delay action until the bill, which he described as "pregnant with controversy," could be studied by a committee and public hearings held. A substitute bill offered by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) to protect consumers was defeated by voice vote.

CIO Protests Bill

The CIO made a last-minute plea for protection of consumers in telegrams sent to Senators just before the vote was taken to exempt natural gas companies doing business within a state from federal control.

In his telegram, Robert Oliver, CIO Legislative Committee director and assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, said the bill was "another move to break down regulation of natural gas prices and subject consumers to high and unjustifiable rates."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

NOW THAT OVER HALF the families in the country own their own homes, we're all learning how surprisingly costly it is to maintain a lawn and some shrubbery. Good lawn seed is expensive, especially this year when it often costs $2.50 to $5 a pound. Fertilizer, insecticides, crab-grass killer, garden tools and mowers are often expenses the homeowner has to contend with.

Early Advice For Gardeners

You can save much of the cost if you know how and what to buy. You may pay as much as 20 to 40% more for various fertilizers and other products under coined trade names when you could buy them under their ordinary chemical names at reasonable prices.

The main point in buying these products is to carefully read the labels to see the actual chemical or other ingredients, and their strength. Don't be fooled by large-size packages either.

For example, potassium cyanate is widely used as a crab-grass killer. One widely-sold brand is offered under a coined trade name in a larger can than several of the lesser-known brands of potassium cyanate. But if you read the labels, you observe that the solution in the apparently bigger package is weaker, and you have to use more of it for the same area. Thus it turns out to be the most expensive brand. The more concentrated solutions go further.

You save most by buying potassium cyanate as such and not under brand names. The best place to buy this and other lawn needs is in the farm-supply co-ops which can often be found in the rural areas bordering many towns and suburbs.

Buy By Content—Not Name

The same situation occurs in fertilizers. Many small homeowners buy several well-advertised brands in small packages at large prices. Retail prices of the same grade of fertilizer vary noticeably, but for home-lawn needs, one fertilizer is essentially the same as any other of the same grade, the N. Y. State College of Agriculture points out.

Its lawn expert, John F. Cornman, notes that every package of fertilizer must be labeled to show the minimum analysis or grade of the three important fertilizer materials. The widely-used "5-10-5" fertilizer contains 5% nitrogen, 10% phosphoric acid and 5% potash.

So that's what you want to buy—not a name. You can save as much as 40% of the cost of the brand-name fertilizers by reading the analysis on the package, and buying the lowest-priced one that supplies the desired chemicals. Actually, 10-6-4 fertilizer is a better buy than 5-10-5 even though it costs more per pound, since you need only half the amount.

Similarly with lawn seed. It's very expensive this year because of last year's drought, so use it carefully, and read the label on the package to see actually what you are buying. Particularly compare the percentage of permanent grasses in each mixture as against the percentage of temporary grasses like rye. The mixtures containing higher percentage of permanent grasses are most desirable.

It's also important to select a mixture which contains a higher proportion of the particular permanent grasses which have been found best adapted to the soil and growing conditions in your region, or to buy those particular seeds to make your own mixture.

Question Of Power Mowers

Now that power mowers have come down to more reasonable levels, an increasing number of small homeowners are showing interest in their possibilities for relieving the mowing chore.

Power mowers are most desirable for large open lawns. For the average small lot, or one heavily planted with shrubs and trees, a hand mower may still be more convenient.

Electric lawn mowers are a little cheaper than gasoline-powered ones, and generally require less servicing and no fueling. However the mower is limited by the length of the extension cord, generally 100 feet, and is inconvenient to use for an irregularly-shaped lawn or one with many shrubs or trees.

Ax, Not Scalpel, Used By GOP On Health Fund

A MEAT AX rather than a surgeon's scalpel was used in trimming the Administration's budget for public health services.

Despite Pres. Eisenhower's special message to Congress that health programs be continued because of their "past success and their present and future usefulness," drastic slashes were made in fund recommendations.

Comparisons in budget proposals for 1954-55 reveal cuts in funds for several important programs, particularly when contrasted with appropriations of two years ago.

The cuts for general public health purposes are especially to be regretted, said the Committee for the Nation's Health. Also, there are 76% and 54% reductions in funds for venereal diseases and tuberculosis controls respectively.

The committee regards it as unlikely that a number of states and localities will be able to make up the differences necessary to maintain the previous level of public protection.

ADMINISTRATION spokesmen have claimed that there would actually be $112 million more for state grants-in-aid if their bill is passed. Since passage of a new bill is always uncertain, the new budget as it stands results in a substantial cut from previous appropriations.

Technical assistance to states has been cut although this is aimed at making the U. S. Public Health Service staff available to meet requests of states for advice and assistance which is one of the most important PHS functions. There have been deep cuts in administrative expenses.

Tax Credit For Working Mothers Seen

PASSAGE of a bill to give tax relief to working mothers has been predicted by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala), who introduced such a measure early last year.

Sparkman said that enough Senators have promised support of the measure to make him confident that the Senate will pass it.

The Alabama Senator's bill would allow working mothers to take a deduction of not more than $40 a week for child-care expenses for children under 16 years of age.

Sparkman said he would urge the Senate to permit tax deductions for nurse or maid care for an invalid husband or wife or other invalid dependent when the taxpayer has to work.

Wholesale Prices At 3-Year High

Wholesale food prices in the sixth consecutive rise climbed 2c last week to the highest level in three years on the Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., index. The 2c advance to $7.27 boosts the index to the highest level since Feb. 20, 1951, when it was $7.31.

Things Could Be Worse

If you think the price of coffee is high, it will be increased in Sweden by 40c a kilogram, which will make it about $1.91 a pound.

Eye Center Backed

The Cook County CIO Council has endorsed the Union Eye Care Center in Chicago. Formed two years ago, the co-op eye center now serves 10,000 patients.

Here's A 'How To' Guide On Publicizing Your Union

"THE NAME-putter-in-the-paper feller" has written a booklet telling you how to do it. He is Benn Hall, New York public relations consultant, whose booklet is entitled "How To Get Your Name in the Paper."

It should prove useful to CIO members, councils and unions in preparing news releases and in other fields of publicity.

The brochure is very practical. For example, it includes a list of "Do's and Don'ts," which should prove very valuable in getting news in the paper. Any newspaperman immediately recognizes the importance of the advice—listed under the Do's—"to remember to observe the deadline."

Hall does not confine his booklet to the "mechanics" of press relations. He discusses picture captions, arranging for interviews and the functions of newspaper departments. Included in the list of subjects are radio and television requirements.

The brochure is published by Benn Hall Associates, 47 East 61st St., New York 21, N. Y., at $1 a copy.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

LAST WEEK I journeyed to Pittsburgh, where I attended the opening day sessions of the Pennsylvania CIO Council convention. Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO United Steelworkers and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther both addressed the convention.

The Pennsylvania Council is doing a great job both on the legislative front and the political action front, and I am proud of the service which is being rendered to CIO members throughout the State by the officers of the Council.

Pittsburgh is the home of the United Steelworkers, my own union, and we are proud of its president and the other leadership furnished by this great union.

I TRAVELED from Pittsburgh to Bethlehem, where I attended the dedication of a new union hall which has been built to serve all local unions in Bethlehem Steel Co. plants. It is one of the finest buildings that has ever been my privilege to visit and one of which not only the local unions, but the community at large, can well be proud.

The building has been named the "Van A. Bittner Memorial Building" and has every facility for carrying on the wonderful work of the Steelworkers Union under the able leadership of the district director, C. B. Newell.

The three international officers of the United Steelworkers attended the dedication. Mrs. Van A. Bittner was guest of honor.

Both Pres. McDonald and representatives of management spoke to the officers and members with regard to the very deep responsibility they have to accept as they become more and more associated with the affairs of the city and community.

I commend the officers of the local unions and Dist. Dir. Newell and his staff for the outstanding job they are doing not only in the plants of Bethlehem Steel but throughout the entire valley in which Dist. 9, United Steelworkers, is located.

ELECTIONS: During the past week we have reports of National Labor Relations Board elections won by the United Rubber Workers-CIO at the Champion Rubber Co., Barberton, O., and the Merit Rubber Co., Akron, O.

At the Johns-Manville plant in Natchez, Miss., an election was won by an overwhelming majority by the CIO Woodworkers.

In Memphis, Tenn., the Oil Workers won an election among the office employes of the Delta Refining Co by a 100% vote.

URW Asks 'Substantial' Pay Boost, Talks On Annual Wages

CIO RUBBER Workers will demand a "substantial" wage increase and want to discuss the guaranteed annual wage in this year's contract talks with the rubber industry.

The URWA-CIO policy committee set the bargaining goals at a two-day conference in Cleveland attended by 200 officials and rank-and-file members.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said a wage increase was in order because of the industry's record profit situation and the likelihood of more tax concessions to business in 1954 by the Eisenhower Administration.

Ending the excess profit taxes will net the Big Four rubber companies close to $60 million this year, Buckmaster said. The firms could suffer a 20% drop in sales this year and still show net profits equal to the 1953 level, he estimated.

He warned the conference to "be prepared to fight" however, in the event the companies offer serious resistance to the wage demands. He pointed out that last year's 12c package netted 120,000 workers approximately $28.8 million in higher wages and better pension and health insurance programs.

The URW president said 1953 settlements brought to $1 an hour the total of wage increases and other economic benefits won by the union since the end of World War II.

THE CLEVELAND delegates adopted a resolution calling on Congress to raise personal income tax exemptions to $1000 and to raise the federal minimum wage from 75c to $1.25. More liberal social security payments and unemployment compensation were recommended and legislation to encourage the broadening of voluntary health programs.

UPWA Dist. 3 Parley Backs Annual Wage

THE CONVENTION of Dist. 3 of the CIO Packinghouse Workers at Mason City, Ia., called for the guaranteed annual wage and a 36-hour week to aid the nation's economy.

Some 100 delegates from 33 locals in Colorado, Iowa and Nebraska resolved that the guaranteed annual wage would "not only help the workers to meet the steadily mounting problems involved in maintaining a decent standard of living but would benefit the economy as a whole."

For some years the UPWA has had guaranteed annual wages at the Hormel packing plant at Austin, Minn., but most of the industry has put up stubborn resistance to the plan.

The delegates also called for a 36-hour work week "with no reduction in weekly pay earnings."

UPWA PRES. Ralph Helstein blasted the Republicans' "trickle down" theory of granting tax relief to the wealthy in the hope that some of it will reach the workers.

"Purchasing power is the important thing," he said, "and we certainly can't approach the $500 billion annual income economists talk about by any 'trickle down' system."

The principal speaker at the convention banquet was Harvey O'Connor, former editor of the CIO Oil Worker, who explained why he invoked the First Amendment in refusing to answer a question by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) as to whether he was a member of the "Communist conspiracy."

He never was a Communist, O'Connor said, but "when governmental bureaucrats presume to force citizens to state their political beliefs, freedom is dead."

Another Two Plant Votes Won By IUE

THE CIO Electrical Workers recently won two important victories in National Labor Relations Board elections.

The bigger triumph was at Vickers, Inc., plant in Detroit. At this subsidiary of the Sperry Corp., IUE-CIO received 1105 votes to 754 for the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers.

This was a run-off of an earlier election in which the AFL Auto Workers also were on the ballot.

Although the AFL Machinists petitioned for the election at the three plants of the Underwood Corp. at Bridgeport, Conn., the IUE-CIO walked away with it. The vote was IUE-CIO 455, IAM 106 and no union 321.

The NLRB turned down an AFL challenge to the IUE-CIO victory in the election last December at the Everett plant and the River Works, Lynn, Mass., of General Electric.

TWUA Gets New Pact At Forstmann

A TWO-YEAR contract renewal providing for improved insurance has been signed by the CIO Textile Workers with Forstmann Woolen Co., Passaic, N. J., one of the industry leaders.

Hospitalization insurance was raised from $10 to $12 a day, coverage was lengthened to 120 days a year for members or dependents. Wage reopening is provided once a year for either party with arbitration if no agreement is reached. Earlier this year the company sought an 11.5c wage cut.

APPROXIMATELY 4000 workers are covered by the Forstmann pact. TWUA-CIO recently repulsed a raid by the AFL United Textile Workers, defeating them 4-1 in a National Labor Relations Board election.

Negotiations are scheduled to begin this week between TWUA and the American Woolen Co., the country's largest woolen manufacturer. The contract has been extended beyond the Mar. 15 expiration date.

Pres. Emil Rieve of TWUA said no proposals have been received from American Woolen, which unsuccessfully sought wage cuts in 1952 and 1953.

'Scuttling' Of U. S. Shipping Seen In New Transfer Policy

THE CIO last week warned that a "liberalized" policy for transferring U. S. merchant ships to registry with three foreign countries may 'scuttle" the American merchant marine.

The warning was voiced by Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee.

"Despite the depressed condition of our merchant marine," Haddock said, "Maritime Administrator (Louis S. Rothschild) has recently announced a 'liberalized' policy of permitting American flag ships to be transferred to the runaway flags of Panama, Liberia and Honduras."

He said that the Maritime Administration already is "processing" the transfer of 15 Liberty-type tankers and is not requiring the operating companies to replace the ships with new American flag ships.

The ship building industry is so depressed that management of the Sparrows Point, Md., shipyard of Bethlehem Steel said the yard may shut down this fall if new orders are not obtained.

N.Y.C. Transit Fact-Finders Report Soon

THE NEW YORK City transit fact-finding panel is planning to make recommendations by Apr. 15 to Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., in the dispute between the Transit Authority and unions representing employes of the city-owned lines.

Some 44,000 persons are employed on the lines, with the CIO Transport Workers representing most of them. The panel was appointed Jan. 6 after the TWU threatened to strike, but decided to hear other transit unions.

The panel has completed its hearings, and the dozen unions were told they could submit additional material. Among those heard at the final hearing was Raymond Diana of the Civil Service Technical Guild, CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

Auto Union Gains $6241 Jackpot For Fired Worker

THE CIO AUTO Workers have collected a $6241 jackpot for Mrs. Lydia DeDiana.

Discharged from her job at Service Metal Industries, Detroit, Mrs. DeDiana appealed to the UAW-CIO Region 1A which went to bat for her by filing an unfair labor practice charge.

Settlement provided for payment of $3261.38 at the rate of $125.43 weekly. Although the company fought her claim, she got $480 in unemployment compensation.

Before her discharge, Mrs. DeDiana lost a finger at her work. The company opposed payment of workmen's compensation but UAW intervention collected another $2500 for the injury.

U. S. Acts To Kill Packers' Trust Suit

Government attorneys last week filed an order with the U. S. District Court at Chicago to dismiss a civil anti-trust suit against the Big Four meat packers.

The suit, which was brought in 1948, sought to break up Swift, Armour, Cudahy and Wilson into 14 concerns.

CSC Gets Social Agencies To Aid Michigan Jobless

ACTING on a request from the Michigan CIO Community Services Committee, representatives of the Michigan Welfare League and the United Health and Welfare Fund are meeting with groups in the State's labor distress areas to help ease the burdens of unemployed workers.

The CIO-CSC pointed out that jobless workers and their families have been unable to meet their budget needs on the present inadequate unemployment benefit payments. Thousands of idle workers have already exhausted their benefit checks and must turn to welfare and other forms of assistance.

The CIO group urged the League and Fund officials to meet with heads of various agencies in Michigan to slash through the red tape which has been used to deny services to workers who are entitled to them.

Meanwhile, seven more Michigan local government units have called on the Legislature to boost unemployment compensation benefits to at least 50% of average weekly wages.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers in telegrams to Michigan legislators noted a 26% slump in Detroit department store sales over the same week a year ago. He warned that the Teahen Bill under consideration would raise jobless payments little more than $1 a week on an average.

Latest support for higher jobless payments have come from the Macomb County board of supervisors, Erin township, Burton School Dist. 5, Jackson, Ionia, Belding and Ludington. A total of 21 Michigan local governments have backed resolutions to assist the State's unemployed.

CIO Calls Housing Bill 'Piteously Inadequate'

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

REJECTION of the Administration's "piteously inadequate" housing program was urged by CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes before the Senate Banking Committee last week.

Thimmes, vice president of the CIO Steelworkers and chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, called for a positive program that would provide housing and bolster the nation's economy.

"The addition of 400,000 to 500,000 housing units to the anticipated annual rate, while far short of the need and the achievable goal, would involve four to five billion dollars of added investment in housing and would lead to a restoration of full employment and high level production," Thimmes said.

He called it a "goal so worthwhile and so clearly attainable if bold measures are taken that the nation cannot afford to forego this opportunity."

Administration aims, Thimmes charged, are set too low and fail to provide housing for those groups most in need of it and least able to buy it. To meet the needs of millions of moderate income families, he said, new housing must be made available at a monthly cost of $40 to $90—taking into account the impact of higher taxes on the upper portion of the $2500 to $6000 group. For those in the $2500 to $5000 range, Thimmes said housing costs, including utilities and maintenance, must be reduced to $40 to $75.

THIMMES ASKED the committee for an all-out resumption of the public housing program on a vastly expanded scale.

"Public housing is cheaper than slums," he reminded, "urban decay, disease and human blight caused by substandard housing conditions—and it is cheaper by far than the cost of idle factories and idle men."

Thimmes declared that the Administration was aware of the shortcomings of its own program. Its own estimate of the stimulus its housing bill would provide leaves the nation with the annual total of new housing starts 10% below the 1953 achievement, almost 13% below the 1952 starts and 40% under 1950's record production.

He said that CIO still believes two million new homes a year should be built to meet current needs.

"A million new homes is not enough," said Thimmes, "not only because it will not achieve new housing; it is doubly inadequate because the level of new home construction is a vital factor in determining whether this nation is prosperous or not; whether employment will grow or recede; and whether the great building industry will carry the nation forward in the face of recessionary forces and play its full part in counteracting them."

About 65 delegates from state and city CIO Councils heard Thimmes testify. The day before they took part in a CIO housing conference led by Ben Fischer, CIO housing director. Speakers included Washington Rep. John Edelman of the CIO Textile Workers, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Dr. William L. C. Wheaton, professor of city planning at the Univ. of Pennsylvania.

WHEATON, who serves as consultant to the National Housing Conference, backed the CIO demand for two million new homes a year and cited his survey which shows a substantially higher need over the next 15 years. If the U. S. does not achieve that level of new home construction, we will never be able to clear slums and eliminate substandard housing, Wheaton warned.

"Indeed," he continued, "at present levels of construction our present substandard units will never be replaced. We will have more substandard housing in 1970 than we had in 1950.

"Even if we build two million units a year and rehabilitate 400,000 additional units each year, five million American families will still be using homes which were substandard in 1950 when 1970 arrives."

"PITEOUSLY INADEQUATE" provisions of GOP's housing program were attacked before the Senate Banking Committee by CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes (third from left) in left photo. With Thimmes, chairman of the CIO housing committee, are (from left) Frank Fernbach of CIO Research Dept., CIO Housing Dir. Ben Fischer and TWUA-CIO Washington Rep. John W. Edelman. Vet Aid Urged

Rep. Heller (D. N.Y.) last week offered a bill in Congress setting the maximum interest rate on GI home loans at 4% instead of the current 4.5%. He said the $640 interest difference on a 20-year $10,000 loan may "mean the difference between buying a decent home and remaining in a filthy, dilapidated hovel."

Health Bills Criticized As 'Inadequate'

THE COMMITTEE for the Nation's Health last week said the Administration legislative proposals on health insurance "fall lamentably short" of Pres. Eisenhower's health care objectives.

CNH, a non-profit and nonpartisan group, said the objectives were praiseworthy but warned the Administration measures before Congress would take few steps toward these goals.

Bills introduced by Sen. Smith (R. N. J.) and Rep. Wolverton (R. N. J.) largely agree. Both seek "more extensive use" of private voluntary prepayment plans.

They would provide a $25 million revolving fund to reinsure private companies up to 75% on "abnormal" losses sustained in any year through increased benefits or extending coverage to less desirable risks.

WELFARE Sec. Hobby beamed on Administration sponsorship of the program and looks for it to bring down health insurance costs and provide broader coverage.

CNH does not share her optimism, calling the bills disappointing to those who expected a program to meet mounting medical costs.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. House defeats higher income tax exemptions, passes bill. (See Page 2.)

2. CIO testifies on inadequacies of Administration Housing program before Senate Banking Committee. (See Page 12.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Grazing lands give-away (S.2548)	Gives private property rights in public lands to small minority of privileged stockmen.	Approved by the Senate Agriculture Com. Vote may come soon.	Urge your Senators to actively oppose this land-grab proposal.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate and House Labor Coms. now considering anti-labor bill.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway (S. 2150)	Would enable U. S. to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

Pizer Urges Ike To Boost Wage Floor

PRESENT wage minimums give an unsound, unfair advantage to employers able and willing "to sweat those working for them," Pres. Morris Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers said in a letter to Pres. Eisenhower last week.

He urged the President to reverse his decision not to recommend a higher minimum wage and cited his union's endorsement of a $1.25 floor.

Pizer said that workers now getting low wages "have reason to resent" the implication in the President's Economic Report that their wages "are the results of inferior skills or shirking on the job."

"They work hard and long," Pizer continued, "and produce a great deal. Despite accidents of geography or the state of organization, they are entitled to pay equal to that received by workers doing comparable work in other plants."

Senate Unit Okays Lower Voting Age

The Senate Judiciary Committee last week voted 7-3 in favor of a proposed constitutional amendment to let 18-year-old persons vote. Pres. Eisenhower asked for lowering the voting age.

Mitchell Urges U. S. Set Store Wage Base

Sec. of Labor Mitchell last week called for a federal minimum wage for retail stores and service industries like dry cleaning. He didn't estimate what the wage level should be, but he said "a large part of the retail industry is now paying more than a fair minimum wage."

Keep America at Work!

CIO last week condemned the government's "do-nothing, look-the-other-way" economic policies as a dangerous disgrace and proposed a 10-point program to Keep America At Work. From the CIO Executive Board statement:

THE UNITED STATES is in a recession. Unless positive steps are taken, there is danger that we may have a full-blown depression.

"Gloom and doom" can indeed be our fate if we do not face this danger squarely. There is nothing to be gained by hiding from the realities of the present moment.

What are these realities? Unemployment is reported by the government at 3.7 million. These figures are conservative. Moreover, they do not include a large number of people who are only partially employed. The rate of growing unemployment in the past five months has been faster than in any comparable five-month period in the nation's history.

Industrial production is down more than 11%. Steel operations are at a rate of 68% of capacity. Automobile production is off and yet dealers' inventories are over 70% higher than last year. Retail sales are well below last year's totals and spreading unemployment will pull them down even more.

Despite these clear and unmistakable signs, the Eisenhower Administration persists in a policy of inaction. In the face of present unemployment and declining production, the Washington do-nothing, look-the-other-way policy is both dangerous and disgraceful.

The federal government's failure to take action in the present situation is an act of grave irresponsibility. It is clear that the President's advisers have consistently underestimated the magnitude and speed of the economic downturn. The nation's unemployed cannot put their trust in the hope that the coming of spring will, by some unexplained magic, change grim economic facts.

GOVERNMENT, industry and labor, farmers and professional people—in fact, all Americans—must unite and act now to meet this threat to our well-being.

Mindful of the serious consequences of unemployment for the people of America and for our nation's role in world affairs, the CIO believes the time has come to focus constructive thinking squarely on this Number One economic problem of unemployment.

Accordingly, the CIO Executive Board herewith calls a national conference on unemployment to be held in Washington during the month of April in order to focus attention on this serious problem. Such a conference will help to emphasize the pressing need for congressional passage of a dynamic program to win full employment and rising living standards for all Americans.

As a basis for such a program, the CIO Executive Board proposes the following ten-point platform to stop the recession and restore prosperity to America:

1. Taxes: A tax program to benefit the many, not the privileged few, by raising personal income tax exemptions now from the present $600 to $800, and to $1000 next year.

2. Minimum Wage: An increase in the minimum wage from 75c an hour to $1.25 an hour and greater coverage for the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act.

3. Higher Wages: Collective bargaining must be strengthened to protect consumer buying power and to enable workers to obtain a fair share of the rising productivity of American industry.

4. Improve Unemployment Compensation: Steps must be taken immediately, at both the national and state levels, to provide the unemployed worker with at least 65% of his average weekly wage for a period up to at least 39 weeks; and procedures must be established to help those states most hard hit by unemployment.

5. Housing: A greatly expanded housing program is needed to provide decent homes for millions of Americans in the lower and middle income groups and to bolster the economy. As part of this program CIO believes the government should lift its public housing goal from 35,000 units a year to 200,000 and develop means that allow millons of moderate income families to buy their own homes at reasonable cost.

6. Social Security: Passage of the Lehman-Dingell Bill to expand social security coverage, add permanent and temporary disability insurance and raise monthly payments to a maximum of $200 a month.

7. Farm Program: The government should continue and strengthen programs including price supports, conservation, low cost credit and rural electrification to aid the nation's farm families now suffering from a serious recession.

8. Aid To Small Business: A special credit agency to perform functions formerly carried on by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation (RFC) should be established to make possible liberal credit for small business and to aid in the expansion of America's economy.

9. Public Works: A big scale public works program to build badly needed highways, hospitals, schools, recreation facilities, etc., should be inaugurated at once.

10. State and City Programs: The 48 states and local communities should embark at once on a program of planning an action for a number of activities listed above in order to insure that in every section of the country the full benefits of this program will be made available to all the people.

The Butler Bills—

CIO Raps Move For U.S. To License Unions

"STRONG opposition" to the Butler-Goldwater-Velde Bills to put a government license on free American trade unions was voiced last week by the CIO Executive Board.

CIO warned that congressional approval of such measures would be "a mighty victory in the Communist efforts to discredit free labor in America and validity of our American democratic institutions."

"The bills now before Congress," CIO warned in a board statement supplemented by a detailed legal analysis of the three measures, "would not merely encroach upon the rights of workers to chose their own unions; they would give the government the power of life and death over all unions.

"Let us make no mistake about it: All of these bills propose government licensing of trade unions. We do not believe that a free trade union movement can exist under government licensing of unions any more than political freedom can exist under governmental licensing of political parties."

The Butler-Goldwater-Velde Bills, while differing in specific clauses, have the general purpose of seeking to curb Communist infiltration by giving the Subversive Control Board (the agency set up by the 1950 McCarran Internal Security Act) the power to determine whether or not a union, or its officers, is a "Communist labor representative." And the board also would have the power to wipe out the union's representation and bargaining rights under the National Labor Relations Act.

AS AN effective alternative to such "ill-considered" legislation, the CIO board reaffirms the organization's long-standing, constitutional and fundamental opposition to both Communist and Fascist threats to American democracy. And it predicted continuing gains for CIO in winning back to the American labor movement the members of those few unions still remaining within the Communist orbit.

A case in point in the recent victory of the CIO Electrical Workers at the key General Electric Co. plant at Schenectady, N.Y.

"We are confident that this educational campaign will continue to be effective and successful," CIO said. "One factor, however, that would almost certainly not help this successful attrition process among the Communist-dominated unions would be passage by the Congress of ill-considered legislation to deal with the subject."

Pointing to the present weak and isolated position of the Communist-dominated unions now remaining, CIO warned:

"The masters of the international Communist conspiracy, acting from the standpoint of long-range strategy, would gladly exchange control of a few insignificant and weak Communist-led unions for government shackling of our whole free trade union movement, just as they welcome any setback to America's healthy economy and expanding democracy.

"SO, to wreck, through government intervention, the whole edifice of American trade union democracy in order to try to deal with the control of a tiny handful of Communists in trade unions, is unreasoning.

"Democracy and free trade unionism are inseparably woven together in the fabric of our free society and one is not possible without the other."

Flanders Changes His Tune

Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.), who swung from the heels at Sen. McCarthy in a widely-hailed speech, last week changed his tune. In Flanders' book, anything Joe does is all right as long as it is done to Democrats.

"If McCarthy performs as he did . . . in Milwaukee, all will be forgiven and he will be back on the sawdust trail for the benefit of the whole Republican Party," Flanders said. But Joe "should not snap at the hand of the President," counseled Flanders, "and he should have more respect for Army generals."

What about Flanders' blast a couple of weeks ago, in the now famous "war dance" speech against his Senate colleague?

That was merely "advisory," Flanders said, to warn that the dangers from without were greater than the Communist menace from within.

CIO Asks 'Effective Implementation' Of No-Raid Pact With AFL

Here is the text of the CIO Executive Board resolution on labor unity negotiations and the no-raid agreement pending between CIO and AFL:

ABOUT a year ago a joint unity committee was created by the Congress of Industrial Organizations and the American Federation of Labor which explored the possibility of achieving organic unity between the CIO and the AFL.

The committee held several meetings. It gave particular consideration to the problem of raiding between the organizations—that is, attempts by unions affiliated with one of the federations to intrude into established collective bargaining relationships of unions affiliated with the other federation.

The committee concluded that such activities were destructive of the best interests of the unions involved and of the entire labor movement. A study which the joint unity committee made showed that most raids fail; that they leave only a residue of unrest, dissatisfaction and disunity among the workers involved; that they create unnecessary industrial strain and conflict; and they do nothing to add to the strength and capabilities of the labor movement as a whole. Even in the few instances where raids are successful they involve a drain of time and money far disproportionate to the number of employes involved.

It was the unanimous view of the unity committee that all unions, whether affiliated with the CIO or the AFL would benefit if the energies devoted to raiding were instead devoted to the task of organizing the unorganized, and that the elimination of raiding between unions affiliated with the CIO and AFL would materially benefit the entire nation by eliminating a potent source of industrial unrest and conflict.

The representatives of the AFL and CIO unanimously agreed that the elimination of raiding constitutes a necessary first step to the achievement of organic unity.

THE committee, therefore, recommended both to the CIO and the the AFL and to the national and international unions affiliated with the two organizations that they conclude a no-raiding agreement in the form drafted by the committee. This agreement embodied the fundamental principle that no union affiliated with either federation would attempt to raid a union in the other federation.

The proposed agreement was submitted to the AFL convention in September, 1953, and to the CIO convention in November, 1953. It was approved by both conventions without dissenting votes.

On Dec. 16, 1953, Pres. George Meany of the AFL and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO, in accordance with these convention mandates, executed the no-raiding agreement on behalf of their respective federations. These signatures, however, bind the two federations and the AFL for its federal locals and the CIO for its local industrial unions only. For the no-raiding agreement to become fully effective and to have real meaning, it must be subscribed to by all or substantially all of the national and international unions affiliated with the two federations.

Virtually every union affiliated with the CIO, by action of the appropriate governing body, has determined to adhere to the no-raiding agreement.

While some progress has been made among AFL affiliates, to date a considerable number have not yet ratified the agreement.

Since the adherence to the no-raiding agreement by a substantial number of all the unions and both federations is imperative for its effectiveness, it would be misleading to the membership of both organizations and to the public at large to announce limited ratifications of the agreement as realizing the hopes of the CIO and AFL, expressed in both conventions, to eliminate raiding within the labor movement.

The effective implementation of a no-raiding agreement is the first step and a prior condition to a constructive and workable approach to labor unity. The CIO trusts that the leadership of every section of the American labor movement will meet their responsibilities in this matter so that unity discussions can be pursued.

With this goal in mind, the CIO is agreeable to further meetings with the American Federation of Labor.

Everything's 'Excellent' For Sinclair, Except For Job Facts

ANOTHER heaping spoonfull of soothing syrup was poured over the nation's economy by GOP Administration leaders last week, as unemployment figures just kept climbing.

The U.S., said Sec. of Commerce Weeks, is "in excellent shape" and he even claimed that the nation is "much better off than two short years ago."

Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey said it might be May before the economy showed any upward turn. Sec. of Labor Mitchell predicted that the unemployment situation would be better by fall.

And the business-supported Committee for Economic Development, in a lengthy report on "Defense Against Recession," argued that the U.S. should watch the economy from now until autumn before considering any anti-recession action.

Two hints as to what's ahead came last week:

1. The weekly report on basic steel production, a clue to industrial production three months and six months ahead.

Last week's steel production dropped again to 66.5% of normal, compared with 67.6% of capacity the week before, 73.6% a month ago, and 103.1% a year ago.

2. A warning that total unemployment will reach four million workers in March and continue to climb in the next six or eight months to five million.

That prediction came from Ross Robertson, economist for the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis. The official jobless figure now is 3,671,000.

A survey by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Unemployment Security showed that nearly one-third of the nation's 149 major industrial areas now have "substantial" unemployment.

There now are 34 major areas and 46 smaller areas with critical jobless problems, and 30 more shifted from a "balanced" category to one of "moderate labor surplus." There are no areas with reported labor shortages.

Layoffs continued around the country. At Massilon, O., about 300 workers were idled when Republic Steel closed down its blooming mill and open hearth operations, bringing the number of Republic jobless to 1800 in the area.

An iron-ore-hauling railroad subsidiary of U. S. Steel Co. laid off 112 workers. Reduced steel operations at Pittsburgh were blamed.

In Evansville, Ind., about 900 Plymouth assembly and body workers were laid off indefinitely.

But Sec. Weeks says the U.S. is "much better off than two short years ago."

Cut Restored

It took a Democratic demand for a recount to win, but the House last week finally restored a House Appropriations Committee slash of almost 50% in the Administration's request for $14.5 million supplemental appropriations for state employment security offices.

Rep. Bennett (R. Mich.) moved to restore the cut. His amendment was declared defeated on a standing vote.

Rep. Rabaut (D. Mich.), cosponsor of the Bennett motion, demanded a tellers' vote. The amendment won by one vote, 87 to 86.

CIO Issues New Jobs Program

CIO'S 10-point program to halt growing unemployment has been put into a pamphlet by that name and is available in single or bulk orders.

The pamphlet, prepared by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, deals with taxes, housing, collective bargaining, unemployment compensation, the minimum wage, social security, farm programs, public works and credit for small business and economic expansion. It concludes with a section on programs at the state and local level.

Single copies are available at 15c each. In bulk the cost is $3 per 100; $20 per 1,000 and 5,000 for $75. Orders should be sent to the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

CIO Calls Parley To Help Save Jobs

By AL ZACK

THE CIO Executive Board last week condemned the "do-nothing, look-the-other-way" economic policy of the Eisenhower Administration and warned that unless positive steps are taken, America is in for "a full-blown depression."

To focus constructive thinking squarely on this "No. One Economic Problem of Unemployment," the CIO Board voted unanimously to call a national conference on unemployment. The conference will be held in late April in Washington, with the exact date to be announced later.

The action, taken as the Executive Board met in New York City, followed a discussion by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, supplemented by Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald. The action had been recommended by Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee, and president of the Textile Workers. (Text on Page 1.)

Going West

The next CIO national convention will be held at the Hotel Statler in Los Angeles, the CIO Executive Board decided. The convention will begin on Dec. 6, after committee meetings to be held during the previous week.

At the same meeting, the board voted to take no further action on the no-raiding agreement with the AFL until more AFL unions were prepared to sign.

Prepared To Sign

In a statement discussing the status of the cease-fire pact, the 54-man board said it would be "misleading" to announce limited ratification as realizing the hopes, expressed by both CIO and AFL conventions, that raiding would be eliminated. (Text on Page 2.)

Reuther said the CIO unions, with only a few exceptions, were prepared to sign. These unions represented 98% of the CIO membership.

Only a limited number of AFL unions were prepared to ratify the agreement and the CIO statement noted that for the pact to be effective, it must be adhered to by a substantial number of all the unions in both federations.

"The effective implementation of a no-raiding agreement is the first step and a prior condition to a constructive and workable approach to labor unity," the CIO statement said.

"The CIO trusts that the leadership of every section of the American labor movement will meet their responsibilities in this matter so that unity discussions can be pursued.

"With this goal in mind, the CIO is agreeable to further meetings with the AFL."

In other actions during the two-day meeting held at the headquarters of the CIO Textile Workers, the Executive Board:

1. Condemned proposals by Sen. Smith (R., N.J.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee for a "union-conducted, government-regimented strike vote." The board also condemned the "irresponsible manner" in which the committee is considering "proposals never subjected to hearings or other public scrutiny.

"These proposals are a menace to orderly labor-management relations," Reuther said in a wire to Sen. Smith, "and inspire fear that your only motive is to hamstring and weaken the labor unions of America. (See adjoining story.)

Butler Bills Hit

2. Condemned a series of bills licensing unions which have been proposed as a means of combatting Communist-dominated unions. The proposals of Sens. Butler and Goldwater and Rep. Velde, the Board said, "would be a cure worse than the disease itself. (See Story on Page 2.)

"We do not believe," the CIO Executive Board said in a statement adopted unanimously, "that a free trade union movement can exist under government licensing of unions any more than political freedom can exist under governmental licensing of political parties."

At a press conference, Reuther underscored CIO's continuing campaign against unions dominated by Communists, saying "I can state categorically, the CIO will never tolerate any union whose leadership is Communist dominated or follows the Communist party line."

3. Authorized the admittance of the Mechanics Educational Society of America to the CIO, and revoked the charter of the United Optical Workers Union as had been requested by that union in convention. (Story on this page.)

4. Adopted a statement urging the Senate to reject the Administration's tax relief bill and substitute the George-Douglas measure which would increase personal income tax exemptions. This proposal, the board said, "would be the equivalent to a 7.5c wage increase to the average American family this year, and a 15c wage increase next year." (See Pages 6 and 7.)

Tax Cut Vital

This proposal was labeled as the "single, most important, most easily achieved step which the Federal Government can take to halt the growing recession and restore prosperity."

The CIO said it would "channel vast new funds into America's economic bloodstream" at a time when such "a transfusion was vitally needed."

MEETING SCENE as CIO Executive Board holds sessions in New York, with Pres. Walter P. Reuther speaking. Flanking him are Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) and Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

5. Concurred in the composition of CIO standing committees recommended by the Executive Committee. Many of the committees remained as they had been during the previous year, but there was one major change in the conservation field.

That committee, headed by Vice Pres. O. A. Knight, is now known as the CIO Committee on Power, Atomic Energy and Resources Development and has two sub-committees, the first for Collective Bargaining Liaison and the second on Conservation.

6. Approved reports from the following other committees: Political Action, Housing, International Affairs, Legislative, Community Services, Social Security, Safety and Occupational Health, Civil Rights, and Veterans. The board also approved a report of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, presented by Chairman Rieve and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the Foundation.

Something New

Last week's meeting of the CIO Executive Board in New York City was the first held in that city since the 1951 convention of the CIO.

It was also the first meeting of the board held outside of Washington except for meetings held during conventions.

THE CIO last week roundly condemned Republican proposals for strike votes, conducted by unions but regimented by the government.

The proposal, made by Chairman Smith (R. N.J.), of the Senate Labor Committee, has "all the defects of the earlier proposals for a government-conducted pre-strike vote, plus many more besides," the CIO Executive Board said in a statement to Smith by Pres. Walter Reuther.

Later in the week Smith postponed further hearings until word was received from the Whtie House on the "states' rights" issue.

Reuther summarized the objections to government-conducted votes, "stated by numerous impartial witnesses," as follows:

- They would interfere with collective bargaining and increase the likelihood of strikes.
- They would require a heavy expenditure of government funds.
- They sought to develop distrust between union members and their elected officials.
- They ignored the democratic structure of unions, which place authority in the hands of elected officials just as the authority of the government is placed in the hands of elected congressmen.

Act At Their Peril

The new proposal, Reuther said, has all these defects. It differs only in imposing the heavy financial burden on the unions who would "act at their peril in conducting elections."

Reuther noted that many technical decisions would arise each time a vote was held. " A subsequent government decision that the union has guessed wrong on any of these issues would subject it to drastic punishment," he said. Any technical error could deprive the union of its rights under the act.

In addition, he said, the Smith proposal that a strike vote take place not more than 80 days prior to a strike would "create a positive incentive for the calling of strikes."

Unions, having won a strike vote, would be pushed into a strike on the 80th day after a vote, even though further negotiations might avoid the work stoppage.

Deprived Of Rights

Also, he pointed out, failure of a union to comply at a single plant would deprive the entire union of its rights at all other plants.

The details of the proposal, he warned, were confused, unintelligible and badly drafted."

Reuther concluded:

"The CIO strongly urges that this absurd proposal be rejected. It is not merely ill-considered but wholly unconsidered. We protest the irresponsible manner in which the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee is proceeding. We urge that the committee discontinue this haphazard consideration of proposals never subjected to hearings or other public scrutiny. These proposals are a menace to orderly labor-management relations, and inspire fear that your only motive is to hamstring and weaken the labor unions of America."

CIO To Get New Affiliate As Mechanics Charter Approved

THE CIO Executive Board last week authorized the issuance of a charter to the Mechanics Educational Society of America, which had requested affiliation with the CIO.

The now-independent union represents some 53,000 members. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said most of its membership is in the Cleveland and Detroit areas.

The board authorized the CIO officials to work out arrangements with MESA Pres. Matt Smith and to issue a charter when such arrangements are complete.

At the same time, the board revoked the charter of the United Optical Workers of America. The action followed a request by that union's convention and its locals are now in the CIO Electrical Workers and the CIO Glass Workers.

The board also heard a report from the Executive Committee that the interim affiliation, granted the Distributive, Processing & Office Workers, had been terminated as of Dec. 31. The interim affiliation had been granted so that the DPO could work out a merger agreement with the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers.

Reuther Cites CIO Organizing Gains

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week demonstrated the falseness of irresponsible newspaper reports that the "CIO is bankrupt."

In a New York press conference, held during the meeting of the CIO Executive Board, Reuther pointed out that CIO has liquid assets in excess of $2 million.

That, he said by way of comparison, amounted to "double the liquid assets of the AFL." Reuther also noted that CIO had a much bigger annual operating budget than the AFL and had four times as many staff members in the field.

He characterized as "rank nonsense" reports that CIO was bankrupt.

At the same time, Reuther noted that CIO was organizationally growing stronger daily. He cited the following specific examples:

- The CIO Electrical Workers has broken the back of the old, Communist-dominated UE. The IUE's Schenectady victory, he said, was "the beginning of the final liquidation of the UE."
- The CIO Steelworkers were breaking through the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in the Mountain States and were scoring important gains in that area.
- The CIO Auto Workers awaited only an NLRB election to complete the liberation of workers in farm equipment plants who had been members of the Communist-dominated FE, also expelled by CIO.
- "There are important new developments in the organization of the oil industry," he added.

Reuther cited two recent UAW election victories in General Motors plants—one in Flint, Mich., and the other in Dallas, Tex.—as evidence of workers faith in the CIO.

In the Flint plant, 99.9% of the eligible workers in a bargaining unit of 3000 voted to join the UAW and in the Texas plant 97% of the workers voted for the CIO union.

Life Can Be Beautiful

Twenty-five years don't count for much in the outlook of Secretaries of Commerce.

Back on Mar. 3, 1930, Robert P. Lamont, the Commerce member of the Hoover Cabinet, predicted: "As weather conditions moderate, we are likely to find the country as a whole enjoying its wonted state of prosperity. Business will be normal in two months."

Last week, on Mar. 22, 1954, Sinclair Weeks, the Commerce member of the Eisenhower Cabinet, came up with the claim that the U. S. is "in excellent shape" and "much better off than two short years ago."

And Eisenhower, himself, said any federal action now might dampen the chances of an upturn later in the spring.

Disgrace And a Danger

Such are the latest examples of the "do-nothing, look-the-other-way" economic inaction of the GOP Administration which the CIO Executive Board last week bluntly called "both dangerous and disgraceful."

Without question, as CIO pointed out, the nation now is in the midst of a recession. The climbing unemployment figures (faster than in any other comparable five-month period in U. S. history), the falling production figures (off by more than 11%) bear out that analysis.

And "unless positive steps" are taken by government, industry, and labor as CIO warned, "there is danger that we may have a full-bloom depression."

What the recession means to people, to workers in the Chicago area steel mills now cut to a four-day week, what it means in lower living standards, is told elsewhere on this page. And there is warning for the GOP politicians who are getting blisters from sitting on their hands along the Potomac in the grim comment of a steel worker: "Times have moved along. They better not move back."

Action In Congress

There are a couple of lessons to be learned from the close House vote of approval on the GOP tax give-away (a roll call recorded on Page 6 of this issue of The CIO News.)

One lesson is that it pays—and pays plenty—to tell your congressman the score on important issues.

And the other lesson is that it pays even more to give PAC that dollar and to work to elect a better Congress.

The fight for a fair tax law continues; Round Two coming up in the Senate. The proposal to increase individual income tax exemptions (from the present $600 to $800, and later to $1000) would amount to a wage increase of more than 9c an hour or 7.5c an hour in take-home pay.

A letter to your senator would help.

Bad Fish

The Senator from Wisconsin says that he's "awfully sick" of the McCarthy-Cohn-Schine embroglio with the Army, so sick in fact that he wants to go off investigating elsewhere. But the Senate Investigating Subcommittee stopped him in that hit-run-move, and perhaps the truth may come out.

The whole McCarthy situation—and the blessings still bestowed upon him by the GOP National Committee—remind us of what one American politician once said of another: "Like dead mackerel in the moonlight, he shines and stinks."

Let's Send That Pitcher To The Showers!

In Other Words—

What 'Readjustment' Means To Steeltown

Underemployment—the short work week, of less than 40 hours, with short pay—is causing as much havoc as unemployment in many of the nation's industrial centers. Here is a report by Warner Bloomberg, Jr., digested from The Reporter magazine:

By WARNER BLOOMBERG, JR.

LIKE SEVERAL OTHER communities in this great industrial area, East Chicago, Ind., has sometimes been dubbed "Steeltown," especially that section stretching away from the vast Inland Steel works.

There is a current of fear running through Steeltown today. For the first time in nearly 15 years, with the exception of such situations as coal strikes, the crews of the blast furnaces at Inland have been put on a four-day week.

The one-day unemployment of workers at factories like Inland does not show up at all in the statistics about the jobless or the arguments about how many there are. But it certainly affects the lives these workers lead and the role they play in the nation's economic activity.

Some Workers Saw It Coming

"It was a shock, all right," said a burly man named Mike from the open-hearth department, which had "caught it" even before the blast furnaces. "Oh, there was some who saw it coming. Youngstown's been slacked off since last November. But most of the guys didn't know what to think, especially them who've hired in over the past 14 years and never knew nothing but five or six days a week."

Officers of the 15,000-member Local 1010, one of the CIO United Steelworker's biggest, had already been in policy discussions with the company about cutbacks and layoffs. The contract forbids laying off any but the most recently hired, the "probationary employes," as long as four days a week can be maintained. But any further cutback will mean that the higher-seniority men will have the right to demand layoffs rather than accept any further diminishing of the work week. They know that the three-day week does more to spread the misery than to spread the work.

"The way I see it," said an old-timer with whom I talked at Local 1010's Joe Germano Hall, "guys like me are sacrificing to help some fellow worker by going back on four days so he won't be laid off. But it's going to hurt an awful lot of people an awful lot.

"The cost of living is high around here. I pay $75 a month rent. I can't cut that. It's the family that gets hurt when you lose a day. Five days is all right, but even that isn't really enough to live like a family should live."

That was the theme I heard again and again. Harry, from a rolling department, described a "hypothetical example," although from the look on his face I doubted if it was pure imagination:

"Suppose a fellow has, say, 50 bucks a month payment on his home. Then maybe he's got $32.50 on the car and another $10 on the new stove. Then he's got his gas and electric and fuel bill, and food and all the other regular costs.

Cutting Away At The Edges

"You can see where these four-day fellows are starting to worry. They were working six, some of them even seven days when they bought that home, five and six when they got the car. Some of them have dropped from maybe a $100 a week to $65 in the past couple months. Some of them are asking, 'how will I make those payments?'

"So you cut where you can—the new dress for the wife, the week end movies, maybe the trip you'd been planning. You start cutting away the edges of your life."

The men are especially bitter about suggestions that they have been riding the crest of a false prosperity, have been living "higher" than they ought to expect to live, and that the time has come for them to readjust to a "more normal" way of life for workers.

"What is 'living high'?" demanded Mike when someone mentioned that he had run across the phrase in a magazine. "If we've been living high, who hasn't? And in that case, who else ought to be coming down?"

The thoughtful-looking man named Harry picked up the argument. "It isn't any exaggerated standard of living. Any working person is entitled to a home, isn't he? He ought to be able to have a car and a decent stove for his wife to cook on. Maybe those were luxuries years ago, but they aren't luxuries now."

As one man put it: "Times have moved along. They better not move back."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE 83RD CONGRESS has been in its second session for nearly three months and it is time to check the status of Pres. Eisenhower's "dynamic, progressive" program.

The New York Times, which supported Eisenhower in 1952, complains that on controversial issues "not one quarter" of the President's "200 legislative proposals has been acted upon." (Not one-tenth or one-twentieth has really received final congressional approval.)

All the Senate has been doing, asserts the Times, has been to "wrangle over the fatuous Bricker and George amendments and then to permit itself to be diverted and distracted by the activities of the junior senator from Wisconsin."

What's Happening To Eisenhower's 'Dynamic' Bills

Walter Lippmann, the columnist who also endorsed Eisenhower in 1952, blames the President, rather than Congress, for the futilities and follies of the 83rd.

Discussing Eisenhower's little news conference speech opposing "hysteria" (everyone is against hysteria just as everyone is against sin), Lippmann blistered the President for lack of self-assertion.

A Series Of Battles

Passengers at sea may become subject to panic and hysteria in the event of a storm, said Lippmann. But they can control their fears if they see the captain firmly in charge and doing his duty. Panic overwhelms them only if the captain loses command.

Next day Lippmann pointed out that congressional anti-Eisenhower forces in the Republican party had already won two battles, were fighting a third, and if they won it would move to No. 4—the "ditching" of Eisenhower in 1956 and the nomination of some "puppet" as creature of the right-wing GOP.

This is by no means a fanciful notion. We have had puppet Presidents in the past, particularly in the decades before the Civil War, controlled by some strong Cabinet member or a cabal of powerful congressmen.

Mr. Eisenhower lends aid and comfort to Republicans hoping to "ditch" him by telling sundry White House visitors, quite earnestly, that he doesn't want to be more than a one-term President. If he doesn't want a second term, he won't get it—and he will have less influence, proportionately, as the end of his first term approaches.

The President's program, of course, has never been truly "dynamic" and "progressive."

He signed a give-away tidelands oil bill last year. There is no indication that he will veto, this year, another give-away, the obscure Hinshaw Bill to relieve great electric utilities and gas pipelines of effective regulation by the Federal Power Commission.

Congress Is Paralyzed

His Tart-Hartley proposals are worse than Taft-Hartley. He will not support Labor Sec. Mitchell's endorsement of a fair employment bill. His tax policies — particularly his attempt to favor corporation stockholders over working people—are more retrogressive than Andy Mellon's. He is scuttling public power.

Yet having yielded all this, he still cannot get Congress to follow him on other matters—foreign economic policy, social security, statehood for Hawaii (and maybe even Alaska), housing and health, the defense policy, the St. Lawrence Seaway, and immigration policy.

Congress is not functioning in an affirmative sense. It is paralyzed in the Senate by McCarthy's aggressive antics and in the House by a simple absence of executive leadership.

Congress is always slow, of course, in completing actions, and things can happen in a rush toward the close of a session.

Yet the year for the President to get action, if ever, is 1954—and some of his strongest supporters think he is letting time slip irrevocably through his hands.

★ John Paton Davies, Jr., a State Dept. career officer, will have to submit to a ninth "hearing" to straighten out what Sec. Dulles says are certain matters subject to "conflicting interpretations." When and if Davies is "cleared" for security and loyalty for the ninth time, will the "clearance" stick—or does he get the treatment a tenth, eleventh and twelfth time?

★ Rep. Kearney (N. Y.), a Republican member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, says the committee's staff situation is "rotten" and must be "cleaned up right away." He charges the Committee employes are "backbiting" each other and competing for pay raises. This is the staff which Chairman Velde (Ill.), another Republican, said weeks ago was at last "operating smoothly."

Administration Beats A Retreat From Slogan Of 'New Look' Policy

By MILTON PLUMB

NO PHRASE coined by the slick copywriters for the Eisenhower Administration has provoked as much confusion, argument or world alarm as have the words "new look" as applied to U. S. foreign and military policies.

Now even the Administration itself is trying to disavow it. Pres. Eisenhower expressed his dislike of the words at a recent news conference, and Sec. of State John Foster Dulles acknowledged before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee that the phase "is not a happy one."

The President had this to say: "All that the 'new look' is is an attempt by intelligent people to keep abreast of the times; and if you want to call your today's clothes the 'new look' as compared to what Lincoln wore, all right, we are in the 'new look.' But I don't like this expression because it doesn't mean much to me."

Unfortunately, however, the phrase—rightly or wrongly—meant much more to most of the peoples of the world. Many of our allies were thrown into a panic when they understood a recent interpretation of the "new look" by Dulles as meaning that henceforth, in response to aggression, the U. S. would retaliate with the H-bomb.

Although Administration spokesmen have often contradicted each other in attempting to explain what the "new look" is all about, the current use clearly originated with Pres. Eisenhower last year when he directed the Joint Chiefs of Staff to "take a new look" at U. S. defense policies.

...And Less Punch

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther noted last week that Defense Sec. Wilson, author of the "new look" had a lot of experience with General Motors before taking his government job, and added: "I think his new look is giving us a lot of chrome on top of the hood but less punch under the hood."

Later, the Republican leadership in Congress picked up the phrase. They used it to try to justify the GOP "economy" program, which consisted chiefly of lopping over $6.3 billion from last year's defense budget.

Some $5.1 billion of this "saving" came by slashing back the Air Force to 120 wings in place of the 143-wing goal regarded as the minimum for "relative safety."

Democrats charged that the Air Force cutbacks were dictated by the Administration's desire to balance the budget rather than the nation's defense needs.

The GOP argued, however, that the cuts would strengthen U. S. defenses. Foreign Operations Administrator Harold E. Stassen boasted that the Republicans were getting "more defense more rapidly for less dollars lasting longer."

The "new look" defense policy thus meant originally that the Administration had decided to take what it called a "calculated risk" by cutting back U. S. defenses, particularly the Air Force, on the assumption that all-out war was at least several years in the future.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

New Look Looks

Then last January two things happened which gave the "new look" a different meaning. One was a speech by Sec. Dulles; the other was the revised defense budget, which completely reversed last year's policy by restoring 17 of the 23 wings cut from the Air Force, and instead cut the Army by some $4 billion.

The National Security Council, Dulles said, had made "some basic policy decisions" and henceforth, instead of being dragged into limited and inconclusive wars like Korea, this country would rely increasingly on "a great capacity to retaliate, instantly, by means and at places of our own choosing."

It took no interpreter for the world to understand that Dulles meant use of atomic weapons. And his words "of our own choosing" brought immediate worry and unrest to our allies.

A Lesson Recalled

Along with increased reliance on "massive retaliatory power" the new Administration program also calls for decreased reliance on manpower and conventional weapons and virtually eliminates economic and technical assistance. Critics say that this emphasis on atomic armament is dangerously inflexible and brings the world closer to all-out war.

Others point out that this policy is dangerously similar to the one we followed when we demobilized after World War II, withdrew our troops from Korea, limited our military budget and relied on the deterrent power of our atom stockpile. It didn't deter invasion then, and we had to rebuild our conventional military forces in order to meet it.

These and other contradictions in the new "new look" program led Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.), a leading critic of the defense cutbacks, to characterize it as "a policy of wider and wider fixed commitments based upon talking tough and carrying a small stick."

New Isolationists Mimic Red Line

PRAISE for the CIO's anti-Communist stand and a blast at the isolationists are contained in "The Yardstick," weekly syndicated column of Msgr. George C. Higgins of Washington, D. C.

After "prolonged investigation" the CIO expelled a number of its affiliates because they had ceased to be bona fide trade unions and had become political agents of the Kremlin, recalled Msgr. Higgins, who is assistant director of the Social Action Dept., National Catholic Welfare Conference.

"Chapter and verse were cited to establish the fact that these affiliates were slavishly following the Communist Party line in the field of foreign policy," the priest said. Opposition to the CIO-supported Marshall Plan was considered to be prima facie evidence that they were taking their orders from Moscow.

CIO's expulsion of these unions was widely applauded in 1949 "as an important contribution to the anti-Communist counteroffensive of the Western powers."

The latter-day isolationists, according to Msgr. Higgins, now take another slant. He declared that holier-than-thou anti-Communists, still unwilling to give CIO a clean bill of health, are now saying that the Marshall Plan was a disastrous policy which was favored, if not actually initiated by the Communists.

He quotes from the jacket of a new book by Chesly Manly of the Chicago Tribune, who contended that "the greater threat to America is from within; that the external threat is over-emphasized, and has been purposely built up to justify a level of spending and taxation which will ultimately destroy our economy and society."

Msgr. Higgins noted that Manly or those for whom he speaks are fortunate in that they are being judged by a different standard from the one which they themselves apply.

"Heaven help the 'liberal' who would dare to suggest, at this late date, that the external threat of Communist aggression is 'over-emphasized'! I seriously doubt that he could qualify for employment with the federal government. Mr. Manly, on the other hand, would undoubtedly be cleared by the FBI without the slightest bit of trouble.

"Very confusing, isn't it?" asks Msgr. Higgins.

The Key Roll Call—

How The House Voted On Fair Tax Cut Plan

Here is the vote by which the House of Representatives refused to grant a "fair share" of tax savings to low- and middle-income families through higher individual income tax exemptions.

The vote came on March 18, 1954, on the GOP Administration's general tax bill, on the question of returning the bill, HR 8300, to committee with instructions to increase individual exemptions from $600 to $700 and to strike out special tax benefits to stockholders.

The motion for recommital was defeated by a vote of 210 to 204. Voting "right" for recommital and higher exemptions were 193 Democrats, 10 Republicans and one independent. Voting "wrong" against recommital were 201 Republicans and nine Democrats.

*Key to this roll call: R, a right vote for recommital; W, a wrong vote against recommital; A, absent; , paired. Figures indicate congressional district. The roll call, as prepared by the CIO Legislative Dept.:

Book Review

A Good Book For Stiffening American Spines

By FRED ROSS

LONG BEFORE the recent revulsion over Sen. McCarthy and his tactics, Elmer Davis kept up a steady barrage against him and similar foes of American freedom.

ELMER DAVIS

Now he has written a book, "But We Were Born Free," a good book to stiffen the spines of trade unionists and all citizens in this era of the new "Know Nothings."

Based on a recent series of speeches on freedom, Davis in his new volume covers a wide range of subjects, from newspaper and radio news coverage, proposed constitutional changes to old age. But the central theme is the maintenance of freedom in a period of unrestrained constitutional investigations.

'In the world in which we live," warns Davis, "freedom once lost is lost to stay lost. We had better remember that in dealing with our internal even more than with our external problems."

Davis thoroughly examines the nature of the threats to our freedom from Velde, McCarran, Jenner and McCarthy. He thinks that Velde is a lightweight, who stands in his own light.

In 1953, Davis recalls "McCarthy, shrewder than his competitors (in the investigating field), said he was going after not merely Communists but Communist thinkers. The distinction was prudent; whether a man is a Communist is a matter of fact, though the fact may sometimes be hard to determine; but a Communist thinker is anybody whose thinking you choose to regard as Communist."

Davis suggests that it appears McCarthy wants to be President, quotes liberal Republican opinion as believing he will have a chance only if the Eisenhower Administration fails.

Davis has no easy formula for resisting "this general drive against the freedom of the mind," but he suggests:

"The first thing to remember is, don't let them scare you."

Freedom's battleline usually is thinly held, but "this country," as Davis concludes, "was not established by cowards and cowards will not preserve it."

"But We Were Born Free," by Elmer Davis. $2.75, The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis and New York.

Up To The Senate Now—

Second Round Begins For Fair Tax Cut Law

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

THE BELL clanged last week for the second round in the tax battle between the Big Boys and the Plain Folks.

The ring was hauled over to the Senate side after a first round in the House where the money-men won by a narrow six-point margin.

A stiff fight was in prospect as Republican forces, led by Pres. Eisenhower, battled to justify their trickle-down theory as opposed to a Democratic proposal—backed by CIO—aimed at tax savings for those in the low- and middle-income brackets which would mean more consumer buying power.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
The Trickle-Down Theory

The GOP was taking no wild glee from its close squeak—210 to 204, defeating a raise in individual income tax exemptions from $600 to $700. Both sides were scrapping with one eye cocked on a fateful Tuesday next November when Americans will go to the polls. Round Two may take several weeks to end.

Passage of the Democratic proposal for higher personal exemptions would have saved at least $80 in taxes for the average family of four.

For the typical worker, the boosting of individual tax exemptions would be equivalent to a wage increase of more than 9c an hour, or 7.5c more in take-home pay.

To help their wealthy friends who aided so magnificently in the 1952 campaign, the GOP overhauled the tax structure built over the last 50 years. They built a new tax pyramid into the 900-page economy-size bill voted by the House, with the rich realizing the economies.

Plain John Q. Citizen who works and earns $5000 a year or less—and he makes up 74.8% of all taxpayers—could take cold comfort from the GOP measure. The only way he could benefit from the tax savings they proposed was to suffer a calamity of some kind or other, put his children to work or, if John is a farmer, lay out money for conservation.

John has another out, too. He won't have to pay taxes on income he doesn't earn if he becomes jobless as a result of Treasury Sec. Humphrey's hard-money policy.

More Escape Hatches

There's a third escape hatch for Mr. Citizen but he may not get much chance to use it. The President wanted to slam this one down too but congressmen insisted it be left open. John Q. can save excise tax money if he buys his wife a fur coat, his daughter some costly jewelry and blows the rest of the bankroll on luggage for a round-the-world cruise.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther blasted the GOP tax benefit program. He noted that 95% of the tax cuts supported by the Administration would go to wealthy families and corporations. The remaining 5% is for the 74.8% of the taxpayers earning $5000 or less a year.

Instead, Reuther proposed, the living standards of American families should be raised. Higher tax exemptions for those in low-income brackets would mean higher purchasing power. More money for consumers would create new markets for U. S. industry, provide jobs for workers and head off the growing recession that darkens the American horizon.

The Key Issue

Reuther noted the unemployment rate—up 300% in the last five months—and pleaded the desperate need for more purchasing power to buy the products of our factories and farms.

Senate Democrats inclined to this theory. Sen. George (D. Ga.) and Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), sponsored the bill which will be the second round issue. They proposed raising income tax exemptions to $800 the first year and $1000 the second year.

Republicans in the Senate will make the same determined effort which succeeded in the House—to ram the program through. Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) recalled 1932 when Herbert Hoover "threatened that unless the unemployed masses pulled in their belts and accepted the Hoover program, grass would grow in the streets of American cities."

Under George's measure, a working father with two children or a total of four exemptions, grossing $60 a week would save $1.57 a week if his exemption was raised to $800—equivalent to a 4c an hour wage increase. He would save $3 a week—the same as getting a 7.5c an hour raise—if his income was $90 a week before deductions and exemptions.

Big Wage Saving

If the George Bill carries, that $90 a week worker would be saving $6.15 a week—like getting a 15c raise—the second year the plan was in operation.

Pres. Eisenhower recently argued that his party's tax bill wasn't another in the series of give-aways to the rich. "I am for everybody paying his fair share," the President said.

When the income tax was first adopted the concept was that the family's basic living standard should be exempt before the individual income tax applied to the family.

A sound, progressive income tax is one that is based on ability to pay. The lower the income, the lower the tax; the higher the income, the higher the tax.

New GOP Doctrine

Republicans have veered from this doctrine more and more. At present they have all but abandoned it to pay off the political debts incurred in '52.

CIO believes the question should be at what point should an individual be subject to individual income tax in a progressive tax structure. It holds that it is not unreasonable that a married couple with two dependents should have the first $4444 of income exempt from taxation under a sound progressive tax structure.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) put it this way: "The President's (tax) message doesn't stand up under analysis." He said the Administration tax program merely follows "the give-away pattern that has become the hallmark of the Eisenhower Administration."

—Herblock in Washington Post
"The Big Ones That Always Get Away"

The Number One Issue . . .

The CIO Executive Board statement on taxes follows in part:

Shortly, the Senate will consider the No. One issue in the minds of America's taxpayers——the tax relief bill.

We in the CIO have vigorously opposed the Eisenhower proposal which is based on the discredited trickle-down economic theory. We have just as vigorously supported those proposals which would increase every taxpayer's personal income tax exemption from the present $600 level to $800 this year, and $1000 next year. Such action would be the equivalent of a 7.5c wage increase to the average American family this year, and a 15c wage increase next year.

This proposal is the single, most important, most easily achieved step which the federal government can take to halt the growing recession and restore prosperity.

Over 90% of the relief in the House bill goes to corporations and wealthy income groups. There is no justification for this time when the economy most desperately needs greater consumer purchasing power.

We urge the Senate to adopt the George-Douglas proposal for increasing everyone's personal tax exemption. That is the fair, reasonable and sensible way to grant tax relief in these times.

Ike's Figures Don't Jibe With Facts On Dividend Tax Deal

WHO'S GOING to get the benefits of the tax cuts in the Republican - sponsored tax bill—most of the U. S. families or just a handful of them?

Pres. Eisenhower denied the GOP measure would help rich folks primarily, but the facts in the case don't seem to bear this out.

The President cited a U. S. Steel Co. report on the income of some of its stockholders to buttress his argument that his wasn't a reward-the-rich program.

Not prominently mentioned by the President was the fact that the average income of a U. S. Steel stockholder is $11,000 a year. The steel firm made its survey to check the effect of what they call "double taxation" of stock dividends.

What was also ignored was that 92% of all U. S. families own no stock at all. About four million families, only about 8% of the American scene, own one or more stock shares.

Even more important, .6% of these families, own 80% of all the stock in the country. These 300,000 lucky families who hold the overwhelming proportion of all publicly-held stock will get the lion's share of benefits from the Administration's proposed dividend tax revision.

The tax concession that involves partial exemption for dividend-income is another GOP give-away to a small group of wealthy high-income families.

There is no general tax cut affecting the mass of American taxpayers on the measure proposed by the Administration. It proposes cuts of almost $1.4 billion in the first year, almost $862 million of which goes to corporations or wealthy stockholders.

The breakdown follows: Dividends, $240 million; depreciation, $375 million; corporation carry-backs on losses, $100 million; income from foreign sources, $147 million.

It has been estimated that only about 5% of the $1.4 billion will be shared with American families with less than $5000 in annual income.

Treasury Sec. Humphrey, generally believed to be responsible for the Administration tax program, said in effect that the country could not afford tax cuts that would benefit all the people. He advocates the "trickle-down" theory.

The trouble with that theory, as the Ohio CIO Council pointed out, is that "we poor people at the bottom of the pile ain't getting wet."

CIO Tax Plan In Summary

Here's what CIO wants in a "fair share" tax program:

- Higher exemptions, from the present $600 to $800 this year and $1000 in 1955, to give buying power a boost.
- Plug loopholes that benefit corporations and the wealthy to produce more than $7 billion in added revenue.
- Let excise taxes due to expire Apr. 1 die as planned and cut other excise and sales taxes to the bone—especially on alcoholic beverages (to halt bootlegging) and on autos (to prod sales).
- Keep corporate income tax rates due to end Apr. 1, retain individual tax cuts dating from Jan. 1.

That 'Psycho-Recession' Socks Stomachs Of Covington's Jobless

Covington, Va., is one of the smaller communities listed by the government among the 59 critical unemployment centers. Unemployment there is 10% of the working force. The following is a digest of a first-hand report on Covington by the editor of The CIO Paperworkers News.

By HENRY PALEY

"IN MY HEAD!" Marcus Fitzpatrick exclaimed when told that politicians were saying we are now in a "psycho-recession."

"This 'whatever-it-is' isn't in my head. I feel it in the stomach," he said.

Fitzpatrick is one of the employes who were laid off at the Covington, Va., mill of the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Co. last July. He lost his job as a result of "mill modernization," according to the management of the mill.

DURING the past year and a half 600 to 700 Paperworkers have been cut from the Westvaco payroll as a result of technological changes. UPA Local 675, representing mill employes, has been fighting every step of the way, fighting for full crews and seeing that layoffs follow contract seniority guarantees.

(A substantial part of the costs of the modernization program was financed through rapid tax amortization granted by the government.)

For those laid-off, Local 675 assists in helping obtain unemployment compensation and relief when needed. The local's office is developing into an agency looking for jobs for people.

"The only trouble is, there are no jobs to be found," said Local Pres. Arnold Brown.

As a truck driver at the paper mill, Fitzpatrick was earning $1.45 an hour. He'd been employed at Westvaco for three years.

LOOKING at his stolidly-built concrete block house which he constructed with his own hands, evenings and during time off from the paper mill, Fitzpatrick said, "if I had the money, there's a lot of things I'd like to be buying for the place."

Mr. and Mrs. Fitzpatrick have been scouting all over the Covington area for a steady job. They've met the same answer all over, "No work." What little money Fitzpatrick saved during his years of work is gone.

Mrs. L. L. Dilly is another worker laid off by the paper mill. She's been out of work since August.

With an invalid husband and a high-school-age daughter to support, Mrs. Dilly said, "I don't know how we'd been able to get along if it hadn't been for the kindness of friends and neighbors."

A PLEASANT-looking redheaded woman, Mrs. Dilly said she'd like to be able to send her daughter to business college. "But I don't see how we can do it, things being what they are," she said.

Mrs. Dilly has been able to keep the family going by raising chickens. A mill worker with 10 years of seniority, she is a stalwart union member. At present UPA is trying to win back a job for her on the basis of mill seniority.

"We've got the case in arbitration now," Brown said. "If the company would see the human side of things a little, it could prevent a lot of the suffering."

UPA Protests

Pres. Harry Sayre and Sec.-Treas. Frank Grasso of the CIO Paperworkers have called for vigorous government action to halt growing unemployment.

They cited the need for expanding consumer purchasing power in a letter to congressional leaders urging enactment of Sen. George's (D. Ga.) proposal to raise income tax exemptions to $800 immediately and to $1000 next year.

Steel Union Hails Bittner As 'Industrial Democrat'

CIO STEELWORKERS in Bethlehem, Pa., have dedicated the Van A. Bittner Memorial Building as a living monument to the former USA-CIO vice president.

Ceremonies marking the dedication of the $400,000 structure were attended by several hundred. Top union and management officials joined in the tribute after Mrs. Bertha May Walter Bittner, widow of the union leader, cut a ribbon to formally open the building.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald emphasized that it was Bittner's unceasing efforts on the labor front and in the halls of Congress and industry which helped bring labor to its present place of respect in industry's eyes.

McDonald lauded Bittner as a man who believed in the simple fundamentals of an American democrat as a way of life.

"The cornerstone of American democracy is industrial democracy," McDonald said, "and by industrial democracy we mean the right of the working man to stand up and voice his opinion."

USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes paid tribute to Bittner as did CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe.

The new building will serve as the home of Steelworkers Locals 2598, 2599 and 2600.

A plaque on the building reads in part: "He (Bittner) devoted his life to the principle that through labor unions our democracy can be made to function better, not only for the membership, but for the entire nation. His whole concern was for America and her people."

Buffalo CIO Report Blasts Law Curbing Jobless Pay

THE HUGHES-Bress bill amending the New York State Unemployment Compensation Law has "resulted in one out of three workers applying for compensation being disqualified," according to a report issued by the Buffalo CIO Council.

The eight-page report was prepared by a committee chaired by Edward F. Gray, CIO Auto Workers subregional director.

The report emphasizes that 40,000 more workers were disqualified in 1952 than in 1949, despite the fact that there were twice as many applications for compensation in 1949.

"It's now possible to disqualify anyone," the report says in attacking the bill's loose provisions. "If they don't like your looks or attitude, you're liable to receive a notice that you can't collect your own checks for one of the following reasons: you refused suitable employment without good cause; you left your place of employment without good cause; you lost your job due to misconduct on your part."

The Buffalo Council report said that the major changes in the law divided up New York State's $600 million unemployment reserve fund "by a complicated formula which gave the giants among industries the biggest cuts." Each employer was then given a "checking account" in Albany and made responsible for the "balance" in his account. When a laid-off worker receives unemployment benefits, it is charged to his employer's account.

This, the Buffalo Council said, provides "in the words of the U.S. Government Dept. of Labor, 'incentives to employers to prevent payment of benefits for unemployment.'

"The Hughes-Brees Bill is part of a well-heeled, well-prepared plan to kill unemployment insurance and take us all back to the jungle."

Veteran Leader Of TWU Retires

Henry S. (Mike) Foley, a 50-year veteran of the labor movement in San Francisco, has retired from office. He has been president of CIO Transport Workers Local 250, representing Municipal Railway carmen, since it was organized.

Benedict, Once CARE Aide, Appointed To CIO Post

APPOINTMENT of Daniel Benedict as associate director of the CIO Dept. for International Affairs was announced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the International Affairs Committee.

Benedict will be associated with Victor G. Reuther, director of the International Affairs Dept. He recently returned to the U. S. from Europe, where he was an executive for CARE.

A native of New York City, at one time Benedict was employed in the Lynn and Everett, Mass., plants of General Electric and served on the union's shop council.

DURING World War II he served with the Air Force as a flight engineer and gunner and later in Allied liaison work. Following his discharge he studied at the Sorbonne in Paris.

Benedict became associated with CARE, advancing to mission chief in both Czechoslovakia and France. Later he was CARE's regional director for Western Europe. During his stay in Czechoslovakia he figured in a spy trial and was branded by the Communists as an agent for "American imperialists" trying to "undermine the people's democracy."

DANIEL BENEDICT

While overseas he maintained his interest in trade union activities, working closely with free European unions. With Victor Reuther he helped set up a CIO program of aid to the free trade unions in France and Italy.

Michael Ross, former head of the International Affairs Dept., is now the CIO representative to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions with headquarters in Brussels, Belgium.

'Jungle Law' Seen—

Aircraft Workers Hit Unfair U.S. Policies

AN END to the double economic standard imposed by the government on aircraft workers was demanded by 200 delegates to the CIO Auto Workers fifth annual national aircraft conference held last week in Washington.

Representing 250,000 UAW-CIO aircraft workers from every section of the country, they buttonholed Congressmen and Senators in support of their case for fair consideration.

BUTTRESSING their argument was the printed decision of a presidential arbitration panel in the 1952 dispute against North American Aviation Co. which the aircraft industry and government have ignored.

"Jungle law" will set the rules for a showdown battle with the aircraft industry unless it changes its attitude towards workers, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther promised the conference.

He said the UAW would make every effort at the highest policy levels of government to have the law of reason substituted for the law of the jungle so aircraft workers could bargain in freedom and get their rights.

"JUNGLE LAW" faces aircraft industry unless government ends its present unfair policies, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of CIO Auto Workers (center) warned 200 delegates to UAW aircraft conference in Washington. Television news cameramen (foreground) were on hand for the parley, which represented 250,000 workers.

"But if the government persists, and if the aircraft industry continues, I say we will do it the hard way because we have no other course," Reuther asserted.

"We had to do it at General Motors, Ford, International Harvester, Chrysler and Briggs to get them to end their law of the jungle attitude. When faced with a choice between jungle law and surrendering, we will fight," Reuther, who is also CIO president, pledged.

Reuther said the "political climate" in which the conference was held was unfriendly. He said that a few years ago the aircraft workers could have walked the few blocks to the White House and their problems would have been listened to sympathetically. "That is not so today," he said.

THE CIO head recalled Pres. Eisenhower's repeated statements that he would "remove the heavy hand of the government from the bargaining table." Instead, Reuther said, the government has substituted "heavy tanks on management's side."

"We have been getting pious words from the Eisenhower Administration, but poisonous deeds. The record is long and treacherous," said Reuther.

Discussing the North American Aviation strike, Reuther charged the Defense Dept. and the Air Force with giving their blessing to the firm's "arrogant and callous management." He said it was impossible for the UAW to get an appointment with Defense Sec. Wilson and the GOP chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee refused to call a meeting to discuss the problem.

Reuther said he had an admission from Labor Sec. Mitchell that there was no free collective bargaining in the strike and that the government was not neutral in the dispute.

Touching briefly on Sen. McCarthy, Reuther said "one of these days McCarthy and his men are going over to the Lincoln Memorial and chip Lincoln's historic words out of the marble walls."

Sen. Symington (D. Mo.) scored the "new look" policy and said the Administration puts "figures before forces" in the nation's defense. He said aircraft manufacturers should bargain equitably and recalled that all their development costs are government-financed and first production work is on a cost-plus basis.

REP. YORTY (D. Calif.) charged the "new look" is a device to cover up the Administration's error in slashing Air Force funds last year, only to boost them again this year. He claimed the error set the Air Force buildup back two years.

UAW Vice Pres. John W. Livingston, director of its National Aircraft Div., was conference chairman. Other speakers included UAW Vice Pres. Richard Gosser and William Kircher, Livingston's administrative aide.

Benson's 'Wrecking Crew Job' On Soil Conservation Hit

THE "WRECKING crew job" done by Agriculture Sec. Benson on the U. S. Soil Conservation Service has been blasted by Rep. Mollohan (D., W. Va.).

Mollohan was among members of the House Government Operations Committee signing a report that is sharply critical of Benson's arbitrary and ill-considered" action against "one of the most efficient, highly regarded and efficient programs" of the Agriculture Dept.

Hearings were held by the subcommittee on public accounts relative to Benson's controversial reorganization of the SCS last December. Mollohan said he was convinced that, despite Benson's protests, it was his original intention to break up SCS entirely and distribute its program among other department divisions, farm groups, the land grant colleges and the Extension Services.

This is borne out, Mollohan added, by a cut in the funds asked for next year's operation of the service.

MOLLOHAN noted that even while Benson was defending his actions, dust storms were darkening the southern and western skies.

"That was our priceless top soil," he said, ". . . and a whole lot of food for the dinner tables of future Americans was blowing with it."

"The present Administration," he said, "has cut the heart out of this splendid service by breaking up the teams of highly skilled soil conservation experts, by reducing their numbers and by reducing the Soil Conservation budget by over $5 million this year while asking for larger sums for less vital activities."

2 Parleys To Hear CIO Spokesmen On Annual Wages

TWO UNIVERSITY conferences next month will hear CIO spokesmen present labor's position on the guaranteed annual wage.

The sixth annual Rutgers Labor-Management Conference at New Brunswick, N.J., on Apr. 6 will hear Marvin J. Miller of the CIO Steelworkers' Research Dept.

Conducted by the university's Institute of Management and Labor Relations, the forum will review the economic and historical background of the GAW, explain union and management thinking on the subject and describe some of the better known guaranteed wage plans now in operation.

General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg of CIO and the USA-CIO will discuss the GAW at the Cornell Univ. conference on current problems in labor relations and arbitration at Ithaca, N. Y., Apr. 13, 14.

More School Funds Asked

DEMOCRATIC efforts to write funds for aid to schools into a $394 million supplemental appropriations bill last week resulted in the measure's being sent back to the House Appropriations Committee for further hearings.

Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.) complained that the Administration had made no such request and "we don't know anything about it."

Rep. Fogarty (D. R.I.), a member of Taber's committee, said he intended to offer an amendment to add $113 million for aid to schools in areas which are overcrowded because of federal defense activities.

Power Policy Of GOP Seen Killing REA

POWER POLITICS — electric power that is — as played by the Administration threatens the doom of the nation's rural electric program.

For the GOP plays right into the hands of monopolistic power companies, according to Executive Mgr. Clyde T. Ellis of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association.

Ellis told the Senate subcommittee on monopoly that the Interior Dept. policy on power and Missouri Basin marketing criteria "must be eliminated or drastically modified." Otherwise, he predicted, contrary to the will of Congress, they will "mean less power for the people, higher prices and further entrenchment of the already overwhelming power company monopoly."

Larson Named To Labor Dept.

Arthur Larson, dean of the Univ. of Pittsburgh law school, was nominated by Pres. Eisenhower last week to be undersecretary of labor. Larson would succeed to the vacancy caused by the resignation of Lloyd Mashburn.

Ford Workers Join In Test Of Radioactive Iron Ore

RADIOACTIVE iron ore in one of the largest quantities ever used in an industrial experiment was fed into a blast furnace recently by a group from the CIO Auto Workers' Ford Local 600.

The UAW-CIO members employed at the Benson Ford furnace of the Ford plant at Dearborn, Mich., dumped 76 tons of radioactively "tagged" ore into the furnace so scientists could trace its flow.

The test was staged to determine the feasibility of using fine iron powders obtained by concentrating low-grade ore as part of the furnace "charge."

The steel industry has assumed it is necessary to form the powder into lumps because powders are too light to withstand the blast in a furnace long enough to be smelted into iron. The radioactive tracers tested the need for the extra step in iron making. Results showed charging with powder was not quite practicable.

The powder was prepared by Ford workers and then shipped to Oak Ridge, Tenn., where it was bombarded in a nuclear reactor for eight days. Then it was mixed with regular ores at the Ford plant and given the furnace test. Despite the amount of material, the level of radioactivity was 100 times safer than that prescribed for safety by the Atomic Energy Commission.

Unions Praised For Aid In N. Y. Anti-Bias Gains

A LARGE NUMBER of unions shared credit with numerous employers for improved policy toward minority groups, in the 1953 report of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination.

The report said elimination of discrimination based on racial, religious and nationality grounds can become a reality in the foreseeable future.

Commission Chairman Ward B. Arbury said the law and an education program conducted by the commission joined forces to break discrimination in employment opportunities and in places of public accommodations.

"Today, qualified persons of all groups," Arbury said, "are found in white collar jobs, and in the skilled, semi-skilled, and technical and professional occupations of the great industries of the Empire State."

Meanwhile, a study made in four cities showed that the proximity of white and Negro families in public housing resulted in better inter-racial attitudes.

Dr. Daniel M. Wilner, research assistant professor of psychology at the New York Univ. Research Center, reported that white housewives in such projects showed an increasing regard for their Negro neighbors.

Oil Give-Away Ruling Appealed

Rhode Island asked the U. S. Supreme Court last week to reconsider its recent denial of a constitutional test of the tidelands oil give-away.

The court ruled Mar. 15 that it would not hear arguments by two states permitting them to question the exclusive right of Texas, Florida, Louisiana and California to the oil beneath their tidelands.

For The Ladies—

Woman Chief Of UAW Local Remembers The Open Shop Era

MILDRED GARDNER, president of CIO Auto Workers Local 268, never has any problem about how to spend her time. Housewife, union official, churchwoman and hobbyist, she keeps busy every minute.

Mrs. Gardner for two years has headed the UAW-CIO local at the American Chain and Cable plant in Adrian, Mich.

With 20 years of service with the company behind her, she is determined to prevent a return to the depression days she can remember so well.

She was 20 years old when she began work at American Chain. She'd been married at 17 and she and her husband were on welfare for a while. They got a sort of job taking care of an old man in his home for which they got $4 a week and their rent.

In 1933 things began to pick up and Mildred went to work at American Chain. Like so many others who found jobs that year, she remembers how things were before the union was formed.

Local 268 has about 600 members, about 40% of whom are women. Mildred wears a shop apron and heavy leather gloves on her job running a rotary swedger that shapes the ends of cables. From time to time she sits in on grievance talks and negotiations.

AFTER WORKING hours, she is busy at her home but finds the time to serve as treasurer of the Lenawee County CIO Council, as secretary of the County Democratic Committee and to sing in the choir of Adrian's First Baptist Church. She also crochets, plays the piano and bowls with the shop team.

Mildred has three sons, Alton, who is in the Air Force; Wesley, who's in the Navy and Tommy, eight, who is still at home. Alton is married and has two small daughters so she is a proud grandma at 40.

MADAME PRESIDENT — Mildred Gardner, serving her second term as head of CIO Auto Workers Local 268 in Adrian, Mich., keeps busy as unionist, housewife.

In the last election at Local 268, Mildred was opposed by four men. In a run-off she won by a single vote. "That didn't worry me, though," she said, "I'm glad the members showed so much interest in choosing their leaders."

Mildred added she believes women should stand up for their rights. With her for an example, the women of Adrian and throughout CIO have evidence it can be done.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

YOU'LL FIND NEW LOW PRICES on men's suits and other good buys in family clothing this spring. However, you'll get even more for your money if you postpone all but essential buying of clothes until after Easter when the big clothing sales offer sharp reductions.

Despite lower prices for clothing and some appliances, the cost of living is going up and will go up still further in the months immediately ahead.

Storm signals are out showing higher food prices are on the way. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food index reached its highest level in three years in March and your family will feel the pinch of this rising trend early this summer.

Here are tips on buying opportunities in spring clothing needs:

MEN'S SUITS: Prices of some men's suits, especially the more expensive ones, have tumbled. Suits made of blends of worsted and Dacron are now available at $55 compared to $75 and $80 last year. Worsted suits in general are reasonable this year, so much so that the clothing trade expects prices will go up again when (or if) demand improves.

Worsteds are the smooth-finish materials like serge, gabardine and worsted cheviot. They are especially desirable for men who wear a suit daily, for they wear harder than the softer woolen materials (tweed, covert, wool cheviot, etc.) and also hold their press better.

A man who buys a suit for only occasional dress-up use, will do as well with a lower-cost woolen. In fact, you can get a rayon worsted with 15% nylon content for under $30 that will be wearable from midspring to fall. The nylon in the blend adds wear resistance but not crease resistance. So a man who wants a similar three-season suit for daily or frequent wear should consider the rayon-Dacron blend in approximately 50% ratio.

WOMEN'S WEAR: The price tags on women's wear are also more moderate now. We'd like to suggest the two-piece dress or suit in acetate, rayon or a blend with nylon as a good buy for spring into autumn use. A two-piecer is always more versatile than a one-piece dress for about the same cost. Shop the sportswear departments as well as dress departments for two-piecers, since the sportswear manufacturers sometimes produce these at lower prices than the dress manufacturers.

You can buy rayon or acetate two-piecers in attractively simple styles for as little as $6-$7 this year. If the garment is rayon or acetate, perhaps with only a little nylon, make sure it is labeled "crease resistant," because of rayon's tendency to wrinkle. Or a blend of close to 40-50 per cent nylon with rayon or acetate will produce a more wrinkle-resistant suit or dress.

One-piece nylon dresses and blends with acetate, or orlon-nylon and orlon-cottton blends, are now available for as little as $10-$12. But we want to tip you off to carefully examine the seams on dresses, blouses and skirts made with synthetic fibers like nylon and orlon. Because of their slippery nature, garments made of the synthetic fibers tend to yarn shifting and to slip, ravel or burst at the seams. So look for generous seams with overcast edges, not merely pinked.

Best Buys

April is the month when eggs are most abundant and cheapest. Use them in all possible ways at this time to replace meat: as sandwich fillings, in salads and in combination with small amounts of meats for dinner dishes.

Beef remains the best buy in meat, especially lower and medium grades suitable for braising, stewing or making into hamburger. But with milk products in seasonal abundance, cottage and cheddar cheese are among the best of all values in protein foods.

Good Citizenship Of Oil Local Hailed By Kansas Daily

THE "HIGH plane" of citizenship on which a CIO Oil Workers local "consistently conducted itself" drew editorial praise when the local marked its 20th birthday.

Local 241, OWIU-CIO, was on the receiving end of a flattering editorial in the El Dorado, Kan., Times.

"During its first two decades," the paper said, "this group has achieved measurable standing not only within the ranks of labor but also as a community factor."

The OWIU local "participates in every worthwhile community activity," reported the paper. It added:

"In campaigns for funds for organizations that deserve public support, for blood donations, for movements that contribute to community cohesion and uplift, there will be found the members of the local—serving not as union adherents but as rank and file members of the community to which they are loyal.

"Local 241 has taken long strides in 20 years and has not failed to recognize the responsibility that comes with growth and power. This group—on the occasion of a significant anniversary—may be pointed to as one which represents the best in labor in its relationship toward other elements of American society."

Another Ruling By FTC Okays 'Free' Ad Offers

AN ADVERTISER may use the word "free" if all the conditions are clearly and conspicuously stated, the Federal Trade Commission said in a new order.

The ruling also stated that the advertising was unfair if the firm increases the usual price, reduces the quality, the quantity or size of the merchandise.

The ruling followed a decision in the case of Walter J. Black, Inc., and modified a 1943 order against the Progress Tailoring Co., which forbade the use of the word "free" to refer to "wearing apparel or other items of merchandise which are furnished as compensation for services rendered."

Coffee Prices Hiked Again

Coffee prices climbed another 5c to 6c a pound on wholesale and retail levels last week. A&P led off the new increase and was followed by General Foods and other concerns.

$54,000 Granted For Health Study

A grant of $54,000 to the Univ. of Michigan for a study of a medical service program functioning in Windsor, Can., for 15 years has been made by the Health Information Foundation. The Windsor plan offers subscribers complete prepaid physicians' services on an insurance basis.

The study is one of eight currently sponsored by HIF to get the facts on family medical costs and health insurance protection.

CSC Units Aid Chest Fund Drives

THE CIO Community Services Committee is credited with aiding in bringing about substantial increases in contributions of CIO members to 1954 Community Chests and United Fund campaigns. CSC chairman is Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers.

An estimate from Akron places CIO contributions at $650,000, with 85% participation and an average pledge of $11.25. The total gift represents $100,000 more than last year.

In Buffalo, $553,072 was raised in plants where CIO unions have bargaining rights. This is an increase of 17% over the 1953 drive. St. Louis places CIO contributions at $541,278, an increase of approximately $90,000.

Kansas City, Mo., estimated CIO giving at $300,000. In Cleveland a "rough estimate" for 1954 shows CIO members giving $627,043 in that city's Chest drive, an increase of $95,000 over 1953.

ONE OF THE MOST spectacular increases was registered in New Bedford, Mass., where CIO giving went from $11,675 to $45,500. Equally impressive was the 37% increase in Grand Rapids, Mich., where an estimate of CIO contributions recorded a jump from $95,702 to $131,493.

There was a $61,260 increase in CIO giving to the United Fund campaign in Philadelphia. The total from plants where CIO unions have bargaining rights was $446,750 against $385,490 in 1953.

Price Index Off Slightly

PRODDED by a decline in some retail food prices, the government's Consumer Price Index dropped slightly during the month ending in mid-February, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

The new index figure was 115.0, down just two-tenths of one per cent from the previous month.

BLS Commissioner Ewan Clague said prices are "still stable," and that "the general business situation undoubtedly is affecting the price situation."

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4		1953: Jan. 15	190.3	113.9
1943 monthly average	123.6		Feb. 15	188.6	113.4
1944 monthly average	125.5		Mar. 15	188.8	113.6
1945 monthly average	128.4		Apr. 15	188.3	113.7
1946 monthly average	139.3		May 15	188.8	114.0
1947 monthly average	159.2		June 15	190.9	114.5

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

WE HAVE JUST COMPLETED what I consider the finest Executive Board meeting I can recall in my term of office as an officer of National CIO. You can read the details of the meeting in other pages of this issue of the CIO News, but I'd like to point out that the decisions that were reached, and put into effect, were made unanimously.

The meeting was also the best attended I can remember, and the cooperation offered your national officers is an encouraging tribute to the strength of our trade union ideals, of working together to produce a better way of life in our country.

Our Executive Board meeting was followed by a good directors' conference, in which staff coordination and similar problems were hammered out, so that we could make most effective use of CIO's resources.

CIO's Executive Board has authorized discussions granting a charter to the Mechanics Educational Society, an independent union which represents highly skilled metal trades workers with a view toward chartering them in CIO. MESA represents some 53,000 of the most highly skilled workers in America, and can certainly make a valuable contribution to our organization.

By the way, it was good to hear that Brother Boyd Payton, Southern director of organization for the Textile Workers Union has recovered quickly and ably from his recent illness.

T. M. McCORMICK, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Oil Workers, leads off the CIO victory column, this week with reports of election wins at National Cooperative Refinery Association, Kans.; Phillips Chemical, Pasdena, Texas; and the Shell Chemical Corp., Ventura, Calif. A report also comes from W. A. Copeland of a victory at Delta Refining Co., Memphis, Tenn.

CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports victories at Champion Rubber Co., Barberton, O., and Merit Rubber Co., Akron, O.

CIO's Stone Workers report a victory at Tri-State Culvert & Manufacturing Co., Tampa, with Representative L. A. Rumley in charge.

CIO's Woodworkers won a big victory at Natchez, Miss., beating back an attempted AFL raid in the Johns-Manville plant by 3-to-1, according to the word from IWA Vice President Claude Ballard.

CIO Rep. Bill Taylor sends word of a win at Sharples Chemical Co., Detroit, Mich., for the CIO Chemical Workers.

From CIO's Dave Sternback, in Puerto Rico, we learn of four victories for CIO: Sugar Finca Quebrada Palma, Naguabo; Sugar Finca Constancia, Toa Baja; Sugar Finca Bucarabones, Toa Alta; Senorita Hosiery Mills, Gurabo.

Indiana CIO Plans Political Drive To Stem Recession

By ED LASHMAN

WITH EMPLOYMENT off as much as 50% in some plants, the 15th Indiana CIO Council convention last week planned a program of 1954 political action designed to "elect legislators and congressmen concerned with the country's well-being."

Some 700 delegates, representing a quarter-million CIO members in the Hoosier State, attended the convention at Indianapolis. They heard a blunt warning from Tilford E. Dudley, assistant CIO-PAC director, of the cost of ineffective political action.

"You contribute to political action in give-aways and special benefits to corporations when you fail to elect progressive congressmen," he warned.

And Dudley detailed to the convention the economic "signs that may lead to a depression—the same signs that preceded the depression of the 30's."

ILLINOIS CIO Council Pres. Joseph Germano, who is also director of CIO Steelworkers District 31 which spills over into northern Indiana, outlined the methods of building the kind of ward and precinct organizations which "can do a job on the people who are trying to do a job on us."

Germano brought ringing applause for a stinging attack on Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) who, he said, "is really trying to create class hatred in America to rise to power as Adolph Hitler did in Germany."

Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president, accused "Republicans who have the reins of government in their hands but haven't the courage to grip them firmly because they have no faith in the American economy" of being "the real spokesmen of gloom and doom."

He made a strong plea for effective measures to check the "downward slide" of the American economy as the best answer to "Communist propaganda at home and abroad." "Either we mobilize democracy's resources to win people's hearts and minds, or we will have to mobilize the cream of our youth to fight an atomic war," Reuther said.

ASSISTANT CIO Reg. Dir. Herbert McReedy lambasted the Republican's tax-reduction bill at the Indiana CIO convention.

"For every dollar in tax reductions they gave working people," McReedy said, "they gave dividend earners $11. It was just another installment on the Republican Party's debt of $13.8 million in campaign contributions from the nation's wealthiest families."

In a strong attack on the Republican Administration, Rep. Madden (D. Ind.) said "this so-called recession started when Treas. Sec. Humphrey raised interest rates and started his hard money policy."

Dallas Sells, Auto Workers, of Anderson, was elected president, replacing Neal Edwards, the retiring president. All other officers were re-elected.

FRED C. PIEPER

Fred Pieper Named CIO Regional Chief

ASSIGNMENT of Fred. C. Pieper as CIO regional director with headquarters in Denver, Colo., was announced last week by Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe. Pieper has been serving as an assistant to Riffe.

A member of the CIO Auto Workers since its earliest days, Pieper worked at the Chevrolet plant in Atlanta, Ga., before joining CIO's staff. Before and after wartime service with the Marines, he was regional director in New Orleans.

Pieper handled important assignments with CIO organizing committees and unions under Riffe and his predecessor, the late Allan S. Haywood. Most recently he was assigned to direction of the strike of Local Industrial Union 1814 against stores, restaurants and hotels in Port Arthur, Tex.

He will assume his new duties in Denver at the conclusion of his Port Arthur assignment.

CIO Brewers Renew Plea For Rice Mill Strike Aid

RENEWED support for the Arkansas rice mill strikers, now in their sixth month of battle for a contract, has been asked by the CIO Brewery Workers.

The picket lines are as firm as ever and the strikers are determined to see the issue fought to a finish. The only issue now blocking strike settlement is the refusal by the companies to reinstate the strikers.

The Brewery Workers are being asked to sign a contract covering the scabs and not those whose struggle brought about organization of the plants and certification of the union after an election last May.

THE rice mills are being operated with scab labor. The brand names of the rice produced by these struck mills follow:

Products of the union-busting Arkansas Rice Growers Cooperative Association: Riceland Rice, Monogram, Sultana and Sunnyfield (packed for A. & P. stores), Tohoco, Tropical, Gold Coast, Oversea, Green Shield, Lotus, Good Treat, Chico, Perfection and Osceola.

The brand names of the rice produced by Wonder Rice Mills, Inc., are: Sultana and Sunnyfield (packed for A. & P. stores), Showboat Rice, Comet Rice, Peacock, Wonder Rice, Cash Saver, Adolphus Rice.

Guild Strike Shuts N. Y. Guild Daily

A New York CIO Guild strike has closed Atlantis, Greek language daily. The strike was called after five months of negotiations failed to yield a satisfactory agreement. Four craft unions respected the Guild's picket line.

Guild To Act On $1 Million Defense Fund

A $1 MILLION defense fund goal for use in strikes and other emergencies has been proposed for the CIO Newspaper Guild by its Executive Board.

The IEB also recommended setting up a minimum defense fund of $250,000 in the next year.

The proposals were made at the board's meeting in New York and will be submitted to the 21st annual ANG convention which opens Aug. 2 in Los Angeles, Calif. Recent negotiations, the Guild said, have indicated that serious efforts are being made to destroy past contract gains for working newspaper men and women.

It added that the "continued uncertainty" of the national economy has been used by publishers to threaten Guild members' jobs. Strike situations involving Guildsmen last year cost nearly $400,000, including contributions, the ANG-CIO noted.

IUE Gains In 3 More GE Plants

THE SWING to the CIO Electrical Workers is speeding up as workers at three more General Electric plants voted to quit the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers and to join IUE-CIO.

The shifts followed similar action by 20,000 workers at the main GE plant at Schenectady.

The largest number of workers involved was at the 1400-member local at the GE air-conditioning plant at Bloomfield, N. J., where an overwhelming vote was cast for IUE-CIO.

Members of UE Local 1227 at the General Electric service shop at Long Island City, N. Y., came over unanimously to IUE-CIO and started to pay dues to Local 463.

BEFORE the Schenectady action the workers at the GE lamp plant at Newark, N. J., joined IUE-CIO. They are awaiting a National Labor Relations Board election.

At Orange, N. J., the employes of the Monroe Calculator Co. voted 504 to 0 to leave UE and join IUE-CIO. At Elizabeth, N. J., workers at the Wilcolator plant voted almost six to one to leave UE and affiliate with IUE-CIO.

CWA Opens Wage Talks For 30,000

CIO Communications Workers have begun negotiations for five units of the Bell System covering 30,000 workers.

Talks are in progress for Western Electric plants in Lawrence-Haverhill, Mass., and Queensboro, N. Y.; all departments of Ohio Bell, New Jersey Bell traffic and Bell Laboratories.

Contract demands include company-paid health insurance for workers and dependents, minimum pensions of $100 a month exclusive of social security payments; a "reasonable" wage increase based on economic factors existing at the time of negotiations; progression schedules; job reclassification; further elimination of area differentials; short-hour tours; elimination of merit rates.

WORKERS at the independent Oklahoma Telephone Co. have been organized by CWA. The Broken Bow exchange and those in seven other nearby towns have signed with the union.

Contract gains up to 15c an hour have been made with a number of independent phone companies. Among these are Commonwealth Telephone Co. of Ohio; Elyria (Ohio) Tel. Co., Middle States Utilities Co. of Iowa and the New Jersey Telephone Co.

CWA Pushes Organizing In 50 Big Cities

THE CIO Communications Workers have opened an organizing drive in some 50 larger U. S. cities.

CWA-CIO now represents telephone workers in these areas, and the campaign will be directed at getting non-members into union.

John J. Moran, CWA-CIO vice president in charge of organizing, has urged all district directors to step up organizing drives in the next few months. He suggested that districts expand job steward staffs if necessary and set up programs to train stewards.

CWA Dist. 9 on the West Coast already has accelerated its membership campaign and all bargaining units reported "excellent progress." The campaign there includes training classes and joint meetings of local officers.

The Congress Week—

Senate Beats Back GOP Attempt To Oust Chavez

THE SENATE last week beat back, by a vote of 53 to 36, a Republican move to unseat Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.).

Five Republicans broke ranks to join Sen. Morse (Ind. Ire.) and 47 Democrats in upholding Chavez's re-election in 1952. A state recount earlier showed him to be the winner by 5000 votes.

After spending nearly $250,000 on its investigation, a special Senate Rules subcommittee under Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.) split on straight party lines to recommend that Chavez be unseated because of what it charged were widespread election irregularities. Chavez was not accused of fraud or wrongdoing.

THE FULL Rules Committee, also dividing on party lines, upheld the subcommittee recommendation that the race be declared "no election," ousting Chavez and permitting the state's Republican governor to appoint his successor. It was this resolution which the Senate rejected, declaring Chavez legally elected and entitled to keep his office.

Earlier, the Senate defeated an amendment by Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.) that would have prohibited New Mexico's GOP governor from filling the vacancy.

Sen. George (D. Ga.) charged that this was the first time in history that the Senate had ever been asked to unseat a man against whom no charge of fraud had been made.

Morse argued that the Cordon amendment would violate the 17th Amendment to the Constitution which provides each state shall have two senators and gives governors authority to fill vacancies by temporary appointments.

He added that "the process of tampering with the Constitution (on the Senate floor) is getting to be a habit" and denounced the GOP report on the election as "confused and unsupported by evidence upon which the Senate can reach a reasoned conclusion."

Labor Dept. Gives Boot To Connolly

LABOR Sec. James P. Mitchell last week booted out the director of the Bureau of Labor Standards, William L. Connolly. He said he had asked for — and received — Connolly's resignation.

The dismissal brought immediate speculation that Connolly had been fired because of Administration dissatisfaction over resolutions critical of its policies which were adopted at the recent Conference on State Labor Legislation, of which Connolly was chairman.

If this is behind the firing, the Administration placed responsibility for the tenor of the resolution on the wrong person.

CIO representatives at the conference recall that language urging stronger unemployment compensation was put into the resolutions, following labor arguments, at the direction of the resolution committee chairman. The latter was New York state's industrial commissioner, Edward Corsi, a Republican.

Connolly had been director of the Bureau of Labor Standards since 1947.

W. Virginia CIO Supports Neely And Six For Congress

ENDORSEMENT of Matthew M. Neely, West Virginia's veteran Democratic Senator, and of six candidates for Congress has been voted by the State CIO Council's Executive Board and Political Action Committee.

Neely has served four terms in the Senate, and also has been a member of the House and governor of the Mountain State. During his long service in Congress, he has supported more than 100 important labor bills.

FIVE incumbents were among the endorsements for Congress voted by the West Virginia CIO board at its recent meeting in Parkersburg, according to Sec.-Treas. Albert D. Viller.

Democratic incumbents supported for re-election were Reps. Mollohan (1st Dist.), Staggers (2nd Dist.), Bailey (3rd Dist.), Kee (5th Dist.) and Byrd (6th Dist.). In the 4th Dist., CIO supported M. G. Burnside to oppose Rep. Neal, incumbent Republican from Huntington.

M. M. NEELY

Vet Home Loan Bill Is Approved

THE HOUSE last week passed and sent to the Senate legislation to continue for another year the direct loan program for G.I. home mortgages.

Earlier, Chairman L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Veterans Committee told Congress that the program is "vital to the welfare of our many veteran members who are unable to obtain mortgage loans from regular lending sources because they demand a much higher interest rate than that specified in G.I. housing legislation."

In a telegram to the House Rules Committee, Buckmaster, who is president of the CIO Rubber Workers, added:

"Congress should act at once to help insure that no veteran of our Armed Forces goes homeless because of unavailable mortgage money."

The House bill would authorize the Veterans Administration to lend up to $25 million a quarter to home-buying veterans. No loan could exceed $10,000.

IN RELATED developments, Chairman Rogers (R. Mass.) announced that the House Veterans Committee will hold immediate hearings on lowering the interest rate on G.I. loans. She took this step after Rep. Edmondson (D. Okla.) called on the VA to cut the rate on loans to veterans from 4.5% to 4%.

Rep. Secrest (D. O.) said the committee also will consider whether the government should increase from 60% to 75% or 90% the proportion of a G.I. home loan which it guarantees.

In hearings before the House Banking Committee on the GOP housing program, three veterans organizations denounced an Administration request for power to deprive veterans of preference in disposal of surplus government war housing.

Spokesmen for the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans and Veterans of Foreign Wars pointed out that the Administration last year over their protests raised interest rates on G.I. mortgages from 4% to 4.5%.

Yorty Backs $1.25 Floor Under Wages

A BILL to boost the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour, shorten the standard workweek, and extend coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to all workers engaged in any activity affecting commerce was introduced last week by Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.).

Both Pres. Eisenhower and Sec. of Labor Mitchell have expressed a desire to widen the coverage of the Act, which at present applies to only about 24 million — less than half — of the nation's workers.

Yorty's measure, along lines supported by CIO, would include all the rest except those whose activities do not affect commerce and certain groups like hired workers on family farms and employes of local small retail and service establishments. It would, however, specifically include large retail enterprises and workers on large factory farms.

UNDER his amendment, the standard workweek before overtime rates are applicable would be cut from 40 to 37.5 hours during the first two years and to 35 hours after the fourth year.

"The new wage and hour standards included in my bill represent realistic standards based on present higher costs of living, going wage rates, increases in productivity, and the present need to stimulate consumer purchasing power," Yorty said.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. Senate defeats GOP attempt to capture seat held by Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.) by 53 to 36 vote. (See Page 12.)

2. House passes and sends to Senate bill to continue government's direct mortgage loan program for G.I. home purchases. (See Page 12.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate and House Labor Coms. now considering anti-labor bill.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway (S. 2150)	Would enable U. S. to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

CIO Protests Reed Bill On Jobless Pay

THE CIO last week urged the Senate to reject the Reed Unemployment Compensation Bill which passed the House last year and now is before the Senate Finance Committee.

In a letter to each Senator, Robert Oliver, assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, charged that "harmful and dangerous provisions" in the bill would:

1. Result in holding down and cutting down unemployment compensation benefits at a time when increases and extended duration are most needed.

2. Make impossible necessary federal aid to Rhode Island and other states hardest hit by unemployment.

3. Compel states, in order to get federal loans, to keep increasing employers' tax rates during recession or depression.

4. Undermine and destroy federal standards of unemployment insurance.

Oliver said that, in place of such weakening, "improvements are needed both to provide adequate assistance to those who are unemployed and also for the purpose of continuing the stream of purchasing power into the economy generally."

T-H Steamroller Is Moving

By AL ZACK

REPUBLICANS on the Senate Labor Committee last week rammed through the Administration's labor proposals which CIO had branded as "worse than Taft-Hartley."

But despite the Senate committee's decision, floor action was expected first in the House, where a far more vicious anti-labor bill is now being polished up for a vote before the Easter recess.

Operating under an unprecedented gag rule imposed by the GOP chairman, Sen. Smith (N. J.), the Senate committee okayed all but one of Pres. Eisenhower's proposals and toughened up another White House suggestion.

CIO Protests Action

Democrats on the committee immediately and angrily charged the majority had engaged in "steamroller tactics."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, hitting out at the "partisan approach" adopted by the committee, charged the bill did not keep Eisenhower's campaign promise to make the Taft-Hartley Act "fair and just" to labor.

CIO Steelworkers' Pres. David J. McDonald charged the Smith bill retained T-H union-busting provisions.

Final vote in the Senate committee came after Smith had imposed a unique rule barring consideration of all amendments except those which he had submitted for the Administration.

He ruled all amendments proposed by the Democrats to be "out of order" and then admitted, in a press conference following the session, that this was "questionable procedure."

Smith's Excuse

Smith's excuse for the steamroller action was that it was necessary if the committee was going to report a bill in time for action this year.

Sen. Murray (Mont.), ranking Democrat on the committee, told reporters: "I have been here many years and I never saw anything like it."

Sens. Lehman (N. Y.), Douglas (Ill.) and Kennedy (Mass.) joined in the Democratic protest at what Kennedy called the "irregular manner" in which Smith had operated the committee.

In his statement, Reuther once again recalled Eisenhower's campaign pledge to make Taft-Hartley "fair and just."

"In order to achieve fairness," Reuther said, "substantial amendments to the law are required."

He branded as "unfair" the GOP refusal to consider the substantial liberalizing amendments offered by the Democrats.

Both Reuther and McDonald conceded that there were some "liberalizing amendments" in the Smith Bill, but they pointed out that the so-called "states' rights" provision was a distinct backward step and that the Administration had failed to act on major anti-labor provisions of Taft-Hartley.

Reuther said adoption of the Smith Bill "would leave untouched major Taft-Hartley provisions which impose the anti-labor injunction; restrict free collective bargaining; discourage workers from joining unions; limit and curtail the right to strike; and inject the heavy hand of government into labor management relations."

Both laid heavy stress on the new provision, authorized by Smith under the guise of protecting states' rights. Reuther called it "particularly objectionable" and McDonald charged it was "an additional and dangerous anti-labor measure."

The new Smith provision was toughened up from early White House recommendations. CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg noted that it "reads, at first glance, as if its purpose were to enable the states to exercise their traditional police powers to deal with emergency disputes affecting the health or safety of the people within a state."

But, Goldberg pointed out, the Supreme Court had ruled the states already possess such power. The effect of the Smith proposal, he said, would be to legalize state laws which the Supreme Court had earlier ruled invalid. These laws prohibit strikes and provide for compulsory arbitration.

"We are unalterably opposed," Reuther said, "to this curtailment of the right to strike and this imposition of compulsory arbitration in any area of labor-management relations."

McDonald recalled Eisenhower's campaign statements in opposition to compulsory arbitration and to the trend toward it.

"We share the President's view against compulsory arbitration," said McDonald. "Accordingly we are opposed to this provision because it would constitute direct encouragement to the states to enact such laws."

Only defeat suffered by Eisenhower in the committee was the abolition of his suggested pre-strike vote, conducted by the government.

That suggestion, which CIO had vigorously opposed as doing more harm than good, was voted down. Smith told reporters the committee had rejected it, but that it would be offered on the Senate floor as an amendment.

Reuther hit out at this attempt to "re-incorporate this repudiated provision" during debate and urged the Senate to defeat any such attempt.

Lehman 'Shudders'

Lehman, who was Governor of New York for 10 years, singled out the state's rights issue for special condemnation.

That provision, he said, caused him to "just shudder" because it would give governors power to "break any strike."

Lehman said an arbitrary governor, under this section, could bust any strike in any plant or industry in his state by simply declaring that it was an emergency that threatened the health and safety of the people.

CIO lawyers recalled an example of what happened under a similar Wisconsin statute, later declared invalid by the U. S. Supreme Court. A group of telephone company bookkeepers in that state went on strike and the governor held the walkout to be an emergency and a threat to the "health and safety" of the people. Even the Wisconsin State Supreme Court, CIO lawyers noted, had held such action legal.

Meantime, reliable Capitol Hill sources reported that the big Administration drive would come first in the House. House orders, they said, were for House action prior to the Easter recess set for mid-April.

Under the timetable set up at the White House, these sources said, the House committee was scheduled to ram through a far tougher and more anti-labor measure than the Senate committee adopted.

This House bill, scheduled for committee action early this week, was slated to hit the House floor prior to the recess, with the legislative green light for immediate adoption.

Included in the House bill, these sources said, would be a provision for stripping the NLRB of all powers except for the handling of representation elections.

All unfair labor practice cases would be tossed into the already over-taxed federal courts, where justice for workers would be long delayed.

White House Drives For Early Vote

Here's the Taft-Hartley legislative situation in summary:

SENATE—Labor Committee has approved measure which would make Taft-Hartley worse.

HOUSE—Labor Committee still working on bill which is more anti-labor than Senate version. White House plans call for action on House bill first, with vote coming before Easter recess.

Open Shop Set In South Carolina

South Carolina's open shop law was signed by Gov. James F. Byrnes last week.

Under this so-called "right to work" bill, union security clauses of almost any kind are made illegal and punishable by fines or jail terms. Present contracts providing for union security or dues checkoff may run out their course but cannot be renewed or extended. The law has special sections curbing picketing.

Sixteen states now have "right to work" bills aimed at undermining union organization.

Something To Holler About— With unemployment in New Jersey now above the 100,000 mark and no early reduction in sight, a State CIO Council delegation came to Washington last week to meet with the State's representatives in Congress, to back CIO's program to halt the recession and strengthen the economy by boosting purchasing power. At head of table (from left): Robert Oliver, National CIO Legislative Committee director; Harry Kranz, New Jersey CIO legislative director; Victor D. Leonardis, State CIO Council secretary-treasurer. Simple As ABC—

The Worker On Short Time Can't Buy

WHAT SHORT time means to the country in individual terms was graphically illustrated in a survey of retail stores in Pennsylvania steel towns conducted by the Wall Street Journal.

"Our clothing sales have been running 40% below a year ago," the newspaper quoted R. H. Gilmore, manager and secretary of the Pittsburgh Mercantile Co., as saying. A department store, it is across the street from the big Southside mill of Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp.

Paul Tabor, who operates a combination laundry, delicatessen, candy and grocery store near the mill, was reported as saying:

"My laundry business alone is down more than 50%. When they work four days instead of five or six, they don't have to get their work clothes washed so often, and some of them now wash their clothes at home to save a little money."

A 45-year-old pipe-fitter in the mill—a customer in the store—told a typical tale. He's making $69.76 now for a 32-hour week. It's a "hell of a big drop" from the $103.36 he made working 48 hours and getting paid the equivalent of 52 with overtime rates.

"About a month ago we quit buying bread," he said. "My wife bakes it herself now. And we eat hardly any steak—it's a luxury now. A year ago we ate steak twice a week."

Walter Daylitko, operator of a grocery two blocks from the mill, moaned: "My God, I get sick. It's getting bad. Credit is poor. For bills of $10, $20 or $30, the customers pay me one-third now instead of all."

Another grocer reported that "all along the line the mill men are switching to items that give them the most for their money.

"A steelworker's wife can buy a pound of dry beans for 17c or 18c—and it's three times that pound when she cooks it," the Journal reported he said. "A pound of canned beans costs her 21c."

The vice president in charge of consumer credit for Pittsburgh's Potter Bank & Trust Co., Edgar A. Beard, noted that loan applications indicate auto sales are off and "home appliance sales are pretty much down."

One steelworker, with his workweek reduced, said his little girl needs her baby teeth pulled out.

"It'll cost about $30," he added. "We'll let it ride until Apr. 15, when I get my vacation money. If I have to take my vacation time off, though, we'll get her teeth fixed even if I have to run up a grocery bill.

"Ten years ago, I would say nothing to spending $50. Now I'm scared to spend 50c."

The situation is much the same throughout the steel-producing Monongahela Valley. A young grinder at U. S. Steel Corp.'s Duquesne Works recalled that six or seven months ago "we were required to work 12 hours, six or seven days a week."

"Now we're working five days a week, eight hours a day," he was quoted as saying. "Some of the other men in the mill are getting four days a week, others are two weeks on and one week off."

A 40-hour week nets the men in his department $75.60 each compared to the $166.32 they averaged six months ago with 32 hours of overtime.

Store Union Unity Plan Is Approved

THE LONG NEGOTIATIONS toward unification of all CIO unions in the retail, wholesale and department store fields moved another step closer to success last week. The international executive board of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers unanimously approved an agreement with the independent Distributive, Processing and Office Workers of America.

Under terms of the pact, the DPO would be disbanded and its locals would be chartered as local unions of the RWDSU-CIO.

Announcement of his board's action was made by RWDSU Pres. Max Greenberg who will continue as head of the union under the terms of the agreement.

ADDITION OF DPO's 55,000 members will bring the membership of the expanded RWDSU to approximately 120,000.

The actual affiliation will take place at the seventh annual convention of RWDSU at Atlantic City, N. J., May 24-27.

Unification of the two groups climaxes discussions and negotiations which have been in progress intermittently during the past year.

An agreement had been reached last May but it collapsed when RWDSU Pres. Irving M. Simon died Sept. 2, just a month prior to the proposed merger convention.

DPO WAS granted an interm affiliation which expired Dec. 31. Meanwhile, unity talks continued after Greenberg's election as president of RWDSU at a meeting of the board in Detroit on Jan. 27.

In announcing approval, Greenberg also pointed out that invitations had been extended to Local 1-S at Macy's and Local 9 at Wanamaker's stores in New York City.

Both department store unions were formerly a part of RWDSU. Local 1-S is now affiliated with the CIO Department Store Workers Organizing Committee. Local 9 is an independent union.

Greenberg's bid to these two was for re-affiliation "on the same principle basis" as to the DPO.

ABC To Broadcast Reuther Speech

The speech of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to the sixth international educational conference of the CIO Auto Workers at Chicago will be broadcast over the ABC Radio network from 11 p.m. to 11:15 p.m. on Apr. 8.

Wire-tapping Bill Approved By House Unit

THE HOUSE Judiciary Committee has approved a bill to let the government use wire-tapping in espionage and security cases.

A committee source said the vote was 19 to 9, with Democrats failing to gain an amendment which would legalize wire-tapping only on a federal court order.

Wire-tapping is legal in some states. The proposed law would allow evidence so obtained to be introduced in federal courts. Previously, such evidence was barred because of a ruling by the Federal Communications Commission.

REP. KEATON (R. N. Y.) sponsored the measure and said he was "authoritatively informed" that wire-taps have already produced information "on serious crimes involving disloyalty to our country."

Approval by the committee is regarded as a victory for Atty. Gen. Brownell. In an effort to get the measure through Congress it will now be called the "Anti-Traitor Bill."

Before approving it, the committee knocked out a provision that would have authorized the use of wire-tap evidence in kidnapping and extortion cases, which Brownell had requested.

March Having Come And Gone, GOP Talks About Better Times In May

THE KEY MONTH of March—the month when the Eisenhower Administration had hoped for signs of an economic upturn—faded away in another cloud of GOP optimism, punctured by a warning that unemployment may climb next year to above six millions.

The government was charged with following a "pennywise and pound foolish" economic policy by Leon Keyserling, chairman of former Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers.

An unemployment total of 6,250,000 could be reached next year, he warned, if the government fails to undertake effective action to stop the economic slide.

Speaking in Chicago, Keyserling said the U. S. is "moving down hill." He urged increasing income tax exemptions and further cuts in excise taxes in order to increase consumer buying power.

ADMINISTRATION spokesmen put a lot of emphasis last week on the prospect of retail sales climbing as a result of the excise tax cut bill which Pres. Eisenhower signed (See Page 3).

For example, Sec. of Commerce Weeks predicted business would pick up in April as result of the excise tax cut stimulus. And similar advice was credited to Pres. Eisenhower's economic counsellors.

The Wall Street Journal debunked such expectations in a report titled: "Merchants Predict Little Sales Gain From Slated Excise Tax Reductions."

Continuing declines in consumer purchasing power were indicated in a Bureau of Labor Statistics report on man-hours worked. This index is estimated at 101.4 — the lowest since mid-1950, with one exception.

IN THE case of the steel industry, the "undertime trend" now has cut the average work week to 35 hours for 645,000 workers in basic steel.

Increasing consumer doubts over major purchases are reflected in the latest Federal Reserve Board survey of consumer finances, which shows that most Americans are less optimistic about their income prospects than a year ago. They plan to buy fewer homes, cars and durable goods.

On the production front, scheduled steel production last week dropped to 68.0% of capacity, compared with an actual rate of 68.1% the previous week.

FACTORY SALES in February continued to decline, down $300 million from the previous month, according to the Commerce Dept.

An auto production increase of 5% is planned for April, as result of recent gains in new car sales, according to Ward's Reports, a trade publication.

But such publications as Business Week and Kiplinger's Letter in their latest issues reported few signs of consequence of any spring blooming of the economy. And GOP Administration spokesmen, who a few weeks ago were talking about the March figures, now are talking about waiting for the May and August reports.

THE LATEST unemployment figures—in the weekly Labor Dept. report on claims for unemployment compensation—show a slight national drop of 13,500 for the week ending Mar. 13. For the nation as a whole, claims totalled 2,187,000, twice the figure for a year ago.

The department also reported that factory layoffs dropped in February for the first month since the middle of 1953. The figure was 23 layoffs per 1000 employes, compared to 28 in January.

Two Pamphlets On Jobs Issued

The CIO has issued two pamphlets on its program to halt unemployment.

One is a 20-page illustrated booklet containing the statement which CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther presented to the Joint Committee on the Economic Report.

"CIO's 10 Point Program to Halt Growing Unemployment" is the title of the other pamphlet, which was prepared by the CIO Committee on Economic Policy. Single copies of each are free.

In bulk the cost of the former is 10 for $1, 100 for $8.50, and 1000 for $80. The latter is priced at 100 for $3, 1000 for $20, and 5000 for $75. Orders should be sent to CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

HOW TIMES have CHANGED!

Way back last summer—when the present recession was getting under way—Chairman Arthur F. Burns of the President's Council of Economic Advisers said he "would be quite disturbed" if unemployment reached the four million mark.

Burns voiced his comment in a letter to The International Woodworker, and printed in the latest issue of the IWA-CIO paper.

Now that unemployment is close to that figure—the latest official estimate of the Commerce Dept. is 3,671,000—the Administration is singing a different tune. For example, Treasury Sec. Humphrey said the other day that four million jobless would be a "relatively low figure."

Dodge Quits Budget Post

ANOTHER Republican businessman turned government administrator is going back to private industry.

Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge will return to his job as chairman of the board of the Detroit Bank on Apr. 15, according to a White House announcement. He is No. 15 on the Eisenhower team to quit in the last six months.

"Gentlemen, we need a housing program, and to show my good faith, I propose we build a 12-room house for each and every member of Congress."

McDonald Supports Tax Exemption Boost

CIO STEELWORKERS Pres. David J. McDonald called last week for all-out support of proposals to raise personal income tax exemptions.

In an open letter to members of USA-CIO, McDonald backed the George-Douglas measure that advocates an exemption of $800 this year instead of $600 and $1000 next year.

McDonald translated the legislative language into "take-home pay now" terms and urged the union membership to write congressmen and senators asking for an increase in income tax exemptions.

USA-CIO economists, McDonald said, developed figures on the effect any higher exemptions would have. He cited the American Iron & Steel Institute statistics putting average hourly earnings in the steel industry at $2.26 an hour.

IN THE NEAREST bracket in the income tax withholding table, McDonald wrote, a worker earning $2.25 would gross a saving of 7.5c an hour, or $3 weekly, with an $800 exemption, and 15c an hour or $6.15 a week, with a $1000 exemption.

The letter-writing campaign, concluded McDonald, is a "natural for action from the field."

Treasury Sec. Humphrey, who authored the Eisenhower tax program, said that giving tax relief was "the worst thing we could do at this time." He suggested waiting until May when, he predicted, there will be a "change."

Unwilling to wait for a change was Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), who invited discussion of raising exemptions "because it may well decide whether the nation remains prosperous or goes broke."

Pres. Eisenhower last week signed a compromise bill voted by both houses of Congress, slashing excise taxes almost $1 billion a year.

The action was expected to result in lower price tags on many consumer items, including household appliances, jewelry, furs, luggage, cosmetics, movie tickets, telephone charges and travel tickets.

Taxes At Glance

Here's the status of the tax bills affecting you:

The excise tax bill breezed through both Houses last week and was signed by the President. Some tax cuts under the bill are offset by retaining others which would have expired Apr. 1.

The GOP general income tax bill, with its spare-the-wealthy provisions, has passed the House and is before the Senate Finance Committee, along with the George-Douglas proposal for higher tax exemptions.

Excise Tax Cuts Listed

The excise tax cuts which became effective last week include these:

Retail: Cuts from 20% to 10% on furs, jewelry, luggage, cosmetics, light bulbs, cameras and photo accessories.

Manufacturers: Home appliances from 10% to 5%; sporting goods, mechanical pens, pencils, lighters, from 15% to 10%.

General admission tickets from 20% to 10%; tickets costing 50c or less or regular season college athletics, from 20% to no tax.

Travel tickets, 15% to 10%; long distance phone calls, 25% to 10%; home phones and telegrams, 15% to 10%.

A 25% tax on cigarettes, gasoline, automobiles and alcoholic beverages was kept. Otherwise they would have dropped automatically to 10%.

Public Housing, TVA Under Fire In House

By MILTON PLUMB

PUBLIC housing was under heavy fire in Congress late last week as a confused House jockeyed for position in preliminaries to a show-down vote.

Whether or not millions of Americans will have decent shelter next year hung in the balance as the House prepared for final action on the Eisenhower Administration's Housing Bill, a measure spelling out what the CIO Housing Committee has described as a "piteously inadequate" program.

Earlier, through a misplay on the appropriations bill carrying funds for the Public Housing Administration, a move by enemies of public housing to wipe out the program entirely resulted in their mistakenly acting to permit completion of the approximately 35,000 units authorized under earlier Democratic Congresses.

BEFORE DEBATE on the Administration Housing Bill got under way the CIO telegraphed all members of the House urging them to send the measure back to committee with instructions to reinstate the full public housing program in the 1949 Housing Act, thereby permitting 200,000 units to be built annually.

Chairman James G. Thimmes of the CIO Housing Committee and Robert Oliver, assistant to the CIO president, also asked House members to develop a "substantially enlarged" program of new private home building for low and middle income families.

They also urged the House to reject the Administration's proposed interest rate boosts under the FHA and veterans housing programs.

DEMOCRATS with few exceptions joined in a clear party-line fight to correct what a minority report of the House Banking Committee called "serious deficiencies" in the housing bill. The report was signed by 13 of the 14 Democrats on the committee.

They charged that the bill would dilute and almost wipe out veterans' preference, empower the President to boost interest rates on G.I. loans above the present 4½%, and impose "unduly restrictive requirements" on federal mortgage loan (FNMA) program.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

In The Large Economy-Size Package

The mix-up in which foes of public housing unintentionally authorized completion of approximately 35,000 units previously voted under Democratic Congresses came about through a series of parliamentary maneuvers on the House floor.

Despite efforts by some Republicans to make this maneuver appear as though the House had authorized Pres. Eisenhower's request for 35,000 new starts next year, no new commitments were involved.

In fact, an effort by Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) to amend the act to grant the President's request was ruled out of order by the Republican leadership.

AT HIS PRESS conference last week, however, Pres. Eisenhower said he was delighted that the House GOP leaders had succeeded in getting appropriations necessary for construction of 35,000 units next year and that the House Banking Committee would provide for an additional 35,000 units the following year.

Actually, no appropriations were involved, since funds for construction of public housing projects are obtained through bond issues by local authorities. Moreover, the House Banking Committee had already reported the bill to the floor with no provision for public housing.

ANOTHER deep slash of 27% in funds for the Tennessee Valley Authority was voted by the House last week.

This was on top of the 32% budget cut recommended for TVA by Pres. Eisenhower. The vote was 146 to 132.

The action came after Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.) attacked TVA as "America's much-touted Socialist-Communist experiment."

Rep. Cannon (D. Mo.) retorted that the TVA has proven to be "the finest investment ever made by the government." He pointed out that this country might not have been able to develop the atom bomb without TVA power.

A MAJORITY composed mainly of Republicans beat back three separate efforts to increase funds for the TVA. House Appropriations Chairman Taber (R. N. Y.) and Rep. Phillips (R.-Cal.) led the opposition to the increases.

The decision to slash the Eisenhower budget came when the House rejected an amendment by Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.) to restore $38,218,000 requested by the President for administrative purposes but cut from the measure by the Appropriations Committee. The effect was to uphold the committee's cut reducing the budget request for $141,800,000 to $103,582,000.

That compares with a total of $188,380,000 available to TVA in fiscal 1954. The $84,798,000 total reduction made by the President and the House represents a combined slash of 45% under funds voted last year.

The President's budget carried no funds for construction of new steam generating plants to meet the power shortage that increased demands will create in the Tennessee Valley in 1956 and 1957. Two Democratic efforts to get funds for these units were also rejected.

EARLIER, however, TVA supporters were able to knock out of the bill two provisions adopted by the Appropriations Committee which would have seriously crippled TVA.

One would have wiped out TVA's authority to fix re-sale rates on power it delivers to distributors and the other would have required TVA to pay interest on Treasury funds.

Burke Lambastes 'Meanderings' Of GOP Congress

SEN. BURKE

"AIMLESS meanderings" by Republican congressional leadership were lambasted by Sen. Burke (D. O.) last week.

"More than two and one-half months of this session of Congress have passed, and the Republican majority has been busy establishing a record of things it refuses to do, failed to do, and hasn't gotten around to doing," the Ohio Democrat charged.

Congress' own boxscore on legislation shows only eight major bills have been acted on at all nearly midway through the current session.

"Last January," Burke said, "in a series of messages, Pres. Eisenhower laid down a program. It immediately was hailed as aggressive and dynamic. And the President said, rather sharply, that the Republicans will deserve defeat if they do not give the country constructive accomplishments.

"Well, it looks as though the Republicans in Congress can't get over their long habit of opposition to the White House.

"The Republicans are so badly split and are meandering so aimlessly, that the President will have to lean heavily on the Democrats if he is to have any success whatever.

"What has become of the plans for health and welfare measures, the plan for the expansion of Social Security? Will a new tax program ever be passed?"

Burke noted that a farm program is still to be presented, with the President's ideas for flexible, rather than rigid supports, getting as much opposition from Republicans as from Democrats.

Former Friend Of Joe Heads Probe

Boston lawyer Samuel P. Sears, a former supporter of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), has been named as the impartial attorney to head a Senate investigation of the McCarthy-Army controversy.

When three Harvard professors started an anti-McCarthy fund drive, Sears was quoted as saying, "I wanted to start a fund on his behalf."

From Here To Eternity

It was a happy coincidence that one week saw (1) the awarding of a Hollywood Oscar to that fine movie "From Here to Eternity" and (2) a host of awesome details about the hydrogen bomb, which can send us all from here to eternity.

As the CIO pointed out at its 1953 convention, "the question of peace or war in the era of the hydrogen bomb overides all other considerations . . . Some way must be found to eradicate the scourge of war from the face of the earth."

Measured against the tremendous destructive power of the hydrogen blast, talk of retaliatory bombing and other devices to protect the people of Earth seem futile. More than at any previous time in history, the "winner" of World War III will also be the loser—for no government, no people can win through sheer mass destruction of humanity.

Even Malenkov has had the sense to see that hydrogen warfare will destroy not the capitalism so vigorously criticized by the Kremlin bosses, but all civilization.

Perhaps as that notion sinks in among the leaders of the world's most brutal dictatorship, it will bring an end to the senseless policies that have prevented a stable world peace since 1945.

Certainly, under the shadow of the H-Bomb, human beings had better spend the priceless time at hand working for peace and brotherhood rather than for temporary advantage in a war which nobody can win.

A Time For Action

The legislative storm signals are flying. The congressional decision on Taft-Hartley will be coming soon—and the outlook for labor is not bright.

The Republican majority on the Senate Labor Committee, by a partisan 7-6 vote, shut off all attempts to better Taft-Hartley. Chairman Smith, who admitted his top-sergeant attitude was "questionable," has rammed through a bill which would make Taft-Hartley worse.

And the House is writing an even more vicious bill, planning to beat the Senate to the punch by acting within the next two weeks.

All the Eisenhower campaign promises for a "fair and just" labor law have seemingly vanished. Certainly even the milder Senate bill does not merit that title.

The President's opposition to union-busting and to compulsory arbitration has melted under the heat from states' righters. Now his spokesmen in Congress are backing a proposal which Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.), speaking as a former governor, says could be used by any arbitrary governor to bust strikes.

The time for action is here. Congressman and senators, who know their constituents are opposed to union-busting, can halt the Administration's drive. But if we are not alert, the Eisenhower Administration will push through Congress a bill far worse than anything Taft or Hartley wrote.

Advice To Conservatives

The government's failure to act in the recession already has cost the nation one million more unemployed than necessary, according to a conservative Harvard economist. The economist, Dr. Sumner H. Slichter, added this good advice for GOP optimists along the Potomac:

"Conservatism does not consist of assumptions that the most optimistic expectations will turn out. That is unwarranted gambling, not optimism."

Speaking Of H-Bombs . . .

In Other Words—

A Labor View Of Peril To ILO

A few weeks ago, The CIO News published an article by Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) from the viewpoint of a government delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization. Below are some views from the labor side, written by Alfred Roberts, C.B.E., member of the General Council of the British Trades Union Congress and British worker representative to the ILO.

By ALFRED ROBERTS

DURING THE PAST four years, with a larger number of member countries the commitments of the International Labor Organization have considerably increased. So, too, has the nature of work to be done, particularly in the less advanced countries.

These developments brought heavier calls on the financial resources of the ILO. Nevertheless there has been very little increase in the ILO budget, and both government and employers have consistently and successfully pressed for reductions in the budget estimates.

This has involved cutting off some activities and leaving out of the program other worthwhile projects. Generally, the ILO has been forced to work on priorities. The employers, too, have suggested cutting down staff.

In this situation the workers' group has been tireless in opposing attempts to cut the ILO's finances and so reduce its effectiveness. While fully realizing the economic difficulties facing many governments, the attitude of the workers' group is determined by the size of the task that still remains undone if the basic enemies of peace—social injustice, poverty and ignorance—are to be defeated.

Attack By U. S. Employers

It is obvious, however, that the forces of reaction have been gaining ground. In America there has been propaganda, which has found support among the employers' group, suggesting that the ILO should move away from the practice of adopting conventions and recommendations, which, in effect, would transform the Intl. Labor Conference from a functioning machine into an international seminar.

Industrial committees have been under heavy attack from the employers, some of whom have been opposed to them right from the time the committees were first set up. One suggestion is that separate countries pay all their own delegate expenses to the committee meetings—in effect these expenses should be transferred from the ILO to the respective governments.

Other tactics for reducing the importance of these committees are suggestions that there should be no agenda for them and no resolutions from them, but that a paper should be read and discussed and a report subsequently issued, but only to those immediately concerned with the committee in question.

A further move on the part of the employers and some governments was to have the work of the ILO keyed to the expanded program of technical assistance and to abandon the other work of the ILO. This would disrupt the work of the organization in this sphere, as the technical assistance program may be only temporary.

Running Out Of Gas

In addition, there are whole fields where the attitude of the employers is negative, if not one of opposition.

In some ways I can liken the ILO to a motor car. The Office is the chassis, the engine the workers, the brake the employers, with the governments providing the petrol. We are now in the unfortunate position that while we have an engine, I am not sure that it is a very powerful engine. We have a big brake, and the lack of petrol may make it impossible for the engine to overcome the action of the brake.

During the war petrol was very scarce, and we were told to travel as little as possible in order to save petrol. This is rapidly becoming the position in the ILO. The governments are being very sparing about their contributions.

I regard the next session of the Governing Body with some trepidation. We will have to determine the budget for 1955. Government representatives will be wanting cuts in budgetary proposals and they will be supported 100% by the employers, while we, the workers, are fighting for a bigger budget.

We are in a serious position. I ask all trade unionists to do what they can to give the ILO their utmost backing, and so boost the power in the engine of our car. See that we get enough petrol and we will see to it that the brake is not too strong.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ARGUMENT can't be pushed too far, but a lot of people have the feeling that there's a strange impression of impermanence about the Eisenhower Administration. It arises chiefly because so many of the publicists and businessmen introduced to the scene of government affairs have a tendency to resign and go back where they came from.

Roger M. Kyes, the hot-shot General Motors executive turned chief deputy to Defense Sec. Charles Erwin Wilson, filed his resignation. Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge, the Detroit banker, decided to return to private life, C. D. Jackson, one of Henry Luce's magazine-empire executives, chose to abandon his role as Pres. Eisenhower's psychological warfare man and go back to Luce—or somewhere.

The President said at a news conference that he thinks a certain amount of rotation in high government jobs, always granting that he can get equally competent people, may be a good thing. There has been an extraordinary amount of rotation, one must conclude, in the Eisenhower Administration.

The Facts Of Political Life

The Kyes-Dodge-Jackson resignations are not unique. Emmet Hughes, Eisenhower's chief speech writer for a time, quit to go back to magazines. Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin quit in disgust, and it may be up to the conscience of Durkin's succeessor, James P. Mitchell, whether he also ought to quit in disgust over the refusal of Republican congressmen to listen to his advice on labor law.

An observer can't be clear, in studying all this, whether the "new generation" of businessmen whooping and cheering for Eisenhower two years ago has an elemental grasp of the nature of political life in America.

Andrew Mellon, of the Pittsburgh Mellon banking houses, knew the facts of life back in the '20s. As Republican Secretary of the Treasury, he gave huge rebates in taxes to corporations, but he never deluded himself into thinking that he could finish a "job" in Washington in six months or a year.

Mellon came into Washington in 1921, along with Pres. Harding, and he had to be blasted out by political TNT some 11 years later in the depths of the Great Depression.

It's A Full-Time Job

He stuck on as Treasury Secretary through Harding's term, through Coolidge, and through most of Hoover. He "quit" when he had to quit, because Republican political urgencies were then more important than saving Mellon's sensibilities.

The new breed of businessmen, bankers and publicists serving Eisenhower seems to have none of Mellon's comprehension that the job of controlling the government is a full-time job.

All the characters seem to have made some kind of deal, when they were nominated, to "stay" for only a year or so. They pleaded high taxes on their lush incomes and the necessity of educating their children and taking care of their families.

From a political standpoint, to be brutally frank, this is nonsense.

A member of Congress is not exactly underprivileged, since he is paid $15,000 a year. But this salary doesn't approach the money earned by Brother Kyes, Brother Dodge and Brother Jackson in private life.

Congress May Ask Questions

Congressmen may become slightly annoyed, as time goes on, at the assumption of Mr. Eisenhower's high-ranking subordinates that government service is a "sacrifice" rather than a public duty. They may begin to ask new nominees whether they've enlisted for the duration or intend merely to spend a year in "rotation."

The politicians in the President's family, like Atty.-Gen. Brownell and Interior Sec. McKay, couldn't be dislodged without dynamite. But the businessmen and publicists quit just when they might be assumed to have learned something. Their resignations make the whole thing seem as if they considered it unimportant.

★ The U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the Nat'l. Assn. of Manufacturers haven't changed their tune since the GOP came in. The C-of-C opposes the Administration's sole contribution to better health insurance—an inadequate government reinsurance plan to encourage "enterprise" to broaden health policies.

★ Harold C. McClellan, NAM president, thinks four million unemployed is not excessive; he doesn't think we know enough about unemployment compensation to raise benefits; he doesn't think Social Security should be broadened by "tinkering" with it; he doesn't "think much" of the minimum wage law. He'd probably like to repeal the 20th Century.

Too Much

It's not true that the Republicans want to go back to the days of William McKinley—so far as the gold standard is concerned.

Sen. Bridges (R. N.H.) has a bill restoring the gold standard. But W. Randolph Burgess, Treasury Dept. undersecretary and a "hard money" apostle, says the Administration is "unalterably opposed."

Public Will Pay In Uniformity As Another Big Paper Dies

The long-term effect of suspension of major metropolitan newspapers is a growing uniformity of American public opinion, says Executive Vice Pres. Ralph B. Novak of the CIO Newspaper Guild. His comments in The Guild Reporter on the recent sale of the Washington Times-Herald to the Washington Post, which cost the jobs of some 1000 workers, follow:

By RALPH B. NOVAK
Executive Vice President, ANG-CIO

ANOTHER NEWSPAPER was killed the other day in Washington. The silence from the ardent defenders of freedom of the press has been deafening.

But this attack on freedom of the press apparently is excusable—it was a publisher who killed the Times-Herald.

I am serious in calling this an attack on freedom of the press, because I believe that freedom of the press entails as much the freedom to read as it does the freedom to print. And a large segment of Washington now has been deprived of the kind of reading it likes.

It is a kind of reading that I hold no personal liking for, since the Times-Herald has reflected a reactionary, isolationist, know-nothing editorial viewpoint of Col. Robert R. McCormick. Failure to protest the stifling of such views, however, would be to follow the philosophy of the exponents of such views; the philosophy that only one set of ideas is fit for the public mind.

It is typical of Col. McCormick's arrogance that he killed the paper by selling it to a competitor (whose editorial views were often diametrically opposed to his) rather than let it stay alive by selling it to a niece whom he apparently didn't like. It wasn't the money that mattered in this case, it was the principle—or lack of it.

Staff Treated Callously

It is typical of the Colonel's callousness that he said in announcing the sale: "Accordingly, as soon as I could assure the employes, readers and advertisers of the best treatment possible, I sold the paper. . . ."

Mrs. Garvin E. (Bazie) Tankersley, McCormick's niece, failed in last-minute efforts to buy the paper and keep it alive Mrs. Tankersley had been Col. McCormick's first editor of the Times-Herald. They differed on policy, so Mrs. Tankersley stopped being editor. That suggests a motive for the Colonel's refusal to sell the paper to her.

Mrs. Tankersley later told the New York Times: "I didn't want to see the paper die. It has a place in Washington and what the Times-Herald stands for should be saved."

What the Times-Herald stood for, as I said before, was personally obnoxious to me, but the people's right to read should be given as much consideration as the printing press owner's right to print.

A fitting commentary on the Washington Times-Herald situation, although it was written several weeks before the sale, is an article by Alistair Cooke, U. S. correspondent for the Manchester Guardian, who is perhaps better known as the debonair master of ceremonies on the television program "Omnibus."

"We gasp with pity at the thought of the worker in Minsk, the farmer in the Ukraine, both reading the same editorial, mimeographed by Pravda in Moscow for the instruction of European and Mongoloid Russians alike," Cooke wrote in the Saturday Review. "Yet in our own country we seem to be approaching the day when the steelworker in Gary, Indiana, and the date-farmer in Indio, California, will buy their local paper and get their foreign news from the same agency man in Berlin or Washington, and read the same columns written by the same men in New York or Washington.

Thinking The Same Thoughts

"I fear, myself, that there is at least one generation of Americans growing up that not only does not have such respect for diversity of opinion but doesn't know what it is. It is only a step to believing that what is strange, or unreported by 50 newspapers, is somehow mischievous or 'un-American.' Once every man reads the same things as his neighbor, and thinks the same thoughts, the comman man is here with a vengeance: that is to say, the mass bigot.

"I would say that because of this shrinking choice and because of the entailed indifference to the virtue of diversity American newspapers are unrepresentative of the whole community and are becoming even more so.

"What is the answer? I frankly don't know, but not enough people will want to seek it until more people feel moved to ask the question. It is an obviously unhealthy thing, and I should have thought it 'un-American' to have so many cities where there is only one newspaper, of a pronounced political bent, or where the morning and evening newspaper are owned by the same company. Is it too much to suggest that the Sherman Act might have a wide field of application here?"

A Close Look At The 'New Look'

The Administration's "new look" defense policy drew caustic comment from Rep. Yorty (D. Calif.) when he addressed the recent aircraft conference of the CIO Auto Workers in Washington. Some excerpts follow:

By SAMUEL W. YORTY

WE HAVE JUST WITNESSED another in a long series of costly sudden shifts in our airpower program. It is to be hoped that we will now be permitted to proceed towards real air strength without interference by any newly inducted "meat axers" anxious to prove their prior political allegations of great waste by drastically cutting something — cutting anything — right or wrong.

Now I would like to help you take that close look at the "new look."

The U. S. has faced many crises in the past. At such times, our enemies have always found to their dismay that our country has a great unifying spirit which enables us to resolve our differences to cope with the common threat.

In meeting these past crises we have been fortunate in our geographical isolation. It has always afforded us the luxury of complacency until an enemy struck the first blow, then we still had time to resolve our dilatory differences and start serious preparations for defense of our liberty. The Air Age no longer permits a dilatory complacent attitude.

Certainly the Republican Administration's current position on air power is evidence of the serious blunder it committed a few months ago when it cut heavily into the budget and personnel of the Air Force. So far, however, they have proved obstinately unwilling to acknowledge the fact publicly.

Instead, they describe their present military policy as a "new look" in an attempt to hide their mistakes. Ever since the "new look" was announced I have been trying to find out what was "new" about it. In their attempt to make it sound really "new" Administration spokesmen have confused our allies and our own people.

Now the President has thrown up his hands in disgust and repudiated this propaganda term. I think, though, I may have finally discovered the real answer to this so-called "new look." They simply have a new way of looking at things. Let me describe the process to you.

First they look at the enemy's capabilities through the wrong end of a telescope. Then they look at our own capabilities with a pair of unfocused binoculars so that they see double. Then they take another look at the whole situation with a pair of rose-colored glasses.

Hunkydory GOP Optimism Scored—

Sen. Douglas Urges Basic Action To End Dip

This full-dress review of why and how the nation's economy is declining, with workable proposals for restoring prosperity, is from an address by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) last week before the Catholic Labor Alliance of Chicago.

By PAUL H. DOUGLAS

I MUST confess that when you assigned as my topic How to Restore Confidence and Prosperity, I was startled. I thought it must be a typographical error. Something seems to be wrong somewhere.

For our Republican Administration in Washington tells us that everything is hunkydory.

We have left behind the old traditional indices, and entered upon the era of "my papa done told me" economics; all that is left to do now is start pouring prosperity in at the top, wait for the "trickle" and finally—God knows how long—there'll be a little dampness at the bottom.

The Devil Himself

If anyone calls attention to the actual conditions, then the Administration's answer to the analysts is to start galumphing across the country accusing them of being "prophets of Gloom and Doom"—instead of zoom and boom.

I'm even told that Cabinet wives at times now quiet their naughty children by telling them, "if you don't behave, that old gloom and doom Douglas man will get you 'ef you don't watch out'!"

Even President Eisenhower fell for the Republican propaganda line. When he made his fireside chat, he fell for the bill of goods sold him by the firm of Humphrey, Wilson, Weeks & Dodge. That was the basic presumption that the country is highly prosperous and nothing untoward is happening. From that presumption it was an easy leap to the conclusion that the Democratic prosperity program is all wrong and the Republican program is all right.

There is only one trouble with this Republican theory; it simply isn't true. Outside of that, no one can find fault with it.

Sometimes the psychiatrists call such theorizing a "process of rationalization" by which a person cooks up a set of presumptions to justify a conclusion already reached. Sometimes the politicians call it "hoodwinking the public."

I call it ignoring the facts of life. You can't tell me that despite a whale of an increase in golf club sales, this country is anywhere near as prosperous as it was in October of 1952.

The Tax Give-Away

Accepting the Republican theory that what you see around you doesn't actually exist at all, it is easy then to deny the consequences of the hard-money policy, which was invoked after the necessity had passed, and was persisted in until it was almost too late for remedy; and second to justify a program that grants business and 6% of the people $3.1 billion of tax benefits, while granting only $250 million of relief to the other 94% who happen to be the little men and women who are the backbone of this country.

Here is the ultimate effect of the Administration's program as submitted to Congress:

—Herblock in Washington Post
"How Deep Do You Think It Goes?"

Teeing Off

According to Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), "it is time for the President to show more interest in lowering unemployment and less in lowering his golf score."

1. Give about $250 million tax relief to individuals by miscellaneous liberalized deductions for baby sitter expenses for working widows and widowers, high medical allowances, deductions for certain dependents regardless of their earnings.

2. Give favored tax treatment to those who get income from stock dividends, ultimately amounting on a full year basis to $1.2 billion a year in tax relief. This was reduced to about $900 million by the House.

3. Provide special tax treatment on business deductions for plant and equipment, amounting to $1.55 billion, besides another $250 million primarily in the form of liberalized accounting provisions, treatment of income from foreign sources, and operating loss deductions.

4. Extend the previous excise tax rate increases scheduled to expire on Apr. 1. The House later modified this by putting in some reductions.

5. Extend the corporate tax rate increases scheduled to expire Apr. 1. (Granted by the House.)

The relief for the average individual taxpayer would be $6 a year ($250 million divided by 39 million showing taxable income), and the average stockholder would get $185 relief ($1.2 billion divided by 6.5 million stockholders, Brookings Institution estimate) or over 30 times as much relief.

Lesson Of 1929 Crash

The Great Depression should have settled this theory of trickle-down economics in 1929. It is inadequate for two reasons:

1. Savings to the wealthy go into the banks where the money lies largely idle in periods of business uncertainty. The banks are afraid to lend and businesses are afraid to borrow. The money is sterilized, while both prospective investor and borrower "sit it out."

2. It is somewhat ridiculous to assume that investment in plant and equipment will restore jobs in such periods. Do companies need more plant now? Or more demand for the products of the plant they now have?

I believe that the Administration is ignoring, by presuming that the country is prosperous, a number of important factors:

- Federal Reserve general index of production is down to 123 in February, 2 points below January, and 14 points below July of 1953.
- Automobile sales increased slightly in January, but still 15% below February last year. Production for the week of March 6 was 127.9 thousands, 21,000 below the level of the same week last year.
- Steel production continued downward. It is now 68.9% of capacity, compared with 74.3% in February of this year, and 99.1% for February 1953.
- Housing: New nonfarm housing starts were off 8.1% for January-February 1954, compared with a year ago; public housing off 73.1%; private off 3.9%. Some improvement is fortunately noted in new contracts awarded recently.
- Unemployment reached 3,700,000, an increase of 600,000 in February, or nearly 20,000 a day. In addition there were 275,000 in January who were temporarily laid off and very large numbers on involuntary part-time.

The Foolish Ostrich

On these indications the country is experiencing marked contraction of industrial activity.

Sometimes I am reminded by the official proclamations of a man who is ill, but refuses to admit that he is ill, and rejects all suggestions that he see a doctor. It is an admirable thing, the will to fight through.

But the man who rejects all recognition of his illness; and refuses to see a doctor is putting himself in double jeopardy. In that case, the disease is certain to run its full course. If the disease is bad enough, the individual dies; but where it affects the entire economy, not one but tens of millions suffer every spiritual, economic and often physical anguish. In such matters we should follow the example of the wise doctor rather than the foolish ostrich.

What then do we Democrats propose to do to Restore Confidence and Prosperity? I submit my answers in defiance of the hunkydory theory of economics now prevalent:

1. To Expand Consumer Purchasing Power.

We propose to increase the personal income tax exemption from $600 to $800 per year. This amendment will benefit all brackets of taxpayers, not just the smaller brackets.

It will add about $4.5 billion, approximately, to the purchasing power of consumers; it will give the average family an extra $160 a year of the money it has earned, or 8c an hour more in take-home pay. And these families will spend that money on food, clothing, refrigerators, radios, televisions, maybe an automobile, instead of sterilizing it by leaving the money in banks.

The way to increase consumer purchasing power is to decrease the tax take on those who need goods and haven't now enough left-over money to buy what they need, not to increase the savings of those who can buy and probably have already bought what they require.

2. Add to the Purchasing Power of the Consumer Dollar (by fair excise tax cuts).

3. Disposal of Farm Surpluses.

—Herblock in Washington Post
"He Said 'Recession'"

I believe this can be accomplished without the disruption of either domestic or foreign markets, if we move resolutely on this problem. We must bolster this segment of our economy. The American farmer has total assets of $165 billion, real estate debts of $7.1 billion, other loans of $7.3 billion. We cannot let the farmer go down the drain. If this happens, we all go.

4. Encouragement of Construction.

We have been urging the enactment of legislation, introduced by Congressman Bolling of Missouri and myself, to establish a Public Facilities Administration to correlate and expedite public works planning.

We favor an expansion of needed slum clearance and rehousing instead of the pitifully inadequate program of only 35,000 units a year which is now being still further reduced by the House Committee on Appropriations.

5. Relieving Growing Unemployment.

In addition to all the measures I have outlined before, the situation can be further improved by encouraging the states to standardize their unemployment compensation payments. I personally feel that the maximum payments should be increased to $35 or $40 a week to meet increased living costs.

We have spoken out because we believe that the United States cannot afford another depression. The men and women of this country cannot afford to go through another severe depression.

I know that some will object to this program on the ground that it will still further unbalance the budget and that it will lead to inflation. When we had full employment I fought not only for a balanced budget but to get a surplus to apply against the debt. But a seriously unbalanced economy is worse than an unbalanced federal budget.

Long-Term Cost Of Lost Goods

The nation stands to lose $300 billion between now and 1960 if, instead of achieving maximum production, it "merely cruises along at about 5% below maximum."

That's what an article by Richard L. Strout, Christian Science Monitor Washington correspondent, says is "really the stake in the present so-called economic 'readjustment.'

"Three hundred billion dollars," Strout points out, "would make the United States and the rest of the world far more prosperous.

"It would boost living standards at home and abroad; make international relations easier, smooth over domestic and foreign difficulties, and by that much aid the global fight on communism."

Strout cites economists' arguments that if the Administration leaves its sights too low after the "readjustment" is completed, there will be danger of "accumulated unbalance between the nation's capacity to make goods and workers' capacity to buy them. If the situation gets too top-heavy, it can produce a real 'depression.'"

GOP 'Disregard' Of Jobless Hit

"Callous disregard for the unemployed" was charged to the Eisenhower Administration by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.)

Speaking before the Senate Appropriations Committee he protested the statement of Treasury Sec. Humphrey that four million jobless was "a relatively low figure."

The Senator joined in support of the George-Douglas Bill for tax reductions to stimulate purchasing power as a means of increasing employment. The measure asks an increase from $600 to $800 in personal exemptions to spread tax reduction benefits among those "needing them most," as opposed to the Administration's plan of limiting tax reductions to income from corporation stock dividends.

CIO Day In Trenton—

Holderman Takes Oath In Top Jersey Post

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LONG BEFORE the time scheduled for installing Carl Holderman, former president of the New Jersey CIO Council, as the new State Commissioner of Labor, crowds began pouring into the main ballroom of Trenton's Hotel Hildebrecht last week to witness the ceremony.

It was "CIO Day in Trenton" and soon every one of the 600 seats was filled and still people continued to stream in. They stood packed four and five deep all around the room. They flowed down the long hall. They crammed onto the platform, breathing down the necks of those at the speakers' table. A thousand or more managed to squeeze into a ballroom meant for half that number, but many others had to turn away, unable to get in.

The great interest shown in the event, Holderman said in a short speech after taking the oath of office, was a tribute to the influence and prestige of the CIO.

"I am only a symbol," he said. Pledging to serve "the people of the State as a whole," Holderman assured employers—some of whom had opposed his appointment—that "they would have no trouble with the administration of his office if they obeyed the laws."

New Jersey's Sec. of State Edward Patten administered the oath of office, with Holderman's small granddaughter, Barbara Holderman, holding the Bible.

Governor Present

The swearing-in of Holderman was the climax of the New Jersey CIO's third annual all-day legislative conference, held Mar. 29 in Trenton. It was attended by 550 delegates from unions in all parts of this small but important industrial State.

New Jersey's affable new Democratic governor, Robert Meyner, joined the CIO delegates around noon for a box lunch served on the floor of the conference room. He quickly ate his sandwiches with relish, remarking as he got up to speak that there was nothing wrong with his appetite, though, he implied, he might have his troubles. Meyner faces the stiff job of working with a Legislature controlled by the opposition party.

The Governor praised the CIO "for working for the interest of all the people and not just for its own members." He said he fully understood the CIO's legislative problems and programs, and was "willing to cooperate with it on what's good for the five million people of the State of New Jersey."

A number of State senators and assemblymen, both Democrats and Republicans, also spoke briefly or were introduced to the CIO delegates at the morning session and during the box luncheon. The conference was called to order by John Kelly, State CIO legislative committee chairman. State CIO Sec.-Treas. Victor D. Leonardis welcomed the delegates.

Legislative Dir. Harry Kranz gave the keynote address, outlining the status of various CIO-supported bills and asking the delegates to urge their legislators to vote for them.

No. One Bill

The No. One bill of the day, with State unemployment now 100,000, calls for an increase in unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits from the present $30 maximum to $45 for single workers, plus $4 for each dependent.

"Cost of the unemployment benefit proposals recommended by the CIO," Kranz said, "would be about $18 million additional annually which could easily be met out of huge annual surpluses being piled up in the UC fund, without touching the $506 million UC trust fund—richest of any industrial state in the nation.

"This additional money, going largely to workers with dependents to support and with regular weekly earnings ranging from $45 to more than $100 when employed, would furnish high-velocity purchasing power that would benefit the State's entire economy."

Looking Over His Shoulder . . .

During the months while the controversy was raging over his appointment as New Jersey Commissioner of Labor and Industry, Carl Holderman said both his public and private life were under close scrutiny. The worst they could come up with was he'd been arrested on the picket line, Holderman told the audience that witnessed his installation in Trenton.

But this didn't dampen the zeal of critics who accused him in public and in anonymous letters of all sorts of things, including the charge that he devoted himself to the interests of labor — and he was proud to admit that one.

"No greater compliment could be paid me," Holderman said. "I have no doubt that on the job ahead of me, some of these critics will be looking over my shoulder, ready to pounce on anything they think will justify their charges of prejudice and bias."

Although he was pleased to take up his new job, Holderman said, it also made him sad because "for the first time in 30 years, I'm severing my direct connection with the labor movement."

Capital Rally

New Jersey CIO leaders last week presented to the State's congressional delegation a program to aid the 100,000 jobless workers in the Garden State.

The 12-point program included requests for increasing income tax exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 next year, and boosting State unemployment compensation benefits by setting up federal minimum standards.

The CIO group was led by Victor D. Leonardis and Harry Kranz, secretary-treasurer and legislative director respectively of the State CIO Council.

Civil Liberties Reports Praised In New Hillman Awards

AWARDS for outstanding newspaper and television reporting and for distinguished work in the non-fiction and magazine fields during 1953 were made last week by the Sidney Hillman Foundation at a ceremony in New York.

The winners of $500 cash awards for accomplishments the foundation felt keep alive the ideals of the late founding president of the CIO Clothing Workers were:

Daily journalism—Ralph S. O'Leary, city editor of the Houston (Tex.) Post, for a series of 11 articles exposing the Minute Women, a local super-patriotic group, which also won him the CIO Newspaper Guild's Heywood Broun Award.

Television—Edward R. Murrow, for "See It Now" telecasts dealing with the case of Lt. Milo J. Radulovich of the U. S. Air Force and with the dispute between the American Civil Liberties Union and the American Legion in Indianapolis, Ind.; and to Gerald W. Johnson, historian, writer and commentator, for four telecasts from Station WAAM-TV, Baltimore, Md., dealing with the federal security program, Congress and civil liberties in general.

Magazine journalism—Joseph Wechsburg, for "The Seventeenth of June," an article in the New Yorker magazine dealing with the uprising of East German workers against their Communist oppressors last year.

Non-fiction—Theodore H. White, for "Fire In the Ashes," a study of post-war Europe, its people and its problems.

The awards were presented by Jacob S. Potofsky, Hillman's successor as ACWA chieftain and president of the foundation. Potofsky also cited two honorable mention winners.

They were Murray Marder, Washington (D. C.) Post and Times-Herald reporter and a member of the Washington Newspaper Guild, for four articles on Sen. McCarthy's investigation at Fort Monmouth (N.J.); and Henry Steele Commager, for "Guilt—and Innocence—By Association," an analysis of guilt by association and the Fifth Amendment which appeared in the New York Times Sunday Magazine.

In making the awards, Potofsky pointed out that two were for works dealing with the record of the United States in international affairs, while the other five are concerned with civil liberties.

Civil liberties, he continued, claim attention "because we are becoming increasingly aware that the pattern of attacks on our civil liberties—and this pattern has been the subject of our winning submissions—has led to dangerous consequences."

"None of us here belittles the need to stamp out espionage and eliminate traitors," he added. "But the original need has been twisted and exploited by ruthless demagogues into a campaign of fear and hysteria, aimed at the foundation of civil liberties upon which this nation has grown."

The result, Potofsky noted, is the growth of fear—fear to be different, to become involved in controversy that was "once the foundation of our freedom."

"Under these conditions," he said, "we feel a special sense of pride in honoring men who have stood up before the current hysteria, have fought it and exposed it.

"They have done this despite considerable risk to their own careers and reputations. Yet their courage and their respect for truth are what has made this nation great, and their contributions will be remembered long after the witch-hunters and the demagogues and their followers are forgotten."

The award winners were selected by a board of judges composed of Lewis Gannett, book editor of the New York Herald-Tribune; William L. Shirer, writer and commentator, and Bruce Bliven, chairman of the New Republic editorial board.

Ike Urges Lower Tariff Duties As CIO Fights Hike On Watches

A NINE-POINT program for strengthening the economy of the free world by boosting international trade, including authorization to cut tariffs by 15%, was sent to Congress last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

At the same time the CIO asked the Federal Trade Commission to reject the petition of a number of American watch manufacturers for tariff relief under the escape clause by recommending higher duties on Swiss watches.

The Eisenhower program went to Congress in the form of a 4500-word message on which the President requested speedy action because of the "urgency and significance of our problems in this area."

His plan included a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act with amendments empowering him to negotiate tariff cuts on certain commodities by not more than 5% a year; simplification of customs procedures; cooperation with other nations to stabilize raw material prices; increased East-West trade in non-strategic goods, and easier interchange of currencies.

The CIO's request that present duties on Swiss watches be maintained was filed with the FTC by Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO Committee on International-Affairs and president of the Clothing Workers.

"We do not believe that the industry as a whole . . . is currently injured by imports of watches and watch movements," the CIO said.

"FURTHERMORE, we do not believe that there is an existing threat of serious injury to the U. S. domestic watch industry. On the other hand, it is necessary that trade between the U. S. and Switzerland continue.

"The raising of the tariff on Swiss watches would tend to reduce American exports of both agricultural and industrial products."

The CIO warned, however, that if Swiss manufacturers continue to ship certain types of jeweled wrist watches in the quantities in which they have been imported in recent years, "this may well cause serious competitive problems" at some time in the future. The statement suggested that the FTC note this in its decision rejecting the tariff boost.

When the U. S. cut the tariffs rates in 1936, the statement recalled, Switzerland in turn reduced its duties on certain American products and agreed to buy specific quantities of agricultural products. Imports from the U. S. have increased many times since then, it continued, and except for 1953 and the war years have bulked larger than exports to the U. S.

McDonald Says Trade Plan 'Does Not Go Far Enough'

THE FOREIGN trade program advanced by Pres. Eisenhower last week "does not go far enough," in the opinion of Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers.

McDonald was a public member of the Randall Commission, whose report Eisenhower followed generally in making his recommendations.

"As I indicated in my comments and dissents concerning the Randall report," he said, "I think it points in the direction of a more liberal foreign policy for the U. S. Therefore, I signed it.

"However, I do not think the report went far enough in this direction. It follows that I, therefore, do not think the President's message goes far enough."

McDonald said he agreed with the President that foreign trade with friendly nations must be expanded, and pointed out this means we must accept more imports if we expect to sell abroad. Reduction of tariff rates may possibly have some adverse effects, he added.

"Although only a few people might suffer, I feel strongly that since such injury would be the result of a federal policy," he said, "it would be the federal government's responsibility to provide assistance to those adversely affected."

Labor Group Urges New Wetback Program

A FOUR-POINT program to deal with the Mexican wetback problem was outlined to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell, Jr., last week by a delegation representing the CIO, AFL, railway brotherhoods, and church, farm and welfare organizations.

The group warned that the Administration's "go it alone" program of border recruitment of Mexican farm workers would not help to solve the underlying economic and social problem of the wetback traffic. Rather, they said, it would simply "legalize" wetbacks.

To halt the vast influx of illegal Mexican migrants, the delegation called on the Administration to:

1. Prohibit farmers who employ wetbacks from deducting the wages paid to them as business expenses on their income tax returns
2. Confiscate automobiles and trucks used for transporting illegal braceros to their place of employment, chiefly the large corporation farms in California, New Mexico, Arizona, Arkansas and Texas
3. Institute a system of fines against farmers who employ wetbacks.
4. Enlarge the border patrol at the Mexican border.

Although the Justice Dept. refused to comment on the proposals, Brownell told the delegation that the department is now developing a program to control the influx of wetbacks more effectively. He said that portions of the program will be presented to Congress for action this session.

The delegation reminded Brownell of his criticism of previous reductions in appropriations for the border patrol as being penny-wise and pound-foolish policy. They noted that current appropriation requests contained no increases for the Immigration and Naturalization Service's border patrol, which is under the attorney general's jurisdiction.

Co-chairmen of the group were Victor G. Reuther, assistant to the CIO president, and Lewis G. Hines, AFL special representative.

The appointment with Brownell was made at the request of the U. S. members of the Joint U. S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee established last December in Mexico City.

Gus Faber Of TWU Visits Germany

Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber of the CIO Transport Workers is in Germany as a member of an eight-man study group meeting with German labor, industry and government leaders at the invitation of the West German government.

LABOR DEPT. CHIEFS—Sec. of Labor James P. Mitchell is seated. Sanding (left to right) are: Assistant Sec. for Standards and Statistics Harrison C. Hobart; Under Sec.-Designate Arthur Larson, Assistant Sec. for Employment and Manpower Rocco C. Siciliano, Assistant Sec. of Intl. Labor Affairs J. Ernest Wilkins and Adminstrative Assistant Sec. James E. Dodson. Larson succeeds Lloyd Mashburn of the AFL.

From His Home State

McCarthy Debunked By Progressive Magazine

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch
McCarthy's Rules Of Order

A DAMNING indictment of McCarthy, the man and his methods, makes up the entire current issue of The (La Follette) Progressive, a magazine published in his home state of Wisconsin.

More than a year in preparation, the study of the Badger State's junior Senator is entitled "McCarthy: A Documented Record." The Progressive's April issue, also its 45th anniversary number, carries on its cover these words:

"Dedicated to the people of the United States of America who share our determination to make the principles of democracy prevail over communism and McCarthyism."

THE PROGRESSIVE was founded in 1909 by the late Sen. Robert M. LaFollette, Sr. From its study of the highly controversial McCarthy, it concluded that:

"This man who has made anti-communism his political career has contributed dangerously to strengthening the Communist cause. If the Kremlin could succeed in planting one of its own agents in the Senate, it could hardly hope for greater results in creating doubt, disunity and fear in America than it has gained from McCarthy's operations."

The record is set down in cold, unexcited prose. It ranges from McCarthy's initial bid for a political job (as a Democrat) to his judgeship where his conduct caused such concern that the Wisconsin bar commissioners held he violated his oath of office.

For those who may have forgotten, it recalls that McCarthy won his Senate seat with Communist support. And for those who may want to forget, there is chapter and verse proof that McCarthy's support today comes in part from some of America's most rabid racists and anti-Semites.

By far the longest section deals with McCarthy in his role as chairman of the Senate Investigations subcommittee. The Progressive shows that the headline-stealing accusations have "yet to produce a single conviction of a Communist in government on evidence uncovered by McCarthy."

The record comes up to date with McCarthy's front page brawl with the Army.

THE PROGRESSIVE offers a remedy for the disease that it diagnoses so incisively. "We live in a dangerous age," it says, "and surely one of the greatest dangers that confronts us is the counterfeit philosophy of communism and its appeal to the underprivileged of humanity.

"But we do not begin to meet that menace by burning books, by crushing dissent, and by creating an atmosphere of hysteria."

The remedy, The Progressive says, "must be to replace 'the big lie' of communism and McCarthyism with 'the big truth' of a working democracy."

Copies of The Progressive are available on many newstands or may be obtained directly from The Progressive, Madison, Wis. Single copies are 75c each. Prices on larger orders are three copies, $2; five for $3; 10 for $5.50 and 20 for $10. —E.A.K.

ACLU Calls Communists Conspirators

THE AMERICAN Communist movement has been branded as "an international conspiracy to seize power" in a policy statement by the American Civil Liberties Union.

At the same time, ACLU reaffirmed its traditional policy of defending anyone whose civil liberties were violated, regardless of his political or other affiliations.

"The American Communist movement," the organization's board said, "in sharp contradistinction to other American political parties, is subject to the dominance of the rulers of a foreign nation. In theory it rejects all the concepts of civil liberty which the ACLU exists to defend.

"But we hold it to be an ominous violation of our own heritage and principles to condemn or punish any person, Communist or other, without due process of law.

"The ACLU's defense has everywhere and always been, not of organizations or ideologies, but of the civil rights to which all persons under the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States are entitled by the Constitution."

CIO COUNCILS In Action

STATE CIO COUNCILS are mobilizing on the legislative and political fronts to meet the challenge of growing unemployment. The heaviest concentration of effort is on legislatures to improve and extend unemployment compensation benefits. Some recent examples follow:

• The Connecticut CIO Council has reminded Gov. John Lodge of Pres. Eisenhower's recommendation that unemployment compensation in the states be increased. Council Sec.-Treas. John J. Driscoll wrote Lodge that every state's governor received a letter from Labor Sec. Mitchell containing the President's request for raising benefits.

Driscoll pointed out that average earning in the state are almost $75 weekly while maximum benefits are only $30 and average payments are closer to $25. He urged that a special session of the State Assembly be called to act on the jobless pay increase.

Bitter Pill

Ohio's limit on workmen's compensation benefits is a "bitter pill" being forced down the throats of workers and their families.

That is what Ohio CIO Council Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman told a legislative subcommittee. He pointed out that in Cleveland a family of five on relief would receive more per month for the barest essentials than it would get in the same period from workmen's compensation benefits.

• In New Jersey, CIO Legislative Dir. Harry Kranz said that the State's 100,000 jobless are entitled to the same proportionate increase in maximum weekly benefits that the lawmakers gave themselves in pay hikes. Kranz said the State CIO Council favored the 66% increase in legislative salaries now under consideration but insisted that equal consideration should be given to the plight of families who cannot exist on the $30 maximum weekly benefits now in effect.

• Kentucky, with at least 70,000 idle, pays a weekly maximum of $27 in unemployment compensation. The State CIO Council has urged legislators to use part of the $146 million reserve fund to boost payments.

• In Ohio, the State CIO Council mailed every legislator a reprint from Business Week magazine which pointed out that the State made it harder to collect unemployment compensation than most others in the country. The Council has been waging a fight for liberalization of the laws which disqualify a high proportion of applicants for jobless pay. Ohio's disqualification rate was 47.3%, second highest in the nation, between July and September 1953. The national average during the period was 24.4%.

• California has an increase in unemployment compensation benefits on the agenda for its special session of the Legislature. Sec.-Treas. John Despol of the California CIO Council commended Gov. Goodwin Knight for putting it there but says the proposed raise of $5 to a $30 weekly maximum is not enough. CIO wants it raised to a $40 maximum.

• The Indiana CIO Council called upon the congressional delegation to urge "as influential citizens" a special session of the Legislature to improve the inadequate unemployment compensation law. Earlier attempts to stir Gov. Craig in this direction failed.

• Colorado pays a maximum benefit of 51.9% of average weekly wages, according to State CIO Council Sec.-Treas. William T. Butler in a letter to Gov. Dan Thornton of that State. Butler pointed out that unemployment there is "increasing weekly by alarming proportions." He said payments should be 60% to 67% of the average weekly wage and duration should be extended. Butler cited "terrific" layoffs at Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., Shwayder Bros., Heckethord Mfg. Co., and among several thousand construction workers.

• The Lawrence County (Pa.) CIO Council heard John G. Ramsay, CIO director of community relations, declare that unions must and are taking their rightful place in community place. Honored at the same banquet was Council Pres. George T. Barberio who is serving his third two-year term in that office.

Scholle Raps Michigan GOP For Inaction On Jobless Aid

MICHIGAN CIO Council Pres. August Scholle has urged Republican state legislators to "put down their partisanship and concern themselves with the bread and butter issues."

He condemned the state GOP for playing politics with the unemployment and workmen's compensation laws. The Senate passed the Teahen Bill which drew criticism from CIO because it offered almost no improvements.

Reacting to the CIO demands, the House junked the Teahen measure and took up discussion of the once-dead Hermann-Orr Bill.

This proposes an increase in the primary benefit from $23 to $30 weekly with a $43 ceiling for a worker with four or more dependents. The present top is $35. Benefits would be extended from 20 to 26 weeks.

Most of what CIO called the "fishhook" provisions of the Teahen Bill are gone from the new measure, which also provides for a merit rating system for employer payments into the unemployment compensation reserve fund.

Detroit Evictions Laid To Unemployment Rise

Circuit Court Commissioners in Detroit blamed rising unemployment for the increase in foreclosures and evictions. They said that evictions were running nearly 10% above last year, and that repossession on land contracts were 90.1% higher in February than in the same month last year.

'Shield Against Recession'—

Ohio CIO Sets Petition Drive To Boost Jobless Benefits

THE OHIO CIO Council last week stepped up preparations for an all-out campaign to improve that State's unemployment law.

Ohio CIO is taking the fight directly to the people through initiative petitions, which would force the Legislature to act.

According to Pres. James P. Griffin, who is also CIO Steelworkers district director in the Youngstown area, the four-point program would:

1. Place compensation at two-thirds of the average weekly wage, with a $50 a week maximum.

2. Provide for $3 a week dependency allowance with a limit of three dependents.

3. Put the burden of proof, in cases which were appealed, onto the party making the appeal. Now the worker must provide the proof in every appealed case.

4. Penalize employers who go on "fishing expeditions" and indiscriminately appeal cases, hoping workers will make technical errors which disqualify them.

OHIO'S PRESENT maximum weekly compensation is $30. The state now provides for dependency allowances of $2.50 a week, but draws the line at two dependents.

"All we are trying to do," Griffin said, "is to humanize the unemployment compensation law so that it will provide a minimum American standard of living for Ohio workers."

The Ohio CIO's proposals, he said, would make the law "act as a realistic shield against depressions and recessions."

"We have tried desperately in the past to secure justice for unemployed workers," he said.

"The time has come to go directly to the people. The initiative petition does this. It strikes a blow not only for the unemployed worker and his family, but for a wholesome and sound economy."

Griffin said that "everybody who has to provide for a family with two or more children doesn't need to be an economist to appreciate the fact that $35 a week can't provide for the necessaries of life."

"This is a 'temporary adjustment' until my compensation runs out . . . then it will be a 'recession'!"

U. S. Gets Set To Fight For Year-Old Textile Pay Order

THE GOVERNMENT is about ready to fight a year-old suit that challenges a minimum wage order for the cotton and synthetics textile industry.

The rate was set under the Walsh-Healey Act, which provides for regulation of wages for work done under government contract.

Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) made public a letter from Assistant Atty. Gen. Warren E. Burger saying the government's defense brief is in final stages of preparation.

The suit involves an order issued in January, 1953, by Labor Sec. Tobin raising the legal minimum in cotton and synthetics mills from 87c to $1 an hour.

Some 200 southern mills got a District Court injunction against enforcement of the order more than a year ago. The CIO Textile Workers, some northern mills and the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers have been allowed to intervene on the government's side, Burger said.

Saltonstall prodded Atty. Gen. Brownell about the year's delay some time ago. Burger replied for him that the Labor and Justice Depts. have "given preferred and continuous attention at all times" to the case.

Welfare Fund Inspection Is Voted In N. Y.

AUTHORITY to examine union welfare fund records is vested in New York State's superintendent of insurance under the terms of a law signed last week by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The State CIO Council took no official position on the bill and voiced no objection to it during hearings.

Dewey noted that most union welfare plans are "honestly and competently administered."

In Washington, the Senate Labor Committee last week voted authorization of $95,000 to investigate union welfare and retirement funds. Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) will head the investigating group.

T-H Strike Vote Proposal Rapped

The proposed compulsory strike vote amendment to the Taft-Hartley Act has been criticized by the New York City Bar Association's committee on labor and social security legislation.

Such votes, the committee said, "would hinder rather than help collective bargaining."

Book Review—

Fr. Purcell Gives Answers On What Workers Think Of Unions

WHEN TAFT-HARTLEY became law in 1947, its supporters boasted that it was designed to "protect" union members from union leaders—as well, obviously, as to "protect" employers from strong unions.

Do workers need or want such protection from their democratically-elected officers, over and above the normal safeguards of a democratic union constitution?

Unions have always said "no," and a distinguished group of scholars of the labor movement have agreed. Now a new book by Rev. Theodore Purcell, S.J. ("The Worker Speaks His Mind on Company and Union") presents the results of a painstaking survey of workers' attitudes.

FATHER PURCELL interviewed several hundred members of Local 28 of the United Packinghouse Workers, CIO, at the Swift Co. plant in the Chicago stockyards, with a host of questions about their attitudes.

Needless to say, the replies ranged all over the lot—from burning enthusiasm for the union to distaste for it, from hate of the company to expressed appreciation of management's relations with its workers.

But almost every reply recognizes the contribution the the union has made to helping solve major problems in the plant—better wages, greater security, improvement in racial relations.

That is a real tribute, in a local that has gone through some fiery political moves and counter-moves during the past few years.

As Father Purcell points out, while "the rank and file is affected by the competition of company and union for their allegiance, the answer is that the pull of the company seems to attract a few workers, but not most, from full allegiance to the union. Likewise, the pull of the union affects the company allegiancy of some.

FATHER PURCELL discusses at length the "plant community" of the company and the union and all the people involved. He concludes that they do comprise a true industrial community, who "want and approve the two-in-one nature of that community, with its dual government by company and union."

In other words, they believe in industrial democracy. In bringing the diverse and often conflicting viewpoints of the people at Swift's into better focus, Father Purcell has contributed to the understanding of labor-management relations and of labor's goal of expanding industrial democracy. —H.C.F.

You And Your Money—

Benson's Dairy Price Cut May Prove Bitter Pill For Consumers

"AN ECONOMIC hangman's trap" was set to be pulled out from under the nation's dairy farmers last week, as Agriculture Sec. Benson promised housewives they might be able to buy butter at anywhere from 59c to 71c a pound.

But the promise of cheaper butter for city dwellers may prove as bitter a pill as the coloring dye for old-fashioned margarine.

The reason: The GOP Administration's latest move against a fair farm price support program means more recession in the farm states. And fewer farmers able to buy trucks, cars, tractors, suits or TV sets means shorter hours, more unemployment and smaller paychecks for city workers. (If you're on unemployment compensation, just buying margarine will be a problem.)

Already Benson is in the sub-basement so far as many farmers are concerned. An Iowa Republican lawmaker, Rep. Gross, recently polled 6600 farmers in his district, said three out of four of them are opposed to the "flexible" farm prices of the Eisenhower Administration.

Rep. Johnson (D. Wisc.)—elected last year in a special election in which the GOP farm policy was a major issue—hung the "economic hangman's trap" label on Benson's butter program. He warned that three million dairy farmers face an "economic tragedy" as result of the GOP program.

Benson Is Undisturbed

Benson was undisturbed by congressional action and went ahead with plans to put two programs into effect. The major move, effective on Apr. 1, trimmed dairy price supports—at the farm—from 90% to 75% of parity. The effect, Benson said, would be to cut the retail price of butter, now averaging 79c a pound, down to about 71c.

Additionally, Benson hopes to start a test program in several cities of selling surplus government butter at cut-rate prices, maybe as low as 59c.

Just how much consumers will gain when it comes to adding up the grocery bill is open to question. As the National Farmers Union recently pointed out, the big dairy firms reported record 1953 profits credited directly to the decline in prices paid to farmers.

For example, Borden's profits were up 15% last year, while the National Dairy Products Corp. reported a 11% climb in earnings. And National Dairy said "the scheduled cut in price supports on dairy commodities . . . should be good for the continued progress of our company."

For farmers, however, the Agriculture Dept. Marketing Service said that farm cash receipts (from crops and livestock) fell .8% during the month ended Mar. 15.

The cost of the dairy price cutback in farm income is estimated at anywhere from $600 million to $1 billion, and the housewife should understand what the prospective drop in butter prices will actually cost her.

As the Public Affairs Institute of Washington pointed out in a recent report:

"Such a drop in farm income would have a solid impact on city dwellers. It is estimated that between 36 and 40% of the work forces of this country is directly engaged in agriculture, processing of agricultural products or the manufacture of supplies for agriculture.

"Most of these workers do not live on the farm but in cities and towns. In the period Jan. 1, 1953 to Jan. 1, 1954 these people were already hit by a drop in farm income of over 7%. This meant the loss of thousands of jobs.

"That is why a drop in the price of butter which brings a decline in farm income may be too high a price for the American housewife."

'Daisies Do Tell...!'

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the Senate the other day that Agriculture Sec. Benson's announcement of plans to cut dairy price supports from 90% to 75% of parity reminded him of one of Pres. Eisenhower's campaign promises.

That was the promise, voiced at Kasson, Minn., to continue 90% supports.

Humphrey reported that Minnesota dairymen are thinking of erecting "a little monument" at Kasson, "some little memorial" to commemorate the Eisenhower speech, "Around the memorial," he added, "spread out over the beautiful farm landscape, would be forget-me-nots."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

LIKE MANY FAMILIES you probably spend a lot of money, even though only a bit at a time, for such toiletries as skin lotions, hand creams, shaving cream, shampoos, dentifrices and many other products.

You can often cut the cost of these products to dimes instead of dollars. In fact, you can often eliminate them altogether, because some widely-sold toiletries have little or no real value and can be supplanted by ordinary household items you already have.

Don't Overpay For Toiletries

The cost of ingredients for many toiletries is actually only pennies. In fact, as you'll see below, a large proportion of shaving cream is simply water. In the case of some costly lotions, the chief functional ingredients are such ordinary household standbys as borax, boric acid, rubbing alcohol, glycerin and so on.

The real cost of these products is the cost of the widespread, repetitious and exaggerated advertising; the costly containers in which they are packaged, and the perfumes used to give them their claimed pseudo-myterious powers.

You pay an especially high price for these products in small packages. It may seem easier to pay 10c for a one-ounce bottle of shampoo once a week, than $1 for a half-gallon every six months or so. But you only fool yourself, and that's not necessary since there are so many people willing to do it for you.

IN SHAMPOOS, for example, the bulk containers sold by large retailers under their own brand names save you 60 to 80% off the cost of the nationally-advertised brands when sold in small packages.

Unfortunately there is additional temptation to buy small packages of branded toiletries at high prices for their real value, now that the supermarkets too sell them. Because your favorite market has a low price on chuck roast don't assume its new display of toiletries is any bargain.

The best buys in toiletries by far are the private brands of the consumer co-ops, department stores, mail-order houses and some drug stores.

Here are specific tips on money-savers in toiletries:

SHAVE CREAMS: Experts point out that most packaged shaving creams contain a high proportion of water. This makes them costly for what you actually get. This is especially true of the brushless creams. Cake shaving soap has much the same ingredients as creams. You simply add the water with your brush. Thus you can cut your expenditures to 30-50% a year. Shaving bowls and sticks are simply fancier versions of cake shaving soap at a higher price.

HAND LOTIONS: A good hand lotion is pretty much a necessity in the home for protecting the skin against the effects of housework, gardening and also for use as a foundation base. But you only need one all-purpose lotion, not a half-dozen different types, which are often very little different at that.

Many cosmetics experts consider lanolin to be the important ingredient in a good hand lotion. But if you read the labels on some of the well-advertised name brands you'll find many contain no lanolin at all, and those that do are expensive. The consumer co-ops sell an eight-ounce bottle of lanolin lotion for 50c.

What's significant is that the ingredients are listed; lanolin, stearic acids, mineral oil, tragacanth, perfume, borax and others. But one of the widest-selling lower-priced advertised brands, at 50c for a 6½ ounce bottle, doesn't list any of its ingredients.

You can find many formulas for toiletries and other products in Henley's Book of Formulas, and also in The Home Book of Money-Saving Formulas.

Reuther Praises Cancer Unit, Urges CIO Fund Drive Aid

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has urged all CIO members to contribute generously to the current fund-raising crusade of the American Cancer Society and if possible to assist the drive as volunteers.

He said the society "is the only agency that is attacking the disease with a three-point program of research, education and service to cancer patients."

"This program," Reuther continued, "is financed by the voluntary contributions of the American public, and the project of patient service is largely carried out by hundreds of thousands of lay volunteers who work through their local American Cancer Society units.

"Because of its record of public service in the cause of fighting cancer, the Congress of Industrial Organizations heartily endorses the American Cancer Society and urges all CIO unions and their members to support its activities."

The society also is conducting a nationwide public education program to reduce the appalling number of cancer deaths.

CANCER'S 7 DANGER SIGNALS

1. Any sore that does not heal
2. A lump or thickening in the breast or elsewhere
3. Unusual bleeding or discharge
4. Any change in a wart or mole
5. Persistent indigestion or difficulty in swallowing
6. Persistant hoarseness or cough
7. Any change in normal bowel habits

None of these symptoms necessarily means that you have cancer but any one of them should send you to your doctor. Cancer is usually curable when detected and treated early. REMEMBER THE DANGER SIGNALS.

Long Battle Predicted On Battery Dope

THE FEDERAL government has settled down for a long battle to prove the battery additive, AD-X2, is of exceedingly dubious value.

Government scientists said this about a year ago and touched off a hassle that reached right into Pres. Eisenhower's Cabinet.

Now the Federal Trade Commission has issued a complaint against Pioneers, Inc., and Jess M. Ritchie of Oakland, Calif., charging that advertising for AD-X2 was false, deceptive and misleading.

The ads claimed AD-X2 rejuvenated batteries worn out by sulfation and would prolong the life of new batteries. Not so reported Dr. Allen V. Astin, nonpolitical director of the Bureau of Standards.

Then make it so, said Commerce Sec. Weeks in effect. When Astin, in a stubborn scientific way declined, he was fired by Weeks but reinstated after protests by the nation's scientists.

The impartial scientists ran their own tests on AD-X2 and found that the powder had no merit for invigorating batteries.

U. S. Boosts Rent Of Jobless In Sandusky, Ohio, Projects

FROM Sandusky, O., comes a story often heard these days—a story of families facing eviction because they won't be able to pay the increased rent bills Uncle Sam is about to hand them.

Residents in 300 units of two Sandusky housing projects have been notified by the Public Housing Administration that their rents were to be increased by slightly more than 20%, according to the Ohio CIO Council.

The residents were burned up at this high-handed action. The project on occasion has shown a gross profit of $51,000 a year but the tragic part of the current situation is that approximately 50% of the wage earners living at the project are unemployed.

Sec. Hobby Urges Handicapped Aid

Sec. of Health Hobby urged Congress to expand the present rehabilitation program, which restores about 60,000 persons a year to self-sufficiency, toward a goal of 200,000 annually in 1959.

Food Price Index At Peak

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index climbed to an all-time high last week. At $7.42, the index was up 17.4% from the same week in 1953 when it stood at $6.32. Dun & Bradstreet reported the index was the highest since the agency started keeping records in 1916.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

IN LOUSIVILLE, KY., last week, I conferred with Steelworkers Director Jim Robb, and Bill Billingsley of the Kentucky State CIO Council. Their area has suffered particular hardships in the recent layoffs and business decline.

We talked over the organizational effort CIO unions are undertaking to increase the benefits of trade union organization in these times of economic danger, and I want to compliment these men, and the other leaders of CIO in Kentucky, for moving ahead with a sound program for building greater strength and protection for the workers.

We have the official news, now, that the executive board of the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers has unanimously ratified an agreement to affiliate the membership of the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers with their own organization. This, of course, means the end of DPO as an organization. Each local of DPO will vote on affiliation with Retail-Wholesale and will be chartered in that union—the result being a union with a membership of 120,000. It means that millions of unorganized workers in the distributive field can now look to a powerful, united CIO union to assist them in the formation of effective trade unions.

I WILL EXPECT the CIO staff, throughout the country, to assist the officers and representatives of Retail-Wholesale in carrying out this operation. Such a great event calls for all the cooperation we can give.

Pres. Max Greenberg and his fellow executive officers of Retail-Wholesale should be commended for the calm, patient, statesmanlike approach they took to bringing the organizations together.

We expect that Retail-Wholesale will also extend an invitation to membership to the unions of the CIO Department Store Organizing Committee, which includes the world's largest department store, Macy's of New York.

As we receive good news from the top officers of Retail-Wholesale, we also learn of successful organizational efforts in the field. Finer Service, Inc., of Dayton, O., has recognized Retail-Wholesale as collective bargaining agent for all their employees. RWDSU State Dir. Gerald Hughes was in charge of the negotiations, according to a report from CIO Reg. Dir. George DeNucci.

DIR. DE NUCCI also reports a victory for the CIO Steelworkers at the Vanadium Corp., Byesville, O., with Rep. George Turner in charge.

Another big victory for the CIO Steelworkers came at Austinville, Va., at the New Jersey Zinc Co. plant, with Rep. Laurence Marine in charge. The vote 354 to 68.

Pres. Elwood Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers reports a really significant victory in one of the National Carbon Co. plants at Cleveland, O., by a vote of 101 to 83. National Carbon is a subsidiary of Union Carbide.

The victory is a tribute to the patience and perseverance of the Chemical Workers. This was the third attempt to win union recognition for the workers of the plant. Dir. R. P. Buchanan, assisted by Reps. John Phillips and Carl Bachmann, conducted the campaign. Another victory for UGCCW is reported from Stauffer Chemical, Le Moyne, Ala., with Thermon Phillips working under the direction of Hugh Brown.

Lee Tucker reports a victory for the CIO Clothing Workers at Oberman & Co., Arkadelphia, Ark., by a vote of 170 to 80.

IUE-Westinghouse Talks Open On Annual Wage, Higher Pay

NEGOTIATIONS for 58,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers began last week with the Westinghouse Corp. at Pittsburgh.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey listed the union demands which included a guaranteed annual wage and a "substantial" wage increase.

Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, said the IUE also wants a $1.25 hourly minimum wage at Westinghouse and at General Electric, where contract talks are set for Apr. 20.

IUE proposed that the GAW agreement last five years. The company would guarantee 2080 hours of pay per year for each worker with a year's seniority. This shall include not less than 48 weeks of 40 hours each at the employe's regular day rate or guaranteed incentive rate of pay per hour including the shift differential.

The proposed annual wage would be reduced by whatever unemployment compensation or earned income the worker receives. Payments to fulfill the GAW would be made from a fund equal to 5% of the payroll. Half the amount would be put into a trust fund jointly administered by union and management.

In his case for a general wage increase, Carey noted that going back to 1949, production per worker increased by 25% on a straight time basis, and 29.5% on an average hourly earnings basis. The difference between the production and wage increases reflects a gap of about 40c an hour.

The corporation-wide minimum of $1.25 an hour, Carey said, would prevent undermining of wage scales and job security through establishment of plants in rural or other areas victimized by depressed wage standards.

IUE ALSO demanded equal pay for women doing equal work. This was described as "simple economic justice and a means of preventing management from injuring men and women workers by paying substandard wages to women."

Carey asked for re-institution of Westinghouse's discontinued profit-sharing plan. Further improvements in pension, health and insurance programs were requested, as well as eight paid holidays.

Employes with 25 years' service would get four weeks vacations and additional days would be given for service from five to 14 years and 16 to 24 years. Carey also asked that hourly workers get the same privileges as salaried workers in matters of sick leave and time off for deaths in the immediate family.

"I told you, Ed, you shouldn't keep working for those non-union, starvation wages!"

UAW Calls Aircraft Bill Safety Threat

PENDING BILLS of Sen. Bricker (R. O.) and Rep. Wolverton (R. N. J.) to relax aircraft inspection regulations were branded "definitely harmful to air safety" last week by CIO Auto Workers, Airline Workers Dept.

UAW-CIO Legislative Rep. Paul Sifton testified for J. L. McFarland, assistant director of the UAW department, before the Senate Interstate Commerce Subcommittee on Aviation.

HE SAID that "inspectors who do not have Civil Aeronautics Board certification as certified airmen would be more vulnerable to company pressure to pass dangerous and defective conditions, to risk, for example, a wing fault for another trip when it should go into repair before leaving the ground." The bills would lift this certification requirement.

Vice Pres. James F. Horst of the CIO Transport Workers, sent a telegram to the committee opposing the bill. Horst is director of the Air Transport Div., TWU-CIO.

UAW Council Raps Policies Of 2 Big Implement Firms

LABOR policies of two major farm implement manufacturers were roundly condemned by the CIO Auto Workers Agricultural Implement Workers Wage and Hour Council at a recent conference.

Resolutions at the Milwaukee meeting attacked J. I. Case Co. for refusal to "agree to a workable contract," and accused International Harvester Co. of "using their influence to prevent an NLRB election" in East Moline, Ill.

Negotiations at Case plants in Burlington, Iowa, and Racine, Wis., have been drawn out 15 and 16 months respectively without a contract, the resolution said, while a new local union in Bettendorf, Iowa, certified last July by the National Labor Relations Board, still has no contract.

The Council pledged support to the Case workers, and called for a publicity campaign detailing to farmers and other segments of the public the company's "infamous labor relations with our Union."

IN A SEPARATE resolution, the farm implement workers scored International Harvester Co. for being "determined to work with the discredited U. E. and keep the workers chained to a contract written by the company for the company's benefit."

The Council was authorized to wire the Labor Board asking for an immediate election at the East Moline Works of the company.

In other actions, the Council recommended an industry-wide conference of farm implement workers, called for a "congress of labor to discuss the terror of unemployment," and called on Congress to investigate the extent of unemployment and take action to curtail "the slowing of our economy."

Northwest Strike Vote Set By IWA

NORTHWEST timber firms have turned down requests of the CIO Woodworkers for higher wages, a third week's vacation and a joint study of pay inequities.

Pres. A. F. Hartung of the IWA-CIO said that contract talks brought only a "no" from companies employing the union's 45,000 membership in the Northwest. A strike poll is being taken and ballots will be counted Apr. 15.

Hartung said the firms did not quarrel with IWA figures showing higher productivity as grounds for a wage demand, "because we used their own figures."

Representatives of IWA locals in British Columbia will seek fringe benefits amounting to 7.5c an hour when contracts expire June 1. About 32,000 workers at 178 firms are involved.

CIO Urges Navy To Charter Tankers To Aid Shipyards

THE CIO last week called the proposal to have the Navy charter 20 tankers as "an important beginning toward modernizing our merchant marine."

Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, told a Senate Armed Services subcommittee that the CIO committee favors S. 2788 with certain amendments.

"The building of the 20 tankers would be a shot in the arm to the American private shipyards which are so vital to our national security," Haddock testified.

He said that on Mar. 1 only 39 merchant-type ships of 1000 gross tons and over were being built or on order in private U. S. shipyards.

Haddock was critical of the new policy of the Maritime Administration which makes it easier to transfer U. S. merchant ships to foreign flags.

He urged the subcommittee to amend S. 2788 "to require the American shipowners to offer to sell the ships to the American government at a fair and reasonable price before making any application to transfer these ships to foreign flags."

UAW Wins Raise At Vought Aircraft

The CIO Auto Workers have won a 5c raise for 8500 members at Chance Vought Aircraft Corp., Grand Prairie, Tex.

The new agreement incorporates a 19c an hour cost-of-living allowance in the base rate, and provides paid vacations and a seventh paid holiday. The escalator clause and the annual improvement factor, which were in the preceding contract, were dropped.

Bade, Guild Leader, Dies

WILBUR E. BADE, executive secretary of the Twin Cities Newspaper Guild, CIO, was fatally stricken in St. Paul last week.

Bade was one of the founders of the ANG-CIO and was a leader in the fight to oust the Communists at the 1941 Guild convention in Detroit. He was editor of The Guild Reporter, the union's publication, for 10 years before his election to the Twin Cities post in 1951.

Bade was a reporter on Minneapolis and Duluth papers before 1941. He is survived by his wife, Laura, of Minneapolis, and a brother, Harold, of Mound, Minn.

Brewers In D. C. Get 24c Boost

Yeast workers in Washington, D. C., got a welcome raise last week, a 24c an hour increase over the next two years. They are members of the CIO Brewery Workers employed at the Standard Brands plant.

The Congress Week—

Consumers Face Gouge As Ike Signs Gas Rate Bill

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

EVEN IF IT COSTS them extra millions of dollars, Pres. Eisenhower is determined to protect consumers against federal controls.

Last week he signed the Hinshaw Bill banning federal regulation of pipeline carriers transporting natural gas within a state's boundaries.

The President issued a statement saying he thought citizens would be "better protected" by state or local controls than those of the U. S. government.

CIO and other groups took a less charitable view; counted it among the Administration payoffs to utility companies which chipped in handsomely to GOP campaign funds in '52.

JUST WHERE protection of consumers' interests ever got into the law is a mystery. The bill passed the House last July 30, two days after its introduction and without one member of any committee having seen a printed copy.

On the same day it was reported favorably by the Senate Commerce Committee, which never held hearings on the question. Last month it was rammed through the Senate on a voice vote and sent to the White House for signature.

What the bill does is overturn a 1950 U. S. Supreme Court decision involving the East Ohio Gas Co. The court held that East Ohio Gas came under Federal Power Commission regulation on rates because it got its gas outside the state although distribution was entirely within Ohio borders.

Sen. Burke (D. O.) led the fight against the bill. As mayor of Cleveland for nine years, he tangled before with East Ohio Gas and pointed out that removal of federal controls would lead to higher and unjustified rates for natural gas customers. He predicted it would cost Ohioans an extra $3 million a year. Burke forecast similar jumps all over the country.

HIS OHIO colleague, Sen. Bricker (R.), captained the campaign for the bill's passage. Despite the Supreme Court, he argued, Congress didn't mean to regulate utilities within a state when it passed the Natural Gas Act 14 years ago. (Bricker's Columbus law firms counts East Ohio Gas among its big business clients.)

Bricker's Law Firm Involved In Rate Bill

GUIDING the Hinshaw Bill through legislative waters so deftly that it scarcely caused a ripple was the skilled hand of Sen. Bricker (R.O.).

Bricker's interest in the gas rate bill is understandable. So is his concern for other special-interest legislation affecting real estate and railroads. Bricker heads a Columbus, O., law firm and he also is chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee.

Bricker's firm gets $500 a month from East Ohio Gas Co., which stands to clean up from the Hinshaw Bill along with other intrastate gas firms now freed from regulation by the Federal Power Commission. Bricker shares in the law firm's profits.

His Senate committee also considers legislation affecting railroads. His law firm—according to official figures—got almost $190,000 in fees from the Pennsylvania Railroad between 1946 and 1952.

Bricker's part in the shotgun passage of the Hinshaw Bill again raises the question as to where a U. S. Senator's duty lies—to the people of his state or the rich special interests of that state?

Prospects Dim For Lawmakers' Hike

A member of the Senate Republican Policy Committee said that the GOP leaders will turn thumbs down on a proposal for a substantial increase in congressional salaries. However, Chairman Ferguson (R. Mich.) said no decision had been made.

'Veep' Makes It Official, Enters Senate Race

"THE VEEP" is back in politics. Alben W. Barkley, former Vice President and veteran Senator, has announced that he will seek the Senate seat now held by Republican John Sherman Cooper.

The 76-year-old Barkley said he is entering the race not to "gratify a personal ambition," but because of "urgent and sincere" requests from the people of Kentucky. He will run for the Democratic nomination in the Aug. 7 primary election.

Barkley has been beaten only once in a political career going back to 1905 when he was elected prosecuting attorney of his home county.

BARKLEY realizes very deeply, friends say, the terrible issues facing the United States today and he is expected to campaign vigorously preaching Democratic doctrine. It was his belief that he could help lead his country in the wiser way that was the determining factor in his decision to run.

Perhaps another reason could be found in a quotation from his speech to the CIO Electrical Workers convention last year:

ALBEN W. BARKLEY

"When a political party makes a promise," the veteran from the Bluegrass State said, "it ought to keep its word. If it doesn't it's unworthy of the promise."

It is believed that if Barkley does return to the Senate, fellow Democrats with whom his prestige is high will re-elect him party leader in the Senate, replacing Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.).

'Scandal' Over Refugee Program Is Condemned

THE DRAMATIC failure of Pres. Eisenhower's own emergency refugee program has drawn withering fire from Republicans and Democrats alike in Congress.

Six immigrants have been admitted to the U. S. since last August—at a cost of $672,000 or $112,000 per person.

Instead of bringing refugees to this country, the program has turned into a wrong-way joyride for "deserving Republicans" who get to see Europe at the American taxpayer's expense, Democratic lawmakers protested.

THE PROGRAM got the President's official benediction seven months ago. It was designed to admit 209,000 refugees in three years. Originally, Eisenhower had asked that 240,000 be permitted entry but Congress hacked away at this figure. It finally settled for 214,000, 5000 of which would adjust the cases of those already in this country.

Three million dollars was appropriated. Last month Congress got a request for an additional $1.56 million to carry on until June 30.

Rep. Gross (R. Ia.) declared "this sort of thing is unbelievable."

A "national scandal" is what Rep. Javits (R. N.Y.) called it. Javits promised he would investigate it and see whether R. W. Scott McLeod, the State Dept. security chief, was running the program as Congress intended.

Rep. Rooney (D. N.Y.) pointed out that U. S. consulates abroad have lists of thousands "who have been looked up and down and backwards with regard to their entry as prospective decent citizens." He quoted from hearing records to show that experienced personnel from previous refugee programs had been barred from employment on the new program.

Power Co-op Cuts Protested By Sparkman

"THE PRESIDENT'S budget for the Rural Electrification Program is nothing less than a continuation of the attack begun last year on REA."

That's the charge made by Sen Sparkman (D. Ala.), who said the new budget would provide only $55 million in new electric loan funds compared to $135 million last year.

Sparkman also accused Ancher Nelson, the new REA administrator, of restricting the loan program to a "fraction" of the $205 million provided by Congress in 1953 for electric loans, including generating and transmission loans.

The Senator pointed out that REA lending operations netted the government a profit of more than $45 million last year.

"The nation's 983 REA co-ops bring electricity to more than 3.5 million families," Sparkman noted. "Any attack on the rural electrification program is, in effect, an attack on the property and the well-being of these several million American families."

Senate Passes Statehood Bill

The Senate passed a combined bill granting statehood to both Hawaii and Alaska. The vote was 57 to 28. Earlier statehood supporters had defeated a series of proposals to further delay the issue.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTIONS IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU:

1. Senate Labor Committee reports anti-labor Taft-Hartley Amendments. (See Page 1.)
2. House cuts TVA funds to 55% of appropriations for current year. (See Page 3.)
3. House mix-up may permit completion of 35,000 public housing units authorized by Democratic 82nd Congress. (See Page 3.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate Labor Com. reported anti-labor bill last week. House Labor Com. expected to report similar bill soon.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway (S. 2150)	Would enable U. S to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

Steel Union Sets Prosperity Program

A PROGRAM for prosperity to aid the nation's economy was adopted by the CIO Steelworkers Executive Board and presented last week to Pres. Eisenhower by the union's three top officers.

With 446,000 USA-CIO members either laid off or working short time, the steel union called for a $17 billion government program for such items as raising social security benefits, income tax exemption increases, public works programs and housing and slum clearance projects.

THE PROGRAM was carried to the White House by Pres. David J. McDonald, Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel.

The board also voted to reopen contracts with basic steel producers and strongly condemned Republican Taft-Hartley proposals.

McDonald told the board members, who met in Pittsburgh, that 189,000 union members in this country and 7700 in Canada have been laid off—some 80,000 of them in last two months.

Some 257,000 additional members, he said, are working on a basis of less than the 40-hour week.

In the resolution proposed "to keep this nation strong and prosperous," the board stressed that the union "neither views the present nor the future with hysteria."

"Our faith in this nation and its capacity to meet its problems is unlimited," the resolution said, "but in the short run, between, last summer and today, thousands of workers and their families in our and other industries have been suddenly faced with distress, and we cannot stand idly by. The great resources and enterprises of America must be utilized to meet this problem now.

"We are not urging any irresponsible action; we are simply proposing to the leaders of our industry and of our government a reasoned and practical program which will restore full employment, production and confidence to all of the people and enterprises of the United States."

The program the USA-CIO leaders took to the White House called for four major actions by federal and state governments. These were:

1. "Benefit payments to the unemployed and to pensioners under the Social Security Act should be increased immediately by at least $3 billion.

"This great and rich nation certainly can and must improve the lot of its two most needy groups, the unemployed and the aged. All of the increased benefits would flow into the spending stream and create new consumer demand.

2. "By raising the personal federal income tax exemption to $800, an additional $4 billion can be added to consumer demand.

"No single policy of government will more quickly stimulate consumer buying than wise and timely tax action . . . Every family now subjected to the federal income tax will enjoy a benefit; more important, the tax savings of millions of moderate income families will be spent for daily family needs.

3. "Public works programs should be immediately expanded by at least $5 billion to help catch up with the backlog and keep abreast of new demand.

"We do not advocate or believe in made work. We are suggesting substantial and vitally needed public improvements. Our

Steel Union Chiefs Meet With Ike

In a White House press conference following a half hour conversation with Pres. Eisenhower, CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald last week voiced grave misgivings about the current economic picture.

"I have made careful enquiries," McDonald said, "and I see no signs that business is picking up. The industry men with whom I have talked are generally not too hopeful."

McDonald visited the White House, accompanied by USA-CIO Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, to present the President with a detailed series of recommendations adopted by the USA-CIO Executive Board.

"This is the kind of a program which will give the country the economic shot in the arm that is necessary," McDonald told newsmen.

Observing customary White House protocol, he declined to answer questions on the President's comments, but McDonald did say "I feel certain the White House staff will study these documents carefully."

The Steelworkers president revealed the seriousness of the present economic picture by detailing the statistics of unemployed and partially unemployed in the Steelworkers union. This total of 446,000, either without jobs or working short weeks, "is 40% of our American membership," McDonald said.

"Many of these unemployed workers have exhausted their unemployment compensation rights," he said. "They're just broke."

McDonald also told the big battery of Washington newsmen that during his recent tours of steel plants he has "talked to and listened to thousands of Steelworkers and lots of management people."

"There's a great deal of apprehension about the economic future," he added, "both among workers and among management. Our program, which is affirmative, non-political and constructive, will give the economy the boost it badly needs.

"The time for action is now."

Jobless Figures Keep Climbing, Despite Spring And The Robins

THE ADMINISTRATION'S confidence in its economic forecasts was dealt another blow when the sharp drop in unemployment normally registered in March showed up in Census Bureau statistics as a still further rise.

The increase over the February jobless figure was 54,000—a relatively small jump, but far from the decline the GOP robins were supposed to wing in.

It raised the total to 3,725,000, compared to 3,671,000 in February and a post-war low of 1,162,000 last October—an increase of more than 2.5 million in five months.

By way of comparison, unemployment showed a drop of 114,000 in the same month last year. In 1952 the fall was 282,000, while in 1950 it was 561,000.

EIGHT MORE communities, headed by Canton, O., have been listed as areas of "substantial unemployment" by the Labor Dept. The others: Anniston and Talladega, Ala.; Ottumwa, Iowa; Litchfield, Ill.; Henderson, Ky.; New Castle, Pa., and Logan, W. Va.

This brings to 53 the number of small industrial areas classified as having substantial labor surpluses — 6% or more of the labor force unemployed. There are also 34 major industrial areas in the same category.

While unemployment was going up instead of down, the number of people at work showed an increase likewise far less than normal. Employment rose by 45,000 during the month to a total of 60.1 million. Last year the increase was 396,000.

Sec. of Commerce Weeks hasn't been heard from since 10 days before the Census Bureau figures were announced. At that time, he told a meeting of business paper editors in Washington that there was "some indications that the unemployment figure may be a little less" than in February. It wasn't.

Signs On Economic Horizon

Auto: More than 3000 workers at Lincoln-Mercury assembly plants of the Ford Motor Co. went on layoff this week. About 1400 were idled at Metuchen, N. J., and another 1700 at St. Louis when second shifts were eliminated. Double shift operations had been the rule for over a year.

Steel: Steel industry operations were scheduled for 68.2% of capacity last week. The week before they produced at 69.1% of capacity. Steel production last week was scheduled at 1.626 million tons, a drop from the 1.648 million tons turned out the week before.

Sales: The two largest mail orders reported sharp drops in March sales compared with the same month a year ago. Montgomery Ward & Co. said sales for March were down 22.8% from 1953 and off a total of 19.4% for February and March figures of a year ago. Sears & Roebuck sales in March were down 12.2%

Electric Power: Production dropped to 8.463 billion kilowatt hours in week ending Apr. 3, lowest level in five weeks. Figure was 28 million kwh below preceding week.

Carloadings: Off 1.4% for last week; 15.9% off for the same week a year ago.

Payrolls: At an annual rate of $161.3 billion, down $800 million in February from January.

Business failures: 926 in February, the highest mark for any month since May, 1942.

Lehman, Heller Urge Prompt U. S. Action Against Slump

DEMANDS for prompt government action to aid the nation's economy have been renewed, keynoted by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.).

Lehman said if the present slump becomes a depression it will be "man-made." He called for immediate action to increased purchasing power through individual tax relief, expanded social security and federal spending on schools, housing and power.

Bolling noted that unemployment went up 54,000 in March when, he said, "it should have gone down 500,000."

The two Democrats outlined their programs on a television panel show. Their GOP opposite numbers argued that things are all right and this is "no time to rock the boat."

A proposal to establish a joint committee on unemployment was introduced in Congress by Rep. Heller (D. N.Y.). He proposed a committee of 16 members of both houses to serve as a fact-finding body and report its recommendations by June 30.

UAW Wins First Plant From UE in Quad Cities

THE FIRST major plant in the Quad Cities area, the John Deere Planter Works at Moline, Ill., has voted to dump the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers and be represented by the CIO Auto workers.

Local 148 FE-UE had held bargaining rights for 12 years.

The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was: UAW-CIO 389; UE 224, and no union 65.

"This is the opening gun of a widespread campaign to unite all farm equipment workers under the banner of UAW-CIO," said Pat Greathouse, director of the UAW Agricultural Implement Dept.

NLRB elections are expected shortly at two other plants in the Quad Cities area, International Harvester Works, East Moline, Ill., and Farmall Works, Rock Island, Ill., presently represented by UE.

UE locals in these plants voted at the same time the Deere Planter Works voted last August to disaffiliate from UE and affiliate with UAW-CIO.

Wiretap Bill Voted by House

The House passed, by a 221-166 roll call vote, a modified wire-tap bill which gives Atty. Gen. Brownell only part of the authority he sought to use such evidence.

The substitute bill, by Rep. Willis (D. La.), would legalize wire-tap evidence the Government now has, but would require obtaining a court order before tapping wires in the future.

YOU CAN ALMOST SEE these CIO Auto Workers shivering as they passed out handbills urging employes at the John Deere Planter Works, Moline, Ill., to vote for UAW, advice which was followed by farm implement workers.

White House Spurs T-H Drive

By AL ZACK

SPURRED ON by White House pressure, Congress last week drove for early passage of bills designed to make Taft-Hartley even more anti-labor.

Engrossed in a legislative struggle over "who'll get the first bill out," the Republican Senate Policy Committee scheduled Taft-Hartley amendments for debate during the week of Apr. 26.

The House Labor Committee, which earlier had been heading for a pre-Easter vote, continued to grind out a package containing what CIO called "virulently anti-labor" proposals.

With the one exception of the GOP policy committee action, Taft-Hartley activity during the week was confined to the House. There the Labor Committee, bossed by GOP Chairman McConnell (Pa.), was meeting daily behind closed doors.

Undermine All Labor

Only official reports of the committee's actions came from McConnell who daily briefed reporters on what he said had happened during the day.

From these piecemeal reports, CIO concluded T-H amendments, adopted or planned, constitute an "irresponsible and unjustified effort to undermine the effectiveness of unions."

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, in a letter to all members of the House committee, reminded them that it was "fortunately, not too late to reconsider."

"We are confident," he wrote, "that with more mature reflection, you can arrive only at the conclusion that your proposals are neither just nor fair to the millions of loyal patriotic Americans who are the free trade unions of this great country."

On the day Goldberg's letter was made public, the committee voted, 16 to 8, in favor of the Eisenhower pre-strike vote proposal, rejected by the Senate and opposed by labor and nonpartisan experts.

Toughened It Up

The government-conducted vote, as approved by the House group, calls for a secret vote 10 days before a walkout begins—a procedure which experts agreed would insure an increase in the number of strikes.

Disregarding the historic failure of this proposal, the committee toughened up the Presidential approach by requiring that a majority of the workers "eligible to vote" must okay a strike for the walkout to be valid.

The purpose of this requirement is to chalk up every nonvoter as voting against the strike. Workers prevented from voting because of illness or any other reason would be officially considered as voting "No."

Goldberg said "virtually all the amendments voted to date (by the House committee) are anti-labor."

"Some are virulently anti-labor," he said. "In toto, they would make Taft-Hartley worse, far worse, than at present.

"We of organized labor are at a loss to understand why the House committee is driving for these additional restriction on labor. The hearings before your committee support no such action."

On the contrary, the CIO spokesman continued, labor's "record of responsibility" has been well-established, and responsible observers acknowledge that "one of our chief assets in the struggle against communism is the existence and continued growth of strong, free democratic trade unions in America."

"Nevertheless," Goldberg observed, the House committee has "embarked on a program to deny to our free trade unions the rights which are essential to their important role in the American scene."

Earlier the House committee had tossed out the present T-H formula for dealing with so-called national emergency strikes and substituted a new formula which Chairman McConnell said was a "flexible approach."

Stripped of its window-dressing, the McConnell proposal turned out to be more completely anti-union than the present Taft-Hartley section.

While the law would say the President could take steps in dealing with a so-called national emergency, the McConnell key proposal would be an indefinite injunction prohibiting a strike. Under Taft-Hartley, there is an 80-day limit on such injunctions.

Bailey Defeated

The committee also turned down, by a 20-to-7 vote, a motion by Rep. Bailey (D. W. Va.) to prohibit strikes against labor unions by eliminating all references to them in the labor act.

But, McConnell said, the committee had voted to write a provision saying no injunction may be issued against anyone "without notice and an opportunity to be heard." The language of this proposal was not made public and it was not known whether it would clearly bar "quickie" injunctions.

The chairman of the Republican Senate Policy Committee, Sen. Ferguson (Mich.), announced that the Senate's Taft-Hartley Bill would be the first major item of business after the Easter recess.

The T-H amendments will come up during the week of Apr. 26, he said, and would be followed by a tax revision bill.

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Seven points prove clearly the anti-labor character of the Taft-Hartley amendments being pushed through the House Labor Committee. CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg detailed these seven points as follows:

1. "Government by injunction. You have restored government by injunction in its most obnoxious form." He said the amendments would wipe out the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act and "restore old and vicious abuses," including the "quickie injunction" obtained by private employers.

In converting injunctions in "national emergency" situations from 80 days to indefinite duration, Goldberg said the committee has "given away the right to strike" in these cases "without giving the workers any recourse for redress of their grievances."

2. "Government strike votes . . . This proposal only reflects the illusion and the hope that a wedge can be driven between union leadership and union membership . . ."

3. "Captive audiences . . . The whole American concept of free speech—fair opportunity to reply—is denied by this process."

4. "Restricting the right to strike. . . . No responsible person welcomes a strike—but all responsible people agree that the preservation of the right to strike is essential to our free society."

5. "Dismantling of the Labor Board . . . For the board, you would substitute law suits in the federal courts. Obviously, workers cannot afford the expense or stand the delays of court litigation. On the other hand, wealthy employers can easily use such litigation to harass unions."

6. "Other anti-union restrictions. . . . Your proposals in these matters represent an extreme interference with free collective bargaining."

7. "State anti-labor laws." Goldberg noted that the committee is considering legislation that would permit state anti-labor laws to supersede the federal laws, warned:

"You are, therefore, planning to place labor unions in double jeopardy . . . contrary to our whole constitutional concept of supremacy of federal law in this field of labor relations in interstate commerce — an area of acknowledged federal competence and supremacy."

Your Lawmaker's Coming Home --Let Him Know What You Think

"YOUR CONGRESSMAN is coming home for Easter. Don't let him be lonely!"

That's the word from the CIO Legislative Dept., which urges CIO members to see their congressmen this week when the lawmakers "go home to start building political fences" during the Easter recess of the House.

As items to discuss with the law-makers, the Legislative Dept. suggests Taft-Hartley changes, income tax exemptions and unemresentatives.

"The zero hour is now" on Taft-Hartley, a leaflet prepared by the department says, and lists major changes which would make T-H "even worse" than it is.

If your congressman voted to increase income tax personal exemptions, "tell him you approve," the department suggests. If he voted "wrong, ask him to reconsider in light of the worsening economic situation."

As to unemployment insurance, "tell him you hope the House will have another crack at the harmful Reed Bill; that you want positive action to set higher standards, help needy states, and provide adequate appropriations."

Steel Board Asks Congress To Reject New Labor Curbs

THE CIO Steelworkers last week urgently requested the Congress to reject "anti-labor proposals which would make Taft-Hartley worse than it is."

In a resolution adopted unanimously by the Executive Board meeting in Pittsburgh, the Steelworkers also urged all members of the union to let their congressmen and senators know how they feel about these new attempts to adopt anti-labor legislation.

The USA-CIO board branded the Senate-passed bill as "partisan" and noted it failed to rid Taft-Hartley "of its union-busting provisions," and added an "additional and dangerous anti-labor measure under the guise of protecting state rights."

The bill now being adopted by the House Labor Committee is "violently anti-labor" the Steelworkers said, and would "restore government by injunction, virtually repealing the Norris-LaGuardia Act."

The USA-CIO resolution reiterated "our opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act" and contained a pledge to "continue our union's fight for a just and fair labor law based on the principles of the Wagner Act."

Textile Wins In Gastonia

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers made their first inroad into an area with 25,000 unorganized textile employes in a Labor Board election victory in Gastonia, N. C., last week.

The vote at the Gastonia Combed Yarn Co. was 394 for TWUA, 59 for the AFL Textile union and 238 for no union.

"This is the first victory for workers in a traditionally anti-union stronghold," TWUA officials said, "and we are inviting all the other mill workers in the area to follow the lead of these new CIO members."

12 Long Months

A year ago last week (Apr. 6, 1953 to be exact), CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther warned the White House that mass unemployment and a skidding economy threatened America unless we adopted a program to maintain prosperity.

Pres. Eisenhower answered that letter. He spoke out vigorously against the "stupidity of mass unemployment."

One year later, official statistics show nearly four million Americans are jobless.

It seems a fair time to ask: When is the Administration going to do something about the "stupidity of mass unemployment"?

1948 In 1954?

Administration strategists, now mapping battle plans for "Operation Toughen Taft-Hartley," would be well advised to read a bit of recent political history.

The time was 1947 and the reactionaries were riding high in the Congressional saddle. They had won the 1946 elections and thought the time was ripe to sock labor. So they passed Taft-Hartley, and went home to celebrate prematurely the shoo-in election of Tom Dewey.

But they misjudged the temper of the American worker then, just as they are doing today. Harry S. Truman was elected in 1948 by voters fed up with government a la Wall Street.

It might be a good idea for the men running this Administration to re-read the history of that period.

Some April history reading might save the GOP bigwigs some November mourning.

Ganging Up On Israel?

While we're busy watching Red China and Indo-China, some disturbing signs of trouble are erupting in the Middle East. There's evidence that the reactionary Arab feudal leaders may be getting ready to gang up on the democratic Republic of Israel.

The king of Saudi Arabia, who lives off fabulous oil income while his people live in poverty and disease, calls Israel a "cancer to the human body." King Saud says he is ready to sacrifice 10 million Arabs in a war to exterminate 1,600,000 Israeli citizens.

CIO Vice-Pres. Quill is right when he demands that Israel be given fair treatment and support by our State Dept., for, he points out, "Israel is important not only to the Jewish people but to liberty-loving men and women all over the world."

There's A Silver Lining

Hydrogen bombs, trouble in Indo-China, McCarthyism —Taft-Hartley amendments—there's plenty in the news to cause us worry and concern.

But the reactionaries aren't happy, either. For instance, read the views of Mrs. Robert R. McCormick, wife of the publisher of the Chicago Tribune:

"We had lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Westbrook Pegler. There is no one I admire more than my husband's distant cousin, Peg, but he should not be so violent . . .

"I hate a quitter, and some of my friends have accused me of being one, because I said I was tired of always being on the losing side, but the odds seem to be against the extreme right wing. Very sad, but true, and why not face it?"

There—feel better?

Consultation—While The Patient Expires

In Other Words—

A New Appreciation Of Hillman

Here are excerpts from the speech of Gerald W. Johnson, historian, writer and commentator, when he received a $500 television award from the Sidney Hillman Foundation.

By GERALD W. JOHNSON

THE HONOR you have conferred upon me is doubled in value by being awarded in the name of Sidney Hillman, a man to be revered not so much because he was a great labor leader as because he was one of the few who have understood the real significance of that assertion in the law that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."

JOHNSON

Hillman was one of a handful who understood that this is an admonition to labor, and especially to labor leaders, to look for something beyond the rewards of commerce in exchange for the labor of human beigns.

Labor is, in literal truth, the life of a man. The biochemical processes that we call life are the source of the energy, mental or physical, that is expended in labor. If a man in exchange for his labor, which is his life, gets no more than the means of sustaining life, it profits him nothing; a vegetable does as much.

He strove constantly to make his union more than merely an instrumentality for collective bargaining. He thought it should be an instrument for collective living which is, as he saw it, different from and far removed from communal living. Collective living, in Hillman's philosophy, is the use of collective power to enable workers to participate in any and every phase of the life of the society to which they belong.

He perceived clearly a truth that to this day is concealed from many labor leaders — and also from many industrialists, statesmen, judges and editors and learned doctors of this and that.

That is the truth that while one may extort the means of sustaining life from society, the broadening and extension of life itself can never be extorted but must he well and truly earned. That is to say, no one participates in the life of the world except in proportion as he contributes to the life of the world.

I think the present crisis in world affairs is teaching us a new appreciation of Sidney Hillman. This nation has reached a moment of decision. We must participate in the life of the world to a greater extent than ever before, or withdraw into a seclusion closer than that of 18th century Japan.

Either choice is so fraught with peril that many of our leaders stand irresolute and some are hysterically advocating an impossible middle course—participation without contribution.

I am disturbed by what seems to me an increasing tendence to restrict our participation in life beyond our borders to mere military subsidies. In this disorderly world it is certainly necessary to arm our friends, but there is another necessity that takes priority over armament; that is the necessity of keeping our friends friendly.

Friendship cannot be bought with money. The purchase price of friendship is in other coinage than gold—it includes sympathy, understanding and patience, in which our resources are limited and payment comes harder than the operation of laying out cash.

The dollar gap can be closed much more easily than the gap between our point of view and that of our best friends; yet to close the dollar gap without closing the other would be a mere palliative, not a cure, of our present distress.

Point Four Reversed

The original concept of Point Four was, as I believe, statecraft of a very high order, but there are indications that we are now reversing the original concept. We seem to be saying to our friends, "Accept our military aid, and we will then consider assisting you in the arts of peace," whereas the original proposal was, "Let us assist you in re-establishing the arts of peace and we will then back you with military aid."

This new proposal I regard as statecraft of a distinctly lower order if, indeed, it is statecraft at all. Rightly or wrongly, it is a policy that Sidney Hillman would have regarded with profound distrust, for it edges toward the discredited view that the life of a human being is a commodity, specifically the commodity that is brutally termed cannon fodder.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SAY ONE THING for Republican members of the McCarthy sub-committee: they learned from their frightful experience with Samuel P. Sears, a Boston lawyer, not to conceal any immediately discoverable facts about Ray H. Jenkins, the next lawyer chosen as impartial counsel to direct an inquiry in the quarrel between Joe and the Army.

The Case Of Mr. Sears

What may eventually be revealed about Jenkins is for the future. He was identified on the day of his selection as a Willkie Republican in 1940 and a highly respected East Tennessee trial-court attorney. He was sponsored by the right-wing Republican, Sen. Dirksen of Illinois.

A little later Jenkins disclosed that he had slipped to the right himself since his pro-Willkie days; he was pro-Taft in 1952. Still, the judges and fellow attorneys in Tennessee admire him.

It would have been absurd, of course, for anyone to try to hide these facts. But in the Sears episode someone tried to get away with concealments even more ridiculous.

Sears lasted as an important national figure about three hours after his selection was announced.

It took the subcommittee five days to clean up the debris and for Sears to announce his "withdrawal" officially, but he was politically dead the afternoon of his selection.

Dead From That Moment

He was dead from the moment he told reporters that he had never taken a position "publicly or privately" on "McCarthy or McCarthyism," and the Boston newspaper files revealed that in fact he had frequently praised McCarthy, rowed with Harvard Univ. (a McCarthy target), tried to raise money for the Senator's Wisconsin political fight in 1952, and rejoiced in McCarthy's re-election.

There is no reason to doubt Sears, own explanation, later, that he was "confused" at his press conference, that he thought he was merely being asked whether he had taken a position in regard to the limited issue of McCarthy vs. the Army.

The more important question is how Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.), "temporary" chairman of the subcommittee for purposes of investigating Joe, managed to get a lawyer so clearly respectable yet so deeply committed to the Wisconsin senator.

Did Mundt tell the Democratic members what the FBI reports showed about Sears' pro-McCarthy attitude? An FBI inquiry was made and even inexperienced agents would check the newspaper files.

Did Mundt tell the Democrats that Sears had asked for the counsel job through his congressman, through Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.), and got a further endorsement from Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) through the agency of Sears' son-in-law, who happens to be Monroney's political friend?

Ideal From Joe's Viewpoint

The inescapable fact is that Sears, if he hadn't been quickly blown out of the job might have been an ideal committee counsel from McCarthy's viewpoint.

He is a graduate of Harvard and Harvard's Law School—clearly not anti-Harvard. He is a Republican, obviously a political necessity in a row between Republicans. The more respectable—granting his pro McCarthy predelictions—the more useful he would be in the job if Mundt wanted the inquiry handled with kid gloves.

And Mundt almost got away with selling him. The fatal mistake was Sears' own "misunderstanding" of a press conference question—this and Democratic members' complaints that they thought Sears might have been more "candid" with them.

Mundt is talking lately like a senator anxious to deprecate the importance of the McCarthy-Army row. He points out that it involves no question of crimes—maybe just a confusion of memory and differences of interpretation.

Mundt says he'll get his show on the road Apr. 21. It will be interesting to see how Jenkins handles the examination and cross-examination job now that delays, procrastination, and the rise of new issues have obscured memories of the original fierce dispute.

High School Students Take Dim View Of Bill Of Rights

WHAT DO high school students think of civil liberties guaranteed by the U. S. Constitution?

Not very much, according to a survey of 15,000 students conducted by the Purdue Univ. Opinion Poll.

Forty-one per cent said they would deny full freedom of the press, and 34% believed some people should be prohibited by the government from making public speeches.

Thirty-seven per cent said the right of some unions to strike should be abolished, and 26% believed police should be allowed to search a person's home without a warrant.

Twenty-five per cent did not believe in freedom of assembly, 58% supported use of third-degree methods by the police, and 49% believed that large masses of the people are incapable of deciding what is good for them.

And 20% thought that there always will be strong and weak groups and it is best for the strong to dominate the weak.

John W. Vandercook Says—

Massive Retaliation? H-Bomb Makes It 'Massive Nonsense'

CIO-sponsored Commentator John W. Vandercook, in a recent broadcast in his nightly ABC Network program, took a sobering look at the effects of the H-bomb on the world and its people. Excerpts from that broadcast follow:

By JOHN W. VANDERCOOK

NOW ALL OF US either have seen, or soon will see, a movie of the explosion of the first hydrogen-thermonuclear device.

As a film, critics call it needlessly over-censored, as full of irrelevant public personalities as a cornerstone laying attended by a whole board of aldermen, and not too well photographed.

But, never mind, the blast's the thing.

The what-is-it (it was not, in any ordinary sense, a usable bomb or weapon) was installed in a squat, square little building on the small Marshall Island of Elugalab—one of the islets of the Eniwetok Atoll.

Elugalab is one geographical place name we don't have to remember. It isn't there any more.

When the experimenters dared return to the area in ships, soundings of the sea bottom established that the mountain-high and rock-solid coral reef, on which the island had perched these thousands of years, had had gouged out of it a hole—a crater—a mile across, and as deep, at its deepest point, as a 17-story building.

The explosion was accompanied by the unmistakable mushroom cloud. A cloud-shape, oddly enough, which exactly and appropriately resembles the illustration in a children's book of the genie escaped from the bottle—though no story-teller ever dreamed of a genie so monstrous, so terrible, or so frightful.

Total Annihilation

If that already primitive device had been exploded in a populous city, there would have been total annihilation—human and structural—within a circle six miles across.

Plus fearful damage, raging fires, and hundreds of thousands of people doomed to slow and agonizing death for many, many miles outside that circle.

And all that, mind you, was the effect of a contraption (literally, in terms of brightness and of temperature, a man-made sun) which was triggered into being in November 1952, one that is already obsolete.

The most recent device—which may or may not have been a true bomb—that was successfully exploded, was probably at least three times as powerful.

Surely even the most stuffy bureaucrat can think of no rational reason why we should not see the pictures of that one, too. We—mankind—have made these things. We have paid for them. We must live with them—or die by them. Then let us see just what it is they do—and are.

What are the implications of this thing? To us? To the world? For the physicists say that if the Russians have not already produced hydrogen fusion weapons of the same giant calibre as ours, they probably soon will.

A few weeks ago, Sec. of State Dulles, who may be presumed to have been kept informed of the latest atomic developments, was talking of our policy of "massive retaliation."

In the light of what we now know, was he not talking massive nonsense?

What government on earth could be composed of such maniacs that—while one chance in 10,000 existed of such a weapon being dropped on one of its own cities—would order that kind of destruction of a city of the enemy?

For massive retaliation, we would do well to remember, can work both ways.

Be sure of this. Whichever nation first uses such a weapon against the whole population of a city—of any city—to wipe out, in a single puff of smoke and flame, a million human creatures, will debase itself utterly in whatever singed pages of history may afterward be written. And that country will invite—it will assure—its own destruction.

If there is any sanity left in us, this big thing has grown too big ever to be used.

New Look Or Last Look?

Think! Those little signs in our city office buildings pointing the way to a "shelter area"; those pictured instructions telling us to get under the dining room table if time is short; if the H-bomb is ever to be used, they have become the babblings of idiots. Under that kind of impact, there will be no safety in the deepest dug-out.

A "new look" defense policy, indeed! Based, the syrupy, the empty voices have assured us, on these new weapons, on the power to deliver them at "times and places of our own choosing."

That less-expensive "new look" policy—unaccompanied by any perfect method of defense. For there is none perfect.

Call it, rather, a "last look" policy.

One Of The Best

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch recently called John W. Vandercook, ABC commentator sponsored by the CIO, one of America's "three top commentators."

In an editorial, which praised Vandercook as a "courageous radio newsman and commentator who has held up to the highest standards," the independent newspaper said:

"Radio and television have their ranters and ravers who would not know the country's best interests in brightest daylight, but it also has men who recognize fully their responsibility for helping produce an informed public opinion. Edward Murrow, Elmer Davis and John Vandercook are three who stand out."

CIO's Case On Atomic Energy

THE U. S. is in danger of losing its sources of uranium abroad to other countries unless it captures the lead in applying atomic energy to peacetime uses, the CIO warned Congress in testimony released last week.

Leo Goodman, legislative representative of the CIO Chemical Workers, urged the House Appropriations Committee to vote funds for the construction of five pilot project reactors for converting atomic energy into electric power. He estimated the cost would be between $15 million and $80 million for each reactor.

"Some 15 nations outside the U. S. are now attempting to build a power reactor using fissionable material which is secured primarily from a single source in the Belgian Congo," Goodman pointed out.

He warned that the U. S. is falling behind in the race to produce cheap electric power from atomic energy and said that those countries which provide uranium may divert their supplies to nations which first can give them plans for producing such power economically.

"Every desire that this development be done by private investment has been unfulfilled up to this time," Goodman said. "The risks in it are too great for private investment."

Goodman branded as "too little and too late" the experimental program proposed by the Atomic Energy Commission. He added that even the limited AEC program had been sharply curtailed by the Bureau of the Budget.

Unless the U. S. develops a means of economically producing power before any of the 15 other nations now building reactors, Goodman said, this country "will no longer be the preferential customer" for high-grade uranium.

"So what, I like having people look up to me."

Looking To November—

Moderation, Service Are Burke's Keynote

(Seventh in a series about Senators and the elections.)

By MILTON PLUMB

A BELIEF in moderation, coupled with an absolute honesty and sense of public duty, are perhaps the outstanding characteristics of the nation's newest Senator.

Thomas A. Burke (D. O.), successor to the late Robert A. Taft, has tried several times in the course of his nearly quarter of a century in politics to return to private life. But each time, a public office sought the man and he responded to the people's call.

Last summer, as mayor of Cleveland, he announced plans to retire upon completion of his term of office. Offered retainers many times his salary to return to his law practice, Burke had continued in public service at considerable personal sacrifice. Even more important, a devoted family man, he had hopes of spending more time with his family than his busy life permitted.

Then came the sudden death of Sen. Taft and Burke's close personal friend, Gov. Frank Lausche, once again persuaded him to set aside his own wishes to serve the people of his state. Few nominations to the Senate have ever met with as widespread popular acclaim.

Burke's political career began in 1930 when he was called upon to lead a drive against corruption. Named assistant prosecutor of Cuyahoga County (Cleveland), he immediately captured statewide attention by successfully prosecuting a vote-fraud scandal.

A Political Team

Following this, Burke went back to his eminently successful law practice until 1941 when Lausche was elected mayor of Cleveland. He called Burke back to public office as his administration's law director. The two have formed one of the nation's remarkable political "teams" ever since.

When Lausche was elected governor in 1945, Burke almost automatically became mayor. He later went before the people of Cleveland in four elections and despite huge expenditures to defeat him, decisively whipped the Republican machine each time.

"AT HOME"—Sen. and Mrs. Burke (left) were pictured in their Cleveland home last October immediately after Ohio Gov. Frank Lausche appointed him to the Senate. Burke's friendship for labor dates back much earlier, as witness this 1949 photo showing him "at home" with the late Philip Murray and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Then mayor of Cleveland, Burke had just welcomed CIO's 11th Constitutional Convention to the Ohio city.

PAC Backs Burke, 10 For Congress

Sen. Burke (D. Ohio), who will be a candidate for the unexpired senatorial term ending in 1956, has been unanimously endorsed by the Ohio CIO Political Action Committee.

The Ohio CIO-PAC, at the same time, endorsed 10 other candidates seeking election to Congress and indicated action on the state's remaining 13 congressional races might come later.

Three Democratic incumbents were endorsed. They are: Wayne Hays (18th Dist.), Michael Kirwan (19th Dist.) and Michael Feighan (20th Dist.). Others endorsed were Arthur Thexton (1st Dist.), Earl Wagner (2nd Dist.), Thomas Dowd (8th Dist.), Edward Kaley (11th Dist.), Daniel Earhart (12th Dist.), Chat Paterson (22nd Dist.) and Bernie Pyke (23rd Dist.).

The Burke Administration brought to Cleveland the biggest capital improvement program in the city's history.

As mayor, Burke built a new downtown airport, redeveloped the long neglected lakefront, expanded utilities and recreational areas and generally improved the city's face through planned city development.

In addition, Burke was responsible for an intensive public health program and municipal relations which won him praise from business and labor alike. All this was achieved under a real economy program, which held the tax rate down and left the city treasury with over $1 million unspent surplus each year he was in office.

Until the Lausche-Burke Administrations, Cleveland had been preponderantly a Republican stronghold. Their reform program could never have succeeded without strong Republican, as well as Democratic support, and Burke's consistent re-election was in part a repudiation by the people of Cleveland of the city's GOP organization, headed by Rep. Bender (R. O.).

GOP Backs Bender

The latter now appears likely to be Burke's Republican opponent in this year's Ohio Senate race. Bender, an insurance company president and publisher, is a reactionary whose chief distinction since being elected to the House in 1938 is his regular insertion in the Congressional Record—at taxpayers' expense—of a so-called "Question of the Week."

Often pointless these effusions have brought some opposition to Bender as a "buffoon" within GOP ranks. He's being opposed in the primary, but the well-heeled Republican Finance Committee, which includes the president of Republic Steel among its members, made clear where it stood by trying to get his rival to withdraw.

Since being sworn in last January, Burke has been spending an average of about 10 hours a day at his new job as Senator. He has already distinguished himself as an unusually effective legislator. Although beaten in his first major floor fight, he won immediate respect and recognition as a new friend of the people.

Ironically the issue which caused Burke's first major Senate speech was the same one which had been his first concern as Cleveland's law director back in the 'forties. It was the effort of the gas lobby to escape Federal Power Commission regulations.

Burke won the first tiff in 1949 when, after he had carried Cleveland's suit against the East Ohio Gas Co. to the highest tribunal, the Supreme Court ruled that local gas concerns must abide by FPC rules. Ever since, the gas lobby sought to get Congress to adopt a bill reversing this decision.

In the past the FPC opposed such action, but this year, new Eisenhower appointments to the commission reversed its stand and urged Congress to adopt the bill. Congress, despite vigorous objections by Burke and Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), obliged.

The result, Burke points out, is that East Ohio Gas Co. customers—as well as consumers in other states—will soon be paying millions of dollars more annually to the big utilities. Burke estimates it could cost East Ohio customers alone as much as $3 million a year.

Although he frankly admits farm problems are a "new field," Burke has been greatly concerned over the drop in farm income and insists that Administration measures cutting farm price supports have been "too rough." When Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson announced a drastic slash for dairy products, Burke promptly joined Sen. Thye (R. Minn.) in sponsoring a bill forbidding more than a cut of 5% in any one year.

Good Reason

James C. Connell, prominent Cleveland Republican nominated by Pres. Eisenhower to become a federal judge, summed up Sen. Burke's former service as mayor of Cleveland in these words:

"Tom Burke is one of the reasons that Republicans in this city find it hard to vote a straight ticket."

Burke's major Senate victory so far came when his amendment cutting the excise tax on household appliances from 10% to 5% was written into the excise tax law.

He feels the present plight of small business is "a matter of deep concern" and blames the present recession in part to Administration efforts to cut back defense production "too fast" for budgetary reasons.

Burke wants the Taft-Hartley Act amended to make it fair to labor, although he has made no commitments to labor in any regard. As mayor, he was independent in labor, as well as all other, matters, but CIO officials who worked with him in Ohio say that "Tom Burke can be counted on for a fair decision."

Fairness, on Taft-Hartley and other matters, is all labor has ever asked.

"GRAMPS" BURKE assists his grandson, Stanley Orr, 4, as Mrs. Burke, their daughter and two granddaughters look on. The picture reveals the secret of Burke's success—"the little fellow" can always count on his help.

OHIO FRIENDS traveled all the way to Washington just to celebrate Burke's being sworn in last January. Their faces after the ceremony tell how happy citizens of the Buckeye State are over their new Senator.

A Major Grievance—

Ohio CIO Takes Jobless Benefits To People

OHIO CIO MEMBERS protest jobless pay levels imposed by conservative Legislature. (Left) Cleveland UAW members march into Job Security Conference demanding action to restore prosperity. (Center) CIO Pres. Walter Reuther slams Administration policies which will not end unemployment. (Right) Part of the huge throng of CIO members who overflowed the meeting hall. Every inch of space was filled.

By AL ZACK

WITH A ROAR of enthusiasm and determination, the half-million members of the Ohio CIO Council last week took a major grievance against the State Legislature directly to the people.

The issue is unemployment compensation. The CIO's action came after years of frustrated attempts to break through the blockade erected by the conservative Legislature to all attempts to "modernize, liberalize and humanize" the law.

This year's campaign, which opened at a statewide meeting in Columbus, will be a "crusade," State CIO Pres. James P. Griffin said, to obtain "economic and social justice for unemployed families."

Initiative Drive

Making use of Ohio's little used and booby-trapped initiative-petition law, the State CIO will seek enough signatures to force the Legislature to act on a full-scale measure to revamp the outdated unemployment compensation law.

Under Ohio law, the CIO must obtain 109,000 valid signatures of registered voters on its initiative petitions, which will be circulated by an army of 10,000 who will begin their doorbell ringing in about a month.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chief speaker at the Job Security Conference, took one look at the jam-packed auditorium and predicted, "You'll get 500,000 signatures. And you'll win, because your cause is just."

Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman said the 10,000 circulators would be fully briefed on all of the legalistic tricks written into Ohio's initiative petition law. The law insists that a percentage of the signatures come from each of 44 counties—half of the state.

"We'll get them in every county," Clayman said.

Griffin and Clayman told the conference, attended by CIO members from every part of the state, that the Ohio unemployment compensation law had retrogressed seriously from the standards set up when it was adopted in 1939.

Then, the law provided for benefits of approximately 55% of the going wage of that period. Today, the average jobless worker gets no more than 40% of his wages, often much less.

At the same time, employers have filled the law with disqualification gimmicks which result in 47.3% of Ohio's jobless being denied compensation.

"There can be no honorable answer for such sadistic treatment of Ohio workers," said Griffin, who is also CIO Steelworkers' district director for the Youngstown area. "The answer comes from cash-box and cash-register hearts that shut out the accepted rules of social justice."

The more than 2000 delegates, who overflowed the meeting hall, roared approval of a statement calling for "fair play for the unemployed."

'Fair Play' Program

To win "fair play" for jobless workers, the Ohio CIO conference unanimously voted, the law must:

- Increase maximum weekly benefits from $30 to $50.
- Increase dependency allowances from the present $2.50 each (with a limit of two dependents) to $3 each, with a limit of three dependents.
- Increase the duration period from 26 weeks to 39 weeks.
- Eliminate indiscriminate appeals by employers, by penalizing employers who wrong jobless workers and by placing the burden of proof on the employer making the appeal. Now the burden of proof is always on the worker.
- Gear unemployment compensation to guaranteed annual wage programs adopted in labor-management agreements.

Clayman demonstrated the need for drastic increases by revealing that Ohio pays welfare claimants more than it does unemployed workers.

Public charity payments, for a Cleveland family with three children, are conservatively figured at $172 a month. Yet an unemployed worker, with the same size family, can not receive more than $140 a month.

Griffin, in a stinging blast at the 100th Ohio General Assembly, pointed out that last year the Legislature had allowed employers an annual $40 million reduction in unemployment compensation rates. At the same time, it has upped jobless benefits by only $2 a week.

The same $40 million, Griffin said, would have enabled the state to increase unemployment compensation by $20 a week for every unemployed worker.

All in all, the conference agreed, benefits are "dismally low, totally inadequate to provide for human needs." And the delegates adopted for their slogan this motto: "Unemployment is Un-American."

Lucky Ones

Among the many grievances Ohio workers have against their state unemployment compensation law is the delay in getting benefit checks.

Official statistics show that 56.1% of the applicants have to wait five weeks before receiving their first jobless benefit check. They are the lucky ones. The rest must wait even longer.

Missing Men

Unemployment has hit Ohio hard. Official figures show more than 115,000 drawing benefits, with 15,470 new claims being filed in the latest week for which figures were available.

In one city alone, the number of new claims jumped 300% in a seven-day period.

But the statistics don't tell the whole story. In January and February, 4642 workers exhausted their unemployment compensation benefits. Now Ohio doesn't even list these folks as unemployed, though they have no jobs and no compensation.

Haas Papers At Catholic U.

THE PERSONAL papers of the late Bishop Francis J. Haas, of the diocese of Grand Rapids, Mich., a member of the public advisory committee of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation at the time of his death last year, have been placed in the Dept. of Archives and Manuscripts at Catholic Univ., Washington, D. C.

Bishop Haas, former dean of the university's School of Social Science, was widely known in labor circles and preached the eulogy of the funeral of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The Catholic Univ. department has become a depository for the personal papers of many persons prominent in the labor movement.

"PIOUS WORDS and poisonous deeds" in Washington will not halt rising unemployment, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week in a ringing denunciation of the Eisenhower Administration.

Speaking to an overflow audience at a Job Security Conference called by the Ohio CIO Council, Reuther charged the Administration "wants us to sit back and suck our economic thumbs and hope that spring and the robins will bring prosperity back to America."

"That," he said, "is economic nonsense."

The CIO president called instead for prompt action to put "high velocity dollars" into the pockets of American consumers. He added, "There's nothing wrong with our economy that increased purchasing power in the hands of low and middle income families won't cure."

Tax Policy Hit

Reuther especially condemned the Administration tax policy which, he said, was based on "Andy Mellon's discredited trickle-down theory." "Put that tax money in the pay envelopes of workers," he urged, "and watch it go to work."

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will be interviewed on Junior Press Conference, an American Broadcasting Co. TV program, Monday, April 26, from 9 to 9:30 P.M. EST.

He predicted that, if Congress passed the CIO-approved tax bill giving tax relief to consumers through increased personal exemptions, America would see purchasing power spurred. This, he said, would create consumer demand, put workers back on the job and help restore prosperity.

Reuther also lashed out at columnists who say the CIO is "bankrupt and will disintegrate." Those statements were "outright lies," he told the wildly applauding audience, adding:

"The CIO has never been stronger, both financially and in terms of membership. The unions of the CIO are united. And the CIO's great unions — the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers, the Rubber Workers and all the rest—are going to continue to march together to build a better world."

Runaway Shops Are Solicited By Teen-Agers In Letter Campaign

STUMPED by the tracts of stumps around their town, the municipal fathers of Bruce, Miss., are trying to lure some damyankee industry from up Nawth.

Bruce has only one industry now—lumbering—and that won't last long. All those stumps left in the wake of the logging operations caused concern to Bruce's Mayor Kappler.

Maybe, he reasoned, the pen might yet be mightier than the woodman's ax. So he put the high school seniors to work inviting northern industries to pull up stakes and come to Bruce where they could pull up stumps and build a factory.

Since Bruce has a population of only 1700, that means there aren't very many high school seniors. Consequently, not many letters. But there were enough to bring howls of anguish from the Connecticut Development Commission and the Massachusetts Legislature.

THE LETTERS promised industries that Bruce would build the plant, exempt it from local taxes for 99 years. Under Mississippi law, communities can float bond issues backed by tax receipts to build plants for manufacturers. Rental is usually used to retire the bond.

It would be a fine example of civic pride if there weren't tragic and savage implications as well.

For the seniors learned some lessons well, including apparently, that wage-cutting is the key to success. "We surely will cut those hourly wage rates down," the seniors promised.

With the town aldermen as coaches, the letter writers noted that wages in Bruce are from 5c to 50c lower than in southern states and 65c lower than in the North. They also suggested that one man working in the South produced as much as two men in the North.

To help foster such a climate, Mississippi's Legislature recently obligingly rammed through an open shop "right to work" bill outlawing any form of union security.

Lines Being Drawn In Drive To Improve Social Security

By GERVASE N. LOVE

LINES were being drawn last week in the campaign to improve social security as the House Ways and Means Committee moved to speed hearings on pending legislation.

Testimony is being heard on Pres. Eisenhower's program of improvements, which have been sponsored in bill form by the committee chairman, Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.).

The CIO has endorsed the bill co-sponsored by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), which provides broader benefit improvements and more extended coverage than the Administration measure.

The CIO's views on bettering old age and survivors' insurance benefits will be presented to the committee Apr. 13 by CIO sec. Treas. James B. Carey. In addition, statements will be filed by several CIO unions.

THE LEHMAN-Dingell Bill was endorsed at the last National CIO convention. The CIO Executive Board, at its recent meeting in New York, approved the committee's suggestion that an effort be made to include a proviso permitting earnings of $1200 a year before subjecting a social security recipient to loss of his monthly benefit. The present limit is $75 a month. The Administration bill would raise this to $1000 a year, the Lehman-Dingell Bill to $100 a month.

The Executive Board also approved the committee's statement that "no legislative proposals before Congress appear to us to warrant CIO support as a substitute for national health insurance."

The President's proposal for a federal reinsurance program to encourage non-profit and private health insurance bodies to offer greater protection to more families, the committee said, "provides a highly complicated program for accomplishing very little."

The committee won board approval of a proposal that the fluoridation of drinking water be supported.

Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby of the Dept. of Health, Welfare and Education, in recent testimony before the Ways and Means Committee on old age and survivors' insurance, maintained that present benefit levels are too low to permit "basic" retirement.

Extended coverage, she added, would take millions of aged workers off the relief rolls and remove the burden of supporting them from the general taxpayer.

CIO Unions Aid AFL Hatters In Long Strike

THE CIO Steelworkers and CIO Clothing Workers have each made loans of $50,000 to the AFL Hatters Union to help finance a 1500-member strike against the Hat Corp. of America.

A number of AFL unions have also made loans ranging from $50,000 to $250,000 to assist the Norwalk, Conn., strikers. Union members themselves are paying a $1 weekly assessment to defray part of the costs.

The 10-month-long fight against the makers of Knox, Dobbs, Cavanagh and Dunlap hats is for job security. Hatters Union Pres. Alex Rose charged that the firm is "engaged in an attempt to destroy the union."

His statement came after federal and state mediators reported a company proposal to settle the strike was a demand to abandon the union shop in effect prior to the strike, and to retain 200 strikebreakers as permanent employes.

THE STRIKE was precipitated last July when the company refused to commit itself not to move the Norwalk plant south during the life of the contract. It had already moved part of its straw hat production to Winchester, Tenn., where a NLRB trial examiner recommended that a Labor Board election be set aside because of company coercion of employes to vote against the union.

"The company has rejected every offer the union has made to bring about a settlement in Norwalk," Rose said, "including an offer to arbitrate all issues. It has refused to submit any proposal of its own, and now is presently demanding an open shop."

N. Y. Guild Wins Greek Daily Strike

The New York Newspaper Guild, CIO, ended a seven-day strike at Atlantis, Greek language daily, when it received a $3.30 a week across-the-board increase retroactive to last Jan. 1.

TWUA Hails $1.25 Woolen Wage Order

CIO TEXTILE Workers hailed as "gratifying" an order establishing a $1.20 hourly minimum under the Walsh-Healey Act for the woolen and worsted industry producing materials under government contract.

Labor Sec. Mitchell set May 7 as the effective date for the new rate. The Walsh-Healey minimum was formerly $1.05.

The late Sec. Tobin ordered the $1.20 rate in January, 1953, but its enforcement was halted by court action started by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers and others.

Contract minimums plus escalator increases bring the scale in most TWUA-CIO mills to $1.305. Unorganized mills, especially in the deep South, pay much less.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka said that if employers would not attempt to nullify the new order by court action it "could do much to stabilize the highly uncertain conditions now prevailing in the wool industry."

CIO Supports Buddy Poppy Sale

The annual Buddy Poppy sale of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, held each May, has the endorsement of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

"This splendid work," Reuther said, "of welfare and rehabilitation for men who have served their country well deserves widespread public support.

Chester Bowles' Speech—

'India On The March' Published By CIO

THE 1953 National CIO convention speech by Chester Bowles, "India On The March," which the delegates ordered to be reprinted, is now available for distribution.

The address of the former U. S. Ambassador to India won unanimous commendation from the delegates and considerable favorable comment in the press. It stresses that the United States must put less faith in military force and more in "the very principles which have always been our greatest strength" if the underdeveloped and uncommitted nations of the world are to be enrolled under the banners of democracy.

Chester Bowles

The pamphlet is published by the CIO International Committee, of which Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers is chairman. It is generously illustrated with outstanding scenes of Indian life—both the traditional and the new.

Copies of "India on the March" may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices: 15c each; 50 for $7; 100 for $13; 500 for $60.

Economic Drop Hits Canada; CCL Sees Record Layoffs

CANADA'S economic outlook from labor's point of view "is disquieting, to say the least," the Research Dept. of the Canadian Congress of Labor reported in its recently published Economic Outlook for 1954.

Unemployment, 30% to 50% above last winter, may set a new record of 570,000 for March when final figures are in, the bulletin predicted. The National Employment Service reported 558,969 unplaced applications for February, while the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said 312,000 workers are "without jobs and seeking work."

Even the official figures, the report noted, indicate that 7% to 14% of the labor force is unemployed. Both the amount of unemployment and the fact that it appears in most major sections and all parts of the country prove that it is not seasonal, the bulletin said.

THE CCL researchers attributed increasing joblessness to declines in farm income and exports—drops accelerated in the latter part of 1953 and the first month of 1954.

Anticipated new investment this year, the Outlook warned, "will not provide the same stimulus to the national economy as last year or the year before," as it is estimated by the government at only about 3% more than in 1953.

CIO Gains $1 Billion For Canal Zone

A $1.2 BILLION boost in wages and other benefits has been won for all non-U. S. citizen employes of the Panama Canal Co., the Canal Zone government and the three branches of the U. S. armed forces in the area through the instrumentality of Local 900 of the CIO Government Employees.

Increases ranging from 2c to 6c an hour for company and government employes are effective Apr. 4, while armed forces employes will receive their wage hike later.

In addition, GCEOC Local 900 got all Zone government agencies to grant a night differential bonus to non-U. S. citizen workers. The company-government rate is set at 4c per hour. Reports indicate that armed forces employes may receive a 6c hourly night differential.

This is the third across-the-board wage increase non-citizen workers have received since they were chartered by GCEOC in 1950. They have also got an increase in cash relief benefits, raising the former maximum of $25 a month to $45.

CIO Urges More Facilities To Aid Disabled Workers

REHABILITATION facilities are so limited, the CIO charged last week, that "more persons are being permanently disabled each year than we now rehabilitate."

The charge was made by Sec. Harry Read of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health before the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee.

Read noted that CIO Vice Pres. Michael J. Quill, chairman of the CIO Health and Safety Committee, joined in his statement. He called the problem of permanent disability "grave and growing."

Read observed that "it is against our working population that crippling and occupational accidents and diseases fall with the greatest impact."

Another witness, Pres. Paul A. Strachan of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, called for the Senate group's support of pending legislation to establish a federal agency for handicapped in the Labor Dept.

STATISTICS for 1952, Read said, showed approximately 10 million accidents in the U. S.

About 350,000 persons—half of them wage earners—recovered with some degree of permanent physical handicap. Yet, he continued, present rehabilitation services of state and federal agencies were able to "rehabilitate in some degree only 64,000 persons."

"The handicapped American worker," Read said, "does not want to be considered a charity case; he does not want to be given a dole; he does not want to become a recipient of public relief.

"What he does want is the opportunity to get back to work and earn a living for himself and his family, and to accept his full responsibility as a member of the community."

Read said the CIO supported "in principle" a pending Senate bill which calls for an extensive and integrated over-all federal program. This, he declared, "would provide the bringing together in a separate agency of all physical rehabilitation agencies of the federal government."

For "housekeeping purposes" the CIO urges that this agency be placed in the Labor Dept., said Read.

HE COMMENTED on two other pending measures referred to as the Administration bills. CIO's criticisms of these measures, he said, is that they are mainly "piecemeal measures in general keeping with the rest of the crazy-quilt pattern that has grown up in this country in the field of rehabilitation."

Both measures, he continued, "represent some improvement in general," but "do not, however, begin to approach the main problem."

Sen. Johnson Plans To Retire

Sen. Edwin Johnson (D. Colo.) has announced he will retire from the Senate next Jan. 3 at the end of his third term.

Johnson's decision threw another 1954 Senatorial contest wide open, with Republican Gov. Dan Thornton and Lieut. Gov. Gordon Alcott being prominently mentioned as GOP candidates.

Possible Democratic contestants include former congressman John A. Carroll, Charles F. Brannan, Sec. of Agriculture under Pres. Truman, Denver Mayor Quigg Newton and State Sen. Stephen L. R. McNichols.

CIO COUNCILS In Action

THE PENNSYLVANIA CIO COUNCIL has called on Gov. John S. Fine to summon a general session of the Legislature to act on the problems of the State's 250,000 jobless workers.

Council Pres. Harry S. Boyer, in a letter to the Governor, said phrases such as "orthodox recession" and "tooling readjustment" will not solve their problems. "Many of these people," he wrote, "are in immediate danger of losing their homes, cars, household appliances—most of them purchased on installment plans."

Boyer said the Legislature should enact a four-point program. It included increasing and improving unemployment compensation benefits and public assistance grants, a public works program and a strong Fair Employment Practices Commission law.

Council Helps Gas Users

The Rhode Island CIO Council has saved natural gas consumers in the Providence area hundreds of thousands of dollars. In denying the request of the Providence Gas Co. for rate increases, the Public Utility Administrator followed the arguments put forth by Council Attorney Julius Michaelson.

- With 140,000 persons unemployed in the State, the Indiana CIO Council has renewed its request that Gov. George N. Craig call a special session of the Legislature to take steps to meet the situation. Earlier requests were ignored.
- The Bridgeport CIO Council is conducting its own investigation of alleged rough treatment of applicants for unemployment compensation after a State investigation did a "white-washing" job.
- And in Reading, Pa., the Berks County CIO Council has joined with the AFL and the Chamber of Commerce in an effort to bring new industry to the area. The purpose naturally is to relieve growing unemployment.
- In Columbus, O., the City CIO Council has found it necessary to begin a second eight-week training course in union counselling—to face the problems of union members resulting from unemployment.
- The Minnesota CIO Council this year is planning to have booths at 20 fairs, compared to 15 last year. It is also planning to expand its essay contest on the interdependence of farm and city workers to the Future Farmers of America, in addition to 4-H members to whom it was limited last year.
- The St. Paul CIO Council and the AFL Trades and Labor Council in the same city are seeking the election of seven CIO-endorsed candidates who were nominated in a municipal primary. They are Joseph E. Dillon for mayor, Robert Peterson, Bernard T. Golland, Frank Marzitelli, Robert T. Gibbons, M. J. Schneider and Mrs. Dwight B. Jones for commissioners.
- The Wayne County CIO Council has endorsed the proposal of the Wayne County Democratic Committee to end the "non-partisan" system of electing Detroit city officials. "It is about time the local officials are made responsible both programatically and organizationally to the general public which puts them in office," said Council Sec.-Treas. Al Barbour.
- The Delaware CIO Council's community services committee is cooperating with the Welfare Council of Delaware and the United Community Fund of Delaware in conducting a union counselling course.
- The Kent County, Mich., CIO Council and the joint executive boards of the CIO Auto Workers of the area have endorsed plans for the Grand Rapids CIO News, to be issued monthly at first but weekly by general election time in 1956.
- The Connecticut CIO Council has awarded scholarships to 10 more Univ. of Connecticut students. The scholarship program was started last May in honor of the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray and in the belief that "the price tag should be removed from educational opportunity." Recipients must either be members of CIO unions affiliated with the Council or have a parent belonging to such a CIO group.

Labor-Backed Bills Sunk By Michigan Legislature

REPUBLICANS in the Michigan Legislature have defeated two labor-backed measures.

House Republicans refused to bring a fair employment practices bill to floor debate. In the Senate, the Republicans voted for a measure to scuttle low-cost housing.

The House voted 43 to 53 against discharging the State Affairs Committee from considering the Senate-approved FEPC bill and thus kept the measure bottled in committee.

The Senate voted 19-10 to pass a House-approved bill requiring that all public housing projects be submitted to a vote of the taxpayers before approval.

Apparently concerned over the November elections, the House Republicans joined with Democrats to approve by a 95-0 vote a liberalized unemployment compensation bill. The measure, which would increase benefits from $3 to $8 weekly, went to the Senate, where it faced rough treatment.

Welfare Aid Up 83.5% In Michigan

The number of families receiving welfare assistance in Michigan increased 83.5% in January over a year ago. The figure was expected to go much higher for February and March when more workers exhausted their unemployment compensation.

C. Of C. Gets An Earful—

Profits Of 'Automatic Factory' Must Be Shared, Carey Insists

LABOR has taken a look at the "automatic factory" and has registered its insistence that the increased profits it brings from cost reduction "be distributed equitably among the workers, the owners and the public."

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, speaking at the seventh annual Production Conference of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce, warned that "cost reduction does not mean price reduction, nor does it necessarily benefit other sections of our society."

Carey, who is also CIO Electrical Workers president, pointed to the "high production, high sales and high profits in 1953 turning into lines of unemployed in 1954," as a reason for labor's lack of confidence in management's ability to handle "this problem of improved technology which, in its way, is just as explosive as the atomic bomb."

ONE IMPORTANT tool, Carey said, that can "remove that gnawing insecurity and give the worker confidence," is the guaranteed annual wage.

"The guaranteed annual wage would also give confidence to businessmen to operate at a high level," he maintained. "For the guaranteed annual wage can mean a guaranteed market.

"Action on this front would be a demonstration that management intends seriously to answer the challenge implicit in this question of cost reduction. After all, what is the big problem of cost reduction today?

"It is what you call the 'market'—that statistic on how many people will probably buy your product."

Customers

Improvements in standards of living must go hand in hand with technological improvements, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Greater Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce.

"Otherwise," he warned, "management will find that although it has the most perfect and efficient machines in the world, those machines are poor substitutes for customers.

"All they will consume is some electricity, some electronic tubes and some oil. But that would not take care of the mountains of goods which will flow from our factories."

Turning to another method of cost-reduction, the "runaway shop," Carey said that unions don't object to the "industrialization of the South and improving the standard of living of its people."

"But we do object to runaway operations motivated by greed and selfishness," he said.

"On that phase of cost reduction we say two things: first, we will organize these new runaway plants; and second, we will bring up their wages and conditions of work to a decent level. In doing that we are the friend and ally of every decent employer in the entire community."

He suggested to the industrialists that cooperation from labor in achieving cost reduction depends on management's willingness to cooperate in turn and realize that "simply because the worker is at the bottom of the pyramid of industrial authority, it is not possible to pass the responsibility down to him."

Gold Found Guilty Of T-H Oath Lie

BEN GOLD, president of the Fur and Leather Workers Union, expelled from CIO in 1950 for being Communist-dominated, was convicted of falsely swearing to a Taft-Hartley non-Communist oath that year.

Gold is free on $10,000 bail pending sentencing for which no date has been set as yet. Defense attorneys are filing various legal motions, including one asking for a new trial. The defense counsel, former Rep. Vito Marcantonio, indicated the case would be appealed "all the way up" if the motions were denied.

"FOR YEARS MY HUSBAND HAD ME BELIEVING HIS UNION WOULDN'T LET HIM DO HOUSEWORK!"

Los Angeles CIO Council Blasts City Sales Tax Boost

THE FIGHT against an increase in the Los Angeles sales tax was carried to the City Council last week by Sec.-Treas. Albert T. Lunceford of the Los Angeles CIO Council.

Lunceford assailed the boost, proposed by Republican Mayor Norris Poulson, as "politically expedient and morally unfair" at a time when an estimated 115,000 Angelenos are unemployed and additional thousands are working only part time.

Increasing the sales tax, he stressed, would fall heaviest on "the family whose income is stretched to the limit merely to keep the family alive." At the same time, he added, it would tend to drive business outside the city limits into Los Angeles County communities.

"On the ground that the sales tax imposes an additional burden of taxation on those least able to pay at a time when a depression threatens—or, indeed, is already here," he told the City Council, "and the ground that it injures business inside the city and tends to drive it away, the Mayor's proposal for an increase should be defeated."

LUNCEFORD said that the CIO Council agrees that additional municipal revenue must be raised—especially to give 14,000 city employes wage increases already two years overdue.

To raise new funds, he proposed that real property be assessed on a "reasonable sale value" basis, as the law provides. At present the assessing is done by the county under contract with the city and results in "substantially less" than 50% of a "reasonable sale value" basis, he said.

Quill Asks All Labor To Give Israel Moral, Financial Aid

ORGANIZED labor "must beat a path to the doors of the State Dept. and demand that Israel be given fair treatment," Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers told the annual Histadrut Institute last week at Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.

"For our own interests, as an established, responsible democracy, we want Israel to survive and prosper in this sick world," said Quill, who also is a CIO vice president.

The institute was sponsored by the New Jersey CIO Council, AFL New Jersey Federation of Labor and the New Jersey Committee for Histadrut, the Israel labor federation.

Quill declared that Israel is important not only to the Jewish people, but to liberty-loving people all over the world. Its fate, he said, "is the particular responsibility of the labor movement of the U. S."

"Israel is a full-fledged member of the United Nations," he continued, "but our State Dept. leans more and more towards a policy of appeasement of the oil-rich Arab countries which surround this youngest member of the democratic family of nations. The voice of labor has not yet sounded loud enough to reach our State Dept."

Commenting on his visit to Israel last summer as a member of a CIO delegation, Quill said the people of that country have scored "miracles of accomplishment" in building their nation. He called on the labor movement to give it united financial and moral support.

Larson Confirmed

The Senate confirmed Arthur Larson for Undersecretary of Labor by voice vote without objection.

You And Your Money—

Public Housing Mangled Again By House Dixiegop Alliance

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

NOW IT'S UP to the Senate to salvage the public housing program if the nation is to have any part of the low-rent housing it so desperately needs.

The House Dixiegop alliance mangled the housing measure beyond recognition and turned down even the Administration's recommendations, which CIO had called inadequate.

Pres. Eisenhower's housing recommendation which included building 140,000 low-rent units over the next four years was rebuffed by the House in a 211-176 roll call vote.

CIO Vice Pres. James. G. Thimmes called the House action "a blow to the President's announced goal of meeting the housing needs of the American people."

THIMMES, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, pointed out that "the majority of his own party teamed with the Dixiecrats and voted finally to kill public housing for the lowest income families despite Pres. Eisenhower's request for 140,000 new units." He continued:

"While portions of the bill adopted related to the private home building program represents significant forward steps, the failure to authorize adequate funds to accelerate new private funds misses a great opportunity to meet housing needs and expand employment in this key industry."

Thimmes noted that the House rejected the interest-boosting proposals of the Administration and included a provision for builder warranties for homes built with federal aid. He called these important victories for "those who are working for a decent home for every American family."

HE EXPRESSED hope that the Senate would preserve what was good in the House bill and add the public housing provisions of the 1949 Housing Act.

Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, voiced hope that the housing program could be saved. He noted that the Senate has always taken the lead in the annual public housing hassle between the two branches.

—Herblock in Washington Post-Times Herald
"Drop Dead"

Joining with Capehart was Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.), who pushed his amendment calling for 630,000 new units with a maximum of 200,000 in any one year.

THIS PROGRAM, endorsed by CIO as essential if the country's housing needs are to be filled, was adopted by Congress in 1949 but has been undercut each year in the appropriations bills.

An early survey of Capehart's committee indicated there was support for a public housing program, possibly not to the extent proposed by Maybank, but enough to meet the standards offered by the Administration.

The House went through a weird legislative contra-dance before it left the housing bill in a state of almost unparalleled confusion. It agreed that those units already contracted for, approximately 33,000, can be completed during the new fiscal year but it knifed any chances of new construction in the low-rent field.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

THESE DAYS when you buy a car, the advertised price is only a start. You can spend almost half as much again for optional equipment. From automatic transmission to power steering, all the extra features available can add as much as $1000 to a car's cost.

Saving On Car Extras

Even if you generally buy used cars as this thrift-minded department does, you have the same problem. Is it worth paying extra for a two or three-year-old heap with automatic transmission or would you be wiser staying away from it at any price? What about an overdrive—is that a useful feature?

You can't always depend on the dealer's advice. Some will tell you candidly whether an overdrive is or is not of particular use for your driving requirements. Others are more anxious to sell extra equipment. Dealers get a larger profit cut on extras.

While the dealer's markup on a new car is generally 25% of the retail price, on many of the extras his margin is as much as 40%. (That's why you sometimes hear experienced car buyers say it's better to buy some of the wanted extras like radio or seat covers from other sources, although most believe the heater is often more efficient if factory installed.)

WHETHER TO BUY automatic transmission, overdrive or neither, depends entirely on your needs—how and where you usually drive your cars. Some drivers who have bought automatic transmissions in recent years have returned to gear-shift models, claiming gear shift gives them better control on snow and ice. But others are delighted with automatic transmission. Some motorists who have bought overdrives have little understanding of how it can help driving and cut operating costs, and some don't even know how to use it.

Outside of the fact that they make driving easier for beginners, automatic transmissions are generally most suitable for city drivers who continually stop and go. Since there is no clutch, it is easier to drive with automatic transmission in heavy traffic and also easier to hold a car on slopes and move forward without stalling.

But automatic transmission does cost $180-$230 more, depending on the type. Also, it probably will add to service costs in later years. Such service costs are generally low for the first 25,000 miles and in some cases up to 60,000 miles. Thus while the initial cost is not too high because of added resale value, the possible subsequent repair or replacement costs could be an added expense.

For that reason you have to be especially careful about buying a used car with automatic transmission. It would be best to have such a car checked by a mechanic. Otherwise you may end up buying an additional $150 for repairing the unit.

AN OVERDRIVE is a good feature for some driving needs if it is properly understood. It is really a fourth gear forward speed which is automatically engaged by accelerator pressure at speeds over approximately 18-23 mph. Because of the lower overall gear ratio in fourth gear of an overdrive-equipped car, engine revolutions are reduced about 30%, with resultant saving on both gas and engine wear and tear.

The chief saving is on the open road, and the chief usefulness of overdrive thus is for the long-distance driver, rather than for suburban or city use. To actually recover the cost of overdrive (about $80-$110) through gas saving alone would generally take about 40,000 miles, although in states where the gas tax is 6-7c a gallon and gas is consequently costlier, an overdrive has added value. But besides the gas saving, there is a reduction of about 30% in engine wear and tear for the long-distance driver.

Power steering is an expensive feature, costing about $180-$200. Its most obvious advantage is that little effort is required to turn the steering wheel, even with the car standing still. Thus it makes parking easier, especially for women, and is convenient for turning corners and generally for driving in city traffic. Power steering also reduces road shock and fatigue in long-distance driving.

House Passes Control Bill For Poisons Left On Food

CONSUMERS' health protection advanced a step last week when the House passed without objection a bill to control residues of pesticides left on foods.

Introduced by Rep. Miller (R. Neb.), the House bill gives the Food and Drug Administration authority to restrict use of insecticides on farm products used as foods until they have been tested and found safe.

Miller, a physician himself, provided means in his bill for simplifying and expediting procedures for establishing the "tolerances" or safe limits of such poisons that can be left in or on foods.

The bill was approved by the House Interstate Commerce Committee after health experts said that the present law cannot adequately cope with the problem of poisonous insect killers remaining on foods. A companion bill is pending in the Senate.

Over the years there has been increasing use of chemical sprays containing dangerous poisons on fruits, vegetables and other food products to protect them from insects. Approximately 40,000 pesticide preparations are now on the U. S. market.

Page One Awards For Potofsky And Murrow Granted

A PAGE ONE Award will be presented to Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers by the Newspaper Guild of New York City at its annual Page One Ball May 14.

Potofsky will receive the award for his union leadership which, an accompanying citation says, has made "distinguished and pioneering contributions to American cultural, social and economic progress."

Other awards will go to Edward R. Murrow, radio and television commentator, and James Reston, Washington correspondent for the New York Times. Murrow, recently given the Sidney Hillman Award, won his prize for his "contributions to the adult and responsible use of broadcasting as a major medium of information and enlightenment."

Coffee Now Pushing To $1.50 A Can

COFFEE prices jumped again last week and one roaster forecast $1.50 a pound price tags on the item.

Wholesale prices edged up 6c, as industry leaders claimed their prices are substantially below the cost of obtaining green coffee.

Maxwell House led the boost parade when wholesale prices went to $1.22 a pound. This resulted in retail sale prices of $1.34. A. & P. and other chains jumped their prices a nickel into the $1.09-$1.17 range.

Coffee sales slumped 12% in February, the Senate Banking Committee was told, not because of the high price but as a result of "hoarding on the pantry shelf." A witness forecast no decrease in prices for several years.

Oleo Ad Gets Dehydrated

There's no cream in "Creamo" oleomargarine—or milk either, the Federal Trade Commission said.

In a complaint against the Blanton Co. of St. Louis, Mo., the FTC challenged the firm's advertising and its brand name for suggesting the oleo was a dairy product.

Safeway Profits Double In 1953

Net sales of Safeway Stores and their subsidiaries increased 6.88% last year over 1952 but the net profit after taxes doubled.

The net sales in 1953 reached $1,751,819,708, an increase of 6.88% over 1952. The net profit after taxes was $14,544,732 or $4.31 a common share, compared to $7,331,943 or $2.01 a share in 1952.

CWA Local Sparks Drive For Community Chest Plan

By AL HERRINGTON

THIS IS the story of how a CIO Communications Workers local union in Nebraska sparked a CIO Community Services Committee community chest program.

Within a month, the project snowballed to the point where welfare agencies, civic clubs, businessmen's organizations, the Salvation Army and the YMCA were all solidly behind the union's drive for united giving.

It began with a meeting of CWA Local 7404 officers and stewards in Norfolk, Nebr., where M. H. Hobson, national CIO-CSC staff member, detailed ways in which a community chest program could be activated. Until this meeting, there had never been a community chest program in the town.

The CWA local's CSC committee fired the opening shot in the program following that meeting, announcing it in a press release and calling on "all interested groups in the town" to take part.

Less than a month after Local 7404 had gone to work, a discussion meeting was held at which seven of the town's agencies whose budgets would come under community chest handling took part. In addition to CWA, promoters of the chest program included the local Lions Club, and plans are now being laid for a fund-raising drive.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ONE OF THE MOST touching moments of the annual installation meeting of the Wilkes Barre Area CIO Council last week was the reading by Judge Ben Jones of the tribute Jim Thimmes paid to Allan S. Haywood. It was at this very same meeting, one year ago, that Brother Haywood passed on, active in the service of his union and the workers.

CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig installed the council officers, a fine leadership headed by Pres. Paul Shevlin. I was impressed by the effective job the council has done in interesting community leaders in the programs and activities of CIO, and the proof of that interest was shown in the presence at the meeting of representatives of various community groups, such as the Community Chest and the Chamber of Commerce.

I had the opportunity to discuss with these leaders the program CIO has been carrying on to organize the unorganized, so that we can not only bring greater benefits to workers as individuals, but also to communities, which depend upon the wages of workers for their prosperity. In spite of difficult times, CIO is moving ahead, and it was a pleasure to report CIO's progress to these good people.

IN PHILADELPHIA, I had the occasion to speak to the Executive Board and Staff of CIO's Paperworkers. Under the direction of Pres. Harry Sayre, they met to hammer out an even more intensive organizing program. Such meetings are a sign of the strength of our movement, and of our determination to work harder, longer, and with the deepest conviction at our job.

CIO Reg. Dir. Mike Mann reports CIO election victories at Eagle Pencil Co., New York City; Kaye Novelty Co., New York, CIO Chemical Workers; Star Woolen Co., Cohoes, N. Y., CIO Textile Workers, by a vote 93 to 2; Royal Tire Co., Bronx, N. Y., CIO Auto Workers; Ford Instrument Div. of Sperry Gyroscope Co., Long Island City, N. Y., CIO Electrical Workers; and Brentano's, Inc., New York City, Retail-Wholesale.

CIO Reg. Dir. Gus Scholle reports a victory at Chrysler Corp., Jefferson Plant Cafeteria (LIU 1064 CIO).

Pres. Morris Pizer of the CIO Furniture Workers brings us good news of four victories for his union. We mentioned one of these, before—the Philip Belz Mfg. Co. of Memphis, Tenn. The others are Leland Flushwod Door, Sutton's Bay, Mich; Acme Spring Co., Beverly, Mass; and Edson-Hix Furniture Co., Fort Smith, Ark.

PRES. PIZER also tells us of good news from the Furniture Workers on the contract negotiations at the largest venetian blind plant in the country. Wage increases of up to 15c an hour were won for 1100 employes of the Eastern Venetian Blind Co., Baltimore, Md. Pres. Pizer and Sec. Treas. Fred Fulford recently reported these and other victories to their southern regional convention, Rocky Mount, N. C.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin L. De Shetler reports word from CIO Rubber Workers Dir. Floyd Gartrell of a victory at Jordan Rogers Co., Orange, Cal.

Word comes that the CIO Newspaper Guild has won a union shop election at its Pueblo, Colo., local.

Two last minute reports bring great news from the South. CIO Textile Workers' Southern Organizing Dir. Boyd Payton reports a victory at the key Gastonia Combed Yarn plant, Gastonia, N. C., 394 out of 697 votes cast were for CIO. AFL received 59 . . . The CIO Auto Workers report from Arlington, Tex., a victory at the General Motors plant, 804 to 21. This plant will eventually employ more than 6000 workers.

Prosperity Program Drafted By USA; Wage Talks Near

proposal is a modest one, indeed. According to the President's Economic Report, our public works 'could be stepped up by one-half or more within a year.' Now is the time to begin.

4. "Prompt federal action can increase our national home construction and slum clearance effort by $5 billion."

From management, the USA-CIO program called for "enlightened policies" in collective bargaining which "can contribute to the restoration of maximum production and employment.

"With the approach of collective bargaining in the steel industry," the resolution said, "we believe that forward looking steps are more necessary than ever to insure an improvement in the income and benefit position of the workers."

Only by keeping the purchasing power of workers in line with the expanding productivity of industry, it went on, "can prosperity be assured for both management and men.

"There can be no doubt," the statement added, "that the combined effect of a forward looking wage and benefits policy by management in collective bargaining with labor, and enlightened action by government in the field of social welfare, taxes, public works, housing and farm policy can bring this recession to a quick end."

AGREEMENTS with major producers covering about 650,000 USA-CIO members expire June 30 and may be reopened on or before May 1. The full contracts are subject to negotiation. Pension and insurance agreements do not expire until Oct. 31, but it was expected that discussions would take place while the basic pacts were under review.

Contract demands will be drawn up at a meeting of the union's 170-man Wage-Policy Committee in Pittsburgh on May 6 and 7.

CIO Ship Radio Union Drafts Program To Create New Jobs

By FRED ROSS

THE CIO American Radio Association at its third biennial convention in New City took steps against unemployment in an industry badly hit even before the recession.

The union called for longer vacations to create more jobs aboard ships.

In other action to provide additional work, ARA urged other maritime unions—U. S. and foreign—to take steps to have "runaway" ships return to the American flag. "Runaway" ships are vessels once American that are now licensed under foreign flags.

The radio officers' union also called for pensions paid by the shipowners.

ARA AND ANOTHER CIO union of licensed maritime officers, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, are looking forward to negotiations for new contracts to replace the present ones which expire June 15.

MEBA announced it will seek increased vacations, a greater number of engineers on some ships, and pensions through increased contributions by the shipowners to the welfare fund. Licensed officers at present do not receive pensions.

The ARA charged that shipowners "covertly are seeking to undermine sea safety, circumvent their collective bargaining contracts and block the democratic functioning of Congress by brazen blackmailing tactics."

W. R. STEINBERG

The shipowners, the ARA said, are seeking to block the passage of a bill governing Communications Act standards.

Since a Senate hearing was held on the measure, ARA charged, "representatives of shipowners have informed the Federal Communications Commission that they will block passage of the bill in the form acceptable to maritime labor unless the FCC also agrees to incorporate two changes" requested by the owners at the hearing.

One change would allow any crew member with a low grade radio-telephone permit to operate voice equipment. The other would permit the FCC to waive a clause requiring six months' experience before a man could serve as the only radio officer aboard a cargo ship.

THE CONVENTION urged all licensed officers to think in terms of one union for mates, engineers and radio officers. There are now four unions in the field, ARA, MEBA, the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots, and an AFL radio officers' union.

Officers reported that since the last convention there has been a 22% increase in base wages. It also was reported that the union secured for its members control over radio telephone equipment after a long fight with the ship operators.

ARA now holds contracts with 201 lines which operate 76% of all ocean-going U. S. flag merchant ships.

ARA top officers are W. R. Steinberg, president; Philip O'Rourke, vice president, and Bernard L. Smith, secretary-treasurer.

Carey Sees Victory On Annual Wage

OPTIMISM over chances for getting the guaranteed annual wage in this year's negotiations was expressed by Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Contract talks are in progress with Westinghouse Corp. and open next week with General Electric. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, declared, "We think we are going to get a guaranteed annual wage—and get it in 1954."

Negotiations with Westinghouse resume this week after an interval for the firm to study the union proposals. Besides the GAW, these include a substantial wage increase, a corporation-wide minimum wage of $1.25 an hour and other contract improvements.

IUE-CIO represents 58,000 workers in the Westinghouse chain of plants. Union spokesmen said that layoffs among workers have risen to 12% since the 1953 employment peak. More are expected to be jobless by May 1, the union said.

ANG On Strike In Wilkes-Barre

Some 300 members of the CIO Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Newspaper Guild went on strike last week on the city's two daily newspapers, the Times-Leader Evening News and the Morning Record, after the Wilkes-Barre Publishing Co. rejected union contract proposals.

Among the strikers is ANG Pres. Joseph F. Collis, a working newspaperman. The walkout is the third in the local history.

Anti-Union Kohler Plant Struck By UAW

SOME 3200 CIO Auto Workers last week struck the union-hating Kohler Co. at Kohler, Wisc., after prolonged contract negotiations broke down.

UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey was arrested on a charge of violating a local sound truck ordinance after he spoke to some 300 pickets. He was released on $15 bail.

Authority to call the strike was granted several weeks ago to the bargaining committee of UAW Local 833 when the firm's adamant attitude became apparent.

The firm is one of the world's largest manufacturers of bathroom fixtures.

THE COMPANY said it would grant a 3c hourly wage increase provided arbitration and seniority provisions of the old contract were eliminated. The old agreement expired Apr. 1.

UAW asked a 20c pay increase, a $137.50 a month pension, full-coverage hospital insurance and maintenance of arbitration and seniority clauses.

The firm has a long history of anti-unionism. In 1934 it succeeded in breaking a strike called by an AFL union after the workers had spent several months on the picket line.

It later fostered a company union, which held sway 15 years before it was supplanted. The workers voted for the UAW in a National Labor Relations Board election nearly two years ago.

The plant is located in a company-owned town. The workers and the supervisory employes rent their homes from the company and all municipal facilities, including the police, are under the firm's control.

UFWA Wins 15c Raise

IN AN INITIAL contract with the Eastern Venetian Blind Co. of Baltimore, the CIO Furniture Workers won pay increases of up to 15c an hour for 1100 employes.

The concern operates the largest venetian blind factory in the U. S. UFWA-CIO won collective bargaining rights in a National Labor Relations Board election last February.

The agreement also provides differentials of 10% for the second shift and 15% for the third shift, six paid holidays regardless of when they occur, paid vacations of one week after one year and two weeks after three years, and reporting pay.

Other features are seniority protection, grievance procedure and arbitration, maintenance of membership and check-off, a modified union shop during the second year of the two-year pact, and a reopening clause to permit negotiations on several subjects.

Michigan CIO News Wins Guild Award

The Michigan CIO News, official weekly of the Michigan CIO Council, has won top honors in a Detroit CIO Newspaper contest for its "make-over" plan. Under the plan, 13 local union or area editions are produced which combine local news with the state and national coverage of the State CIO publication.

The Congress Week—

Douglas Reopens Oil Land Fight

THE OFF-SHORE oil battle was reopened in the Senate last week by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in an effort to balk the Republican give-away and reclaim billions in assets for the U. S. people.

Douglas introduced a measure to repeal the GOP handout to four coastal states and to provide instead for federal development of the resources with education as the beneficiary.

He was joined by 13 other senators in the move. Douglas acted after the U. S. Supreme Court denied the right of Rhode Island and Alabama to contest the transfer of off-shore oil lands to the coastal states of Texas, Louisiana, Florida and California.

The court decision upheld the authority of Congress to dispose of federal properties but it also disclosed a basic conflict in the give-away legislation.

One section of the law transferred the oil lands below the low water mark, that is, beyond the true tidelands, to the states. Another section provides an exemption from the transfer of "all lands acquired by the U. S. by eminent domain proceedings, purchase, gift, cession or otherwise in a proprietary capacity."

Since the court ruled the federal government originally had the proprietary interest in the submerged lands, Douglas argued that one section nullified the other.

He estimated the give-away cost his own state of Illinois from $50 million to as high as $500 million in oil royalties.

Joining Douglas in sponsoring the bill were Sens. Green (R. I.), Gillette (Ia.), Kefauver (Tenn.), Kilgore (W.Va.), Kennedy (Mass.), Lehman (N.Y.), Fulbright (Ark.), Pastore (R.I.), Murray and Mansfield (Mont.), Hennings (Mo.), all Democrats, Morse (Ind. Ore.) and Wiley (R. Wisc.).

ANOTHER ATTEMPT at snatching the public resources was challenged by Murray.

He termed a "land-grab bill" the measure now being studied by the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee which would allow Congress to give away to a favored few the U. S. mineral lands, parks and forests and grazing lands.

The power lobby was the top spender to win friends and influence congressmen in 1953. According to reports required by the lobbying law, the National Association of Electric Companies spent $547,789 last year.

'Hate Groups' Use Subtle Tactics In Drive For 'Respectable' Backing

MORE SUBTLE tactics are being used to foment anti-Semitism in the U. S. today, the American Jewish Committee warns in a new pamphlet.

"Many of these movements have now abandoned their former overt appeals to bigotry," the AJC report points out. "They aim to win the support of respectable elements, rather than the lunatic fringe."

Named in the report as promulgating anti-Semitism through their publications are Conde McGinley of Union, N. J., publisher of the bi-weekly tabloid Common Sense (see illustration); Gerald L. K. Smith of Los Angeles, who publishes The Cross and the Flag and heads the Christian Nationalist Party; and Frank L. Britton, also of Los Angeles, publisher of various slick paper anti-Semitic tracts.

"TODAY as the American people cope with the worldwide threat of Communism," AJC Pres. Irving M. Engel says in a foreword, "it is more than ever necessary to guard against malicious movements striving to foment racial and religious discord."

Pointing out that anti-Semites have learned "how to salt public debate with hate propaganda," the AJC report says that "ultra-nationalist" groups offer convenient platforms for this strategy.

"While some of the ultra-nationalist groups espouse economic reforms," the report adds, "and others have political aims, all favor extremist techniques in combatting Communism — free-swinging, wild-accusation tactics which indiscriminately charge liberals with being Communistic.

"Ultra-nationalists are now appealing to the American people on this basis, equating everything they oppose with Communism, subversion and 'creeping socialism.' "

CONFIRMATION of the material in the AJC's report is contained in the annual report of the House Committee on un-American Activities, headed by Rep. Velde (R. Ill.). The committee says:

"There are presently at work within the U. S. various and sundry 'hate' groups, the leaders of which, while masking their activities under the guise of patriotism . . . are in fact spreading dissension, discord, bigotry and intolerance.

"In the opinion of the committee, there are no degrees to subversion. It is not sufficient to be simply anti-Communist if one is anti-American at the same time."

House Swings 'Meat Ax' On Interior Dept.

THE HOUSE passed an Interior Dept. appropriations bill last week which Rep. Kirwan (D. O.) described as "frittering away our natural resources."

The bill went to the Senate after the representatives had made what Democratic Minority Leader Rayburn (Tex.) called a "meat-ax" cut of $58 million in the $422 million Pres. Eisenhower had asked.

"A couple of more cuts like this," Kirwan observed, "and there will be no Interior Dept."

The $363 million appropriation was approved after $977,000 in funds was restored without opposition from Rep. Jensen (R. Ia.), chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee which handled the bill.

A cut of nearly $11.3 million in the budget request for the Bonneville Power Administration went through without a fight, despite earlier threats of congressmen from the Northwest. An effort to restore the slash is expected in the Senate.

Farm Fund Voted

A compromise bill appropriating $478,000 for operation of the Mexican farm labor import program until June 30 was passed by the Senate late last week and sent to the White House.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTION IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU

1. House Labor Committee continues to debate Taft-Hartley amendments making the law even more anti-labor; Senate Republican Conference votes to take up union-busting bill reported by Senate Labor Committee during the week of Aprill 26. (See Page 3.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate will act on anti-labor bill week of Apr. 26. House Labor Com. expected to report similar bill soon.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.
St. Lawrence Seaway (S. 2150)	Would enable U. S to benefit as partner in project opening up Great Lakes to ocean ships.	Bill passed Senate. House Public Works Com. approved Senate bill.	Write your Representative urging favorable action.

More Talk Protested On School Aid

THE GOP education program is "anything but dynamic," Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) charged last week in blasting the Eisenhower Administration's refusal to act to meet the critical shortage of school classrooms.

At hearings before the Senate Education subcommittee on a bill to authorize an educational conference, Hill asked Welfare Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby to explain why the President "is now content to call for conferences only, with months of delay, rather than for action."

Hill reminded Mrs. Hobby that the President, in 1952 campaign speeches, had told the American people that 1.7 million American children were without school facilities and strongly advocated federal aid for school construction.

"WHAT WE NEED, what we want, and what the President promised, is action, action now," Hill said. "Every 15 minutes 30 more children knock at the doors of our schools, creating a need for one more teacher and one more classroom."

William G. Carr, of the National Education Association, testified that no more studies are needed to show that school facilities are "critically inadequate," as seven national conferences have already been held.

Murray Honored By $150,000 Hospital Gift

THE PHILIP Murray Memorial Foundation last week made its first major gift—$150,000 to the new Providence Hospital under construction in Washington for the establishment of the Philip Murray Clinic.

The institution was chosen by the foundation trustees because it has served the people of Washington without regard to race, creed, color or financial means since it was established by the Sisters of Charity in 1861 to care for the wounded from Civil War battlefields.

The presentation was made at a brief ceremony in the present hospital, a few blocks from the Capitol, with Msgr. George G. Higgins, a member of the foundation's Public Advisory Board and associate director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, presiding.

A CHECK was handed to Sister Celeste, the hospital administrator, by Emil Rieve, chairman of the foundation board, a CIO vice president and president of the Textile Workers; James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of both the foundation and the CIO and president of the Electrical Workers; CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers—Murray's own union—who read the illuminated scroll that accompanied the gift.

In front of them during the ceremony was a model of the new hospital, an $8 million, 350-bed institution on which construction began last February. Behind them was a huge statue of St. Vincent de Paul, founder of the Sisters of Charity, ministering to an ailing man.

Other CIO officers and CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, who constitute the foundation trustees, were present. Also there were Mrs. Frances Perkins, former Secretary of Labor, and Cyrus W. Ching, former head of the U. S. Mediation and Conciliation Service, members of the Public Advisory Board.

Rieve expressed the foundation's belief that the new clinic "will constitute a living and constructive tribute to a great American and a great labor leader" by helping to perpetuate the hospital's "long and constructive work to help the sick and injured of all races, colors, creeds and economic status."

"It is with the complete realization that we are doing what Philip Murray would have done," he said, "that we have voted to extend this gift to an institution with a proud, fine record of service to all the people."

Reuther said the CIO was "happy" to assist the hospital because of its "magnificent record." The gift, he added, typifies the great humanitarianism of the late president of the CIO and the Steelworkers.

"I am sure Philip Murray would be pleased today," he said, "because this gift will mean that hundreds of men and women, of every race and creed and color, from every walk of life, will have a chance to share a bit more of God's sunshine."

CAREY recalled that the hospital shared Murray's conviction that civil rights were intended to be practiced, and are more than a mere theory.

"It is our devout hope and our complete belief," he said, "that this clinic will bring a measure of happiness and comfort into the lives of many. In presenting this check, we say, as we know Philip Murray would have said, 'God bless you good sisters'."

Sister Celeste, expressing the hospital's gratitude, said the gift was the largest made to the building fund.

Following the ceremony, the trustees and Public Advisory Board members were luncheon guests of Archbishop Patrick J. O'Boyle of Washington.

The gift, he said, means that the name of Philip Murray will forever be connected with an order of sisters—"and orders sometimes outlast bishops and even dioceses" — which like Murray "are so interested in the welfare of the people."

GOP Gang-Up In Congress Makes T-H Worse, CIO Says

By AL ZACK

THE CIO Executive Committee last week charged that Senate and House Republicans had teamed up to worsen Taft-Hartley while protecting the political skins of self-styled "liberals" in the GOP ranks.

The procedure, the CIO Executive Committee said after a Washington meeting, was this:

- The Senate Republican-controlled committee, including "some self-proclaimed Republican liberals," limited consideration of T-H amendments to Pres. Eisenhower's recommendations, "hoping to dodge repsonsibility by limiting the scope of its consideration."
- The House Republican-controlled committee, including tains a majority who avowedly wear the reactionary label," at the same time was doing "the work for extreme anti-labor employers by reporting out a broad and anti-labor bill."

The plan, the CIO said, was to send to conference two Taft-Hartley versions, "one limited, the other broadly anti-labor." "The inevitable result," the CIO Executive Committee said, would be that "the latter will swallow up the former."

"We are not decieved" by this procedure, the CIO said. "We hold the Republican Senators equally culpable with their bolder House colleagues."

THE EXECUTIVE Committee at the same time approved a point-by-point analysis of the bill adopted by the Senate committee and an analysis of the actions to date of the House Labor Committee, which held no meetings last week.

The Senate bill, CIO said, "not only fails to revise Taft-Hartley to make it 'fair and just' (as Eisenhower promised during the campaign); it actually makes the act somewhat worse than it is now —somewhat even less fair and even less just."

The bill which the Senate committee reported out, on a straight party-line vote, contains "one important anti-labor amendment; several minor concessions to labor; several minor new anti-labor provisions and finally two or three minor items that are of no importance to anyone," the CIO said.

"On balance," it continued, the Senate bill "is worse than the Taft-Hartley Act."

REFERRING to the strategy adopted by Senate Committee Chairman Smith (R. N.J.), who blocked all Democratic attempts to consider important amendments, the CIO Executive Committee said:

"This procedure is the more objectionable in light of the fact that during this same period the House committee . . . has been approving anti-labor proposals . . . dealing with every conceivable aspect of the Taft-Hartley Act."

IUE Asks Election At GE's Big Erie Plant

AN ELECTION for the 8500 workers at General Electric's Erie, Pa., plant was asked by the CIO Electrical Workers last week.

This brought to five the number of petitions for elections sought by IUE-CIO in GE plants. One is in Montreal, where the Quebec Labor Relations Board has been asked to set an election date.

Besides the Erie plant, the National Labor Relations Board is considering elections at the GE plants at Schenectady, N. Y., where 20,000 are employed; Newark, N. J., 800 workers; and a GE service shop in Minneapolis, Minn., with a fairly small work force.

Workers at Schenectady and Newark have voted to leave the communist-dominated United Electrical Workers which was expelled from CIO several years ago.

Workers at the Erie plant are now represented by UE Local 506. The IUE-CIO submitted its petition to the NLRB with 2800 signatures of Erie employes.

FILING of the petition was another move by IUE-CIO to oust the leftist UE from General Electric representation.

Pres. James B. Carey of IUE last month promised the Pennsylvania State CIO Council Convention that the IUE would run the UE out of the Keystone State's industries "within three months."

Meanwhile, hearings at Schenectady have ended and the IUE petition for an election has gone to NLRB's offices in Washington for determination. Plant meetings last month saw 11,207 workers voting for UE disaffiliation and more than 12,000 signed petitions for an election. Some 90% of the stewards favored unity with IUE-CIO.

Trib's Favorite Wins Primary

THE NATION'S first 1954 primary election last week, in Illinois, saw Joseph T. Meek, backed by the reactionary Chicago Tribune, lead a field of nine candidates to win the GOP nomination for U. S. Senator.

Sen. Douglas was unopposed for the Democratic nomination. Voting was light throughout the state.

Douglas received a complimentary vote of some 600,000, interpreted it as "a clear indication of a big Democratic victory this fall."

Meek is a longtime lobbyist at the state capitol. He is president of the Illinois Federation of Retail Associations and an admirer of Sen. McCarthy. It was his first bid for public office.

Rep. Velde, chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, won easily in his campaign for renomination to a fourth term.

Reuther Attacks GOP Tax Give-Away

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO RENEWED its campaign for personal income tax exemptions of $800 a year, with Pres. Walter P. Reuther assailing the Administration's tax bill as a "give-away" for those who least need it.

In a 90-minute appearance before the Senate Finance Committee, Reuther lashed out at the whole "trickle-down" economic theory of GOP leaders, and warned that tax relief for the lower and middle income families is needed to prime the pump of American prosperity.

With steel production at 68% of capacity and auto factories working at 66% of capacity, Reuther derided the idea that owners of these two big industries have a prime need for special tax favors in order to build more plants.

But the higher personal exemptions, he said, would put "high-velocity" dollars in the hands of average consumers—and help the country's two basic industries come closer to full production now.

Millions Are Idle

With five million estimated unemployed, and 11 million working less than five days a week, Reuther charged:

"The country's economic problem is to get relief for the people who need milk and bread—not for those with more milk and champagne than they can use."

In the auto industry, he said, the supply of unsold new cars in stock has jumped past 650,000. Hudson laid off 7500 workers—and was able to provide only 16 days work in two months, January and February, to the remaining 7,500.

Lashing out at those who fear that aid for the lower-bracket income tax payers would cause a loss to Uncle Sam, he asked the Senators:

"How do you measure the loss to America in terms of the kids of the unemployed and partly employed, who don't have enough to eat, who don't have enough medical care or clothing?"

The CIO president returned again and again to the theme that the GOP tax bill will provide under-$5000 families with only 5% of the tax cut benefits—while the other 95% goes to corporations and the wealthy.

"Each and every time an additional tax concession is made to wealthy tax payer, it places a greater tax burden on the low and middle income taxpayer," he said.

Road To Recovery

If the $800 exemption were voted, and special favors for the wealthy were trimmed down, he said, "our economy . . . would be on the road toward not only recovery . . . but well on its way toward our long-range goal of expanding and improving the standard of living of the American people."

Reuther charged that Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey, one the the richest of the Cabinet millionaires, is "exhuming" the trickle-down theory of economics that was fashionable during the depression days of Herbert Hoover's administration.

"The 1929 depression buried the notion that straight stimulation of investment through this 'trickle-down' theory would keep the economy operating at high levels of employment and production," Reuther told the senators. "Each time it has been tried, it has failed."

Throughout his testimony and the question-and-answer period that followed, the CIO president argued the need for setting the country's sights on far higher

What A Comparison

Who gets the benefits from H. R. 8300, the Administration Tax Bill? Here's how CIO Pres. Walter Reuther estimated the benefit distribution in testimony before the Senate Finance Committee:

	Families Under $5000	Families Over $5000	Corporations
Tax reductions	$227,000,000	$1,611,000,000	$3,917,000,000
Percentage	5%	42%	53%

Big Breaks To Stock Owners

THE ADMINISTRATION tax bill (H. R. 8300) gives big breaks to owners of stock.

Who owns the stock? Two university studies provide some answers:

- 92% of America's families own no stocks at all.
- 8%—about four million families—own some stocks.
- Six out of every 1000 families own 80% of all the stocks.
- These 300,000 families, who own 80% of all the stocks, own $25,000 or more in stocks.
- "Spending units" (families, individuals, trusts, etc.) with incomes of more than $10,000 comprise the top 3% of the population — but they own 75% of all marketable stock held by private investors.

Same Ol' Statistics Louse Up Mitchell's Joy At Jobless 'Drop'

THE "FIRST break" seen by Labor Sec. Mitchell in the mounting wave of unemployment turned out to be a big bust when the figures he quoted came under sharp analysis.

Mitchell's optimism was based mainly on a drop in unemployment claims last month. He noted that claims edged upward between mid-February and mid-March, then dropped 80,000 at the end of March to a total of 2.1 million.

This, he said, was "the first break in the unemployment trend that began last fall."

Observers with a less professionally cheerful attitude ascribed the drop in jobless claims to the swelling number of workers whose benefit periods had expired.

The biggest blow to Mitchell's optimism, however, came in the sobering figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Non-farm employment, BLS reported, was down to 47.2 million in mid-March, 134,000 under the previous month and the lowest total in two years.

And a continuing drop in the nation's economic activity and industrial production through the first quarter of the year was reported by the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

The gross national product—covering all industry, business and government production and services—declined on an annual basis to a rate of $359 billion. In the last quarter of last year, the rate was $363.5 billion. In the first 1953 quarter, the rate was $363.9.

That means that the continuing economic recession already has cost the nation some $5 billion in goods and services.

The Federal Reserve Board said its industrial production index fell again in March to 123, down some 11% from last summer's peak.

Seasonally adjusted, the Federal Reserve Board estimated the drop in jobs for the month ended in mid-March was 312,000. Layoffs in the durable goods industries, BLS said, brought nonfarm employment almost 1.4 million under the same period in 1953 and more than 2.4 million under last December's record.

Even those still with jobs are working fewer hours, the BLS said. The average factory workweek was down to 39.4 hours last month, 1.7 hours under a year ago. In production of durable goods the work-week slid to 39.9 hours last month for the first time since November 1949.

With all these danger flags flying, the Administration has no central plans for public works spending to head off a depression.

Pres. Eisenhower's chief economic adviser, Arthur F. Burns, admitted this to a Senate Appropriations subcommittee as he asked for $35,000 to step up paper planning for public works.

At Schenectady, N. Y., the American Locomotive Co. announced layoffs of almost 33% of its locomotive section. With more layoffs in prospect, Pres. Anthony Barbier of the CIO Steelworkers local at Alco foresaw a "skeleton staff" at the plant.

Last week's steel mill operations were scheduled for 67.3% of capacity. The week before they had planned on 68.2% of capacity production. A year ago the industry operated at 98.8%.

The Administration's look-the-other-way attitude in the face of economic warning signals provoked Rep. Hays (D. O.) to this comment:

"The President said at his news conference . . . that we are not in serious enough economic trouble to warrant the use of slam-bang measures to combat it . . . Well, if we are not yet deep enough in the hot water to have slam-bang, how about at least some pitty-pat to fight recession? How about something?"

SIGN OF TIMES—Placards saying "we accept relief vouchers" now are posted on drug stores and grocery buildings in slum areas of Cincinnati.

LEAVING the White House after presenting the CIO Steelworkers' prosperity program to Pres. Eisenhower are (left to right) USA-CIO Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, Pres. David J. McDonald and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel. McDonald told newsmen after the conference that the program, "which is affirmative, non-political and constructive, will give the economy the boost it badly needs."

Sound Advice

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey gave the House Ways and Means Committee a good, quick lesson in practical politics last week.

The subject was revision of the Social Security law, long overdue. Carey noted the President had proposed some changes; good but not enough. He recognized the GOP legislative pattern—somewhat liberal proposals from the President and a less-than-liberal performance from the Republican Congress.

You can't make political friends, Carey told the House, by giving America's deserving old folks just a few miserable pennies. They won't be happy. Workers won't approve. Our skidding economy needs real consumer spending power, not another dribble.

And, unless the Congress chops away at the law, the reactionary business group is going to be sore anyway.

So Carey's advice to the Congress was: "Be bold; be humanitarian; treat our elder citizens with dignity and fairness."

It was sound political—and humanitarian—advice. Whether the Congress was listening, remains to be seen.

Double-Talk Figures

Treasury Sec. Humphrey is turning on the heat on trying to push the Administration's tax give-away bill through the Senate, even claiming that "every single taxpayer in this country will have received some tax cut and benefit in this year."

The plain facts are that the GOP's general tax bill would give corporations 53% of all tax savings. Top-bracket individuals, with incomes above $5000 a year, would get another 42%. And the sum total of 5% in tax savings was allowed for the rest of us—with incomes under $5000.

These facts, rather than the double-talk figures of Administration spokesmen, underscore CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's warning that the Republicans would give tax benefits to "those groups in our economy who . . . need no tax relief." And they add weight to CIO's plea for fair tax legislation, with higher individual exemptions, as the keystone for economic recovery.

A Fitting Gift

It seems peculiarly fitting that the trustees of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation chose Providence Hospital, in Washington, as the recipient of its first large gift.

Washington is a city where, until a few years ago, racial segregation was accepted without concern or question. Yet 93 years ago—in 1861—the Sisters of Charity established a civil rights beachhead by opening to men and women of all races, creeds and colors the hospital they started at the request of the federal government to care for Civil War wounded.

In the long years since, the hospital has established what CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve properly called a "proud, fine record of service to ALL the people" of the Washington area. The foundation trustees would have been hard put to find an institution conducted more in keeping with the great humanitarian spirit of the late president of the CIO and of the Steelworkers.

The gift of $150,000 to set up the Philip Murray Clinic in the new hospital demonstrates the high standards they used in making a choice—standards that will be rigidly adhered to in the additional selections to follow.

Some People Seem To Have All The Luck

In Other Words—

Mediators Or Meddlers?

This discussion of the role of mediation in labor disputes, entitled "Mediation or Meddling?" appeared in the quarterly Review of the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations. The writer, Allan Weisenfeld, is secretary of the New Jersey State Board of Mediation. Excerpts follow:

By ALLAN WEISENFELD

THE OFFER of mediation services by responsible governmental officials is almost as old as labor disputes.

Between 1917, when a director was first appointed for the U. S. Conciliation Service, and 1947, when the service was taken out of the Dept. of Labor and set up independently as the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, the mediation services of the federal government, like those of the state governments, were offered only on the expressed need and request for service by one or both of the disputants.

The "notice of dispute" section of the Labor-Management Relations Act has changed this philosophy of mediation. Labor mediators are now no longer exclusively "doctors of disputes." In the name of disputes prevention, they have almost become "procurers" of disputes.

As a matter of procedure, the federal mediator is directed to contact the party filing a 30-day "notice of dispute," inform the party of his assignment to the "case," and offer his services. These calls are repeated periodically during the 30-day period.

Anxious To Join Talks

The result seems to be the party whose negotiations may not be going as well as desired may now avail itself of a governmental crutch to aid it in extracting additional gains from the negotiators on the other side of the table. The "doctor" is now at the door anxious to get into the "negotiations."

Mediation is acknowledged to be an art rather than a science. The practitioner of this art employs a know-how compounded of psychology, economics, politics and sociology.

In addition to his know-how, the mediator's stock in trade is his acceptability—in fact, the usefulness of mediation is diminished by indiscriminate offers to be of service.

It cannot be emphasized too strongly that mediation is not a substitute for collective bargaining.

The mediator serves his function best when the issues have been exhaustively explored by the parties. The mediator functions as a catalyst—the medium through which the parties are aided in reaching their own agreements.

Recent developments show a growing divergence between practice and the generally accepted role of mediation in labor disputes. An analysis of the recent (1952) report of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service indicates the service is attempting to sit on two sides of the fence at the same time.

On the one hand, the report quite properly states that "the service, normally, will not enter a situation where employe and employer representatives are making progress toward a settlement of their differences. It is only when a deadlock exists or there is a distinct threat of a breakdown in negotiations that the service will intervene to assist the parties in reaching a settlement."

What It Says And Does

Accepting the traditional view of the function of mediation, the service concludes that "to offer mediation services too freely and readily would neither be consistent with the promotion of free collective bargaining nor with the policy enunciated by Congress."

Yet the service does exactly the opposite of what it professes to be desirable.

Of the 13,563 cases in which the service accepted jurisdiction in 1952, 52.4% were characterized as "stand-by" cases. A "stand-by" case is one in which a mediator has been authorized by the regional director to proceed but in which his services are not needed at the time.

The effects of this practice contrast sharply with the innocence of the language in which it is described. One has been to promote a considerable effort on the part of the mediator to "sell" his services. The proffer of mediation service "when a deadlock exists or there is a distinct threat of a breakdown in negotiations" has become subverted into a mild form of governmental meddling into private negotiations.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IT WOULD SEEM BUFFOONERY, if the facts were not so agonizing, that Pres. Eisenhower personally ordered last year that "a blank wall" be placed between Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer's and atomic "secrets."

Not the smallest of Dr. Oppenheimer's many services to his country was his decision to fight the new loyalty and security charges against him rather than resign in disgust with a government that subjects him to repetitious investigations to determine, allegedly, whether he can be "cleared" for confidential information.

The man has discovered and administered more "secrets" than anyone in the White House or any freebooting senator comprehends. He built the atomic bomb at Los Alamos that so clearly helped to win World War II.

In the wizard world where intellectuals delve into abstract theory and applied art in unlocking the facts buried in the heart of the atom, no "blank wall" can prevent him from thinking.

Suppose that he should be permanently deprived of "clearance." Would the military counter-intelligence or the FBI wall him in a cave, to prevent communication with any fellow man?

Who would watch the watchers, who take custody of the custodians, to make sure that no enemy spy is planted to transmit syllables of Dr. Oppenheimer's private thoughts to the minds of others in that elevated sphere in which physicists, chemists and mettalurgists move freely and confidently?

There is a charge—an if allegaton from Senator McThing—that atomic scientists "delayed" for 18 months American development of the hydrogen bomb, and an imputation that sinister Communists were responsible.

A Different Charge Is Rejected

There is a different charge by some tipster to the FBI that Dr. Oppenheimer actively opposed the H-bomb project even after former Pres. Truman, in January 1950, ordered full-speed ahead.

This latter and different charge is the only one of importance in the ordeal that Dr. Oppenheimer faces—and he specifically rejects it. The importance of this accusation might be dubious, depending on interpretations of testimony.

As for the rest of it, the accusations are nonsense.

Dr. Oppenheimer, during the Thirties, hoped for a victory of Loyalist Spain over the Fascist invaders, Mussolini and Hitler. So did a great many Americans, and a great many Americans don't think highly today of the Fascist dictator, Franco.

A great many Americans, particularly the intellectuals troubled about the threat of Hitler, "associated" vaguely in the Thirties with Communists, left-wingers, so-called "sympathizers." Hitler was murdering trade union leaders, Jews, non-Nazi Christians and nonconformists.

Ninety-nine and 44/100% of the Americans who despised fascism never entertained a disloyal thought to their own country. Most Americans who cheered Russia's resistance to Hitler in World War II never entertained a fragment of a disloyal thought to America.

A blow must be struck, occasionally, for liberty of the mind and freedom of conscience—and the case of Dr. Oppenheimer calls for men to stand and be ready for battle.

A scientist, even of Dr. Oppenheimer's brilliance, has a right to be wrong in theorizing, in advance, about the hydrogen bomb. Dr. Oppenheimer was wrong; the bomb was easier to build than he thought, and cheaper, more plentiful materials could be used than he realized.

We Shall Learn

Dr. Oppenheimer, the revived allegations say, had moral scruples about the death and destruction which the H-bomb might spread. He did—and so do many of us. This doesn't mean that those who have moral worries about using either A-bombs or H-bombs on Communist China's crowded cities want America to fall, or want the Soviet system to conquer Southeast Asia and the earth.

We shall learn, in the relatively near future, whether the Eisenhower Administration is using the Oppenheimer case to "contain" McThing; or whether, incredibly, the President himself takes the possible viewpoint expressed by Defense Sec. Wilson—that a person who once made a "mistake"—political or scientific—must do penance for his blunder "outside the Defense Dept."

In the meantime Dr. Oppenheimer is allegedly sealed from "secrets" behind what Mr. Eisenhower's White House calls "a blank wall." The upshot is likely to tell us more about the Administration's ethics and guts than about the essential person of J. Robert Oppenheimer, to whom all Americans are in debt.

Not-Too-Funny Wisecrack

There's a not-too-funny wisecrack circulating about Eisenhower and McCarthy. Harking back to the days when some people misunderstood the Chinese Communists, the story goes that for a long time Ike thought Joe was "just an agrarian reformer."

For the sake of the record it should be added that Pat Hurley, Republican, Pres. Roosevelt's Ambassador to China in the latter part of the last war, didn't reject, at the time, the "agrarian reformer" tale.

Hurley hasn't been hauled before a senatorial committee to "explain" his "mistakes"—he's a GOP orator and constant candidate—but he once chirped that the only difference between Chinese Communists and Oklahoma Republicans was that the "Communists carried guns."

GOP 'Hard Money' Policy Helped Cause U. S. Economic Headaches

"HARD MONEY" and "flexible interest rate" policies which the Eisenhower Administration began a year ago helped bring on America's present economic headaches.

They should be replaced with an adequate money supply and low, stable interest rates to help us regain a high-level, full-employment economy which will expand with the nation.

These conclusions emerge from a study released last week by the Public Affairs Institute entitled "The Hard Money Crusade." It was prepared for PAI by Bertram Gross, author and former executive secretary of the Council of Economic Advisers, and Wilfred Lumer, an economist on PAI's staff.

Their report recommends that Congress set ceilings on interest paid on all federal securities issues and on loans made or guaranteed by the government. This would assure that federal debt management and credit policies would promote the "maximum employment and purchasing power" objectives of the 1946 Full Employment Act.

Curb On Treasury

It would sharply curb the power of the Treasury or the Federal Reserve to restrict economic activity and would prevent a repetition of any "ill-timed and costly" interest hike like the 3.25% rate on a 30-year bond issue announced by the Treasury just a year ago.

The authors contend that the early 1953 Treasury debt management policy followed a long campaign by banking and insurance companies to raise interest rates. The crusade, they say, was started in 1946 with formation of the Committee on Public Debt Policy. The committee was headed by W. Randolph Burgess, then of the National City Bank of New York, now deputy to Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey in charge of debt management policy.

Apart from the bankers and insurance companies' desire for larger profits, a common objective of the hard money coalition, the authors say, was the subordination of the full employment mandate in the 1946 Employment Act to the goal of "price stability."

Once in office, the Administration announced it would restore the "sound dollar." It was not deterred, the authors point out, by the fact that inflationary forces subsided a year earlier. The treasury raised interest rates and the Federal Reserve squeezed the money supply.

The study says that interest payments on the national debt will have increased by nearly $300 million by fiscal 1955 and interest on private debts has risen accordingly. "The obvious result has been a transfer of income from borrowers to lenders," says the study. —E.A.K.

'We're Paying Millions For Fiscal Blunder'

When the Eisenhower Administration changed its interest rate policy a year ago, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the Senate, it committed "an expensive and disastrous blunder" which prompted a series of interest increases that have "demoralized the business community and created a disorderly condition in the securities market."

"Consumers, farmers and small businessmen are paying millions of dollars more in interest today than they did in 1952 because of the interest-boosting campaign undertaken by the Administration," he charged. "Banks, insurance companies, sales finance companies and investment trusts are the chief beneficiaries of this interest bonanza."

From The New Republic

DUBLIN, IRELAND—If you want to learn the real truth about McCarthy, the place to come to is Ireland. There have been McCarthys and rumors of McCarthys since 123 A.D. when Eoghan the Splendid, born of the race of Heber, emerged from the gloom of the mythical period into the lustre and certainty of the historic period of Irish history.

The man who told us about the McCarthys said:

"The McCarthys, and you can spell it MacCarthy, McCarty, McCartheigh, McCarthagh or Carty, the most numerous by far of all existing Irish sects, are one of the few great historic tribes left in the world today. Their history is one of the finest in Ireland and the fame of their chieftains and the piety and zeal of the many saintly men amongst them form a vast inheritance of glorious memories.

"But now all that was the McCarthys in Munster is gone and their social position has been sinking lower and lower every year. Their history is well-nigh forgotten and their traditions are fast disappearing. The MacCarthys who produced 30 kings and 61 saints are on the decline. 'Tis a pity surely."

"They were a great people then?" we asked

"They were. All, that is, except the one bad strain."

"One bad strain?"

"Aye. There is one bad strain in every family."

From A Bad Strain

"But that's hard to believe," we said. "I don't know any MacCarthys who could have come from a bad strain."

"There was one. It probably started somewhere around 1203 when Donal Mor Na Curra, son of MacCarthy of Munster, took it into his head to slay 160 Englishmen."

"Why, that's terrible!"

"You haven't heard the worst of it. Finin, son of Dermond, son of Cormac, was slain by his own two brothers, and they in turn were killed by cousins Donal Gott and Cormac Fionn. The tragedy of the whole thing was that although the MacCarthys were related and their main job was to save Munster from an attack by the English, they spent all their time killing and wounding each other instead of preparing to fight against the common enemy."

"What a pity," was all we could comment.

"It was so. And when the time came to defend themselves against the Normans, it was Dermond MacCarthy who came to Henry II on his own accord and submitted to him—even giving one of his sons as hostage."

"The swine," we shouted.

"And there was Lough Lein MacCarthy, one of the Irish chieftains who sold out to the English in 1460, in exchange for an annual tribute."

"Why, that's bribery," we said in surprise.

"And there was Cormac Ladhrach MacCarthy who caused his own nephew's blood to spill through the streets of Cork, in the late 15th century."

"For shame."

"Then there was Kevin MacCarthy who got in trouble with the Irish chieftains from 1592 to 1598 because he wouldn't pay the heavy duties and taxes demanded of him."

"Why, that's tax evasion!" we exclaimed.

"'Tis true. But remember this, lad, the people I'm speaking of are from the bad strain. The rest of the MacCarthys were great men without a blemish on their names. They can proudly defy any other family in Europe in regards to their royal background and fine characteristics."

"But where is the bad strain now?"

"And who would be knowing that?"

"Mary will be the mother, you be the father, and I'll be the landlord asking for a rent increase"

A 'King Size' School—

UAW Education Parley Opens Drive For Annual Wage Plan

By FRED ROSS

SOME 2500 members of the CIO Auto Workers attended a "king size" school at Chicago—the UAW-CIO's Sixth International Education Conference.

It was marked by the unveiling of the union's annual wage program, Bishop Bernard J. Sheil's denunciation of Sen. McCarthy, and a discussion of civil rights and politics in 1954.

It was just like school—but there was no need to keep roll. The "students"—who represented the 1.5 million UAW-CIO members in the U. S. and Canada—had no teachers to check up on them, but they kept coming back to the Chicago Civic Opera House, where most of the sessions were held.

Like in school, the "students" took part in the discussions. They listened to a union panel of experts as the union's guaranteed annual wage program was unveiled, and they listened to Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and a panel of newspapermen discuss political issues.

A 'Great Debate'

Then they went to "buzz sessions" where they voted on the questions they would ask the union experts, Douglas and the newsmen when they returned to the opera house.

The experts said the unveiling of the annual wage program was "the kick-off of the great debate." Staff representatives were planning to go to the local unions to make certain every member understands the program.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the delegates "when you go back home, you need to work at that job" of mobilizing the membership in support of the program.

UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther hails guaranteed wage plan as "historic."

He said "in the fall when we meet again to finalize some of the details of these plans (at a conference on the collective bargaining program), we will have behind us that power.

"When we go to our convention next spring, which opens just when we file our demands with the big companies," Reuther said, "we will use that convention as another opportunity to mobilize our full power.

"Let's resolve to build our forces back home so that when we sit across the bargaining table, management will know that we are ready, and if we are ready, I am confident we shall win."

Reuther said the program was "historic" because "it is a step toward changing the basic concept of how workers ought to sell their labor power," replacing "the idea of working by the hour or by the piece" which dates back to the industrial revolution.

Reuther said that when the boards of directors of auto companies hold their annual meetings "they figure every basic cost factor on an annual basis, except the human equation, except the most important cost factor—people."

He said that the UAW-CIO was going to make the employers "pay for their mistakes until they correct them," noting that high production scheduling in the first half of last year caused heavy unemployment in the auto industry in the latter part of the year.

The Pocketbook Nerve

"We've learned that the most powerful nerve is their pocketbook nerve," Reuther said. "You can put all the pressure you want on their conscience nerve; you can put all the pressure you want upon their sensitivities and they respond with callous indifference."

In 1955 the UAW-CIO also will seek a wage increase, a better health insurance program, and improved pensions.

"We're going to get a $200 a month pension much sooner than we said we would when we set our goals," Reuther said, "for the simple reason we have the principles nailed down.

"If we make managements carry a greater and greater share of the cost of medical care, we will begin to provide them with a kind of powerful economic incentive so that they will begin to talk turkey to the medical profession.

"The day must come when the medical profession begins to meet this challenge. They have been fighting ideological windmills and unless they give leadership in finding answers to these basic problems, then by default they will force America to find political answers to the problem."

High Medical Cost

It was brought out in the discussion that when unions win improved medical programs, the medical profession raises its rates with the result that workers do not have full coverage.

Chairman of the union panel of experts was Leonard Woodcock, UAW-CIO board member.

Members of the panel were Nat Weinberg, director of the Research and Engineering Dept.; Leonard Lesser and James Brindle, legal consultant and acting director respectively of the Social Security Dept., and Jack Conway, administrative assistant to Reuther.

Arrangements for the conference were made by the Education Dept., of which Brendan Sexton is director.

The chairman of the panel that included Douglas and the newspapermen was Vice Pres. John W. Livingston.

Challenge Of The H-Bomb—

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers told the UAW-CIO Education Conference the H-bomb challenges the world to turn the weapon's power to the peaceful service of mankind. Excerpts from the speech:

"THE OTHER DAY you and I and millions of our fellow citizens and millions of people all over the world read about the latest H-bomb, and they told us that this is not the end.

"Two days ago in the New York Times there was an article to the effect that if they take the mechanism and the guts of the H-bomb and put it in a shell made of cobalt, that one bomb can wipe out every form of life in one-third of the world.

"If anyone believes that we can have peace and security and freedom and economic and material well-being in the world in which these great powers for human destruction can be released, then they are being completely unrealistic.

"We must find a way to organize the world community so that these new found powers of science and technology given to mankind can be used, not to destroy life, but to improve life—to lift the burden of mankind and make life richer, more secure, and give hundreds of millions of people a fuller measure of human happiness and human dignity. That is the great challenge.

"If we want to fight to make peace and freedom secure, then of necessity we must wage the good fight for economic and social justice. To do this job we need to assume a growing measure of world responsibility, we need to shape our programs and our policies and our leadership, not in the image of our fears, but rather in the image of our faith—not in the image of our hatred, but rather in the image of our hopes and aspirations and dreams."

DELEGATES at a "buzz session" debate what question they want to put to the UAW-CIO's panel of experts on the guaranteed annual wage.

Continuing Fight

"There is no rest for the weary" in the field of civil rights, Thurgood Marshall told the conference.

"It is a tough and continuing job," said Marshall. "Each victory is met with new moves by the opposition and a tendency to let down on our part." The special counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People added:

"The only goal is full and complete equality before the law . . . Nothing less will do . . . This is all one country and all men must have absolute equality of opportunity."

Auto Workers For Guarantee

"Our main objective is steady full time employment, week by week, the year around."

That's what the CIO Auto Workers said of the guaranteed employment plan which was unveiled at their education conference in Chicago. The UAW-CIO explained that it used the phrase "guaranteed wage" because it is widely used and understood, but it is not an accurate description of the goal to be sought in bargaining talks.

The program was worked out by a UAW guaranteed wage study committee and a public advisory committee.

Here is the bare outline of the program by which UAW would obtain payments to workers for whom management fails to provide jobs:

- Guarantee: All workers able to and available for work will be guaranteed 40 straight-time hours of work at regular wages every week, unless notified in advance that they will be laid off for an entire week.

Pay Guarantee

The pay guarantee for pieceworkers will be 40 times their previous average straight-time earnings if given less than 40 hours of work in a week or not notified in advance of a full-week layoff.

When advance notice is given, seniority workers will get guarantee payments for each full week of layoffs in an amount sufficient to maintain living standards set when they are fully employed.

- Coverage: The 40-hour guarantee will cover all workers. Those who now have, or later acquire, seniority status, will be covered against full-week layoffs.
- Duration of payments: The 40-hour guarantee will be effective every week in which a worker is called in, or for which no prior notice of full-week layoff has been given.

The guarantee against full-week layoffs

ROUND BECAUSE HE YEAR ROUND

Unveil Program d Employment

will be effective up to 52 consecutive weeks of layoff.

A formula has been devised for duration of payments to individual workers based on length of seniority in the plant, the effective date of the plan and other factors.

• Unemployment compensation: Management's liability for guarantee payments to a worker in any one week is reduced by the amount which the worker gets in unemployment compensation.

• Availability for other work: Unless otherwise directed by the employer, a worker on full-week layoff will be required to register with the state employment service and to accept suitable employment.

The agreement will define "suitability" without regard to state-set standards to protect workers from pressure to accept jobs with substandard hours, wages or conditions.

The guaranteeing employer will make up any difference in wages between those paid on temporary employment and on a worker's regular job.

Pay-As-You-Go Basis

• Costs: The employer will meet on a pay-as-you-go basis, not credited against his maximum liability, costs arising from short work-weeks or failure to notify workers in advance of full-week layoffs.

Payments for full-week layoffs will be met by the employer on a pay-as-you-go basis up to a specified percentage of his payroll. In addition, the employer will pay into a reserve fund to meet costs of full-week layoffs in excess of this specified percentage until reserves reach a required level.

• Administration: The guarantee will be operated by a joint board of administration composed equally of union and employer representatives with an impartial chairman to break deadlocks.

He Means McCarthy—

'City Slicker From Appleton' Taken Apart By Bishop Sheil

A FOREMOST Catholic bishop addressing the CIO Auto Workers Education Conference lashed out at Sen. McCarthy (D. Wis.) as an ineffectual and immoral anti-Communist who is playing a "shell game" with the Soviet menace to America.

The speech of Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop of Chicago and founder of the Catholic Youth Organization, was a distinct and welcome surprise to the degelates, since he was scheduled to speak on the "Morality of Work and Wages."

He was interrupted nine times by applause and once by a delegate who shouted "Joe's got to go."

The prelate disdained reference to McCarthy by name, calling him only "the junior Senator from Wisconsin."

A Scoundrel's Refuge

"We have been treated like country rubes to be taken in by a city slicker from Appleton," Bishop Sheil said. Appleton is McCarthy's home town.

"It is not enough to say that someone is anti-Communist to win my support," the bishop said. "It has been said that patriotism is the scoundrel's last refuge. In this day and age anti-communism is sometimes the scoundrel's first defense.

"As I remember, one of the noisiest anti-Communists of recent history was a man named Adolf Hitler. He was not wrong because he was anti-Communist. He was wrong because he was immorally anti-Communist; he countered Communist tyranny with a tyranny of his own. And inevitably, Herr Hitler was a dismal failure as an anti-Communist.

"It seems to me that now, while we are still free, is the time to cry out against the phony anti-communism that mocks our way of life, flouts our traditions and democratic procedures and our sense of fair play, feeds on the meat of suspicion and grows great on the dissension among Americans which it cynically creates and keeps alive by a mad pursuit of headlines.

Such An America

"An America where the accused is guilty until he is proved innocent, where means don't matter but only ends, an America which has lost faith in the integrity of government, the Army, the schools, the churches, the labor unions, press, and most of all an America whose citizens have lost faith in each other — such an America would not need to bother about being anti-Communist; it would have nothing to lose.

"Such an American would have nothing to recommend it to freedom-loving men — nothing at all, not even the shining image of its victorious junior Senator from Wisconsin.

"Anti-communism is a serious business. It is not a game to be played so publicity-mad politicos can build fame for themselves. If someone were to tell me that the master of the Kremlin inspired this burlesque to distract us from our real dangers and keep us from taking effective anti-Communist measures, I'd have half a mind to believe him.

"I am not speaking for the Catholic Church but only for myself, a citizen. Other Catholics may take a more kindly view of the public career of the junior Senator from Wisconsin and of the effect he is having on the nation. That certainly is their privilege, as it is my privilege to speak as I have.

BISHOP Bernard J. Sheil said "Phooey!" to Sen. Joe's idea of anti-communism.

These Things Are Wrong

"Although the Church takes no position, and will not, on such a matter of public controversy, the Church does take a position on lies, calumny, the absence of charity and calculated deceit. These things are wrong — even if they are mistakingly thought of as means to a good end.

"They are morally evil and to call them good or to act as if they were permissible under certain circumstances is itself a monstrous perversion of morality. They are not justified by any cause — least of all by the cause of anti-communism, which should unite rather than divide all of us in these difficult times."

He Didn't Reply

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers said perhaps Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.) has lost his fighting spirit as a result of the speech by Bishop Bernard J. Sheil to the UAW-CIO Education Conference.

Speaking several hours after the Bishop denounced McCarthy, Mazey said:

"I believe Joe McCarthy is already beginning to sneak around the corner. He's abashed. He's not quite as aggressive as he was because up to this very hour he has not contacted us and asked for equal time to answer the Bishop."

Congratulations

Vice Pres. Sol Stetin of the CIO Textile Workers wrote to Bishop Bernard J. Sheil congratulating him on his speech denouncing Sen. McCarthy. Stetin said:

"Your clear cut statement has introduced a new note of sanity and will be long remembered by those of us who have known you to be a courageous fighter for the causes of the workingman and the minority groups in America."

"A NEW FORM of Ku Klux Klanism" is gnawing at traditional American rights, a leading auto manufacturer charged at the CIO Auto Workers' Sixth Education Conference.

He is Paul G. Hoffman, chairman of the board of the Studebaker Corp. and former Economic Cooperation Administrator. Hoffman said "even in the U. S. fear has silenced too many good people."

"Here it is not fear of secret police, or fear that we will be sent to Siberia," Hoffman said, "but fear that we will lose our jobs, or our position in society, or our popularity; and in the case of our public leaders, fear that something said may arouse the ire of a hostile press."

He said fear is threatening free discussion in schools and colleges, peaceable assembly, and there is "a newly evolved process of trial by innuendo, or public accusation."

Sen. Humphrey's Warning

"It is a procedure—a new form of Ku Klux Klanism—by which a group of Americans having no judicial status whatsoever can set itself up to pass judgment on the loyalties of fellow citizens, and gain a considerable measure of acceptance," Hoffman said.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) called on "the Eisenhower Administration once again to support those of us in Congress who are urging a realistic program to restore full employment in an expanding economy."

He advocated a 10-point program to increase personal income tax exemptions to $800, liberalize credit, accelerate public works, aim at a goal of two million homes next year, and maintain farm price-supports at levels no lower than last year.

He also urged increasing the minimum wage to $1 an hour, increasing social security payments to meet the higher cost of living, improving unemployment insurance, and intensifying the development of world trade.

Humphrey said imaginative steps should be taken by government and society to meet the challenge of the "push button trend in industry" by which robots can displace workers.

"The Great Crusade is clanking along," said Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) "under gas supplied by the Batton, Barton, Durstine and Osborn advertising agency, and other slick editorial and ad writers hastening to Washington to shore up the illusion that was created by television, radio, news columns and billboards in 1952."

Douglas was questioned by a panel of New York and Washington newspapermen. The panel and Douglas later answered questions the delegates drew up at "buzz sessions."

A REPORTER elected by a "buzz session" reads question which the session voted to ask the UAW-CIO panel of wage plan experts.

PAC Drive Spurred By Alabama CIO

THEIR EYES on the May 4 primary contests, more than 400 delegates to the Alabama State CIO Council's 15th annual convention last week pledged heightened political activity.

Enthusiasm ran high through the hot, barn-like National Guard armory in Prichard when the council's Political Action Committee recommended support of Sen. Sparkman, Democratic vice presidential candidate in 1952, in his bid for re-election to the Senate.

The administration of Gov. Gordon Persons came in for sharp criticism and the PAC endorsement of former Gov. James (Big Jim) Folsom for another term won vigorous applause.

PARTICIPATING locals were solidly behind a drive for voting registration.

The Legislature late last year amended the cumulative feature of Alabama's poll tax law to permit voters to register by paying not more than two years' back poll taxes. Union members were urged to become first-class citizens by registering.

Delegates also clamored for reapportionment of the Legislature according to population as provided by the State constitution. There has been no redistricting since 1901 despite a provision that this be done every 10 years on the basis of the federal census. A resolution condemning this denial of majority representation was adopted unanimously.

The "right to work" bill adopted by the last legislative session was branded by speakers as an improper name for a law "which in reality conveys the right of management to destroy union gains of the past."

James W. Bamford, southern administrative director for the CIO Textile Workers, told the delegates "the people voted for Eisenhower because they wanted a change, but they were short-changed."

Workers who are reluctant to give a dollar to PAC were scored by Dir. Lorne Nelles of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee. He recalled the time when workers in steel mills were obliged to buy a $2 "sunflower button" to support the campaign of GOP Candidate Alf Landon in 1932.

Richard T. Leonard, field assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, called for "a return to the crusading spirit of the 1930's that built the CIO into the great organization it is today."

Cecil Robertson of Gadsden won re-election as president without opposition.

Kansas Has Pretty Lobbyists—

Sunflower State Council Works On Legislators During Coffee Breaks

By BILL ABBOTT
(URW-CIO Education Dept.)

IT LOOKED LIKE a cinch. Smart money was being put on the amendment to pass. This was in the Kansas Legislature where a liberal bill had been introduced to allow credit unions to make big loans on homes and property.

But a reactionary amendment was tacked on the bill which would render it meaningless. Then, a few hours before the vote was to be taken, five young girls from the CIO Communications Workers entered the Senate chambers and buttonholed 33 senators.

In no uncertain terms these union girls told them what they thought of the way they were going to vote. When the final vote was counted 26 of the Senators became convinced the girls were right and the amendment was defeated.

This is one example of how the CIO in Kansas gets things done. With only 25,000 members in the state the CIO counts on quick-minded, hard-working members to pull off its successes. There are programs in political action, labor education, farm-labor relations, community services and soil conservation. All this and regular union work too.

How To Win

Sec. H. J. Yount of the Kansas CIO Council told a group recently:

"There are those in this state who do not like to work, who want to make money the easy way—off the sweat of your brow. These people got to the Legislature first and pushed through special interest legislation to favor them and gyp the people.

"But today we have the CIO in Kansas, an organization which will fight for and win for all the people. With truth on our side we will defeat the easy-money boys."

"We just step in and take advantage of every opportunity," said Walter Bryant, president, Topeka CIO Council. Bryant has won support of many Kansas farmers for his championship of soil conservation and watershed management and control.

THE FARMERS and city dwellers remember a disastrous flood in 1951 which nearly wiped out Topeka and that the CIO was one of the first organizations to pitch in and help out the flood victims. Bryant is proud of a front-page story in the daily paper on an extensive CIO survey of the flood damage, the first of its kind.

The Kansas CIO, judged by newsmen covering sessions of the Legislature as the "third most effective lobby" in the state, has a remarkable record.

Sec. H. J. Yount, CIO legislative representative, gives credit to the cooperation of rank and file members. As officially registered lobbyists, they pleasantly but persuasively show legisators that CIO people understand state issues and are prepared to do something about them.

During the last legislative session, Kansas Business Week, spokesman for state employers, credited the "CIO and labor" with defeating the union-busting "Right to Work bill," which would have knocked out the union shop and outlawed utility strikes.

The CIO packs legislators and their wives into a hotel room during their coffee hours. Lawmakers, who have never before seen a union, get a chance to relax, meet CIO members and leisurely exchange views. Here they learn first hand about the keen interest workers have in all the problems of Kansas. These coffee hours, fast becoming a tradition, are also held during state and regional meetings of both political parties.

The CIO has become such a force in the state that its representatives are continually invited to discuss the CIO legislative programs before farm organizations.

It's McMath vs. McClellan In Arkansas Demo. Primary

FORMER Gov. Sid McMath entered the Democratic primary for the Arkansas U. S. Senate seat with an announcement that he will oppose the incumbent Sen. McClellan in the July 27 primary election.

McMath, who accused his opponent of voting on major legislation "75% of the time with the Old Guard of the Republican Party," announced a 12-point platform which he said would "benefit all the people."

He is supporting such major items as personal income tax exemption of $1000, increased social security benefits and coverage, 90% parity for farmers, and use of food surpluses for the needy and underprivileged.

McMath announced his opposition to "further raids on national resources similar to the offshore oil 'giveaway,'" and pointed out that McClellan has voted "to give away Arkansas' share of our nation's oil reserves."

Arkansas Republican leaders, McMath charged, publicly announced he would be opposed in the general election if he defeated McClellan.

"In every measure before the Senate where there is a conflict between the profits of the large corporations and the peoples' interests, he has voted the traditional Republican line — make the rich and powerful richer and more powerful at the expense of the average citizen."

CIO Aides Named To High Posts In Chest Agencies

TWO CIO officials are taking on bigger duties in the affairs of Community Chest organizations in their home states, the CIO Community Services Committee reports.

Sec.-Treas. Ken Everhart, of the Iowa CIO Council, recently was elected president of the Iowa Conference of Community Chests and Councils. The 78 member organizations of the group are working to form a confederation of all Community Chests in the state.

David H. MacDonald, administrative assistant to the CIO Auto Workers regional director in Flint, Mich., has been named associate secretary of the Red Feather Fund of Flint.

CIO, Farmers Get Together On Kansas Economic Issues

CIO UNIONISTS and members of three farm organizations filled the Randolph, Kans., high school building for a recent farmer-labor social and economic get-together arranged by one of the farm groups.

The meeting was held 11 miles above the site of Tuttle Creek dam, a project opposed by both the farmers and the CIO members, who favor a watershed management program.

United farmer-labor political action over the issue in 1952 resulted in the election of Howard Miller as the first Democratic congressman from the district.

The Blue Valley Study Association, which arranged the meeting, issued invitations jointly with the Riley County Farm Bureau and the Riley County Farmers Union for the first such meeting held in the state.

Kansas CIO Council Sec. H. J. Yount described the gathering as one of "farm-labor understanding—a bread and butter meeting."

Glenn Stockwell, president of the Blue Valley association, told the crowd "we need more meetings like this so that people can sit down and get to know each other."

CIO Councils In Action

"UNEMPLOYMENT is a disease which affects the whole body of the people," Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan told some 1300 persons who attended a legislative rally sponsored by the Greater Flint, Mich., CIO Council.

Speakers called state and federal action to meet unemployment problems. Roy Reuther, CIO Auto Workers PAC director, called the federal government's do-nothing attitude on unemployment alarming.

Farm-Labor Cooperation

The Jackson County, Mich., CIO Council has pledged 100% support to some 200 striking farmers who are protesting a milk price cut by the Lord & Jackson Dairies of 28c a hundredweight. The farmers, who are members of the Southern Michigan Milk Producers Association, have taken cuts totaling 49c a hundredweight without a corresponding reduction to the consumer.

- Sen. Morse (Ind. Oreg.) was the principal speaker on PAC Day, held under the auspices of Muskegon, Mich., CIO-PAC. Other speakers were Gov. Williams and former Sen. Moody (D. Mich.), who was master of ceremonies. The event centered on a banquet honoring retired CIO members and their wives.
- At the request of CIO councils, two municipalities urged that steps be taken to relieve unemployment. The Fostoria, O., CIO Council succeeded in getting the city council to pass a resolution urging Sec. of Labor Mitchell to declare the community a "distress" area, with unemployment over 6% of the working force.
- The Evansville, Ind., CIO Council played a large role in getting the city council to pass a resolution calling for a special session of the Legislature to improve unemployment compensation benefits, a request ignored by Gov. George N. Craig.
- Mayor Norris Poulson "virtually blackmailed" the city council into voting a 100% city sales tax increase, Los Angeles CIO Council Sec.-Treas. Albert T. (Blackie) Lunceford charged. The 14-1 vote came, Lunceford said, after "Poulson threatened to postpone a wage increase for city employes, now two years overdue."
- "If every CIO member sees what goes on in this Legislature, we wouldn't have a bit of trouble getting every single one to vote," was a typical comment from the 65 women who visited the Texas Legislature under the auspices of the Texas CIO Council. The delegation consisted of CIO members and wives of members.
- Cook County, Ill., PAC co-operated with Illinois CIO Council and Roosevelt College, Chicago, in conducting a two-day course on precinct leadership for international union local staff representatives. Those who participated in the program will conduct courses in every congressional district of the county.
- Sen. Morse (Ind. Oreg.) will be the main speaker at the Cook County CIO Council's 9th annual conference and banquet Apr. 24 at Chicago. Philip Murray Awards will be given local unions, labor and management jointly, and the "outstanding citizen of the year."
- Some 40 CIO members attended a two-day conference on labor and public affairs at the Glass Workers' Hall in Ottawa, Ill., sponsored by the LaSalle County CIO Council and the Univ. of Illinois' Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations.
- The Michigan CIO Council has started the first of a series of annual institutes called "Operation State Government" by bringing union members to Lansing to study the functions of state machinery. Highlight of the first institute was a banquet addressed by Council Pres. August Scholle and Philip A. Hart, legal adviser to Gov. G. Mennen Williams.
- The Rockford (Ill.) CIO Council has joined with AFL unions there to form the Joint Rockford Labor Policy Committee. The new group's role will be to unite labor in community affairs, political and legislative matters and to support member groups working to better labor's conditions.

ADA Convention Promises Liberal Offensive At Polls

By MILTON PLUMB

BLASTING the record of the 83rd Congress as "do-nothing or do-evil," 600 delegates to the seventh annual convention of Americans for Democratic Action in Chicago pledged a strengthened liberal offensive at the polls in 1954.

They overwhelmingly adopted a floor amendment to the political policy platform declaring that Pres. Eisenhower's program is "neither positive nor dynamic and wholly inadequate to the issues this country faces.

"The President," it continued, "has not yet shown strength of leadership adequate to achieve even the program he has proposed."

From keynote address until adjournment, the convention not only hammered at McCarthyism and present-day reaction, but went on to shape "bold, positive programs" to keep America free and restore prosperity.

IT SPELLED OUT weaknesses of Administration policies and recommended substitute political, domestic and foreign policy goals for which ADA's 45,000 members will work this year.

Recent attacks on ADA, a liberal, independent and anti-Communist organization dedicated to the principles of the New and Fair Deals, by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wisc.), GOP Chairman Leonard Hall and other Republicans, only served to strengthen its members' determination to continue their fight to preserve basic American freedoms, Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., ADA co-chairman, reported.

Membership has steadily increased, new chapters have been organized, and there has been a much higher percentage of membership renewals, he said.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, an ADA vice chairman, reflected the group's spirit when he declared in a major convention address:

"I say we need ADA more today than ever before. It is the articulate conscience of the liberal forces of America."

Reuther said that the people are not being fooled about Administration failings, "no matter how much they dress up its slogans in the slick advertising firms in New York."

Not slogans but "bold, positive programs of action to keep America at work producing the good things of life" are needed to meet today's problems, he declared.

THE DELEGATES, from 39 states, adopted a resolution branding McCarthy "the Communists' best friend in the U. S." and calling for his removal as chairman of the Senate Investigating Committee. They also came out overwhelmingly against legalizing wire tapping in any form and opposed all legislative interference with academic freedom.

AFL Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said reactionaries are pinning such labels as "bleeding hearts, prophets of gloom, creeping socialism, and even traitors" on those who associate themselves "with the cause of victimized minorities, unemployed workers, dwellers in slums, and others who have problems and needs rather than influence."

Declaring that there are times "when it is wise to stick your neck out and folly to play it safe," Schnitzler said, "an organization such as ADA justifies its existence many times over.

Five CIO officers were elected to the ADA national executive board. Besides Reuther, they are CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster and O. A. Knight.

Labor's World—

CIO Protests Aid To Spain, Cites Franco Curb On Labor

THE CIO urged the Foreign Operations Administration last week to deny an increase in economic aid to Spain until the Spanish government "provides real guarantees of liberalization of its labor policy."

The request was sent to FOA Administrator Harold Stassen by CIO Sec-Treas. James B. Carey. It was prompted by the presence in this country of Spanish Minister of Commerce Manuel Arburua on a quest for more dollars for his country.

"Spanish labor is denied the elemental right of organization," Carey wired Stassen, "and shocking prison sentences are imposed for simple attempts to organize free trade unions. At this moment members of the Basque Catholic Labor Federation are being prosecuted and several have just been given long prison sentences for organizing and striking.

"We protest the use of tax funds, drawn from the earnings of American labor, to sustain a foreign government which denies our Spanish brethren the minimum rights of free labor."

South Africa

Garment manufacturers have cut the wages of African women workers by as much as two pounds ($5.62) a week by using laws passed by the anti-union, anti-Negro Malan government, according to an editorial in Saamtrek, Johannesburg labor paper.

The law excludes Africans from coverage as "employes" under most labor legislation and permits employers to pay African women the legal minimum wage despite union contract commitments to pay higher.

Netherlands

To provide jobs in the face of serious unemployment, the Diamond Workers Union has opened a diamond cutting factory in Amsterdam with the backing of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation (NVV).

Hollander Urges U. S. Grants To Meet Growing School Crisis

A FEDERAL and state aid to education program was supported by Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council last week at a meeting in the State capitol in Albany marking the 170th anniversary of the Board of Regents.

Hollander said the public school system has failed to keep pace with the times. He pointed out shortcomings in the attitudes of communities towards their schools and of schools towards their students.

The wide variances existing between different cities and states in the quality of education offered was described by Hollander as "entirely unrealistic.

"The development of public education has pretty much wiped out, at the primary and secondary levels, the old idea of education on the basis of a family's ability to pay," he said. "But we still have education on the basis of the community's ability to pay."

But, Hollander continued, "the children of one place may be the adult citizens of another. And all of us are citizens of the U. S., living by laws and policies decided by the will of the majority. Therefore, the people of every state and every community have a direct and vital stake in the kind of schooling maintained everywhere else in the nation."

Give A Buck To PAC —The Job You Save May Be Your Own!

Sen. Humphrey Hits Student Exchange Cuts

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) called on the Senate to restore House cuts which he charged would wreck the student exchange program. The House voted only $6 million for the program in the fiscal year 1955, although the Eisenhower Administration asked for $15 million.

U. S., Mexican Unions See 'Threat' In Migrant Act

U. S. MEMBERS of the Joint U. S.-Mexican Trade Union Committee last week charged that Pres. Eisenhower, perhaps unwittingly, had put his signature to "a scarcely veiled threat" when he signed the unilateral Mexican contract labor bill.

In a statement summing up actions at a meeting of the U. S. delegates in Washington, the union representatives pointed out that the President acted six days after the U. S. government —through its Ambassador in Mexico—had entered into an agreement establishing standards for hiring of Mexican nationals for the next two years.

"The virtually simultaneous signing of an international agreement and an Act of Congress empowering abrogation of the agreement is unprecedented in the relations of this country with friendly nations, at least in this hemisphere," the statement said.

Following up a recommendation of the meeting, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, has joined top officers of the AFL, Mine Workers and the Railway Labor Executive Association in requesting the President to accord official consultative status to the four major national labor organizations on the new Joint U. S.-Mexican International Commission.

The Joint Commission was established by the two-year international agreement with Mexico signed Mar. 10, Its purposes are:

1. To investigate treatment of Mexican nationals employed in this country as farm workers and to recommend ways of improving that treatment.

2. To devise more effective methods of controlling the flood of wetbacks pouring across the Mexican border illegally.

You And Your Money—

FHA Chief Fired By President As Home Repair Scandal Bared

"THE MESS IN WASHINGTON"—Republican style—blossomed into a juicy scandal last week with the firing of the Federal Housing Administration boss and the revelation that small home owners had been fleeced while bankers and builders cleaned up millions on "illegal or unethical" home repair deals.

Files and records of FHA were seized and Pres. Eisenhower booted out its commissioner, Guy T. O. Hollyday. Hollyday, appointed last June, is a former president of the American Mortgage Bankers Association and was connected with the housing industry for more than 10 years.

Over a dozen other FHA officials faced the ax as investigators dug into deals that may cost the government millions of dollars. With 251 cases already under probe, insiders got "windfalls" amounting to over $75 million.

The fast-breaking developments stunned congressional housing leaders and may prejudice the Administration's housing bill, which the CIO has termed "pitifully inadequate."

Housing Bill Periled

One Capitol Hill spokesman predicted that the scandal "will put a real crimp in the housing bill. No committee will dare touch it." The bill was under study in the Senate after passage in the House.

Hollyday was a champion of the "Baltimore Plan" of slum rehabilitation and recently admitted that he took the government job to boost this plan on a national basis. Eisenhower asked Congress for $1 billion for slum rehabilitation work.

The FBI joined in the investigation. Housing Administrator Albert M. Cole cited examples of "gross negligence or collusion" between FHA officials and builders.

In one case, he said, agency appraisers approved a project for $8.3 million although it cost the builder less than $3.9 million. The difference of almost $4.5 million was a clear profit to the builder, Cole said.

Small home owners in an unnamed number of medium-sized cities were victimized by crews of "dynamiters" who fast-talked them into taking out government-insured loans for home repairs, often for more than the work would cost with a promise that the difference would be repaid in cash. The home owner was then obligated to repay the full amount although he might never see the promised cash rebate.

Such work, Cole admitted, was often shoddy and the repair jobs were auctioned off to local dealers by the sales groups "at an exorbitant profit."

Cole defended the ousted Hollyday and promised "an intensive review" of FHA to set up safeguards for the future.

Congress Investigates

Norman T. Mason, a North Chelmsford, Mass., lumber firm executive, was named acting FHA commissioner by the President to succeed Hollyday.

Two congressional committees scrambled for the job of investigating the scandal. Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) said his Banking Committee would drop study of the pending housing bill and asked for $250,000 for a probe. Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) retorted his Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures could do it cheaper, because it never spent "more than $20,000 in any one year."

Tenants Are Paying

Some 70,000 apartment dwellers in 700 multi-family projects built with government-insured loans may be paying too-high rent because of the "negligence or collusion" between FHA officials and builders. A housing authority said, however, he doubted that the tenants stand a chance of getting a rent cut or of collecting rebates.

Some lawyers said they thought the tenants could sue the FHA and the builders for refunds and rent deductions if their rental was based on fraudulent figures.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

SOME LENDERS and installment sellers have a new gimmick for extracting more dough from the already-thin pockets of working people in need of a cash loan or time payments to buy goods.

The new device for secretly raising the charge for the credit is an excessive rate for the credit insurance many lenders now sell you when you take out a loan.

Warning On Credit Fees

As you know if you've done any borrowing recently, you are now asked to pay an extra fee for insurance which pays off your debt automatically in case you—the borrower—die. The idea is that your family then would not be saddled with the debt.

Such credit insurance originally started out as a small fee for enough insurance to cover just the balance of the debt at the time of death. But now money lenders working with insurance companies have been building up the amount of insurance involved so that some policies also pay the family an additional sum as well as paying off the balance of the debt, and some credit-insurance policies now also pay alleged benefits for accidents and sickness occurring during the period of the debt.

The additional life insurance and sickness benefits of course require the borrower to pay still larger fees and in some cases very high fees for dubious benefits.

THE TYPE OF CREDIT insurance paying off the balance in the event of death is reasonable enough in some cases, if the fee is the standard 1% of the outstanding debt. However, even then it is no particular bargain for younger people especially, and the banks do make a profit on this insurance as well as collecting interest on the loan itself.

But in the hands of some lenders, the credit insurance idea is becoming a fantastic racket, especially in some of the Western states where insurance laws are lax, like Kansas, Texas, Arkansas, Colorado and Wyoming (which now is cracking down).

In Texas, for example, both small-loan and insurance laws are very weak and the new usury-insurance racket is widespread. In fact, special insurance companies have been set up by loan sharks just to sell credit insurance, and the setup is backed in some cases by actual racketeer money, this writer has been told by good authority.

It was found that in all, 36 companies in just this one state collected $10,695,000 in premiums, paid $7,491,000 in commissions to the loan sharks, spent $770,000 in administrative expenses and paid out a total of only $753,000 in claims.

Fantastic, isn't it? But also heart-breaking when you consider that the victims of this widespread racket are ordinary working people who are always the most frequent customers for small-loans.

HERE'S THE WAY the racket operates in an individual case. A man comes in to borrow $25. The loan broker shows him a "legal rate chart." The interest fee shown on the rate chart is only 25c. But in addition, the borrower (in a typical instance) must pay extra fees of $1 for life insurance, 75c for a "policy fee," $2.72 for accident and health insurance, and $1 for "service charge."

So the borrower pays a total of $5.72 for a loan of $25 for three months. That is actually an interest rate of 180% a year.

Beware borrowing money from a lender who makes you buy additional life insurance—in an amount more than the amount needed to cover your loan—or requires that you take accident and health insurance with your loan. If you get a loan with life insurance attached, make sure you get an insurance certificate with it. Otherwise, you are paying for insurance but your family might not be able to collect it.

CSC Says Social Agencies Fall Down On Job Relief

MANY COMMUNITIES still "refuse to face up to the reality" of U. S. figures of 3,725,000 unemployed, according to a survey by the CIO Community Services Committee.

A spot check of more than 40 industrial cities reveals "a wide range of action from complete indifference to all-out efforts" by voluntary and public social agencies, CSC officials note.

Survey returns, the CSC points out, underscore the importance of community action. Recommended as a first step is "a community-wide meeting of social agencies, both public and voluntary, to discuss assistance for the unemployed."

Objective of such a meeting, CSC suggested, are requests for increased welfare department allocations; a survey of types of assistance available from voluntary agencies; formulation of plans to assist non-residents; establishment of procedures for supplemental assistance to large families receiving unemployment compensation; and short-term aid for families awaiting acceptance by welfare departments.

CSC stressed the need to expedite and increase unemployment compensation, organize job finding committees, evaluate and act on plans for public works programs and provide special counsel to unemployed on personal financial and budget problems.

Co-op Health Bill Backed By Humphrey

APPROVAL of his voluntary health facilities bill was urged last week by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) "to encourage groups of people to take direct responsibility for the solution of their health care problems."

Humphrey told the Senate Labor Committee that "the voluntary method of solving social economic problems is always the best in a non-coercive society. The voluntary method needs encouragement if it is to succeed in meeting serious national problems."

The measure (S. 1052) is supported by the cooperative health groups of the country and the Cooperative League.

Humphrey emphasized that while Pres. Eisenhower was considering a reinsurance plan in the nature of a grant to voluntary health plans, his bill calls for low interest voluntary loans. In the long run, he said, there would be no cost to the U. S. government and no added tax burden.

'When Work Is Done'—

Labor Arts, Crafts Display Planned By N. Y. Unionists

THE SPARETIME handiwork of trade unionists, among them many CIO members, will go on display at the Labor Temple, 242 East 14th street, New York City, from Apr. 22 to May 6.

The exhibit is sponsored by Labor Unions in Arts and Crafts, an organization formed by labor and other groups such as the New York Public Library Service to Trade Unions.

As unions achieve shorter work weeks, more and more workers are turning to hobbies for relaxation. Although they are leisure-hour activities, hobbies have carried their value into the work-day, for the break in routine enables a worker to do a better job with less tension.

This year's exhibit, called "When Work Is Done," will include paintings, drawings, photographs, sculpture, handicrafts and other creative work done on lesiure time.

Douglas Presents Food Surplus Bill

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) has introduced a bill to dispose of $4 billion worth of surplus farm products.

CIO Praises Altmeyer's New Booklet On Social Security

SWEEPING revisions in social security coverage and benefits are proposed in a new pamphlet by the man who administered the program for 18 years, Arthur J. Altmeyer.

In a special edition for CIO members, Joseph N. Curran, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, describes the pamphlet as "calm, yet bold," and a "most welcome answer to the attacks" of those who have been assailing the program.

Most of the former Commissioner for Social Security's recommendations, Curran added, are in line with CIO policy.

Between 6.2 and 6.3 million more people ought to be included and benefits ought to be raised by 1% for every year that the worker has been covered, Altmeyer believes.

Altmeyer proposes raising the wage base from the present $3600 to $6000 to make possible the 1% boost, a hike in maximum benefits and the payment of benefits to workers who become permanently and totally disabled before the age of 65.

Altmeyer says that all groups now excluded ought to be admitted, including 3 million farm operators.

"Social Security does not mean," Altmeyer concludes, "that anyone shall be guaranteed the good things of life without effort on his part. It does not mean a dead level of uniformity, but a basic protection on which each of us can build. It means genuinely equal opportunity in a free society."

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

LAST WEEK'S column carried a late report of the CIO Textile Workers victory at Gastonia Combed Yarn, Gastonia, N. C. Boyd Payton and his organizational staff deserve the highest credit for winning this campaign.

It is no secret that textile organization is one of the gravest problems that faces the trade union movement in our country. The Gastonia plant, aside from its large size, is a key plant in a vital textile area. To have it within the ranks of CIO is a great step forward in the effort to bring union organization into the mills, and is also a tribute to the perseverance and courage of Brother Payton's staff, which has carried on in the face of the most vicious employer resistance to be found anywhere.

LAST WEDNESDAY, CIO-PAC met to consider working plans for giving greater effectiveness to the political action of the working men and women of the United States.

A major subject for consideration was to increase our ability to have more citizens exercise their right to vote.

A problem for our nation has always been the fact that so few of those who are able to vote are also willing to take the trouble to vote. The wisdom of the people is not always expressed in our elections so long as such large numbers do not get to the polls. Getting out the vote is a service CIO can perform in the best interest of all the people.

On Thursday, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was hostess to a group of distinguished citizens who met in New York to honor the Menninger family and Foundation.

Recently, the Menningers received recognition for their great work by being named winners of the Philip Murray Memorial Award. The Menningers were among the first medical men to arouse the public conscience to the terrible way we were treating the mentally diseased among our citizens. In honoring their work, the CIO Community Services Committee is once again showing the interest of the workers in the general welfare of the entire nation.

Regional Dir. Mike Mann, who accompanied me to Mrs. Roosevelt's luncheon, reports two more CIO Auto Worker victories, at Brannan's Motor Corp., Mt. Vernon, N. Y., and Chris A. Winkler, Inc., Flushing, N. Y.

THE CIO COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS advise, through Jack Moran and Bob Brylke, of a CIO victory at the American Cable & Radio Co., 481 CIO to 384 AFL, covering workers all over the country but principally in San Francisco, New York, and Hawaii. This election was a run-off that had been delayed two years in the NLRB.

A victory at the Wilmington Gas Co., Wilmington, N. C., is reported by CIO's Chemical Workers, with Dir. Hugh Brown in charge.

Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the CIO Oil Workers reports victories at Delta Refining Co., clerical unit, Memphis, Tenn., and Phillips Petroleum Co., Arco, Ida.

Sec.-Treas. John C. Lawson of the CIO Stone Workers reports US&APW won the NLRB elections at Tampa, Fla. US&APW received 196 votes at Cone Bros. Construction Co., with 140 ballots for no union and five challenged. At the Tri-State Culvert Mfg. Co., 15 votes were cast for US&APW and 11 for no union. Lewis Rumley, US&APW staff member, was in charge at both elections and was assisted in the Cone Bros. campaign by Jack Voltair, also a US&APW staff member, and CIO Field Rep. I. R. Gray.

CIO Attacks GOP Tax Bill Urges Higher Exemptions

standards of living than now prevail.

"We need to add one to Franklin Roosevelt's four freedoms," he said, "—freedom from fear of abundance."

Reuther derided the idea that there was any "moral" basis for cutting taxes on dividend payments. Republican leaders have been claiming that dividends are taxed twice—once on the corporations, once on the stockholders.

But, Reuther noted, there's double and multiple taxation all around the fiscal circuit. Candidate Eisenhower, in 1952, he recalled, was complaining about 151 taxes on a loaf of bread, 206 taxes on a new auto, and 150 taxes on a woman's hat.

"While great cries of anguish were raised over multiple taxation of bread, hats, autos," Reuther said, "after their election victory, the Republicans apparently forgot about multiple taxation of bread and shifted their attention to the problem of stockholders."

Reuther's call for higher exemptions was seconded by Robert R. Nathan, Washington economist, who testified for Americans for Democratic Action.

Senate hearings on the House-passed tax bill will continue for a few more days. It is expected to reach the Senate floor late in April or in May.

A major effort is expected by Democrats to pass the George-Kerr-Frear-Humphrey-Douglas supported amendments to increase the personal exemptions to $800.

Reuther On TV

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will be interviewed on Junior Press Conference, an American Broadcasting Co. TV program, Monday, Apr. 26, from 9 to 9:30 P.M. EST.

Port Arthur Pickets Hold Firm As Strike Enters Sixth Month

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

A BROILING Texas sun beat down on Port Arthur streets last week as CIO pickets entered the sixth month of their strike against a score of that refinery city's stores, hotels and eating places.

Spirit among the several hundred members of the Sabine Area Local Industrial Union 1814 ran just as high as it did on a raw November day when they walked out against unbelievably low wages and long hours of work. For them, and for the CIO, there is no thought of turning back to the pre-strike days.

"We won't be back behind those counters until a union contract has been signed," said a gray-haired grandmother who has been on the picket line every day, Sundays excepted, since the strike started.

It didn't take a pep talk to raise flagging enthusiasm when 1814 held a mass meeting one night last week, because morale was high to begin with.

INSTEAD, SPEAKERS congratulated the men and women of 1814 for an outstanding job of political action carried on while they waged a successful strike. And they promised that support will be provided until the strike is won.

"CIO will never desert 1814," pledged Richard T. Leonard, field assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who was the meeting's principal speaker. He told them CIO was "like a holy crusade, leading the fight for human justice and human dignity."

"You people organized yourselves on the economic front and implemented that organization on the political front," Leonard declared.

ACTIVITY by the LIU members turned the balance scale in favor of a pro-union majority in the city's municipal contests a few days before. More than 80% of the union's membership who live in Port Arthur turned out to vote in a contest that attracted attention in every part of the Lone Star State.

Facing the union-backed candidates was a slate described as "so reactionary the Republicans didn't bother to run candidates."

An unbelievable amount of money was spent by opposition forces and an expensively-produced smear booklet against the CIO in Port Arthur was distributed house to house as the handiwork of a "research foundation" from Chicago.

EASTER business in the struck stores was no better than Christmas sales. Pickets patrolled in front of stores that tried to lure customers with promises of discounts up to 40% on merchandise gathering dust on shelves. Picket lines are respected in Port Arthur, a "union town," made that way by the militancy of the CIO Oil Workers who have backed 1814's strike with moral and financial aid of many kinds.

What someone called "the country's biggest bargain" went begging last week. Some of the city's drive-ins advertised a hamburger and a big glass of beer, all for a dime. The only catch was that customers would have to cross a picket line to get them.

PICKETING members of CIO Auto Workers Local 833 are shown at the big plant of the Kohler Co., Kohler, Wisc., where some 3200 workers walked out because the company insisted on eliminating arbitration and seniority provisions from the contract. The firm has a long anti-union record.

CWA Wins 3-Year Battle At American Cable, Radio

THREE YEARS of organizing effort has paid off for the CIO Communications Workers with an election victory among the 1250 employes of the American Cable & Radio Co.

AC&R workers are located in New York, San Francisco, a number of other U. S. cities and in Hawaii. Contract talks for the employes of the non-voice international communications firm are scheduled.

In the National Labor Relations Board election, CWA-CIO won 481 votes against 384 for the AFL Commercial Telegraphers Union. There were no votes for "no union." Twenty ballots were voided and two were challenged.

Employes of AC&R were once represented by the American Communications Association, which was expelled from CIO in 1949 because its leaders followed the communist line.

CWA began its organizing drive in 1951, and later the AFL union entered the picture. No election was held until 1953 because of stalling tactics employed by the company and the discredited ACA.

The first election results were inconclusive — CWA 337; CTU 258; ACA 258; and 207 challenged ballots. Regional and national offices of the NLRB had the matter under advisement until two months ago when a run-off election was ordered. ACA was ruled off the ballot.

Holderman's Threat Ends Safety Peril

THE FIRST major action taken by New Jersey's new Labor Commissioner Carl Holderman was a threat to halt work on a parkway project if contractors "persist in violating safety statutes."

Holderman, former State CIO Council president, said he became alarmed after two construction workers had been injured in trench cave-ins along the Garden State Parkway within a week.

Holderman's statement brought a hurried conference between attorneys for the State Highway Authority and Labor Dept. officials which resulted in the authority agreeing to see that safety violations are ended.

"I know time is of the essence in completing the parkway," Holderman said, "but it must be done without needlessly injuring and killing the workers on the job."

URW Sets Wage Talks At Goodyear

SUBSTANTIAL wage increases will be sought by the CIO Rubber Workers in contract negotiations which begin ~~May 4~~ with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Canton, O.

URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster informed heads of 10 Goodyear locals, representing 30,000 workers, of the opening of contract talks.

Besides the wage hike, the URW Wage Policy Committee called for a guaranteed wage program, correction of inter and intra-plant inequities and other benefits.

BUCKMASTER SAID the demands for higher pay were based on the record profits in the rubber industry last year plus the probability of further tax concession to industry in 1954 by the pro-business Eisenhower Administration.

Canadian members of URW-CIO will seek a general wage increase of 15c an hour and the guaranteed annual wage. The union's international policy committee met last week in Toronto to set bargaining goals.

The sessions were attended by 23 delegates from 18 locals with a membership of 11,000. Most of them are employed by subsidiaries of U. S. corporations.

CIO Urges 'Bold Action' On Social Security

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE EISENHOWER Administration cannot expect to make political capital "by taking a few mincing steps forward" in improving the social security program, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey warned the House Ways and Means Committee last week.

"Such action is as certain to merit the abuse of the Chamber of Commerce orators, who will be in Washington shortly, as would an all-out modernization, humanization and liberalization of the social security law," he added.

Carey, calling for "bold action, not half-way measures," told the committee that the CIO in general supports the bill introduced by Reps. Dingell (D. Mich.), Eberharter (D. Pa.) and others, rather than the Administration measure sponsored by the committee chairman, Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.). He cited three main reasons:

1. "The aged and survivors need higher benefits and greater improvements than in the Reed proposals, although these are very good as far as they go.

2. "Persons with chronic illness or long-time disability need monthly payments similar to old-age pensions as well as rehabilitation services. The Reed Bill would not give these people a penny in the way of insurance benefits before they are 65.

3. "Persons who are temporarily sick or disabled need substantial cash benefits. The Dingell-Eberharter Bill proposes benefits up to $45 a week. The Reed Bill proposes nothing."

CAREY, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, listed for the committee some of the factors in the Dingell-Eberharter Bill which would yield "more adequate pension and survivors' benefits" than the Reed Bill.

These were basing the average monthly wage on the individual's 10 best earning years, with a choice of dropping those before 1954; crediting earnings up to $6000 a year; adding one-half of 1% to the primary benefit for each year of coverage; adding 2% for each year worked after 65, and raising the minimum benefit to $35 a month and the dollar maximum to $200 for a family.

BOLD ACTION on Social Security was called for by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey testifying before a House committee. At left is Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate research director and secretary of the social security committee.

"Rather than discuss these details," Carey said, "I wish to emphasize our basic belief that the government's social insurance program should provide adequate, not only minimum, levels of protection.

"OUR MEMBERS, like other Americans, attempt to save money for emergencies or retirement, and our unions seek constantly to enhance workers' incomes through collective bargaining so that they will have a little margin from which to save.

"It is very difficult for persons with children and relatively low wages to set much aside, and savings are too often swallowed up by unemployment, illness or heavy medical bills. Rising prices have eaten away the value of bank accounts and government bonds.

"Thus, for the majority of the aged or survivors, government benefits are the main stay of their budgets."

Carey recalled that the CIO from the start has believed in covering all the gainfully employed under the insurance programs. He expressed the hope the committee would recommend coverage of federal employes if they wish; domestic workers, farm employes and seamen employed on vessels of foreign registry by U. S. employers.

IN ADDITION, he called for more liberal federal assistance grants to the aged not covered by social security, and asked that the legislation authorize the addition of a government contribution to the old age and survivors trust fund rather than rely only on the pay roll tax, as the present law, the Administration bill and the Dingell-Eberharter Bill all provide.

"I suppose you recognize that this (the Reed Bill) is a step forward?" Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.) asked him.

"Yes," Carey replied. "It is a mincing step forward—a ballet step rather than a good stride forward."

Sparkman Asks $2000 Exemption For Oldsters

AN AMENDMENT to the income tax bill giving persons over 65 a $2000 exemption will be introduced by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

Sparkman said the $1200 exemption given those 65 two years ago is not realistic under today's higher living costs.

"These older citizens," he said, "or at least most of them, no longer are employed. Most of them need all of their income to meet the costs of living. Certainly it is not too much to give them an exemption up to $2000."

Absentee Voter Bill Requested

The Eisenhower Administration has asked Congress to recommend that the states' wartime absentee voting laws be liberalized to include U. S. civilians employed overseas and the families of servicemen in foreign countries.

GOP Niagara Bills Hit For Keeping High Rates

THE CIO charged last week that Republican-sponsored bills for Niagara River power development would result in "fastening high monopoly rates on the region" and hurt the economy of New England and Middle Atlantic States.

In testimony before the Senate Public Works Committee, Pres. Elwood Swisher of the CIO Chemical Workers urged support of the substitute proposal by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and Rep. Roosevelt (D.-Lib. N.Y.).

"We are convinced it will assure lower electrical rates for our homes, for our neighbors on the farms, and for industrial development," Swisher said. "This will mean jobs for our members, profits for industry, increased taxes for government and freedom from drudgery for the housewife and farmer."

Also before the committee are bills by Sens. Ives (R. N.Y.) and Case (R. S. D.) which would authorize the New York State Power Authority to undertake the hydroelectric development. The Lehman-Roosevelt measure likewise calls for state development, but also writes in the so-called "preference" claims which has long been a cornerstone of federal power policies.

A THIRD proposal would simply give away federal power rights to five private power companies. This was passed by the House in the last session.

New York's Gov. Thomas E. Dewey opposed the latter measure, but endorsed state development without the preference requirement.

The CIO spokesman criticized the Dewey proposal as "inadequate."

"The resulting sale of this vast public supply of electric energy to the private power companies at the bus-bar of the generating station would eliminate the yardstick effect of the project and leave private monopoly in a strong position to maintain high rates and restrict consumption," Swisher said.

Testimony before the committee earlier has indicated that it would cost private companies over six mills per kilowatt hour to produce electricity at Niagara Falls as compared with a public generation cost of about two mills, which is the cost on the Canadian side.

"Excessive electric rates" in the Niagara project region, Swisher charged, have caused New England and Middle Atlantic States to fall far below the national average for sales of electrical appliances.

Public Works Bill Pushed By Kelley

"DESPITE the inaction of the House leadership," Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.) said he would "keep pushing" his bill to set up a new Public Works Administration.

The Kelley Bill (H. R. 8250), which proposes a $6.5 billion federal local construction program throughout the country for various needed municipal facilities, "has been gaining strength," the congressman said.

He noted that seven other representatives, all Democrats, had introduced companion bills to "identify themselves as co-sponsors of the Kelley bill." The seven are: Reps. Buchanan, Granahan, Byrne and Chudoff, all of Pennsylvania, Sullivan (Mo.), Kee (W. Va.), and Machrowicz (Mich.).

THE KELLEY Bill provides for an authorization of $5 billion in Federal funds for assistance to states, counties and municipalities for construction of various useful public works not otherwise eligible for Federal funds. The federal government would put up 45% of the cost of such projects, with the local unit raising 55%.

"With unemployment mounting," Kelley said, "now is the time to get these delayed works projects under way."

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate will act on anti-labor bill week of Apr. 26. House Labor Com. expected to act on similar bill Apr. 27.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.

GOP 'Majority' Divided Over T-H Proposals

By AL ZACK

THE REPUBLICAN "majority" in the Senate Labor Committee, which has pushed out a bill to make Taft-Hartley worse, last week turned out not to be a majority after all.

Publication of the so-called "majority" report disclosed that four of the seven Republicans, including Chairman Smith, didn't like what they had done. Three of them thought they should have been more anti-labor.

Capitol Hill observers agreed that the dissents proved there would be strenuous efforts made by Republicans to re-write the bill on the Senate floor, making it tougher than the version reported by the committee.

Meantime, Senate Majority Leader Knowland reported that the Taft-Hartley debate would not start this week, as had been previously announced by the GOP Policy Committee. Other matters would come first, Knowland said, and the Senate would not consider Taft-Hartley before the week of May 3.

While the minority members of the Senate Labor Committee continued to work on their report, the majority aired their views of the bill which had been reported out by a strict party vote of 7 to 6. That vote had followed imposition of a gag rule by Smith, who refused to consider any amendments offered by Democratic members seeking to make the law "fair and just" as Pres. Eisenhower had promised during the campaign.

LED BY SMITH, a group of four Republicans entered dissents to the majority report. With one exception, these dissents called certain sections of the bill too friendly to labor. All of these sections had been touted by Republican orators as proof that the Republicans were not anti-labor.

Smith promised a fight for inclusion of the discredited government-conducted strike vote, asked by President Eisenhower and opposed by impartial labor experts and unions who pointed out that this procedure had been a costly failure during World War II.

Sen. Goldwater (R. Ariz.), who throughout the hearings demonstrated a desire to make the law even tougher, had three objections and one gripe. He wants, according to his dissent, to give anti-labor state legislatures even greater room for laws designed to cripple unions and put collective bargaining into a strait-jacket.

Goldwater also objected to the so-called "free speech" section, arguing that the committee report was too liberal. He objected, on the same grounds, to the secondary boycott amendments. Goldwater griped, but said he would go along, with the committee's action to delay union-busting in economic strike situations.

SEN. UPTON (R. N. H.) took much the same view on the free speech and secondary boycott provisions. Sen. Cooper (R. Ky.) indicated doubts on three amendments, secondary boycotts, free speech and state powers. But Cooper did not say what his objections were and merely reserved his right to vote on these proposals on the Senate floor as he saw fit.

Although the House was in recess, one member of the House Labor Committee indicated exactly where he stood on Administration proposals to amend Taft-Hartley.

Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.), a long-time committee member, charged that the Eisenhower proposals were not "middle-of-the-road" as they had been labeled by Administration spokesmen.

These proposals, he said constituted "a one-way street paved with anti-labor provisions." He added "the President's own party members on the House Labor Committee appear to be determined not to remove any of the extreme anti-union provisions of the bill, but rather want to add to them."

IUE Opens Bargaining For 98,000 At GE

NEGOTIATIONS for a new contract covering 98,000 General Electric Co. employes in 55 plants were started last week by the CIO Electrical Workers.

The guaranteed annual wage, a substantial wage increase, improved vacation and welfare benefits, the union shop and a profit-sharing plan topped the list of IUE-CIO demands.

The union said its demands were based on three factors: What GE workers need and deserve; what is necessary for the economic and social welfare of the country, and what the company can afford and remain a prosperous, growing concern providing a reasonable return to its stockholders.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey headed the negotiating team. On the committee was Leo Jandreau, business agent for Local 301 at GE's main plant in Schenectady, N. Y., whose membership voted to leave the discredited UE to rejoin the CIO.

Carey pointed out that 1953 was a year of tremendous profits for GE. Contrasted with 1949, the last year before IUE-CIO became bargaining agent, Carey said that production has increased by 106.2% but the number of production workers increased only 30%.

In terms of dollars, he said, production per worker went from $14,900 a year to $23,600, a gain of $8700, but earnings per worker increased by only $1380 or 15.5% of the increased production worth.

CAREY, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, outlined the union's formula for a guaranteed annual wage. He asked the company to put 5% of its payroll into a fund which would maintain the GAW and insure a worker of 2080 hours of pay each year.

IUE-CIO also asked for a corporation-wide minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, equal pay for equal work, improvement in the insurance plan, eight paid holidays "without strings" with the eighth day to be left to local option, and sick leave and death leave similar to those given salaried help.

Thomas Gets Bumping, Falls Off Joe's Coattail

J. PARNELL Thomas came a cropper last week in his attempt to come back on the coattails of Joe McCarthy.

Thomas, once chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee who went to jail for payroll-padding, failed in his bid for nomination in New Jersey's Seventh Congressional District GOP primaries.

The 59-year-old former congressman campaigned as a staunch supporter of McCarthy, saying a vote for him would be a vote of support for the junior Senator from Wisconsin.

Thomas lost by an eight-to-one margin to the incumbent, Rep. Widnall, who succeeded him on Thomas' federal conviction in 1949.

Rep. Howell of Pennington was unopposed for the Democratic nomination to the U. S. Senate. He will face former Rep. Case, the sole Republican candidate, in November for the seat to be vacated by Sen. Hendrickson, a Republican who did not seek re-election.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MR. DULLES faces an almost impossible task in the Geneva conference on Korea and Indo-China, and his work should not be complicated by ill-considered comment at home.

Still, the rapid-fire contradictions and blurtings of our highest officials about both Indo-China and the "new look" in defense have reduced public opinion here practically to a jelly.

A 'New Look' In Confusion

Last Jan. 12, Sec. Dulles stirred up a storm when he talked about this country's "capacity" to retaliate "instantly" and "massively" if Communist forces attacked anywhere.

He also specifically warned that direct intervention by Chinese Communists in Indo-China might provoke our retaliation. He told a congressional committee later that the Reds had already come "close" to that kind of situation.

This blew up an uproar abroad, where American bomber squadrons in Britain, France and elsewhere might obviously be used for "massive" retaliation against Soviet Russia—and also expose Britain and France to retaliatory "massive" Soviet A-bomb raids.

Nixon, Meet Mr. Nixon

On Mar. 13 Vice-Pres. Nixon told the nation that we refused to let the Communists "nibble us to death all over the world in little wars." He repeated Dulles' exact words about relying on "massive retaliation" exercised "at our own discretion at times and places we can choose."

Yet on Apr. 16, Nixon told the American Society of Newspaper Editors that American ground forces "might" have to be sent to Indo-China in the "unlikely" event that the French withdrew. Dulles hastily told key congressmen, again, that French withdrawal was "unlikely"—but he did not say that Nixon had been wrong.

Pres. Eisenhower said as recently as March that this country would not go into a war unless Congress approved it. He also said he couldn't imagine any more unhappy situation than to send American ground forces to fight on the Asian mainland.

Dulles, again rather hastily, said in a news conference that the President, under some circumstances such as an attack on our European allies, could order counter-attack without waiting for Congress.

Eisenhower modified both his own March statement and the Dulles statement by explaining that he wouldn't have to wait for Congress in case this country was attacked; he didn't say anything about counter-attacking to defend our European allies.

Young Mr. Nixon thereupon went to Cincinnati and said in a speech that the Truman policy had been doubly wrong: it paid too little attention to Asia and too much to Europe; and it also failed because of "militarily attempting" to be "strong everywhere" when we were not "strong enough anywhere."

What would the intervention of U. S. ground forces in Indo-China be except an attempt to be "strong" in an area where, militarily, we have never intervened before? How can Nixon's statement be reconciled with the President's March news conference reply about avoiding entanglement on Asia's mainland?

How can Nixon's Apr. 16 statement be reconciled with his March speech emphasizing "massive retaliation" and deploring "nibbling wars"?

A Dangerous Babbling

The one common denominator seems to be an urgent Administration conviction that the Communists cannot be allowed to take over Indo-China—plus a yearning on Eisenhower's part to act constitutionally, if possible in the strictest sense.

Any tyro of a strategist can comprehend that the fall of Indo-China to Red Chinese imperialism would endanger other Southeast Asian countries, with their huge populations and enormous strategic resources of tin, rubber, oil and industrial metals.

But a decision to save Indo-China is not a policy. It is a wish, a thing we desire to achieve. The issue is how we do it.

The babbling of tongues about "massive retaliation," about "intervention," about when the President can do this and that, with or without consultation with our allies, is dangerous nonsense.

The plain fact is that our ground forces are weaker now than a year ago because of the "new look" in defense. The single-handed American threat to retaliate "massively"—which means atomic and hydrogen weapons, if anything, on China proper or the Kremlin—ignores the fact that the world would recoil in horrow if we started burning cities simply because the strain of the cold war had snapped our leaders' nerves.

The tough talk, the contradictions, the retractions and clarifications that have marked the Administration's policy remarks for several months does not make Dulles' job at Geneva any easier.

Moody To Run For Senate

TWO MICHIGAN Democrats who have the confidence of organized labor have announced their candidacies for public office.

Former Sen. Blair Moody announced he will seek the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat now held by Sen. Ferguson (R.), chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee.

Gov. G. Mennen Williams told the voters in a radio and television address that he will seek a fourth term.

Murray Foundation Contributes $100,000 For Israel Labor Center

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE CITY of Elath is a new pioneering community, in the hot, rough Negev desert in southern Israel.

The Negev is scheduled to become one of the great industrial and mining centers of the Republic of Israel. In the center of Elath—the only sizable city for scores of miles around—a new trade union center is being built by Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor.

It will be called the "Philip Murray Labor Center"—thanks to a $100,000 gift presented in New York last week to Histadrut by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, in honor of the deceased CIO president.

The Israeli unions will contribute an equal sum to make the building a truly imposing edifice.

THE CONTRIBUTION was made in the presence of some 3000 friends of Histadrut and members of labor Zionist organizations celebrating their annual Passover "Third Seder" festivities in two big New York hotels on Apr. 19.

Said Emil Rieve, head of the Textile Workers and chairman of the Murray Foundation:

"The Philip Murray Trade Union Center in Israel will be a useful and therefore a symbolic memorial to Philp Murray.

"It will be a building where people may practice democracy—a building where the people of this desert community may build their trade unions, and where they may find rest and recreation.

"To us it seems a perfect memorial to Philip Murray, builder of unions—the good, great man who knew the importance of the 'music in the home' and the spirit of human dignity."

The $100,000 check was formally presented by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey to Moshe Bitan, American representative of Histadrut, and Joseph Schlossberg, head of the National Committee for Labor Israel.

Carey, in presenting the gift, recalled Murray's long friendship with the Israeli people when they were fighting for their independence and when they were seeking recognition and help for their new state.

Carey, who headed the CIO delegation to Israel last summer, noted that Murray was a pioneer in building industrial unions, and he had a strong feeling of attachment to the Jews in their efforts to build and strengthen their democratic unions and their new state in the reclaimed desert areas of the Middle East.

Bitan and Schlossberg predicted that the gift would arouse tremendous enthusiasm among the people of Israel. A cable from Mordecai Namir, general secretary of Histadrut, expressed the organization's "profound appreciation" for the contribution.

Jacob S. Potofsky, head of the Clothing Workers and the CIO International Committee, recalled numerous efforts by Murray to help Histadrut and the people of Israel generally.

"In every land where men and women are free, the name of Philip Murray is a shining symbol of hope and inspiration," Potofsky said.

Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers read the formal scroll presented to Histadrut and voiced his own pleasure at the gift. Others taking part in the ceremony were Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers and Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel and director of the Foundation.

Goldberg compared the democratic ideals of Histadrut to those of the CIO and its late president — and predicted the Murray Trade Union Center at Elath would be a lasting symbol of the friendly relations between American and Israeli trade unions.

Contributions

Gifts totaling $265,000 have already been made by the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation, and other presentations will be announced in forthcoming weeks.

Contributions made so far are: American Association for the United Nations, $15,000; Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C., $150,000; and Histadrut Trade Union Center, $100,000.

CIO Sets Capital Rally In Fight To Save Jobs

WITH UNEMPLOYMENT "a bitter reality for thousands of CIO members in every industrial community in the nation," the CIO Executive Board will convene a national full-employment conference in Washington on May 11-12.

Approximately 300 representatives of international unions, state and city CIO councils are expected to attend sessions in the Hotel Washington ballroom.

Reports will be presented on the unemployment situation in every part of the country based on information gathered just before the delegates arrive in the capital.

The spotlight will be focused on the mounting tide of lost jobs and idle workers and the Administration's failure to act in the face of increasing danger signals.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said the conference was being called "to drive home the serious nature of the present economic situation and the necessity for action now."

THE URGENCY of CIO's demand for effective governmental economic action was underscored by a Census Bureau report last week showing that:

1. The level of "partial unemployment"—that is, the number of workers working less than 40 hours a week—is multiplying rapidly. As of the week ending Mar. 13, when the government counted 3,725,000 workers as unemployed, there were some 2,500,000 non-farm workers employed part-time. This included workers normally employed less than 35 hours a week and some 800,000 who "wanted and could have accepted" full time jobs.

2. The duration of unemployment is increasing. In March, more than one million workers had been jobless for 15 or more weeks. That was an increase of 400,000 from the month before.

QUESTIONNAIRES have been sent to state and local councils to compile statistics more up-to-date and realistic than those supplied by government agencies. Local councils have been asked to check on employment figures now and a year ago, the number employed part-time, and the trend of public relief rolls and other pertinent data.

CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, who heads the CIO Economic Policy Committee, will be the opening chairman at the conference.

The first day's sessions will include speeches by Administration and political figures. The second day will be spent by the delegates on Capitol Hill talking with congressmen and seeking implementation of CIO's 10-point program for a healthier economy.

THE PROGRAM was drafted by the Executive Board several weeks ago to stop recession and restore prosperity to America. Briefly the program calls for:

Higher personal income tax exemptions, a $1.25 minimum wage, higher wages, improved unemployment compensation, an expanded housing program, better social security, a strengthened farm program, credit aid to small business, a big-scale public works program, and state and local plans for insuring the benefits of the broad measures will reach all the people.

The optimism of Labor Sec. Mitchell that the "first break" in rising unemployment had been reached was swiftly deflated last week when "a clerical error" was discovered.

This changed a drop in jobless insurance claims to a sharp rise. New claims jumped by 49,100 to a total of 387,903 in the week ended Apr. 10.

Three new "substantial unemployment" areas were added to the Labor Dept. list last week: Jackson, Ann Arbor-Ypsilanti, Mich., and the Iron Mountain region of Michigan and Wisconsin.

The Labor Dept. reported nonfarm employment declined by 130,000 in March.

Quite A Gap

There's quite a gap between GOP promises and GOP performance, according to this Christian Science Monitor report.

"Tim Bright, Maryland's only candidate so far for the Republican nomination for governor, gave the City Wide Women's Republican Club his definition of the '100% prosperity' he favors.

"'I want chicken legs raining around this state like a snowstorm in Chicago,' he said. 'I want turkey gravy dripping out of your mouths like Niagara Falls. I want you to have porterhouse steaks for breakfast.'

"After Mr. Bright's speech, the audience was served hot dogs and lemonade."

Worker Ends Year $1700 In The Red, New Heller Budget Survey Reveals

THERE IS a gap of more than $1700 between the average worker's salary and a decent family budget for the year.

The revised budget of the Heller Committee for Research in Social Economics of the University of California for an average worker with three dependents shows he needs more than $5400.

The current average weekly wage of the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows he earns about $3600 a year—if he works 52 weeks.

Hence, he ends the year more than $1700 under standard.

The committee's budget for a California wage earner with three dependents is $5405.21. Based on the Bureau of Labor Statistics' current average weekly wage in manufacturing, his yearly earnings are $3667.56. There is a gap of $1737.65.

Biggest items in the budget are: Food, $1620; rent, $818; transportation, $527; medical care, $378; insurance, $215; house furnishings, $212; recreation, $203; personal care, $95, and tobacco, reading, education, union dues, gifts, contributions and miscellaneous, $271.

The Heller budget is designed to show the cost of goods and services "that current opinion currently recognizes as necessary to health and reasonably comfortable living."

In bringing the budget up to date—September 1953—the committee made no change in the definition of the living standard to be measured.

The committee said that the discrepancy between the budget and earnings "is inherent in the difference between the standard and the general level of living."

The committee based its budget on items necessary for a wage earner, his wife, a 13-year-old boy and an eight-year-old girl.

If the worker is buying his home, he would end the year almost $2100 in the red—for his housing costs would jump from some $800 for rent to some $1100 for home payments.

2000 Idle Sign Job Petitions

About 2000 of the estimated 10,000 jobless workers in Lehigh County, Pa., have signed a petition urging Gov. John S. Fine to call a special session of the Pennsylvania Legislature to boost unemployment compensation benefits.

Coming Home To Roost

Chickens have a way of coming home to roost and predictions have a way of coming true. In 1950, the CIO convention warned that private home builders had influenced housing legislation and "infiltrated" the housing agencies to "build a pipeline into the federal treasury."

In 1952, Walter Reuther warned a congressional committee about "profiteering" in the private home industry and called the over-elaborate safeguards for the mortgage bankers a kind of "inverted socialism." "Park Avenue Union League Club socialism" is the way he described a $900 million aid fund for the bankers.

Reuther was making a plea for low-income housing. The present messy scandals that have broken over the Administration's head involve the Federal Housing Administration. They do not involve low-rent public housing built for those who cannot afford to build for themselves. It revolves around the biggest kind of real estate operators, bankers and builders—the kind that built the Treasury pipeline CIO warned against four years ago.

When the Republicans were thundering against corruption in government and keying their campaign pitch to this issue, CIO noted that for every corrupted official there has to be a corrupter. Those corrupters often turn out to be businessmen and bankers, as in the present housing scandals. Some chickens have already come home to roost.

The Bitter Realities

With more candor than other Administration officials have demonstrated on the nation's economic situation, Sec. of Labor Mitchell quickly retracted his report of "the first break in the unemployment trend that began last fall."

Rather than declining, as Mitchell first reported, new claims for unemployment compensation benefits now are going up sharply. The weekly figure has increased by almost 100,000 in the past month. And the increase for the week ending Apr. 10 amounted to 14.5%.

This continuing deterioration of the U. S. economy comes at a time when the Republicans promised prosperity would come in with spring and the robins. But the "bitter realities," as CIO says, are mass unemployment for millions of American workers and partial unemployment for millions more.

Next month, CIO's national full-employment conference will be held in Washington, to chart a realistic course for full recovery. It's time the Administration started acting.

A Living Memorial

Philip Murray, throughout his lifetime, proved his friendship, sympathy and devotion to the men and women building that citadel of democracy in the Near East—Israel. Thus it is fitting, that in the pioneer city of the Negev, now being built in the midst of the Israeli desert, the name of Philip Murray will continue to live.

There a Philip Murray Labor Center will be built at Elath, the focal point of Histadrut trade union activities. The trustees of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation chose well when they contributed $100,000 toward this new structure.

This labor center will be, as CIO Sec-Treas. James B. Carey said, "truly a living memorial to the belief in democracy and humanity of one of the great men of our era —the late Philip Murray."

The House That 'Jack' Built

In Other Words—

Teach Children The Price Of Freedom

The American heritage of civil liberty would be held in higher esteem if school children learned at what a price it was won, according to Claude G. Bowers, historian and U. S. diplomat. He also set forth a creed for Americans desirous of preserving that heritage in an address, part of which follows.

By CLAUDE G. BOWERS

I HAVE THE FEELING that too many school histories for the instruction of our youth are not quite responsive to the needs of our time. The young people learn about the settlement in Jamestown, about the Revolution, about our various wars and their heroes, but the more vital things in American history that show how we came to have a democracy, and our freedoms, find too meagre treatment.

There is an abundance about our triumphs in war and our material progress in peace, but about that democracy, for which so many American boys have died, there is much too little.

Therefore youth grows up with the fallacious notion that the blessings we enjoy descend upon us like manna from heaven and without a struggle, and that our free institutions have never been challenged since the adoption of the Constitution.

In this day of mortal combat against ideologies it is not enough that the oncoming generation should be against something; to give meaning to their opposition they must be for something. When and if it has to march against the hammer and sickle we want it to have a banner of its own.

The Stalins, Hitlers and Mussolinis, in their fight for the souls of men, took the child at its impressionable age and poisoned its mind with their lies. It is our duty to teach the child what democracy means, how it came to us, and how it may be destroyed.

I submit that the school histories should stress the creed of the American way of life or they fail in a primary function; and that this creed should be impressed upon the minds of the oncoming generation. This creed is simple:

We believe that democracy charts the American way of life.

That means we believe in the freedom of the press.

That means we believe in the freedom of speech, the right to think out loud without fear.

That we believe in intellectual freedom, the freedom of the human spirit.

That we believe in the Bill of Rights, and that whittling away any part of it reduces by that much the protection of the people against the abuse of power.

That we believe that a police state is an abomination in the eyes of God.

That we believe that the public school house is the advance post in the defense of our institutions, and that the startling if not subversive belittling of the public schools, the prevalent slashing of their appropriations, that prevalent denial of their budgetary needs and the fashionable sneers at them today is undermining the bastions of American defense.

That we believe in the unification of all free nations to meet the menace of communism, and that it is an utter stupidity to say that we shall need no allies if a world war comes.

Peace, But No Compromise

That we believe in peace as long as it can be maintained without compromising one of the democratic ideals or rights; but rather than submit to the chains of slavery, to the crushing of the human spirit, to the silencing of the thoughts of men, and the degradation of the dignity of man, we shall be prepared to fight to the last man and the last dollar.

That is the American creed for which so many American boys have died. It is not enough that American youth should hate communism and fascism; it is necessary that it should love something—love and understand those elemental principles embodied in American democracy which stand for liberty, decency and human rights, and is the guardian of our freedom.

We despise communism because it aims at the destruction of our freedoms and the American way of life that we live; let us be on our guard lest in moments of hysteria we sacrifice the things we hate.

That would be the supreme Moscow triumph.

40 Years of Moving Forward

Climbing from sweatshops to security, the ACWA looks ahead.

(Next month the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers will hold their 40th convention at Atlantic City. On the anniversary, here is a photo-review of the ACWA's 40 years of moving forward—The Editor.)

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

NOT SO MANY years ago, it was a common sight in the garment districts of New York City, Chicago and other big clothing centers to see women tottering along the sidewalks balancing on their heads huge bundles of men's clothes which they were taking to their tenement homes to finish. Or to see pale, spindly-legged small boys bent under similar staggering loads.

It took very little capital in those early years for a sweatshop boss to go into the clothing business.

"An unscrupulous contractor regards no basement as too dark, no stable loft too foul, no rear shanty too provisional, no tenement room too small for his workroom, as these conditions imply low rental," Jane Addams, of Hull House in Chicago, testified in 1910.

And labor was plentiful and cheap, for great numbers of recent European immigrants from Italy, Poland, Lithuania, Russia were desperately in need of jobs. Many of them were women and girls with some sewing skill who worked from dawn to dark in dirty, cramped shops for $2.50 to $3 a week.

Worse For Home Work

Conditions were even worse for those who took work home.

"They and their children, and sometimes the neighbor's children, would work throughout the long hours of the day and late into the night without rest," wrote an organizer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the early Twenties, in describing the system the union had been fighting to wipe out.

"All through New York and through other clothing centers, women whipped by hunger worked at a desperate rate of speed on pants and coats. They scarcely stopped for death, they scarcely stopped for birth, but that the children and the family might eat of the coarsest food they worked 16 and 18 hours a day.

"Babies of five and six picked basttings, babies of six and seven sewed on buttons. Little boys and girls would be taught to use the needle at the age of eight or nine. When they were 10 or 11 they would be in the shop.

"There are men and women today working the trade who would tell you that they never knew what childhood was. As their minds stretch back into their early days, all they can remember is sitting in a crowded room sewing and everlastingly sewing. And when they fell asleep and nodded with exhaustion over their work they were jogged awake by someone's foot."

The Pipe-Stem Legs

A New York school teacher, telling about an investigation of malnutrition of school children in 1910, said: "When I see a pair of pipe-stem legs and sallow cheeks and I ask that child what his father does, nine times out of 10 he answers, 'a tailor'."

Although conditions in those years were worse in the many small fly-by-night "outside" contract shops, with their cut-throat competition, even in the large "inside" manufacturing plants of the major employers wages were low, hours long and jobs insecure.

The companies refused to recognize the union, then the AFL United Garment Workers, and fought fiercely against the organization of their employes. The UGW with its weak, hesitant policies was no match for them.

A Change For The Better . . .

What a difference the years—and a strong union—make for the nation's clothing workers.

These historical photos recall the origin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, which soon will hold its 40th annual convention.

At top, "the march of the 40,000 strikers" in Chicago in 1910. At left, a woman worker carries a bundle of clothes for homework. In contrast, below, a clothing factory of today.

There were many long, bitter strikes in the early years, some called by the union, some spontaneous walkouts of unorganized workers. In New York, for instance, some 20,000 non-union workers struck in 1910, and 60,000 walked out in 1912, staying on strike for two months in spite of bitter cold, police violence, injunctions and scarcely any funds.

Killed By Her Boss

One of the most brutal strikes in the clothing workers' history took place in Rochester, N. Y., in 1913, when 13,000 tailors held out for 14 weeks before their strike was broken. It was during this struggle that a young woman who tried to lead the workers out of her shop was killed by her boss.

And in 1914, a bitter strike occurred at the Sonneborn Co. in Baltimore, then one of the four largest clothing plants in the country, employing 3000 workers.

With one exception, these and other early strikes which took place before the Amalgamated was formed yielded little or no immediate gains for the workers. But they played an important part in the union's later progress, for one thing by exposing the weakness and indifference of the UGW to the unhappy lot of the sweated clothing workers.

The exception was the famous strike of 1910 against Hart, Schaffner & Marx, leading Chicago clothing firm. In a way it wasn't an exception, for the strike was lost as far as immediate issues went, but out of it came an agreement in January 1911 setting up machinery for the impartial settlement of labor disputes in the clothing industry that became one of the great historic events in labor history.

The 1910 strike, which began with a few girl workers protesting against a reduction in piece rates, turned into a general strike of some 40,000 clothing workers known as "the revolt of the Chicago tailors." The event marked the beginning of the upswing in the unionization of the men's clothing industry and was an important factor in the formation of the Amalgamated a few years later.

Bitter strikes and lockouts marked formative years of the clothing union.

"The strike was lost, but an organization was won," is the way a union statement summarizes the outcome of the 1910 struggle.

Union Born In Strife

Dissatisfaction with the way the UGW officials were conducting the union's affairs came to a head at its 18th biennial convention held in Nashville, Tenn., in October 1914. Seats were refused to most of the New York delegation as well as to delegates from some other clothing centers.

A large group of delegates joined by the powerful Chicago delegation, which had been seated, bolted the UGW convention and met in another hall, declaring themselves the union's proper legislative body.

The insurgents unanimously elected Sidney Hillman president and Joseph Schlossberg, of the New York group, general secretary-treasurer.

Right from the start plans were made to organize the men's clothing workers on an industrial basis to eliminate the craft rivalries that had divided them under the UGW setup.

The new union, named the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, was launched officially at a special convention in New York on Dec. 26, 1914. Delegates representing 40,000 workers in the major clothing centers attended.

Stormy Years Ahead

Many stormy times and setbacks lay ahead for the new Amalgamated but it continued to grow steadily in numbers and influence, coming out of all its ordeals stronger than ever. Almost before the ink was dry on its new constitution, the Amalgamated was confronted in January 1915 with a lockout by New York manufacturers who hoped to nip the new union in the bud. But within a month, the employers were forced to back down.

Their continued sniping, however, brought on a major strike in July when thousands of workers walked out. Outmaneuvered by the union's tactics, the employers settled in three days, but they tried repeatedly to evade and violate all agreements, still hopeful of breaking the union, and during the next few years there were many stoppages.

In 1920-21 came the terrible New York lockout — part of a national wave of anti-unionism. Clothing bosses in Boston and Baltimore locked out their employes at the same time and the union was in a fight for its very life.

The New York lockout turned into a strike and 60,000 workers were on the streets for almost six months. The struggle ended in June 1921 with a compromise agreement in which the employers conceded a union shop and the re-establishment of arbitration machinery. The lockout cost the union $2 million.

In spite of these and many other bitter struggles in its earlier years, the Amalgamated continued to advance until all the major clothing markets were organized. Philadelphia, the last anti-union holdout, was organized in 1929.

Since then there have been no major strikes in the men's clothing industry.

ACWA Led Way On Benefi

THE STORY of how the workers in the men's clothing and allied industries pulled themselves up by their union from the sweatshop to the good living most of them enjoy today doesn't end with their strike struggles.

Less exciting but just as important is the account of what they gained by their toil and trouble.

The two stories are entwined in fact, for even during the intense years of its big strikes, the ACWA, while fighting for higher wages, shorter hours and better working conditions, had already started on certain projects to promote the general welfare of the members, revolutionary at that time.

Plans drawn at the 1920 convention set in action programs that were later to develop far beyond the dreams of the delegates.

Banks Established

● Unemployment, which plagued seasonal industries particularly, was one of the first things tackled.

In 1923, a fund to provide unemployment benefits, to which both workers and employers contributed, was set up in Chicago. A few years later similar plans were started in New York City and Rochester. After the government unemployment compensation started in '38, the plan was discontinued, and in Chicago was converted into a health and life insurance fund.

● Plans to establish labor banks were carried out when the Amalgamated Trust and Savings Bank was set up in Chicago in 1922, and the Amalgamated Bank of New York opened in 1923.

The depression of the 30's showed how well they succeeded, for both banks held firm and suffered no "runs" although some of the country's biggest collapsed.

Start Co-op Housing

● A cooperative housing program started when the ACWA's first big apartment building was constructed in 1927 in New York City's Bronx. In 1930 the first of a group of units was built on the East Side on land reclaimed from the slums. Today more than 2500 families live in cooperative, low-rent buildings constructed at a cost of $22 million.

● Industrywide collective bargaining, a much discussed subject in recent years, was a gleam in the Amalgamated's eye as far back as 1919. But it wasn't until 1933, when a national clothing manufacturers' association was formed in connection with the NRA clothing code, that the idea had a chance.

The relationship developed between the union and the industry under the code was the forerunner of the industrywide collective bargaining that became a reality in 1937, making the Amalgamated the first union to obtain it.

"YOUR PLACE is in your union," ACWA members proclaimed back in the union-building years, as in this 1915 strike parade in Chicago.

THEN—Before the union, youngsters trudged under clothing loads.

Since then all major issues have been worked out by representatives of the Amalgamated and the Clothing Manufacturers' Association, and then voted on by their memberships. At first the terms reached were translated into market and local agreements, but since 1952 there has been a standard national men's clothing contract covering basic terms applicable on a national scale. Local issues are left to the areas involved.

● Industrywide bargaining later made possible a comprehensive social insurance system providing workers with (1) life and health insurance and (2) retirement benefits paid for by the employers.

The distinctive feature of the plan is that it is administered on an industrywide basis, under a policy of reciprocity among manufacturers whose workers are employed in ACW-organized shops.

Workers can move not only from one shop to another in the industry and still be covered, but they can also move from one division to another, or from one city to another, without losing their insurance rights.

Instead of buying insurance from outside concerns, the union set up two insurance companies of its own, thus saving commissions and other fees and giving the largest possible benefits to the workers.

Operate Insurance Funds

The Amalgamated Life Insurance Co., Inc., chartered in New York, functions on a nationwide basis. It started paying death and disability benefits in 1944. The Amalgamated Life and Health Insurance Co. of Chicago, chartered in 1938, covers workers in that area.

Under the life and health insurance program, workers receive benefits for death, disability, hospitalization, and surgical and maternity cases. Benefits were increased and extended as funds grew. In 1953, the health insurance program was extended to cover not only the worker but also his family.

The retirement section of the program was started in 1945 in the men's clothing branch and during the next few years spread rapidly to other branches of the industry. Employers contribute 3% of their payrolls into retirement funds.

Age of retirement is 65, but this is voluntary. Employes may keep their jobs as long as they are able and care to work.

● Another step to advance the welfare of its members was taken by setting up two modernly-equipped health centers. The Sidney Hillman Health Center in New York, established in a remodeled building bought with a million-dollar fund contributed jointly by the union and the employers, was opened in April 1951.

A second Hillman Health Center was opened in Philadelphia in 1951 in a new $2 million building constructed with funds from the union and employers. The center provides comprehensive diagnostic and specialists' services to ambulatory patients. It is noted for its clinic of physical medicine, its public health department, and its educational program.

Before the end of the year, a third health center will be ready for operation in Chicago in a section of the present Amalgamated Center now being remodeled and equipped for medical purposes. A million-dollar center for the laundry division workers in New York also will soon be ready.

Altogether the ACWA's four medical centers will provide out-patient medical service for some 100,000 members.

ALTHOUGH the CIO itself is only 18 years old, it has some affiliates that can boast of being much older than their parent organization. Among these is the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, which is celebrating its 40th birthday this year.

The ACWA was born at a convention in Nashville, Tenn., on Oct. 13, 1914, after the majority of the membership of the old AFL United Garment Workers had seceded because of dissatisfaction with the UGW's do-nothing policies. It was christened at a special convention held Dec. 26, 1914, in New York City.

Besides being one of the CIO's oldest unions, the Clothing Workers can claim ancestors on a family tree rooted far back in American labor history.

As early as 1768, according to Richard B. Morris' "Government and Labor in Early America," some 20 tailors in New York protested a wage cut by going on strike.

Tailors' strikes in Baltimore in 1795, 1805 and 1807 are mentioned in various labor histories and tailors' unions are reported in Philadelphia, New York and Boston in 1806. In that period, tailors' union were born, died in infancy, or were reorganized a year or more later with confusingly similar names, so that it is hard sometimes to tell from the scant information available whether a union was brand new or reorganized.

Records of several tailors' unions appear in the 1860's. The journeymen Tailors Protective and Benevolent Union was formed in 1862. Others formed in that period which had brief lives included the Journeymen Tailors National Union and the National Union of Tailors.

The Knights of Labor started in 1869 with a group of garment cutters in Philadelphia, but these affiliated as individuals and not by crafts. In 1883, also at Philadelphia, five locals formed the Journeymen Tailors National Union of the U. S., and the following year met in Chicago with 11 locals represented.

Continuous organization in the men's clothing industry dates from the 1880's. The United Brotherhood of Tailors, formed in 1886, survived until ACWA was organized. The Journeymen Tailors Union, part of the AFL, became part of ACWA in 1936.

The Amalgamated had rejoined the AFL in 1933 but was among the first unions to help found the CIO in 1936.

Bills To Hit Back At Recession Offered By FDR Jr., Howell

TWO SEPARATE bills proposing major attacks on recession and unemployment have been introduced in the House by Reps. Roosevelt (D.-Lib. N.Y.) and Howell (D. N.J.).

Roosevelt's measure, entitled the "Anti-Recession Act of 1954," runs to 300 pages. It would overhaul existing legislation in a dozen fields to increase consumer purchasing power and consumption in the lower income groups.

Howell's bill would authorize a greatly expanded federal public works program through assistance to state and local governments. It would create a new Economic Readjustment Administration to run the undertaking.

CITING current figures showing almost four million unemployed, Roosevelt pointed out that an additional 2.5 million workers have "recently suffered reductions in their weekly earnings through either reduced hours of available work or lowered hourly rates." He added:

"Steel production has decreased almost 40%; industrial production has dropped 4%; building construction in the Midwest is off 31%; $9 billion of farm assets have been liquidated; income from wages is going down at a rate of $6 billion per year; farm parity has dropped from 99% to 91%."

Top Problem

Unemployment is the biggest problem facing most sections of the country, the Gallup Poll revealed last week.

Even the threat of war took a back seat to dwindling jobs in the New England, Middle Atlantic, East Central and Far West sections. Only in the rural West Central states and the South was unemployment nosed out of No. One spot as the voters' chief concern.

Roosevelt said it is the government's "inescapable obligation" to plan a comprehensive program to avoid a major recession.

Among the Anti-Recession Bill's proposals for increasing consumer purchasing power are:

- An increase in personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $800 this year and to $1000 in future years.
- A boost in the minimum wage from 75c to "at least" $1.25 an hour, and broader coverage.
- Extension of unemployment compensation coverage and a boost in the maximum benefit to two-thirds the individual's average weekly wage or two-thirds the average in covered employment within the state, whichever is lower, provided that the maximum benefit shall never be less than $30 per week.
- Strengthened social security, including expanded coverage and benefits, and provision for permanent and total disability.
- A greatly stepped-up housing program, including construction of 135,000 public housing units a year; aid for middle income housing, slum clearance and housing research.

OTHER sections of Roosevelt's measure call for continuation of high farm price supports and creation of a Committee on Farm Policy with farmer and labor representation; hydroelectric power development with consumer safeguards, and an accelerated federal public works program.

Projects authorized under the Howell bill include schools, hospitals, housing and urban renewal, roads, conservation and flood control projects, water and sewer facilities, public parks, airports and educational and cultural facilities. Aid would be in a ratio of $45 of federal assistance for every $55 of state or local funds.

Interest Climbs In PAC Dollar Campaign

THERE'S MORE interest in the PAC voluntary dollar drive than at any time in the past, PAC Comptroller George Rettinger reports.

At the same time, he passes along a pair of successful methods for collecting voluntary PAC bucks that have been reported to the PAC office.

With Dist. 1 of the CIO Oil Workers, the key to making the job easy is "decentralization," Dir. Charles F. Armin said. Membership in local unions was broken down by departments, with a further breakdown of lists of not more than 20 names.

One man on the list was then asked to contact the other 19 and solicit contributions. The point was, Armin said, nobody was overloaded and the job asked of each person was small enough so he realized he could do it within a short period of time.

THE TEXAS State PAC, while emphasizing that the collection of PAC dollars is the function and responsibility of international unions, recommended calling a special shop stewards' meeting in advance of the drive. Questions are answered and literature is distributed at this meeting.

Then each PAC collector gets a list of names of people in his department, enough PAC receipts for those on the list, and material to pass out. He contacts each person, gets his current address, asks whether his poll taxes are paid and asks for a contribution to PAC.

Small Boy's Pain Brings Response From Ohio Labor

A SMALL BOY'S bady disfigured face and the concern of Canton, O., union members for his plight resulted in a new area of united labor action in that steel-making town.

CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood members chipped in to raise $5000 to pay for the plastic surgery the youngster needed.

Then they went on to establish the Plastic Surgery Fund of Organized Labor of Canton to receive voluntary contributions from union members to aid similar cases involving families of union workers. Herb Secker of CIO Steelworkers Local 1123 heads the CIO committee.

UPA Urges PAC Work To Save Jobs

THE CIO Paperworkers have called the business recession "an object lesson to all of the critical need for a greater and stronger political action program."

UPA-CIO's general executive board opened the union's PAC campaign with a letter to every UPA-CIO local calling for "more in '54" to support efforts to get the facts on unemployment, taxes, social security and other key issues before the public.

With such paper industry centers as Muskegon and Monroe, Mich., and Covington, Va., hard hit by unemployment, the UPA-CIO board called attention to "legislative developments since '52 and their subsequent economic effects."

Wagner's Murray Award Given For Social Study

THE $10,000 Philip Murray Award made to the late Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D. N. Y.) in 1948 has been turned over to Columbia University to stimulate interest in labor's role in the field of social welfare.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, spoke last week at the presentation of the check to the New York School of Social Work, a Columbia unit. The check was awarded to Sen. Wagner for his life-long interest on behalf of labor legislation, social security and community welfare. His son, Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York City, made the presentation.

As the award was made "to stimulate leadership" in the fields in which his father was so notable, Mayor Wagner decided to present it to the school for the training of professional social workers. The fund, which was named for the Senator, will establish fellowships for studies for masters' and doctorate degrees in social work.

RECEIPIENTS of the fellowships will study the community of interest between organized labor and the field of social welfare.

Beirne told the gathering at the presentation that "through the establishment of the Sen. Robert F. Wagner Fellowship scholarships, the skills and techniques, the knowledge and understanding of the social work profession can be more widely spread and more intelligently applied."

FTC Finds Big Business Is Growing Even Bigger

ECONOMIC concentration in U. S. manufacturing was 2.8 percentage points higher in 1950 than it was 15 years before, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

The FTC reported to Congress that a study showed the 200 top national firms did a greater share of the nation's business in the decade and a half covered by the study than all the rest. Concentration was up in some industries, down in others, while some showed no significant change.

Although the number of manufacturing companies increased from 200,000 in 1935 to 300,000 in 1950, the FTC found that the 200 largest firms accounted for a larger proportion of the value of product turned out than did the 200 largest concerns in 1935.

The first five companies improved their positions eight-tenths of 1% to 11.4%, based on the total value of product, between 1935 and 1950. There was a four-tenths of 1% improvement to 26.2% for the first 50 companies, and a gain of nine-tenths of 1% for the first 100 companies to account for 33.3% of the value of all manufactured products.

THERE WERE 16 industries with 1950 shipments exceeding $500 million each for which the four leading employers in 1950 can be compared with that in 1935. The findings for some of these firms which show an increase in the percentage of their employes to all workers in the industry include: tin cans and other tinware, 7%; malt liquors, 10%; blast furnaces, 25%, and paperboard boxes, 3%.

Industries where the percentage of employes lessened included: cigarettes, 9%; photographic equipment, 19%; shortening and cooking oils, 11%; tires and inner tubes, 1%.

STARTLING FIGURES on unemployment in the Nation's Capital are discussed by a panel at District of Columbia CIO Council Community Services Institute. From left, John L. CIO Offers 8-Point Program As Health Insurance Stopgap

THOUSANDS of Americans "are dying and suffering unnecessarily" every day because Congress has stalled the passage of important health legislation, the CIO told the Senate Subcommittee on Health last week.

The delay, according to a statement by CIO Vice Pres. Joseph N. Curran, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, is due to the lobbying of powerful insurance interests and medical organizations.

Curran's testimony was presented in his absence because of illness by Mrs. Katherine P. Ellickson, CIO associate research director and secretary of the Social Security Committee.

As a result of delays generated by lobbying, Curran said, America "is acting like a patient who puts off going to the doctor when he knows he should."

"The longer he waits," he added, "the greater the need and the higher the price."

National health insurance, which the CIO favors, "is not socialized medicine since it does not increase direct provision of medical services by the government," Curran emphasized.

"NATIONAL HEALTH insurance would preserve the free choice of doctors and patients," he said. "It would promote efficient provision of medical services and high quality of care. One of its main virtues is that it would remove the financial barrier which now keeps patients from going to the doctor.

"By encouraging preventive medicine, it would tend to hold down total medical costs as well as to avoid illness and premature death. It would avoid a means test, paying benefits as a matter of right."

If Congress is not willing to recommend national health insurance, said Curran, who also is president of the CIO Maritime Union, it should adopt the following eight-point program:

1. "An aid to medical education bill so that we may have more doctors, nurses and other medical personnel."

2. A bill "to aid state and local public health service units."

3. Appropriation of "larger sums for medical research."

4. Increased appropriations for "construction of hospitals and other medical facilities" up to the full $150 million authorized by the Hill-Burton Act.

5. Realistic aid to the development of voluntary medical care insurance.

6. Authorization of "loans to cooperatives and other nonprofit groups" as provided in the bill introduced by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

7. "Follow the less satisfactory but perhaps helpful course of federal insurance of mortgage loans."

8. Authorize grants to nonprofit medical care plans "to enable them to experiment with overcoming two of their greatest deficiencies: failure to provide comprehensive services, and difficulty in reaching low-income groups."

ACTING Dir. James Brindle of the CIO Auto Workers Social Security Dept., told the subcommittee that the Administration is left with a "residual . . . program which is indeed meagre" because of the "burial" of the Ives-Flanders-Javits Bill by Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), a co-sponsor.

The bill, "despite some weaknesses," would have invested about $800 million a year in a "positive" health program, he said. He quoted the Washington Report on the Medical Sciences as laying Ives' withdrawal of the measure to "strong pressure . . . exerted . . . by the White House and the office of Sec. Hobby" of the Health, Education and Welfare Dept.

Brindle described the killing of the bill as "the last in a series of retreats from the principles enunciated" in Pres. Eisenhower's health message to Congress last Jan. 18. The Administration bill, he added, does not qualify as "moving us measurably" towards the national health goals the President set.

Dr. Morris Brand, medical director of the CIO Clothing Workers' Sidney Hillman Medical Center in New York City, called on Congress to end "repetitious and costly surveys" and "start building a healthier America." The recent curtailment of funds for health services, he warned, while showing economy now may ultimately "prove costlier in the lack of a healthy citizenry."

Hucksters

In his statements before the Senate Subcommittee on Health, CIO Vice Pres. Joseph N. Curran tartly wondered if Pres. Eisenhower is "scared of huckster slogans about 'socialized medicine' after a lifetime in the Army."

"Are the members of Congress scared by the false use of the words, 'socialized medicine'," he asked, "when many of them make use of the fine facilities of the U. S. Naval Hospital in Bethesda (Md.) and the Walter Reed Hospital?"

CIO Rally Seeks Jobless Aid For Workers in Nation's Capital

By FRED ROSS

WASHINGTON, like most industrial centers, faces a major problem—growing unemployment.

There were an estimated 35,500 jobless persons in February in the Washington area, which includes four counties in adjacent Maryland and Virginia.

The first annual Community Services Institute of the District of Columbia CIO Council considered these official figures which were issued by the U. S. Employment Service for the District.

The service warned that unemployment may rise to 6% of the work force, which would entitle it to special consideration in the awarding of government contracts.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who spoke to an audience that overflowed the hall, called for government action where the community is unable to meet problems like unemployment.

John L. Monaghan, Washington director of the CIO Comunications Workers, urged Congress to up the District's unemployment compensation benefits and to increase their duration to 39 weeks.

The employment service estimate on unemployment was based on the decline in the number of employed persons—39,400 fewer in February than a year earlier.

Washington's biggest industry—the federal government—showed the greatest drop. A decline of 25,600 U. S. employes was only partially offset by an increase of 2000 workers in state and local governments in the same period.

MONAGHAN in a panel discussion also called for an immediate start on Washington's multimillion dollar public works program. Other participants were Fred Z. Hetzel, area director of the U. S. Employment Service, and Frank G. Preston, chief of Benefits Dept., D. C. Unemployment Compensation Board.

Monaghan pointed out that while weekly benefits are only $20, including a dependency allowance, the average weekly benefit paid in 1953 was even lower—$18.27. This put it in the lowest bracket compared to the states.

Monaghan recalled that Pres. Eisenhower had urged that maximum benefits be raised so that payments may equal at least half of the regular earnings. (In the district the 1953 benefit averaged 26.5% of the average weekly wage.)

THE CWA director recalled that the Federal Advisory Council of the Bureau of Employment Security recommended that the maximum be increased to at least three-fifth to two-thirds of the average weekly earnings.

He said that the District CIO joined with the President and the advisory council in urging that the maximum benefit be raised to reasonable levels and that adequate provisions be made for dependents.

Monaghan said that the District's maximum payment period of 20 weeks "is again below par," since more than half the states have benefits for 26 weeks.

He further urged that all employment by employers of one or more workers be covered, as recommended by the 20th National Conference on Labor Legislation, which met in Washington in February.

He said that the act covering the district "is comparatively liberal as to penalties but it was "unfortunate that the (District) Uemployment Compensation Board did not report on the number of disqualifications."

On Bottom

The Nation's Capital is at the bottom of the list in unemployment compensation benefits. The present weekly payment in the District of Columbia is only $20, including dependency allowance.

This is the lowest paid in 48 states, Alaska and Hawaii. Only Florida, Texas and South Carolina have the same low rate.

More U. S. Ship Use Urged For Overseas Aid Cargoes

MARITIME union and shipping management representatives have agreed to support a bill to require American ships to carry from 50 to 100% of foreign economic and military aid cargoes.

The agreement was reached by the Conference of American Maritime Unions, which represents CIO and AFL, maritime affiliates of the Mine Workers, and management representatives of the Conference of Maritime Labor and Management.

This is a victory for the CAMU, which was formed last January to lift the shipping industry from its "deep depression."

However, Maritime Administrator Rothschild several weeks ago issed a policy "liberalizing" the transfer of U. S. ships to foreign flags, an action which is naturally opposed by the CAMU.

"WE ARE STILL fighting to stop the transfer of our ships to runaway flags," said Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, which is a member of the CAMU.

The agreement with the shipping management representatives was reported at a recent CAMU meeting. At that time it also was reported that CAMU was continuing to fight the efforts of the Eisenhower Administration to cut Marine Hospital appropriations and to get congressional action to legalize maritime union hiring halls.

N. Y. Council Elects Quill

PRES. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers was reelected president of the New York CIO Council without opposition last week.

Sec.-Treas. Morris Iushewitz, of the CIO Newspaper Guild, also was returned to office for another term without an opponent.

Earlier reports had indicated that candidates would run against both officers, but opposition dissipated after a call for unity by Louis Hollander, co-manager of the New York Joint Board of the CIO Clothing Workers and president of the New York State CIO Council.

The three vice presidents of the 500,000-member council were unanimously reelected. They are Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the CIO Maritime Union: Reg. Dir. Patrick J. McGrath of the CIO Utility Workers, and Vice Pres. Murray Weinstein of the ACWA-CIO.

Tar Heel TWUA Meeting Handles Town Affairs

READERS of novels dealing with the old West know that when violence erupted suddenly and the villain was brought to book, the town saloon often underwent a quick change to a bar of justice.

In Brookford, N. C., the CIO Textile Workers have worked out a modern, more refined switch. A meeting for TWUA-CIO Local 1006 whose members work in one of the Juilliard chain mills very often merges into a town meeting.

Like the action in a the play, the actors are all there, it's just a matter of rearranging their positions. Local 1006 Pres. Art Hefner bangs his gavel to conclude his meeting and it is seized by Pres. Gene Weaver, Brookford's mayor.

Rounding up the town officials is never a problem, they're all at the union meeting. The three aldermen are there, the town clerk, police chief, constable—are all TWUA members.

Relations with management have been good since the plant was organized in 1947 so the union has been able to devote much of its energy to community work. In fact, it's hard to tell where union activity ends and community activity begins.

Through its members on the town council, the union is pressing for street improvements and a medical clinic.

You And Your Money—

Coming And Going, Brazil Cartel Profits As Coffee Prices Rise

By MILTON PLUMB

THE NICKEL cup of coffee has gone the way of the dodo and the cigar store Indian —into oblivion. Just why it went there not even the experts profess to know.

The only thing that's really certain is that it won't be coming back, if ever, for many moons to come.

This reporter has just completed an attempt to sleuth out the facts behind the Great Disappearance. The pursuit has been a muddied one.

For the story behind the cup that cheers certainly isn't out in the open. And in running it down as far as it's presently available, one runs smack into evidence indicating that America's favorite beverage is part and parcel of (1) international intrigue, (2) cloak and dagger diplomacy, (3) financial skullduggery and (4) a multimillion dollar shakedown.

The victim is the American consumer.

Right now, with the nation's major import retailing at over $1 a pound, the Senate Banking Committee is "investigating" the situation.

"Ridiculous," testify industry spokesmen, that the price should go so high. But they join in boosting prices—and industry profits. Consumers bellyache, but then restore their belly cheer with another—and extra—cup of Java.

A Mysterious Language

What's especially difficult in trying to fathom the mysteries of coffee prices is the peculiar language used in the trade. You begin by learning that there are three kinds of coffee: "high" which is "mild," "ordinary" which is "soft" and "low" which is "hard."

What's even harder are the terms used on the New York Coffee and Sugar Exchange, where prices are manipulated through trading in "futures" on "Santos 4's," although less than 1% of all the coffee sold on the exchange is ever delivered. In fact, most coffee drunk in the U. S. doesn't move through the exchange at all.

From 1902 on the U. S. consumer has been paying the bill for various price fixing schemes, artifically created shortages, and other manipulations by coffee traders and bankers seeking to raise prices and profits. Since coffee is the backbone of the Brazilian economy, the government of Brazil has lent a willing hand to moves to protect coffee interests.

In early "valorization plans," by which Brazil by law set a fictitious value on coffee above and apart from the regular market value, major banking interests such as the National City Bank of New York and the Rothchild interests, as well as coffee firms, such as Crossman and Sielcken of New York City, played a major part.

Within short time after the first "valorization" took effect, prices to consumers doubled.

In recent years, coffee has been pretty much a Brazilian government cartel, with the government controlling the stock, regulating storage and determining how much can leave the country.

This government control is carried still further. The government-controlled Bank of Brazil has two rates of exchange for the Brazilian "cruzerio" to the U. S. dollar. The effect is that $1 buys proportionately less coffee than 1 cr. buys of U. S. manufactured goods, when the exchange is going the other way.

Study Of Price Rigging

The most comprehensive study of the price rigging against the U. S. consumer was made by a Senate Agriculture subcommittee under Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) in 1949 when coffee rose at retail from 52c to 78c a pound in six weeks' time. Then, as in the present price rise, the Pan American Coffee Bureau, which is the official industry propaganda bureau, said the reason was a short supply due to "bad weather."

But Gillette's study proved conclusively this wasn't so. And last week the Federal Trade Commission's top economist said the rise this year seems to be due to an anticipated rather than an actual shortage in this country.

Gillette's subcommittee made 14 recommendations for action to protect U. S. consumers, including one that the Attorney General look into the dealings with Brazil of the green coffee buyer for the Maxwell House division of General Foods. None of the recommendations was carried out—and we went right on paying higher prices.

The nickel cup of coffee, you can safely bet, went down the drain with a lot of other things as the result of congressional and Administration inaction.

Going Higher

That higher-priced aroma that greets you in the morning when the missus puts the coffee pot on the stove is going to soar still higher.

Chain stores—most of which, incidentally, have their own sources of supply not affected by exchange trading—boosted prices last week another 4c to 6c a pound. Safeway upped vacuum-packed national brands the latter amount; A & P and Food Fair put the 4c hike on bag-packed coffee. Some national brands are now selling at $1.34 a pound.

Slight Decline Registered In Cost Of Living Index

A BARELY perceptible drop of two-tenths of 1% was registered by the Consumers Price Index during the month ending Mar. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week. The new reading was 114.8% of average 1947-49 prices, compared to 115% a month earlier.

The BLS said the decline resulted principally from a drop of four-tenths of 1% in the prices of both food and clothing, with smaller drops in some other pricing categories helping. The decline was the fourth since the all-time record of 115.4 was established in October.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS index:

GM Bosses Get Ride On Gravy Train

GENERAL Motors last year paid its 62 top officers and directors more than $11.8 million in salary and bonus.

Harlow H. Curtice, GM president, got a total of $637,233, of which $197,233 was in cash.

The cash payment figures out to more than $540 a day in wages. The balance of Curtice's payment was in the cash and stock bonus spread out over the next five years to ease the tax burden. Curtice got $521,200 in 1952.

Defense Sec. Wilson, president of GM in 1952, got a total of $581,000 that year. As a Cabinet member he gets $22,500 a year. Wilson was required to sell his GM stock holdings before he was approved for his Administration job.

The salary figures were listed in proxy statements and notice of the annual GM stockholders' meeting, which is set for May 21 in Wilmington, Del.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

YOU'LL FIND lower prices this month on household appliances, clothing, toiletries and linens. Reductions approximating 50% on many brands of refrigerators and cooking ranges are the most important saving made available from the recent cut in excise taxes on appliances.

Prices of freezers and driers are also moved down by the excise cut, but washers are not affected. Most makers of major appliances have announced lower list prices which pass on the tax cut.

But in several cases, manufacturers are pocketing all or part of the tax, or letting the retail dealers pocket it. A large camera manufacturer has notified dealers its prices remain the same despite a reduction from 20% to 10% in the tax on photo equipment.

Bargains For May

One large maker of ranges has passed on only half the tax cut, while several smaller appliance manufacturers have so far announced no cuts at all. Nor have most manufacturers yet arranged to reduce prices on stocks in retailers' hands, which means some stores are reducing prices sooner than others as new stocks arrive.

There is no law that manufacturers must pass on the reductions in excises levied at the manufacturer level. In fact, there are indications that even those reductions which have been made may be short-lived.

To get the most from the excise reduction, do extra shopping. You can't assume an automatic price cut, because as shown above the reductions are uneven and some are being pocketed. Even where the list price has been reduced, you still should be able to get a sizable further discount of 20% to 30%, depending on competitive conditions in your area. The more expensive the item, the higher the percentage of discount you should get.

Here are other tips on opportunities in finding values in these and other goods in May:

WASHERS, DRIERS: Good news for families in apartments and smaller homes is the introduction of several more models of more compact automatic washers and driers. These are generally eight-pound capacity in comparison to the nine-pound full-size models. Some compact automatic washers are now available in wheeled models for small homes where the washer must be stored when not in use. Prices are lower, too; such washers are now available around the $200 mark. Eight-pound driers are also available now for as little as $150-$160 in electric models, and $180 in gas. Although gas models cost more initially, operating costs are much lower.

TELEVISION SETS: Add to lower prices already reported, Crosley's new 17-inch table model at a list of $140. Usual discounts bring it down to about $125. It's compact and light in weight, and is offered as a "second set," but has only 15 tubes and thus may not be powerful enough for fringe reception areas.

SUMMER CLOTHING: Prices of garments of the newer synthetic materials continue to decline sharply. Some stores now offer men's Dacron-worsted suits for as little as $42.50, a revealing reduction from the $85 they commanded only two years ago. Women's nylon dresses are now available for as little as $4 in post-Easter promotions.

Some manufacturers got caught with overstocks of women's woolen spring suits, and stores are now offering these at sharp reductions, a money-saver over the higher price tags they'll carry in the fall.

MEN'S SHOES: A drop of $1 has been announced by Regal shoes, already one of the better values in men's shoes. But otherwise time your shoe buying for the semi-annual July sales, when most stores reduce prices on standard styles and brands.

FUEL: Summer price reductions on coal and oil are already in effect, but this year the price cut on coal is sharper than usual. Families with coal furnaces should plan to fill bins at the unusually low summer prices; you'll save $2-$3 a ton by anticipating your needs.

New FPC Gas Rate Policy To Cost Consumers 'Billions'

A NEW FEDERAL Power Commission policy for setting wholesale natural gas rates will cost consumers "billions of dollars," according to Rep. Oakman (R. Mich.).

A fellow Michigan Republican, Sen. Ferguson, also took exception to the FPC action, saying he was "greatly disappointed."

The new policy, set in a four-to-one decision, approved a rate boost for Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Co., Kansas City, based on current market prices for natural gas.

The old system of setting natural gas rates was based on cost. The test was whether proposed rates were reasonable when measured against the company's cost of service, including a fair return.

Panhandle Eastern, which owns gas fields it purchased cheaply years ago, asked permission to revalue its properties at a "fair field value" comparable to that of other companies who purchased nearby fields at a higher cost. This would mean an upward revaluation of Panhandle gas to be passed along to consumers in higher rates.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

J. J. MORAN, vice president of CIO's Communications Workers, outlined his union's organizational program in a talk we had a few weeks ago. CWA-CIO is making great headway, and has made great headway since the day it affiliated with CIO.

Their organizational projects are large and challenging. They will cover areas of New York, Illinois, and New Jersey, in Canada and in other sections and states, with one thought in mind, to bring all of the communications workers in the U. S. and Canada into a powerful, responsible organization. Their plans are sound, and the efforts well-coordinated. I firmly believe we can expect great results before the year is out.

In the South, CIO's Textile Workers continue their hard battle to win union representation for hundreds of thousands of mill workers. There is a real tragedy in this situation; for very often, according to the reports I receive, and out of my own personal experience in the South, we see the National Labor Relations Board being used by Taft-Hartley attorneys to prevent workers from realizing the benefits of union organization.

Through no fault of any man on the NLRB, but because of the union-busting provisions of Taft-Hartley, these union-busting lawyers are able to delay, and delay, and delay, while many companies use vicious slander, libel and coercion to break down the efforts of the workers. It is wrong, dead wrong, that the NLRB, which was formed to protect the rights of workers to organize unions of their own choosing, should be used in this hypocritical way.

IN SPITE OF THESE FACTS, CIO's Textile Workers continue their great work, the work of education of the men and women of the mills, the work of bringing them hope and a sense of their own dignity as workers. The picture is by no means as dark as it might seem, and the Textile Workers are conducting a carefully planned campaign backed by good direction and a hard-working staff.

Immediately after their victory in Boston, the workers at Boston Mutual Insurance phoned my office to praise the efforts of Hugh Thompson, regional director, and his assistant, John Collins, in helping them with their job. The agents voted to join the CIO Insurance Workers by a vote of 188-180, in a runoff with the AFL. It is a fine compliment to Hugh and John that these workers took the trouble to call my office, and we are happy to pass it along to you.

CIO'S CHEMICAL WORKERS report a solid victory at Memphis, Tenn., by a margin of 63 to 1, with CIO Rep. Jim Temple working on the campaign, assisted by Bill Henderson of UGCCWA-CIO.

The Chemical Workers also report victories at Wilmington Gas Co., Wilmington, N. C., with Hugh Brown in charge, and at Delta Match Corp., St. Rose, La. Ira Rawlinson worked on the later campaign, as well as the UGCCWA's victory over an attempted decertification at Oronite Chemical Co., Oak Point, La.

CIO's Steelworkers have won two fine victories in the past two weeks, one at Fanner Mfg. Co., Cleveland, O., where they whipped Mine-Mill by a vote of 268 to 125; and another successful campaign at Diamond Power Specialty Co., Lancaster, O. Reg. Dir. George De Nucci points out that the Fanner plant was the last stronghold of Mine-Mill in that area.

Another report from Ohio brings word of a CIO Auto Workers victory at Die Supply Co., Cleveland, 46 to 10.

American Woolen Strike Set As TWUA Fights 26c Pay Cut

A STRIKE by CIO Textile Workers against the American Woolen Co. appeared certain this week in protest against initiation of a 26.5c an hour wage cut in mills of the country's largest woolen and worsted goods manufacturer.

Negotiations broke off last week after the company announced there would be no further extension of the TWUA-CIO contract and the deep wage slash would be effective at once.

Simultaneously the firm announced the permanent closing of its huge Wood Mill in Lawrence, Mass., largest woolen and worsted mill in the world. During the postwar peak it employed 7800.

Four plants of the Wyandotte Worsted Co. in New England entered the second week of their strike against a 15c pay cut. Approximately 900 workers at TWUA-organized plants in Pittsfield, Mass., and Waterville, Me., were joined by 400 others in unorganized plants at Rochester, N. H., and Central Village, Conn.

A majority of these unorganized workers signed TWUA cards at the time of their sympathy walkout and the union petitioned the National Labor Relations Board for certification.

APPROXIMATELY 80% of the woolen and worsted industry has signed renewals of their TWUA agreements for one or two-year periods. Another strike was averted last week when the Bachmann-Uxbridge Corp. employing 3200 workers in three New England states deferred institution of a wage cut and extended its TWUA contract to May 17.

Faced with demands for wage slashes and loss of contract gains all over New England, TWUA has formed a united front with the AFL Textile Workers and the Industrial Trades Union, an old Rhode Island independent group.

Under the tri-union pact they will work together to resist "the small proportion of companies who seek to take advantage of the currently unstable economic conditions."

TWUA represented 25,000 workers in 24 American Woolen mills in New England, New York State and Kentucky. Some months ago the firm announced that 11 of these would be liquidated.

A week ago a company spokesman announced that only "a miracle—including a hot war" would keep the Wood plant in operation. The plant had been the backbone of employment in Lawrence, once the woolen and worsted center of the world. The Ayer Mill in Lawrence was closed down about a year ago with the permanent loss of almost 3000 jobs.

Wages Hiked By Brewers In New Pacts

WAGE INCREASES ranging from 10c to 27.5c per hour have been won by CIO Brewery Workers in new contracts covering three malt companies, six Cincinnati breweries and nine plants of Standard Brands, Inc.

The new agreement between the Froedtert, Kurth and Zinn malt companies and UBW Local 9 in Milwaukee provides for boosts up to 17.5c hourly, retroactive to Nov. 1, 1953, with up to 10c increase this coming November.

Shift differentials have been hiked 2c for the second shift and 3c for the third. An additional paid holiday was won and holiday pay is upped to double time and a half.

The Kurth and Zinn companies agreed to negotiate a health, welfare and pension program similar to the 22.5c an hour program in effect at Froedtert.

THE THREE locals in Cincinnati won a package including $4 and $5 weekly wage increases, a hike in second and third shift differentials to 8c and 13c respectively, and an improved insurance program with a new $750 death benefit.

The new Standard Brands pact came after the UBW locals had started a strike-vote poll in response to management's original "5c and nothing else offer."

Wisconsin CIOers Parade In Support Of Kohler Strikers

A PARADE of CIO members from all parts of Wisconsin was scheduled for Apr. 25 in Sheboygan and Kohler in support of CIO Auto Workers Local 833, which is in the fourth week of a strike against the anti-union Kohler Co.

The parade, sponsored by the Wisconsin CIO Council, was due to end in a rally at the Sheboygan Armory, where strike leaders were to report on the latest developments in the walkout. Pres. Charles M. Smith of the State CIO Council was to preside.

THE BIG plant of the plumbing fixtures manufacturing firm, which usually employes about 3600 production workers, has been shut tight by Local 833 picket lines. Union officials report that everything has been peaceful on the lines, and that no scabs or strikebreakers have been sighted.

The U. S. Conciliation & Mediation Service entered the picture last week with an effort to get the union and the company together for negotiations.

The union, expressing the conviction that the strike will be settled eventually at the bargaining table, readily agreed. However, the company, which has a long record of anti-unionism, rejected the government's request.

The walkout was precipitated when company representatives stalked out of a bargaining session. Negotiations had bogged down on the company's insistence that the arbitration and seniority clauses in the old contract be stricken from the new agreement.

Wood Union Sets Strike By 45,000

SOME 45,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers have voted to go on strike May 3 against employers in the Pacific Northwest who flatly turned down their demands for wage increases and other improvements in a new contract under negotiation.

The union's Policy Committee, at a meeting in Portland, Ore., reported that the membership cast the heaviest strike vote ever tabulated, with every sub-region in the area balloting in favor of a walkout.

Negotiations with the employers will continue until the strike deadline—at the start of the May 3 day shift—but the districts and locals are organizing their strike machinery and selecting picket captains and crews, preparing banners and signs, setting up strike headquarters, etc.

THE IWA-CIO'S primary demands are a 12.5c an hour general wage increase, the correction of pay inequities on the basis of a job analysis of the industry, and three weeks' vacation after five years of service.

The Policy Committee, after examining the economics of the industry, reported that production, sales and orders are ahead of the record-breaking marks set in 1952. In the last two years alone, the committee said, the hourly productivity of the workers has increased about 10%, but the workers themselves have yet to get any share in it.

A second major IWA-CIO contract, covering 32,000 members in British Columbia, expires June 1. The union is demanding fringe benefits totaling 7.5c an hour.

New York Lithographers Negotiate 35-Hour Week

NEW YORK City Local 1, the largest in the CIO Lithographers, won the 35-hour week for its 6000 members.

The shorter week will become effective July 1, 1955, with no cuts in weekly earnings.

This New York City victory marked the climax of an ALA-CIO drive for the 35-hour week which opened about a year ago, when the 4000-member Chicago local gained it.

Those on the "lobster shift," starting at midnight, will work only 30 hours, as some other ALA-CIO contracts provide.

NINETEEN locals with a total of approximately 15,000 members have won the 35-hour week.

ALA Sec.-Treas. Donald Stone said that another advance in Local 1's new contract is the additional $2.50 weekly which the employers will pay into the welfare fund for each employe.

Trustees of the fund will decide what additional services will be provided by the money. The increase brings the employers' payment to $4.50 weekly. The contract is with the Metropolitan Lithographers Association.

Local 1 now operates an eye clinic, which is very important to lithographers, whose work requires good sight. Members may have their eyes examined and receive lenses gratis, paying only for the frames. This clinic is operated from refund payments received from the Blue Cross.

Arbiter's Group Elects Potofsky

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers has been elected to the Board of Directors of the American Arbitration Association, AAA Pres. Whitney North Seymour announced.

Seymour said Potofsky's election and that of Harold J. Treanor, Real Estate Board counsel, would maintain the representative nature of AAA's Board. The association is a non-profit membership corporation devoted to advancement of voluntary arbitration.

TWU Plans Big N. Y. Rally To Mark 20th Anniversary

MORE THAN 6000 members of the CIO Transport Workers are expected to attend the union's celebration of its 20th anniversary at New York City on Apr. 29.

TWU-CIO's score of years of struggle and progress will be recounted at the rally at which Michael J. Quill, the union's first and only president, will preside.

The celebration will be tied in with the TWU-CIO's efforts to better wages and working conditions under the union's contracts and to organize the unorganized.

Paid holidays, pensions, hospital insurance and other fringe benefits, once only pipe dreams in the transit industry, are now contained in most TWU-CIO contracts.

'Union League Club Socialism'—

CIO Warned Years Ago Of Builders' 'Pipeline Into Federal Treasury'

By EUGENE A. KELLEY

CIO's four-year-old warning that commercial home builders had developed a "pipeline into the federal treasury" was getting belated attention last week as probers uncovered new and worse scandals in the government-insured housing program.

More sections of the roof caved in on Housing Administration officials and private builders and bankers against whom the CIO leveled charges of "profiteering" as far back as CIO's 1950 convention in Chicago.

A resolution adopted there called for a complete review of the government insured mortgage program.

EVEN BEFORE that, in February 1950, Leo Goodman, then director of the CIO Housing Committee, suggested to a congressional committee that it investigate "inflation" in housing costs under Sect. 608 of Housing Act.

"I will be delighted to do so," responded Albert M. Cole, the man now in charge of the housing probe but who then was a congressman from Kansas.

Housing Chief Cole last week promised a crackdown on government officials involved in the scandal but made no promises of action against building concerns which got into the Treasury for millions in fraudulent costs.

CIO warnings went all but unheeded through the years. In June 1952, CIO Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, then chairman of the Housing Committee, told a House subcommittee that "people believe that housing legislation was written to help the mortgage bankers."

Cole was a member of the subcommittee and joined in questioning Reuther, who is now CIO president.

REUTHER was discussing the middle-income housing bill when he flayed the $900 million aid section to mortgage bankers while workers could not get a 3% housing loan. "Park Avenue Union League Club Socialism" is the way Reuther described the fabulous guarantees to builders and bankers.

He lashed out at speculators "who are using the government machinery to get access to funds" and charged "they are fleecing thousands of persons out of their hard-earned dollars."

Two committees were digging into the mess which broke with the firing of Guy T. O. Hollyday, named last June as FHA director by Pres. Eisenhower. Hollyday is a former president of the American Mortgage Bankers Association.

CHAIRMAN CAPEHART (R. Ind.) of the Senate Banking Committee blasted the stand of the National Association of Home Builders for trying to duck their responsibility in the scandal. He questioned the help his committee would get from the NAHB in "cleaning up abuses for which your members are responsible."

Cole defended his ousted subordinate, Hollyday, and charitably described as "outguessing the government appraisers" the manner in which builders got at least $65 million in "windfalls."

A committee headed by Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) said it unearthed evidence that profiteering on FHA's apartment house construction program boosted rents 15% to 25% higher than normal.

Byrd's group found that 1149 building firms in the nation made little or no capital investment by taking advantage of loopholes in the FHA rental construction program.

One firm they cited had three stockholders who put up $100 apiece for a project which cost $463,000. FHA insured the mortgage for $570,000. The builders got the property and a "windfall" profit of $107,000.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Jr., of New York urged the Senate to restore the public housing program to its authorized maximum of 135,000 units a year and to kill a House restriction on city redevelopment project funds.

The Mayor said the need for low-rent housing in New York City "has not materially diminished since Congress passed the Taft-Ellender-Wagner housing bill in 1949." That act, of which Wagner's father was an author, proposed a maximum of 135,000 units a year over six years.

Whoops

Quote from the New York Times: "There's one amendment the Senate is certain to make in the federal housing bill. The House of Representatives, in patching up the bill before passage, inadvertently fixed it so you can get an $11,750 mortgage on an $11,000 house."

Jackson, 'Birthplace' Of GOP, Bares Party's Anti-Union Bias

JACKSON, Mich., has the typical anti-labor attitude of the Republican Party to which it claims to have given birth, according to Optical Workers Local 932 of the CIO Electrical Workers.

The local has been involved in a 10-month strike against the Gregory Optical Co., precipitated by a company refusal to grant its 15 opticians rates which are standard in the industry.

For over seven of the 10 months, an anti-picketing injunction was in force. When it was dissolved on the grounds that a company with the same name and the same owner was a new company, the court then "acted as protector," the Optical Workers charged.

In addition to having spawned the big-business party, Jackson, Mich., may have brought forth a new twist to anti-union tactics, the Optical Workers suggest. Gregory Optical announced a strike-breaking plan making workers partners in the enterprise. No more employes, the company said, only stockholders.

Of course, if a "partner" quits or is fired, the Optical Workers were quick to point out, his stock reverts back to the company owner.

During all this time, the company has refused to meet with union members to negotiate a settlement. As for justice, the Optical Workers say they feel it must exist—somewhere else besides the town that claims to be the birthplace of the Republican Party.

Stalling On Refugees Hit By Humphrey

THE WILL of Congress is being ignored by the State Dept. in connection with the emergency admission of refugees to the U. S., Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) declared last week.

Humphrey recalled that the emergency immigration bill, providing for the admission of 209,000 additional adult and 5000 orphan refugees, became law more than eight months ago. To date, he said, only six refugees have been allowed to enter the country.

Failure to carry out "a significant humanitarian act, to aid refugees from Communism — people seeking political liberty and religious freedom," he said, is a "tragedy" and a "reflection of the lack of sympathy for this legislation on the part of those in the State Dept. responsible for administration of the program."

"IT'S TIME for the State Dept. to give us some real assurance," he said, "that it is going to take seriously the wishes of Congress and conscientiously administer the refugee bill so that we can admit the refugees authorized by law in an orderly and sympathetic way.

"Unless we get such assurances without further delay, I serve notice that I will ask for the Senate to take whatever proper legislative and investigative steps are necessary to see that the program is better administered."

Woman Named To Senate Post

Mrs. Eve Bowring, vice chairman of the Nebraska Republican Party and wealthy ranch woman, has been named by Gov. Crosby to fill the U. S. Senate vacancy created by the death of Republican Sen. Griswold.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

ACTION IN CONGRESS LAST WEEK MOST IMPORTANT TO YOU

1. CIO attacks stalling on health insurance, urges adequate legislation to meet U. S. health needs. (See Page 9.)

2. GOP majority of Senate Labor Committee proves no majority on Taft-Hartley proposals. (See Page 2.)

CURRENT ISSUES BEFORE CONGRESS ON WHICH YOU SHOULD ACT:

Bill	What It Does	Where It Is	What You Can Do
Reed Unemployment Insurance Bill (H.R. 5173)	Would start break-up of federal-state system of unemployment insurance and hold down benefits.	Passed House last year. Pending before Senate Finance Com.	Write or wire your Senator to defeat the Reed bill and provide increased unemployment benefits for at least 39 weeks.
Administration Taft-Hartley proposals (S.2650)	Makes law even worse by adding union-busting provisions.	Senate will act on anti-labor bill week of May 3. House Labor Com. expected to act on similar bill Apr. 27.	Write your Senators and Representatives protesting against anti-union proposals.
Administration Tax Revisions (H. R. 8300)	Would reduce taxes on dividends and increase depreciation deductions for business, giving most benefits to only 335,000 families out of 52 million families in U. S.	Voted by House, coming up in Senate.	Urge your Senators to vote to reject tax bill when it reaches the floor and to work for an increase in the personal exemptions to $800 this year and $1000 thereafter.

Insurance Union Wins In Boston

AGENTS of the Boston Mutual Life Insurance Co. in four New England states have won a National Labor Relations Board election by a vote of 188 for CIO to 180 for the competing AFL union.

The nearly 400 agents had been represented by a local of the United Office & Professional Workers, expelled from the CIO in 1950, and the company had petitioned for a decertification election after terminating the contract last December.

Frank Siegel, former president of the local and a one-time staff representative for UOPWA, managed to get an AFL Insurance Agents local charter for the group prior to the election. In the first election the CIO Insurance Workers tied with the AFL group, with only one agent voting for "no union."

Robert J. Nicholson, second vice president of the CIO Insurance Workers, gave credit to CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson of Boston for helping IWA win.

'54 Facts—

PAC Looks At Unemployment Problem

THE REPUBLICAN Administration is reacting to the current recession "exactly as Herbert Hoover's Administration did in the economic crisis that got deeper and deeper from 1929 to 1933."

That's the charge CIO's Political Action Committee documents in a new "Facts" pamphlet on unemployment. Second in a series prepared to give CIO members facts for the 1954 congressional campaigns, the pocket-sized booklet notes that the Administration pinned its hopes for an upturn on the coming of Spring.

And, says CIO-PAC, "way back in 1930, on Mar. 3, Mr. Hoover's Secretary of Commerce, Robert P. Lamont, claimed that 'as weather conditions moderate we are likely to find the country as a whole enjoying its wonted state of prosperity. Business will be normal in two months.'"

Detailing the figures that indicate how sick the American economy is, the PAC pamphlet points out that this Administration "refused to acknowledge the realities of joblessness and recession, and refused to listen when warned that ours must be an expanding economy." It continued:

"On Feb. 17, Pres. Eisenhower told a news conference that March would be considered a critical month, that unless there was a business pick-up, tax reduction for consumers would be one of the first measures considered.

"On Mar. 24, when the figures showed there wasn't going to be a pickup in March, the President told another news conference he had been advised Easter was late this year and the ladies weren't buying. He couldn't commit himself on taxes, but the situation was under study.

"All the study seemed to revolve around means of jiggling the tax structure. The more it jiggled, the more money fell into the laps of the corporations and wealthy individuals."

PAC also points out how the government's figures seriously understated the number of workers who had lost their jobs by eliminating from their statistics "marginal" workers.

"The only way to look at our economy correctly," PAC says, "is to realize that each year we need more jobs, not fewer, to keep the country sound and prosperous.

"We can't maintain prosperity by standing still or slipping back, by tinkering with the statistics, by pretending that things won't be 'too bad' if they are only a little worse than a year before.

"The economic wizards don't make up for lost purchasing power by simply refusing to count as 'unemployed' hundreds of thousands of workers statistically manipulated out of the 'labor force.'"

PAC's facts refute the Administration claim that the 1949-1950 recession was worse than this one.

"Passenger car production in 1950 was over 6.5 million as against a contemplated five million in 1954," it notes.

"In 1949-1950 federal spending was rising. In 1954 it was falling and is continuing to fall. In 1949-1950 American farmers were still getting good prices for their products. Four years later they were on the down-grade."

Of the Democratic proposal to raise personal income tax exemptions as a means of bolstering purchasing power, PAC says Treasury Sec. Humphrey objected, complaining the Treasury would lose needed revenue.

"He didn't calculate what the Treasury might 'lose' if the business recession hangs on, if the economy remains static, if anticipated revenues drop because of the disappearance of buying power," it adds.

In discussing the CIO proposal for increasing unemployment compensation to 65% of a worker's pay for 39 weeks, PAC says "there's a big difference in purchasing power if the higher benefits were paid to the four million unemployed that Sec. Humphrey calls a 'relatively low figure.'"

The big danger with Administration plans, PAC warns, is that they seem "fated to be too little and too late."

Profits For First Quarter Fire Gravy Train Of Big Business

FIRST quarter earnings for some of the nation's giant corporations, such as General Motors and Westinghouse, were at near-record highs, due in part to the handout they received from expiration of excess profit taxes.

General Motors last week reported that by selling less it made more money in 1954's first quarter than it did a year ago. Net sales, Pres. Harlow M. Curtice said, "sagged" to $2.4 billion, mainly reflecting a 14% cut in defense production.

But net income rose to $189 million, equal to $2.13 a common share, against $151 million last year, or $1.70 a share.

Westinghouse recorded its second best quarter in the company's history. It earned $26.2 million, equal to $1.61 a common share, in this year's first three months compared with $16.8 million, or $1.04 a share.

The 55.9% increase in income against a 6.4% increase in sales was credited to "higher efficiency" and the death of excess profit taxes at the hands of a beneficent GOP-controlled Congress.

Standard Oil of New Jersey, the world's largest oil company, was another of the big business behemoths to report all-time record net profits for the first quarter.

Its income after taxes was set at $146 million for the period, compared to $126 million for the same months last year. That means $2.41 a share, a tidy improvement over last year's $2.08.

U. S. Steel operated at 80% of capacity during the first quarter, expects to work at 70% during the next 90 days. Net income was down about $5 million to $44.8 million. However, earnings declined only to $1.48 a share, against $1.65 last year.

The New York Central Railroad said its net income in March was up $1 million over the same month of 1953.

Atomic Giveaway Ban Urged By Holifield

A NEW "GIVEAWAY" bill wiping out public safeguards in the field of atomic energy could put this multibillion public investment in "a monopoly straitjacket," Rep. Holifield (D. Calif.) said last week.

Urging Congress not to be "stampeded" into hasty action that would make basic changes in the McMahon Atomic Energy Act, Holifield warned against "an atomic giveaway through legislative loopholes which would permit selfish exploitation of atomic resources developed with private funds.

"The new draft of legislation proposes to grant normal patent rights in a new industry which is not normal by any standards and which is susceptible to monopolistic control by a few large corporations already possessing considerable know-how as contractors to the government," he pointed out.

The pending bill, introduced by Chairman Cole (R. N.Y.) of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, and Sen. Hickenlooper (R. Ia.), would allow patent rights to be exercised immediately in non-military atomic activities. Pres. Eisenhower asked that the new legislation contain a five-year prohibition against exclusive patent rights.

"I am convinced that a 10-year moratorium on exclusive patents would better protect the public interest," Holifield said.

HOLIFIELD, a member of the Atomic Energy Committee, said that there has been "too much glib editorializing" to the effect that the Atomic Energy Act has been outmoded. He recalled that the President himself said only two months ago that "the act in the main is still adequate to the nation's needs."

Calling for a two-package approach, Holifield said that Congress should first—and in a separate bill—make changes necessary to facilitate the exchange of atomic information with our allies and to encourage pooled development for peaceful purposes.

Holifield also criticized the Cole-Hickenlooper Bill for failing to provide more effective labor representation in councils of the Atomic Energy Commission, as well as legislative standards for fairer management-labor relations in the industry.

Riffe Hits Bias Toward Disabled Workers

JOHN V. RIFFE, CIO executive vice president, said last week that the prejudice the physically handicapped face "is the same as any other" prejudice.

Riffe spoke at the spring meeting of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped at Washington.

He declared that prejudice begins when a man looks at a physically handicapped person and says:

"'That fellow is different from me. Since he's different, he's probably not as good, and he can't do the job I can do.'

"Isn't that the same prejudice that brings on racial hatred?"

He called for "wiping the word 'cripple' out of our minds."

"The real cripples in this world," he said, "are the men who are blinded by prejudice, fear and ignorance."

Riffe charged that 286,000 of the 350,000 persons who are physically handicapped in accidents each year are thrown "on the human scrap heap" because federal, state, city and county governments do not provide for their rehabilitation.

"It is not common sense," he said, "to make wards of charity out of tens of thousands of people who want to work, and can do the job, if we give them the proper help. We cannot afford to throw 286,000 workers on the human scrap heap each year.

"If a full national emergency should come now, we would not have enough highly skilled workers to do the job of defending our nation."

JOHN V. RIFFE

Riffe said that the CIO wants a centralized government agency to coordinate the work of aiding the physically handicapped that is now handled by 32 agencies.

The CIO also believes, he said, that the states need help to carry on rehabilitation through grants-in-aid and the establishment of national standards for vocational guidance.

HE STATED the aims of the CIO Committee on Safety and Occupational Health as coordinating agencies to aid the handicapped and improving workmen's compensation; putting vocational guidance and rehabilitation machinery in action at the moment of injury, and making sure the patient is not considered cured until he has been retrained and placed in a job at his highest available skill.

The meeting was held in connection with a three-day exhibit of prosthetic devices and work aids which was opened by Health Sec. Hobby. Speakers at the meeting which was held on the final day of the exhibit included Vice Pres. Nixon and Labor Sec. Mitchell.

Histadrut Thanks Memorial Group

Appreciation of the late Philip Murray Memorial Foundation's gift of $100,000 to Histadrut, the Israeli Labor Federation, was expressed in a cable from Gen. Sec. Mordechai Namir to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The Foundation made the gift to help build a Philip Murray Labor Center at Elath, in Israel's Negev region.

Namir saw in the gift "a profound expression of the strong ties of solidarity between the great American labor movement with (Israel's) which is creating new human and social values in an old-new land as our share in the achievements of the international free labor movement."

CIO Rally On Full Employment To Hear The Two Humphreys

TWO PROMINENT public figures named Humphrey will address the CIO's Full Employment Conference on May 11, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther announced last week.

- Sec. of the Treasury George M. Humphrey, a prime mover in developing the Administration's tax and general economic programs.
- Sen. Hubert Humphrey, the liberal Democrat from Minnesota, who has been an outspoken critic of those tax and economic programs.

Some 300 or more CIO members and officials from all parts of the country are expected to attend the sessions, which will open at the Hotel Washington in the nation's capital.

Reuther has announced that the conference is designed "to drive home the serious nature of the present economic situation and the necessity for action now."

Official government unemployment figures now stand at about 3.7 million and no real change is expected when the next set of figures is announced. Ordinarily at this time of year, unemployment shows a "seasonal decrease" as the result of an increase in jobs on the nation's farms.

"Members of the CIO will look forward," Reuther said, "to hearing at first hand the economic viewpoints and programs of two distinguished men named Humphrey.

"Sec. of the Treasury Humphrey is without question the best exponent of the Administration's economic and fiscal program, which unmistakably bears the imprint of his thinking and philosophy.

"Sen. Humphrey has been an able and consistent critic of the economic philosophy that underlies the Administration's program.

"It will be a stimulating experience to hear their respective viewpoints."

The first day of the two-day Full Employment Conference will comprise talks and reports on unemployment problems in various regions of the country.

It will open with an introduction by the Conference chairman, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, who heads the CIO's Economic Policy Committee.

Reuther will deliver a keynote speech to the delegates. The rest of the morning session will be devoted to reports on a number of economic matters.

SOCIAL SECURITY developments will be discussed by Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, who heads the CIO's Social Security Committee.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will talk about legislation to improve unemployment compensation, and Steelworkers Vice-Pres. James Thimmes, head of the CIO Housing Committee, will report on developments in that field.

With PAC Dir. Jack Kroll in Atlantic City, N. J., for the 40th anniversary convention of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers will address the delegates on political action in the 1954 election.

The afternoon session will open at 2 p.m. with reports from CIO officials on unemployment and other economic problems in their states and regions.

Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers will talk at 2:30 p.m. He will also introduce Sec. Humphrey, scheduled to make his address at 3 p.m., and Sen. Humphrey, who will speak later in the afternoon.

On the second day, May 12, the delegates will visit Congressmen and Senators from their own areas.

Sec. Humphrey—a Cleveland businessman who sat on the boards of numerous corporations before his appointment to government office—gave his views to the Conference of Governors in Washington last week.

Noting that more than 60 million people are employed, Sec. Humphrey told the governors: "We see more signs every day to make us confident of the future. We are not now headed for a depression."

Sen. Humphrey, on the other hand, has called on the Eisenhower Administration "to support those of us in Congress who are urging a realistic program to restore full employment in an expanding economy."

The Minnesota Senator, who seeks re-election this year, has repeatedly urged the raising of the personal income tax exemption to $800 in order to help families of modest means.

TOKEN PICKET lines like this one at the Beaver Brook Mills in Dracut, Mass., were sufficient to halt operations at American Woolen Co. mills after the firm posted notices of a 21.5c wage cut for its workers, nearly all of whom are TWUA-CIO members.

TWUA-CIO Strike Closes 11 American Woolen Mills

By EUGENE A. KELLY

GRIM-FACED pickets from locals of the CIO Textile Workers brought production to a complete halt in 11 mills of the American Woolen Co. last week in protest against a wage cut of 21.5c an hour. Ten of the mills are in New England.

Federal conciliators arranged meetings to have the firm, largest woolen and worsted manufacturer in the U. S., soften its attitude and put the more than 3000 strikers back to work.

NEGOTIATIONS broke off suddenly when the company put the wage slash order on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. TWUA-CIO Sec.-Treas. John Chupka, director of the union's woolen-worsted division, charged the company with "bad faith" in refusing to extend the contract or submit the issues to arbitration.

More than 80% of the industry, Chupka said, had renewed or extended agreements with TWUA and provided for arbitration. An 11-day strike against four mills of the Wyandotte Worsted Co. in four New England states ended when the firm postponed institution of a proposed 15c wage cut.

The union maintained it was forced into the strike as "part of the company's cat-and-mouse game in an effort to make the union a scapegoat for the financial manipulations now going on in the company." The reference was to maneuvers among several large textile interests to get control of the $43 million in the firm's cash assets.

TWUA said the strike was "a moral outrage" with "the workers and the communities being used as pawns in the fight" for the cash assets and "as cannon fodder for the financiers."

Sardonic

New England textile workers may be losing their jobs through mill liquidations but they somehow manage to keep a wry sense of humor.

Those collecting unemployment compensation refer to themselves as "on Eisenhower's payroll."

It added that the strike may be used as an excuse for liquidation of the company.

Plants on strike are in Lawrence, Webster, Dracut and Plymouth, Mass.; Norwich, Conn.; Winooski, Vt.; Skowhegan, Old Town and Fairfield, Me.; Enfield and Lebanon, N. H., and Louisville, Ky.

WORKERS at the giant Wood mill in Lawrence, largest plant of its kind in the world, demonstrated against the company's decision to close it permanently. During World War II this mill employed almost 8000, but in recent weeks employment had slipped to about 300 workers.

Picket signs carried by demonstrators at Lawrence echoed the demand of TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve for a congressional probe of the financial manipulations going on in the company.

Others called attention to the need for help which was promised by Candidate Eisenhower in a pre-election visit to Lawrence in 1952.

Arthur W. Brown, co-ordinator of American Woolen locals for the union, said every effort had been made to cooperate in keeping the plant in operation. He pointed to new machinery assignments that broke with tradition, and doubling-up on jobs. Brown estimated at least $2 million had been cut from the plant's operating costs through union cooperation.

THE STRIKE was immediately effective. In some plants only token picket lines were necessary to support the union's no-contract, no-work policy. Watchmen, engineers and firemen joined the walkout in most of the plants.

One veteran of almost 40 years in the company's service told a union meeting, "American Woolen is trying to take back in one day what it took us 15 years to gain."

The present basic wage in the woolen and worsted industry is $1.265 an hour plus a 5c cost of living increase and about 20c in fringe benefits.

Wisconsin CIO Hails Kohler Picket Line

A FIVE-MILE caravan of cars bearing CIO members from all parts of Wisconsin last week demonstrated their solidarity with the 3600 CIO Auto Workers on strike at the Kohler Co., Kohler, Wisc.

They drove past several hundred pickets, members of UAW-CIO Local 833, who stood in a cold drizzle. The pickets all had seen active service in World Wars I, II, or Korea.

Later last week, the UAW-CIO charged that the company was trying to provoke incidents on the picket line.

Before passing the plant, the cavalcade went through downtown Sheboygan. After being greeted by the pickets, it went to the Sheboygan Armory, where State CIO Pres. Charles M. Schultz and other CIO and UAW leaders pledged continued support for the walkout.

There were a few cheers at the plant where the carefully selected pickets were wearing old Army uniforms, faded OD's or Navy garb, many of them bearing medals or decorations.

Following an eight-car color guard of open convertibles carrying the flag bearers, there were two floats. One carried an old-style German band. On the other was an ancient Kohler bath tub and an effigy of the company president, Herbert Kohler.

Schultz told the audience of several thousand at the armory that the Kohler firm has "the responsibility not only of negotiating a reasonable contract," but "the further responsibility of proving" that it is honest in its "intentions in these collective bargaining sessions."

Other speakers were Pres. Allan J. Graskamp, Local 833; Dir. Harvey Kitzman, UAW-CIO Reg. 10; State CIO Sec.-Treas. Ross Baum, and UAW-CIO Intl. Rep. Robert Burkhart.

Parley Called On Migrant Families

The needs of migrant families and their children will be discussed at a conference in Washington on May 17-19 under the auspices of the Dept. of Health & Welfare.

CIO Asks Housing Probe At Atomic Energy Town

THE "CLOSED pre-arranged market" in Oak Ridge, Tenn., the atomic energy town, will lead to "maximum abuse" of federal housing laws, Pres. Emerson M. Pownall of the CIO Chemical Workers Local 288 warned last week.

Pownall advised Senate leaders that the intent and purposes of the housing insurance laws enacted by Congress were being thwarted in Oak Ridge. He urged investigation of "windfall profits" by builders in "monopoly-controlled Oak Ridge" and their effect on the cost of operating the atomic energy program.

Pownall ask Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) of the Senate Banking Committee and Sen. Byrd (D. Va.) of the Joint Committee on Non-essential Expenditures in Government to send investigators to the area to check on building costs so that evidence will be available when the Joint Atomic Energy Committee acts on a bill to dispose of the town.

Capehart read Pownall's letter to his committee and promised an investigation by housing and atomic energy agencies.

Byrd has demanded immediate criminal action against some apartment builders who got at least $100 million in profits on government-insured building loans. CIO warned at least four years ago that some of the nation's biggest builders and mortgage bankers had a "pipeline into the federal treasury."

Leon Jouhaux

Trade union members and democrats have suffered a real loss in the death of Leon Jouhaux, the sturdy old oak of the French free trade union movement.

For decades, the story of French workers' efforts to improve their economic and social conditions, and to win an honorable and lasting peace, has been intertwined with the life of Leon Jouhaux.

Leon Jouhaux hated dictators and he hated war. It was to be expected that the Nazis, after they overran the French Republic in 1940, threw him into a concentration camp. But hours after his liberation in 1945, Jouhaux was back in harness in the offices of the French trade union movement.

The Communists also found in Jouhaux a sturdy opponent. It was he who founded the Force Ouvriere in 1947, when it became apparent that the Commies' increasing influence in the General Federation of Labor was directed against the best interests of French democracy.

Leon Jouhaux was a patriotic citizen of France—but even more he was a citizen of the world. His services were recognized when he won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1951.

Now, at the age of 74, Leon Jouhaux is taken from our ranks. But we will long remember his speech to the CIO convention in 1946: "We are the working people, without whom nothing is possible. Today, we wish to build the peace. We want to build a free world. We bring our faith in a better future to build the peace."

The Profits Keep Rolling

Like Ole Man River, the profits of the country's very biggest corporations keep rolling along.

It helps explain, perhaps, why in some of the corporation front offices nobody can believe there's a recession, or get concerned because five million Americans are either unemployed or working pitifully short work-weeks.

General Motors, during the first three months of 1954, rang up profits—after those much discussed corporation taxes—of $189,000,000, more than $2,000,000 in profits each day. And it rang up those profits at a time when its sales had fallen below the same period last year.

Standard Oil of New Jersey made $146,000,000 in the first quarter—well over $1,500,000 each day.

Westinghouse Electric showed a profit rise of 55%—to $26,000,000 for the three months. And U. S. Steel, though down a little bit from the same period a year ago, showed substantial profits even though steel industry production is at only two-thirds of capacity.

Despite profit figures like these, the Republicans are still insisting that the folks who need tax relief are not the average citizen but the wealthy and the big corporations. Only 5% of the benefits in the Administration tax bill would go to lower and middle income families. The other 95% would, in GOP language, "help provide investment incentives for the wealthy and the corporations."

On the facts of those super-profits, that argument and that division of the tax benefits just don't make any sense at all. The GOP-controlled Congress would do well to rewrite the tax bill to favor the people, for a change.

He Can't Take It

After a week of hearings on the McCarthy war against the U. S. Army, at least one clear fact emerges.

Joe can dish it out, but he can't take it.

Better Look At The Whole Picture

In Other Words—

'Operation Huckster' Is Rolling

Political campaigning by ad agencies, a feature of the 1952 presidential race, will be expanded in this year's congressional contests, according to Tom Fitzsimmons. A digest of his article in the New Republic follows:

By TOM FITZSIMMONS

OPERATION HUCKSTER opens this year. For the first time, central control over a nationwide political campaign has been given over to the advertising agencies. Republican candidates will be "merchandized."

And though the Republican National Committee campaign budget has been given as $3.8 million, executives of public relations firms are assuming that they can spend up to $10 million to do the job. Women will not only be appealed to, but used on an unprecedented scale.

While the Democrats—poor by comparison—try to lure the public to political meetings in hundreds of congressional districts, the Republicans will use the ladies to get their message to "where the folks are"—the home.

A few weeks ago, 1390 Republican ladies came to Washington from all over the U. S. for a "Centennial Conference" which was really a co-ordinating conference for the coming campaign. All the ladies were leaders of Republican women's clubs and they attended workshops on how to organize the girls back home into an effective political force.

They'll Furnish The Java, Too

They were enthusiastic about almost everything, but they were most enthusiastic about a neat little 14-pound leatherette case—which any of them could carry without disturbing the set of her dress—containing a 35mm film projector, a turntable for long-playing records and a loudspeaker. Given five minutes instruction and a roll of film which fits into a purse, the most politically inexperienced gal in the block leaves campaign headquarters ready and able to conduct a successful political meeting—in her own living room, over coffee, for a small intimate group.

("In the poorer districts," say the Republicans, "we'll supply the coffee.")

In addition to these "coffee hours" in the home, Republicans have found that their "secret weapon" allows them to track down the independent voter—who won't come to a typical political meeting—no matter where he hides. The ladies tote their little machines into service clubs, women's clubs, civic organizations, libraries and even churches—"places" as one Republican put it, "we never thought we could reach with a political message."

Next to femininity, the accent is on youth. Pres. Eisenhower's statement that 18-year-olds are old enough to vote will be "merchandized" to the hilt. The Young Republican Clubs have set up "First Voters Committee" which search high school year-books and other sources for likely-looking youngsters.

A Young Republican Campus Program also has been launched to which the advertising men have contributed slogans like "College Clubs are the West Points of Politics," where you can get "political savoir-faire . . .

Then there are the "Citizens for Eisenhower" who now have become "Citizens for Republicans." Originally dedicated to a political idea they believed Ike would serve, they have talked themselves into thinking that regardless of which individual might support Ike on key issues, any Republican is better than any Democrat. They will also look to Madison Ave. for direction.

And It's All For Free

As for the candidate himself, he too will be well supplied. The Republican Congressional Campaign Committee has arranged to allow each Republican congressman to make one or two films particularly aimed at his own area. He may call upon the services of artists, photographers, ghost writers and ad-men—all for free.

And what of the Democrats? At the moment they have to count each penny. There will be no "secret weapon," no "saturation," and very few "services" of Madison Ave. consultants.

After the 1952 Republican victory, the editor of Tide, an advertising and sales trade publication, announced "Advertising . . . demonstrated beyond question that it can sell a good idea as successfully as it can sell a good product." He didn't mention that it can do the same for a bad idea. Or that unless there is competition—the equal prominence of a good idea, or product, for purposes of comparison—the idea being advertised is likely to be put over solidly, and the methods of doing it made respectable by success, no matter how bad it might be.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE SACRED COW around this town is J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI. You can't throw a stone in a congressional committee without hitting a distinguished member who has just paid handsome tribute to Hoover's services in saving the poor ol' United States from the menace of criminal kidnappers and conspiring Communists.

Sacred Cow, Sour Milk

We still have freedom of speech here, although you wouldn't think so if you listened only to the anti-American "Nye" Bevan in Britain or some equally fatheaded Americans.

The opinion thus may be expressed that Hoover, while undoubtedly an able administrator of the federal secret police, is still a policeman—not a judge, not a jury, not necessarily a competent "evaluator" of the social tempers and passions of his times.

These thoughts arise from two Hoover public appearances—one, recently, as a convention speaker to the Daughters of the American Revolution; the other as Atty.-Gen. Brownell's star witness in the Republican campaign "case" attempting to prove that former Pres. Truman maliciously "promoted" a man, the late Harry Dexter White, "known to be a Communist spy."

Hoover shivered the well-padded spines of the Daughters with a repetition of his familiar recitation about the threat of some 25,000 American Communists.

Smart As All That?

The Communists are so smart, so effective, he told the Daughters, that anyone who "dared to raise his voice against the threat of communism" has been the "target of vile and vicious attacks" by Commies or their "sympathizers"—whom Hoover further identified as "pseudo liberals," "bleeding hearts, pygmy politicians and respectable cloaked apologists."

In the context of the times, this was a stupid speech for a policeman. Who is Hoover to "evaluate" whether a person protesting the McCarran immigration law, or the Smith Act, or Sen. McCarthy's poisonous operations is really a "pseudo-liberal" or "bleeding heart" or "respectably cloaked apologist" for Communists?

J. Edgar Hoover, for the record, didn't hurl the Communists out of the mainstream of organized labor. The job was done in the '20s by the unions of the American Federation of Labor, again in the '40s by the CIO.

They did it, furthermore, without relying on wiretapped evidence before Johnnie-come-lately congressional committees or the kind assistance of the federal secret police. Many union leaders and members disagree with what is apparently J. Edgar's Hoover's political faith, but they weren't and they aren't anyone's stooges.

Hoover's earlier public appearance, before the Jenner Senate subcommittee in the White "case," is now a Republican campaign document.

The rich GOP campaign committees have a delightful film with Hoover, the nation's top secret cop, giving selected "testimony" before the Jenner committee that by juxtaposition appears to challenge Harry S. Truman on White.

The continued use of this edited and phony film for public consumption may be left to the conscience of Pres. Eisenhower.

This reporter's question involves Hoover himself, and what role he feels permitted to play in speeches, testimony and a political campaign.

A policeman, I suggest, should be outside politics.

A policeman, an intelligence and counter-intelligence agent, should be completely a professional. He should resent any attempt to exploit his position politically and the use in a partisan campaign film of any portions of public testimony he gives.

Should Stop Misuse

Herbert Brownell, Jr., is Hoover's present boss, but the director of the FBI should be capable of stopping misuse of his place and function for Brownell's campaign purposes.

If Hoover doesn't stop it, the presumption must be that he doesn't want to stop it, in which case he again ceases to be a professional security agent and moves further into the murky field of political partisanship.

I should add that in any controversy between Brownell-Hoover and Harry S. Truman—any political controversy involving motives, purpose and nuances—I have no difficulty in relying on Pres. Eisenhower's forthright tribute that it was inconceivable that Mr. Truman would have maliciously and knowingly "promoted a known Communist spy."

This quotation from Mr. Eisenhower, of course is not included in the GOP campaign film in which Hoover's testimony is used to smear Mr. Truman's handling of the White "case."

Sen. "Scoop" Jackson, the able Democratic first-termer from Washington, remarked in a recent speech in Alaska that the so-called "progressive" Republican program in Congress "is like an iceberg—only one-tenth of it is visible."

Sure, Get Mad, But Aim Your Ire In FHA Housing Scandal

By Public Affairs Institute

THE FEDERAL HOUSING Administration scandals, now making black headlines across the nation, are causing many people to question the vital role which FHA has played in the construction of millions of homes since 1934. They shouldn't!

The scandals more accurately illustrate just what happens when several provisions of the housing law are purposely written to benefit builders and speculators more than home users.

Two committees of Congress are now holding hearings on FHA. They are expected to turn up some illegal acts, especially in the area of tax evasion. In most instances, however, they will find "legal plunder" permitted under several provisions of the law.

One of the worst of these provisions is known as Sec. 608, the rental housing section which expired in 1950.

The government, under this section, guarantees 90% of the loan for rental housing construction. A private lender put up the money. He just couldn't lose. If the mortgage was defaulted he could simply turn the property over to the government and take federal securities in return.

How The U. S. Was Stuck

In 1950 and 1951 Sens. Long (D. La.) and Douglas (D. Ill.) warned that in many instances the government was stuck for far more than 90% of the cost. They pointed out cases of 120 or 150%. This is the way it worked:

The loan included architect's fee for 5% of the cost. Often the builder would have his own architect. Or, he would hire one for 1.5% of the cost. That would be a saving of 3.5%.

A general allowance of 5% was made for the contractor's profits. In some 90% of the cases, however, the mortgage holder was also the contractor and the builder, so the 5% was saved.

Subcontractor's profits were counted as part of the cost. Often the mortgage holder, the contractor and subcontractor were one and the same.

The land deal was what Douglas called "the real estate rainbow with a handsome pot of gold at each end." The mortgage-builder would buy raw land. He would get a commitment from FHA for an FHA mortgage. The value of the land would jump five or six times its original cost. FHA would then appraise the value of the land, not what it actually cost.

Attorney fees were allowed but the services were usually performed by the contractor.

FHA established a standard 12 to 18-month building period. Many mortgage holders were able to build in six months. In this way they could save on carrying charges and allowable labor cost and get 6 to 12 months' rent free.

Some Practices Were Stopped

In 1951 many of these practices were stopped by the Douglas "Mortgaging Out" amendment which made it illegal for a contractor-mortgagor to get a loan for more than the cost. The amendment was applied to only some programs. Some of these practices still continue.

Sec. 608 proved to be of limited help to lower and lower-middle income groups even though more than 663,000 rental housing units were constructed under it. The builders found it to be more profitable to build higher rental units. An FHA survey in 1949 showed that except for several places in the South, few units rented for less than $60 a month. More than half rented for $80 a month or more.

When you read about these scandals don't get mad at the whole government housing program. Just get mad at those who took care of the builders and speculators at the expense of everybody else.

Tribute By Mitchell—

'The ILO Is Our Best Forum'

This appreciation of the work of the Intl. Labor Organization by Sec. of Labor Mitchell is extracted from a recent speech.

By JAMES P. MITCHELL

THE WORK of the Intl. Labor Organization is of tremendous importance to the United States. Consequently, it is unfortunate that the organization is so little known in our country. Relatively few Americans realize what a valuable contribution this agency makes to the cause of world peace and to the welfare of the U. S.

Many people think the ILO is a labor organization. Actually, it is a tripartite body in which governments, employers and workers all have representation.

There are few agencies more worthy of our support than the ILO. Through the cooperative endeavors of governments, employers and workers in the ILO, there is being developed the basis for an increasing measure of justice and well-being.

This is being accomplished without the surrender of national sovereignty or legislative prerogatives. Conventions adopted by the ILO do not become binding upon any nation until they have been voluntarily accepted by that country. Here in the United States, the President does not ratify a convention until and unless the Senate has given its advice and consent to ratification.

A Danger Everywhere

There are incorporated in the ILO procedures all of the safeguards that could possibly be required for protecting the national interest of our country.

The ILO helps eliminate the substandard working conditions and levels of living which provide a competitive advantage to other countries in the world's markets. A competitive margin based upon inadequate wages and working conditions is unfair. To the extent that this margin can be reduced by voluntary action of other nations to raise the standards of their workers, it is of direct advantage to American businessmen and American workers.

"Poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere."

Another advantage to us as Americans—but also to the other free peoples of the world—is the extent to which activities of the ILO reduce the Communist threat.

As we all know, communism feeds directly upon poverty, ignorance, hardship and suffering. Improvement of the living and working conditions of those who labor constitutes an effective rebuff to the Communist efforts. It eliminates a breeding ground where communism could grow and thrive, and—instead—provides a pasture where free people can find nourishment and sunshine.

Consequently, every anti-Communist element in the U. S. and, in fact, in the whole world, should support with all their resources the ILO's struggle for social betterment.

We Americans are devoted individually and as a nation to the pursuit of peace and the promotion of harmonious and cooperative settlement of disputes. We advance the cause of peace through harmonious participation in the ILO. Poverty is a cause of war, as well as a stimulant to communism. By reducing poverty and suffering, the ILO eliminates a cause of war and promotes peace.

"Now, Potter, I hope you're not going to start that unpleasant talk of a raise again!"

Tories Ganging Up—

Sparkman In Bitter Fight For Senate Reelection

(First in a series of on-the-spot appraisals of the 1954 elections and what CIO is doing in various states.)

By MILTON PLUMB

ALABAMA this week will be the scene of the first key election contest of 1954. Nearly 100,000 more Alabamians are expected to go to the polls May 4 than at any previous time, because this is the first big election in which the poll tax no longer is cumulative.

There will be more Negroes voting in the cities, but still few in the rural regions.

Roughest Battle

National interest is focused primarily on Sen. Sparkman's bid for re-election to a second full term. The Democratic Party's 1952 candidate for Vice President is going through the roughest battle of his political career.

No expense has been spared and no holds have been barred by the coalition of Dixiecrat leaders, Republicans, big industrialists, Wall Street, Texas oil and other interests which have ganged up to defeat him. The campaign against him, in which falsehoods played an important part, and based on appeals to bigotry, has been one of the dirtiest on record.

Overtones of this anti-labor and racist attack on Sparkman have also carried over into other races for governor, Congress, and state offices. But the effort to smear has been chiefly directed at Sparkman, both because his Senate seat is the main prize the reactionaries might capture and because his prestige would make his defeat a major Democratic setback.

Sparkman has three opponents, with Rep. Battle of Birmingham his chief—and only dangerous—contender. Campaign expenditures on Battle's behalf have far outdistanced those of any political bid in the state's prior history.

The Birmingham Congressman's affluence has been so obvious that he has been openly attacked on this score by a third candidate, former Admiral John Crommelin.

Crommelin charges that Battle is the candidate of the Alabama Power Co., which of course has no love for Sparkman because of his leadership in the fight for TVA. Battle has denied reports that he will become an APC vice president if defeated, but Crommelin continues to call him "Reddy Kilowatt Battle" in his talks.

CIO NEWS EXCLUSIVE:—Sen. Sparkman's chief foe for the Senate, Rep. Battle, is running as a "loyal" Democrat. But in 1948, Battle (standing, left) was at States Rights Party rump convention with its chairman, ex-Gov. Frank Dixon (seated, white suit). He was the only Alabama Congressman to attend this session, which denied voters in his state a chance to vote for a Democratic President.

Sparkman, whose outstanding career in Congress has made him symbolize for most Americans those forces in the new South which are working for progress, is running squarely on his record.

The fact that he has been one of the Senate's foremost champions of small business, housing, aid to agriculture and education, social security, health and public power is generally popular.

Misleading Voters

Battle's campaign, accordingly, has been directed at trying to mislead the voters about two things: 1) Sparkman's liberal voting record, and 2) Sparkman's attitude in the matter of race relations.

An intensive Battle advertising campaign in most of the State's newspapers has hammered away at Sparkman because he said he would support the Democratic platform statement on the civil rights issue. The cost of these ads alone has been computed by Sparkman supporters to total over $350,000.

Another Gimmick

In the 1950 Ohio race, industry came up with the gimmick of "institutional advertising" as a means of whipping up anti-liberal hysteria. This year, in Alabama, there's a new gimmick—"The Alabama Plan."

Called a "cooperative program for business and industrial leaders," the program originates with the Associated Industries of Alabama, the State equivalent of the National Manufacturers' Association. Regularly, the AIA sends a sample letter to the heads of firms, suggesting that they duplicate it and send it over their signatures to the homes of "key men, department heads, supervisors and foremen."

"Do not mail to hourly paid employees as the material is not written for this group," the AIA cautions.

Professedly "non-partisan," the program nevertheless aims at giving only "salaried employees" a "new understanding" of politics.

"They can be induced to vote by enlisting the aid of the most influential group of men in America today—OUR BUSINESS and INDUSTRIAL MANAGERS," the AIA propaganda for the plan continues.

If the plan works "well" in Alabama—by defeating Sen. Sparkman, for instance—watch for similar "Alabama Plans" in every state of the union before next November.

It was in an atmosphere of growing public resentment against the effort of Wall Street, Texas oil and other interests from outside the State to push Battle into the Senate that the Congressman launched his second lie.

The CIO, he said, "has a slush fund of more than $35 million" which it is using to try to elect Sparkman. Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, he added, was in Alabama "openly directing the campaign of my opponent."

Although Battle's charges against the CIO were both patently false, his attack was not made without reason. There is no question that CIO's 80,000 members in Alabama have given major support to Sparkman's campaign.

Neverthless, Sparkman's strength remains in the rural areas. Battle is strongest in Birmingham and Mobile, where apart from CIO Steelworkers, labor is still largely unorganized.

Here are the facts about CIO efforts:

1. Jack Kroll was in Alabama a total of two days last month. He went there to make his usual address before the State CIO convention at Prichard. He did not see or talk to Sparkman, who was in another part of the state.

2. In keeping with national CIO policy, polical action in Alabama has remained entirely a matter for the local CIO. All endorsements and political action to back them up have been by Alabamians themselves.

"Actually, the Alabama CIO's drive began five years ago," USA-CIO Dist. Dir. Reuben F. Farr, of Birmingham, points out. "We began then the registration and poll tax drive, and the job of keeping our members informed about the record of candidates now up for election."

Farr said that the 35,000 USA members, located chiefly in Birmingham, Fairfield, Ensley and Bessemer, have provided hundreds of volunteers for Sparkman, CIO-PAC-backed congressional candidates, and ex-Gov. Jim Folsom, who has been endorsed by CIO in his current race for governor.

The Alabama State CIO Council, working under Pres. Cecil A. Robertson and Sec.-Treas. Eugene M. Wells, has coordinated the work of the Steelworkers and other CIO unions. Locals of CIO Textile, Rubber, and Shipbuilding Workers and the Maritime Union have all taken an active part.

"CIO has worked closely with the AFL, railway brotherhoods and Mine Workers on a Joint Labor Committee," Wells said. "We've distributed CIO literature to these other unions. In addition we've conducted political action schools which about 10,000 CIO members attended and we've distributed 60,000 copies of a comparison of Sparkman's and Battle's voting records to our members."

Sample Ballots

Last week, CIO was distributing sample ballots, with PAC-endorsements indicated, in Jefferson, Etowah and other counties. There were 125,000 distributed in Jefferson County alone.

CIO in Alabama also is backing candidates in three congressional races: John Mandeville against Rep. Boykin in the 1st Dist., Rep. Roberts for re-election in the 4th Dist. and both Arthur H. Allbright and George Huddleston, Jr., in the 4th Dist.

Reps. Jones, Elliott, Rains, Selden, Andrews and Grant are unopposed.

Although this week's contests technically are primary elections, Alabama is part of the one-party South, and victory in the Democratic primary is tantamount to election next November.

KEY WORKERS:—Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), seated, center, confers with key CIO workers for his re-election. Leading CIO-PAC work in Alabama are (seated) State Council Sec. Treas. Eugene M. Wells, left, and CIO Steelworkers Dist. Dir. Reuben F. Farr, right. The State's 80,000 CIO members may decide contest.

MANAGER Drew Reddon (right), of Sparkman's Birmingham headquarters, gets help from CIO Steelworker Ben Gage.

Portrait Of A French Worker—

'Sunshine' Gains In An Uphill Union Fight

THEY CALL HIM "Sunshine." His name is Polydor Verbecke. He weighs 230 pounds and has red hair, drives a bus in Toulouse, France, spends his evenings working for his Force Ouvriere union after a 12-hour split shift. He's in cab of his bus at left, and again at right chatting with Sec. Lucien Boubec of his local. In center, he (left) discusses union matters with Boubec and other officials, often until late at night.

By K. L. STEVENS

WHEN A RED-headed city bus driver has so much humor that he is labelled "Sunshine" his success in an uphill union struggle should be no surprise.

Bulky Polydor Verbecke was given his nickname by comrades who have gained from his unrelenting but always good-humored battle with bosses and Communists to secure free union victories.

The energy generated by the 230-pound Polydor was shown recently when he returned from a trade school near Paris sponsored by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. In a burst of enthusiasm, he promptly went out and recruited six new members for his branch (local) of the Force Ouvriere (FO) Transport Workers Federation.

Union Training

The need for just such energetic recruitment prompted Verbecke's trip from his home city of Toulouse, in the south of France, to the school. He and 43 other transport worker-students received training for union organizing at the school, planned as a new educational aid by the ICFTU, the Intl. Transport Workers Federation (ITF) and the FO, the non-Communist French trade union center.

Polydor got into both bus driving and union organizing after a series of personal trials which would have dismayed anyone but the cheery "Sunshine of Toulouse."

Background

This "Portrait of a French Trade Unionist," excerpts from which appear here, was written by K. L. Stevens and was printed in the ITF Journal, official monthly publication of the Intl. Transport Workers Federation.

Formerly a truck driver in the north of France, where he was born in 1908, Polydor, his wife and only daughter took refuge in the south of France 10 years ago, after several wartime dislocations.

While he was fighting in the French army early in the war, advancing Germans overtook their town, destroying the Verbecke's small house. His wife Aline and 13-year-old Giselle escaped to Brittany with a large photo of a proudly smiling Papa in soldier's uniform as their only salvage.

Continually fleeing from onrushing armies, the wife and child finally contacted Polydor when, after a year's silence, he received 19 letters from his family in the same mail as he lay in a Bordeaux hospital recovering from wounds.

Discovering the latest "home" address was only 100 miles south, Polydor sneaked out of the hospital and hitchhiked to the spot. For the next year, he drove a truck for a relief depot.

Later they moved to Toulouse, where Polydor became a city bus driver. When the war ended, he and some friends started organizing a union affiliated to the General Confederation of Labor (CGT), to which he had belonged before the war.

But the CGT had changed its complexion. The Communists had gained control of the city administration. Nobody got a job without a party card and the union was soon stacked with Communists, as in most CGT unions throughout France.

Successful Battle

In late 1947, when the Communists were calling general strikes all over France, they shut down the Toulouse transportation system, in the process virtually closing down the city as well.

Wages were low and working conditions far from ideal, Polydor says, but the Communist leaders were not striking for workers' benefits. They were out for exclusive power.

As other democratic unionists fought back elsewhere, Polydor and his friends in Toulouse transport succeeded in squashing the threat and formed a separate democratic union. They joined the newly-formed CGT-FO.
